The other day Mr. Justice Norris while going home from court saw a Sahib recklessly driving and running over an old native woman. His lordship immediately got out of the carriage, ran after and stopped the Sahib, and asked him to take the woman to a hospital, at the same time telling him that he should not have driven so furiously. The Sahib, a genuine Anglo-Indian, replied that Sahibs in this country do not care to take people to the hospital. Mr. Justice Norris cried shame to the Sahib, observing that to him humanity did not seem to be different here from what it is at home. He then came back, and took the woman up in his own carriage to the hospital and placed her there. We trust and hope long residence in India will not chill the fervour of this genuine English spirit.

MR. R. D. BLACKMORE's novel, "Lorna Doone," is probably well known to many of our readers; if it is not, it cannot be on account of the scarcity of the book, seeing that it has already gone through nineteen editions in the popular six shilling form. The publishers are about to issue a twentieth edition, in the shape of an Edition de Luxe. And yet it seems that it was some time before the volume won for itself a name. In the preface to the forthcoming edition its author tells us that at first nobody cared to look at it, the "leaders of the public taste" led no one to make test of its contents. "Having struggled to the light of day, through obstruction and repulses, for a year and a half," it shivered in the cold corner without a sunray. England disdained it, America would have none of it. Still the publisher (Mr. Sampson Low the younger) believed in the book, and determined to give it another chance, and issued it "in a simple pretty dress, small in compass, small in figure, smaller still in hope of life." Just at that time "a certain auspicious event occurred." The literary public found the name akin to one which filled the air, and endowed the book with imaginary virtues. "So grand is the luck of time and name, failing which more solid beings melt into oblivious depth." This book, then, is to be added to the curiosities of literature, and has a story as interesting as many others of which the world already knows.

THE Wesleyans have recently opened a large and commodious book-room for the sale of their publications in the City-road, and the party which has Mr. Bradlaugh for its leader and Mrs. Besant for its prophetess has emerged from a bye street, and taken a shop in Fleet-street for the sale of the publications favoured by the extreme left. When are the Unitarian Association or the Sunday School Association going to do much the same kind of thing? It is about time that they should come to the front.

THE Evangelical ministers of Boston are bolder than those who claim that title in this country. They have had a discussion on the question "Evolution: is what is proved about it antagonistic to Biblical Christianity and Evangelical religion?" and invited one of the staff of that very unevangelical paper, the Index, to state his views on the matter. We learn that the subject was very ably presented on both sides, though no particular result was arrived at. Still the defenders of the doctrine of Evolution have little to fear from such discussions.

No, Dr. Richardson, you are mistaken. At any rate, if the Daily News report of what you said at Newcastle on Saturday is correct, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness" is not from the Proverbs. It was used by John Wesley in his 92nd Sermon, "On Dress," though as he marked it as a quotation, possibly he attributed it to the Bible. Still, it will not be found there.

WE understand that in the course of the present month a special week-day evening service will be held in Little Portland-street Chapel, in which the Rev. Dr. Sadler, Mr. Edwin Ellis, of Guildford, the Rev. Rowland Hill, of Bedford, and the Rev. Charles Hargrove, of Leeds, will take part. This is the first of a series of services to be held in the London Unitarian chapels from time to time with the view of drawing the members of different congregations more closely together, by giving them the opportunity of occasionally uniting in a simple devotional service.

THE Rev. J. E. B. Mayor, who is Professor of Latin at Cambridge University, and is also an ordained priest of the English Church, seems to have offended both against the laws of that Church and the rules of the Primitive Methodists. Having recently been initiated in Good Templary, he preached a sermon last Sunday night in the Primitive Methodist Chapel at Cambridge. Nearly all the Church of England evening service was read by the Professor, and Primitive Methodist hymns were sung. Reading prayers and preaching from manuscript sorely offends the P. M.s, while preaching in a Dissenting place at all is an offence against the laws of the Establishment. We cannot be surprised that in the University city considerable sensation has been manifested at the Professor's action, and that ulterior steps are intended. At Sheffield a special temperance mission has been held, and nearly 12,000 persons have taken the pledge. A service was held last Sunday afternoon at St. Paul's Church, the sermon being preached by the vicar, and a Baptist minister being trusted to read the lessons.

COMMENTING on the discussion in the Church Congress on curates and their woes the Times states the encouraging fact that a Birmingham shoe-black became a Scripture reader and curate, and married a lady of title in London. With such a prospect before them why should curates despair? One of the hardships of curates, it appears, is that they have to preach to maid-servants on Sunday afternoons. On the other hand they may play tennis with their mistresses on all other afternoons. What more can curates desire?

AN International Conference will be held at Brussels on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of this month, to consider the best means of substituting arbitration for war, and especially with the object of promoting the formation of bodies similar to our own in all civilised communities, and of organising them in an international federation. Some distinguished Englishmen, nearly a hundred members of the Legislatures of France, Germany, Austria, Belgium, Holland, Sweden, Italy, Hungary, and Denmark, besides well known jurists, professors, and pastors of those countries, have already signified their intention to be present, whilst America will be well represented. Eminent men will preside on the several days for various countries; papers will be read on international arbitration and disarmament, on international public law and tribunals, and other kindred subjects and discussions will follow. The proceedings will be published and circulated. Mr. Hodgson Pratt is President of the International Association, and the Rev. E. M. Geldart, M.A., of Croydon, is Foreign Secretary.

SOUTHAMPTON.—The Rev. H. Shaen Solly, M.A., has accepted the charge of the Church of the Saviour, Southampton, for three months.

KIDDERMINSTER.—On Sunday last Harvest Festival Services were held in the New Meeting House. The services were conducted morning, afternoon and evening by the Rev. W. Carey Walters. There were large congregations in the evening, aisles and chancel being filled. The decorations, under the superintendence of the Misses Stooke, were in excellent taste, and exceeded in elaborateness and beauty anything before attempted in the New Meeting House. Anthems were sung by the choir morning and evening. On Tuesday evening the services were continued, when there was again a full congregation. The Devotional Service was conducted by the Rev. Walter Reynolds, B.A. (late Baptist Minister at Coventry), who is about accepting a pastorate among the Free Christian Churches, and the sermon was preached by the minister of the church. The offertories, in aid of the Church Funds, amounted to £20 0s. 9d.

SAFFRON WALDEN.—During the month of September this Chapel has been undergoing a thorough renovation. The old square seats have been altered, ceiling whitened, walls coloured, gas rearranged, and gallery floor raised, whilst the interior of the Chapel has been painted in party colours. At the re-opening services Mr. Brinkworth preached an able and appropriate sermon from 1 Kings ix. 8, "I have hallowed this house." The collection, although good, was not sufficient to meet the necessary outlay, and the minister of the Chapel, the Rev. J. A. Brinkworth, who has been working indefatigably for some years under discouraging circumstances, appeals for assistance from friends at a distance.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in Packets labelled—"JAMES EPPS & CO. Homoeopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Cascade Essence for afternoon use.

Our Contemporaries.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Pall Mall Gazette contains the following interesting account of the Salvation Army in East London:—

The Army, according to the "General's" account, arose in the East of London, "where the appalling fact that the enormous bulk of the population were totally ignorant and deficient of real religion . . . so impressed him that he determined to devote his life to making these millions hear and know God." It is in the East of London, therefore, that the Army may be expected to be most vigorous. The headquarters of the neighbourhood are in the Whitechapel-road. The entrance to the hall is by a wide passage-way, where a preacher, standing on a table, collects the inevitable group. The passers-by are all of the class which stirred Mr. Booth "contrary to all his predilections," to fix himself in East London. Their talk as they come and go about the fringe of the group is interesting. A woman with a child in her arms, her poverty justifying Mrs. Booth's description that she was one of those "plunged in the abyss of misery," remarks to a neighbour, "Why, inside it's worse than a theatre; they ain't even quiet when speaking's going on." A working man, one of those on whom, on account "of their overawing influence," the Army has a special aim, says, "Well, if they think that their gospel is going to make us content with low wages and bad government they are on the wrong tack." Generally, although some are evident believers and some hesitatingly interested, the tone of the group hardly justifies the assertion that the Army lays hold of the masses.

Within the hall the effect is striking. The after-meeting is in progress, and as the door at the end of the passage swings the visitor is met by the glare and blare of light and noise. The atmosphere is heavy with the breath of a thousand persons, and there is a confused sound of many noises. It is only slowly that the sources of the many impressions can be taken in, and the noise understood as the noise of trumpets, of hurrying feet and many voices. Now it seems as if a hymn were to be sung; the trumpets blare out the tune, voices are raised, but suddenly cease as a man raises louder the words of a prayer. His meaning cannot be gathered; a shout of "Hallelujah! Blood!" has drowned his first sentence, or it is mingled in inextricable confusion with that of some woman prayer-maker. Tears come from one side, praises from another, laughter is mixed with singing, wild boys and girls echo in shriller tones the words of the saints, till lyrical trumpets overwhelm all alike and make a kind of order from which praise, prayers, and jeers again arise. For the eye, as for the ear, there is like confusion. Movement never ceases. The people go in and out as their curiosity is satisfied. The conductors of the meeting on the platform kneel, prostrate themselves, and extend their arms. Their agents flit about the rooms whispering to any whose face gives signs of loss of self-control, leading them as they yield to the "penitent form" to make their confession of a past evil life amid shouts of praise. Such is a meeting which the War Cry would describe as being full of Holy Ghost power, and the people thus brought to the "penitent form" as "torn from the devil" and added to the Army. The authorities claim that by such means "thousands of the most godless are now apostles of Salvation." It is a remarkable fact that the clergy of the Whitechapel district, where "the abyss of misery" is so deep that whole blocks of houses have been condemned as uninhabitable, unite in saying that among their parishioners the Salvation Army has done little; and this evidence is supported by others who without clerical sympathies have had special opportunities of knowing the lives of the people in this neighbourhood. It seems as if it had yet to be proved that the Army has got hold of "the most profane in the community." The mere assertion, supported by confessions made on the penitent form by those almost drunk with excitement, and backed by the opinion of those wealthy or philosophic Christians who think the poor must be moved to goodness by means most foreign to their own higher natures, is not sufficient. The General is too great an adept in the art of advertising not to know the power of proclaiming a "great success." As far as can be seen, the parties who parade the streets, the officers who conduct the services, the nucleus, in fact, of the organization, are men and women such as may be found in any church or chapel. The greater number are young; all have on their faces the stamp of respectability. The profane struggle in and out both of the meetings and the Army. To such characters no form of excitement comes amiss.

Within the Army itself, notwithstanding the proof of conversion to be found in sober living, religious talk, and demure fashions, it is possible to find traces of very wordly feeling. It remains to be proved that the Army has success in making the worst good or its converts religious. There is little difficulty in accounting for its success in gathering numbers. The first necessity of the movement is, Mr. Booth says, "to attract attention," and the means are well chosen. The excitement of meetings, banners, and parade, the telegrams of victories in distant parts, the hope of new movements, give no small pleasure to those prisoned in dullness and poor in means of life. A place in a great organisation, the knowledge of fellow-soldiers in heaven and earth, is a source of new strength to those who feel their weakness and the weakness of their biggest union. Social meetings, abundant opportunity for talk and for making friends, the chance of knowing members of other classes, have infinite charms for men and women forced against nature to live alone in their small rooms.

There is as little difficulty in accounting for its failure—if failure there be—as a moral or spiritual force. Speakers like Mrs. Booth, of whom there may be many among the "captains," have the power which earnest and tender speakers must always have. The work of the Army is not to be measured by the effect such a speaker may have on a chance hearer. It is the services such as those in Whitechapel, and the organisation as it is described in the publications which for good or for evil have been established in England—it is by the services and the organisations that the Army must be counted to succeed or to fail, and not by the sermons of any speakers it may enlist. Services of which one avowed object is to impel a man, woman, or child "to break through the aversion to speak about religion in public" cannot long have spiritual or moral force. The tale of excitement's work has been sufficiently told; and the world is agreed that it is a dangerous matter to force into light a possible degradation of the higher life of which the most godless even is dimly conscious. The services are not designed to produce spiritual or moral results; and the same may be said of an organisation which is most effective for other purposes. Its one object is success; the measure of the success is numbers, and all means are lawful which are attractive. Logically, it is not the poor but the rich who need to be saved. It is among them are to be found smokers, theatre-goers, and fashionable dresses. Nevertheless, it is to the poor that the Army goes. Legally worldly tunes must be as objectionable as worldly words; but the soldiers are advised to denounce the public reading of Shakspeare and to use vulgar means to make the people hear the Gospel. The whole tendency of the organisation is to set the winning of proselytes above the spread of principle.

The reader of the abundant literature in which the doctrines are enunciated and the system of preaching defended is fain to cry, "O for an hour of Socrates!"—for some one to ask these writers what they mean by religion and what is the life at which they aim. It would say little for the work of the School Board, and it would be a reproach to those who "overawe" the policy of the Government, if the doctrines were acceptable to working men. One, as we have seen, recognised the danger of teaching which would encourage inaction while so much needs reform. There must be many of a like opinion, and many more who resent the unreason which condemns smoking and Shakspeare, and would persuade them that because sermons are foolish they must therefore contain the Gospel. If the General counts his converts to Christianity by thousands, it would be well that he should remind himself that there may be thousands more who have said, "If this is Christianity I will have none of it." If this is religion, it is useless to seek further for what Browning calls "that true thing," and "the relation from that thing to me." The fact nevertheless remains—the army is a force. Its growth is not to be accounted for by the astuteness of some and the weakness of others. There is a centre of life within. The enthusiasm of those who give up place and profit is to be envied by those who profess a nobler faith. The impulse which it conveys through so many sections of society is distinctly healthy. The existence of the Army represents the existence of a need in English life. It is for students to discover how that need may be met by means more consonant with modern discoveries and more powerful for permanent good. It is for the protectors of religion both to protect their charge from degradation and by relaxing their bonds of dogma and ritual to enlist the people in its care.

It is a sign of the times that the bishops have patronised the movement. They wish to avoid the mistake of their predecessors who discountenanced Wesley, and because the Army seems successful they support a form of teaching which they must generally condemn. The bishops as much as the leaders of the Salvation Army require an hour of Socrates. It is a puzzling reflection that one Ritualist is imprisoned, while another is held up to admiration. There must be confusion in the minds of those who, supporting a National Church, repress development within Acts of Uniformity and Articles, while they encourage the movement of General Booth.

CHANGES AT OXFORD.

The Spectator writes:—

The announcement made this week that the Master of Balliol, Professor Jowett, will be nominated by Lord Salisbury at the beginning of Michaelmas Term to succeed Dr. Evans in the office of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, coming as it does at a time when all the world is thinking and talking of another great Oxford leader, the late Dr. Pusey, marks in a very emphatic way the vast though silent change which has lately come over the spirit of the University. It is not twenty years since Dr. Pusey, who had himself in earlier days suffered the penalty of suspension from the University pulpit, declared that he "held himself bound, by his duty to God, to the Church, and to the souls of men," to prosecute Professor Jowett in the Vice-Chancellors' Court as a false teacher, who had conspired with others in a "systematic attempt to revolutionise the Church of England." In the same spirit, Convocation refused to add a penny to the nominal stipend which Mr. Jowett received as Regius Professor of Greek, not from any distrust of his powers to teach Greek—for he was universally known as one of the most fastidious scholars, and as quite the most successful teacher of his day—but because he was supposed, in an essay which a large proportion of his censors had certainly never read, to have denied the inspiration of the Scriptures. Even after the ferment caused by the publication of "Essays and Reviews" had subsided, Professor Jowett continued for years to be looked upon by the orthodox world as a kind of ecclesiastical leper. He was never allowed to preach at St. Mary's by the zealous watch-dogs of the faith who guard the inviolability of the University pulpit, until his election to the Mastership of Balliol gave him a legal title to do so which could not be resisted. Partly, no doubt, from the seclusion in which he lived, partly from the singular influence which he was known to exercise not only upon Undergraduates, but upon men who, having been his pupils, had since made their mark in the outside world, he became the hero of a number of amusing legends, in which his supposed hostility to sound doctrine and his zeal in the propagation of soul-destroying heresies were variously illustrated. No mythical exploit, which corresponded to this view of his character, was too absurd to be credited,—from the rumour, circulated upon the "best authority," that he had reconverted to Buddhism a Siamese Undergraduate who, before coming to Oxford, had been baptised into the Roman Catholic faith by missionaries in his native country, to the delightful story, which is still, perhaps, current in some country parsonages, that he was in the habit every Sunday morning of standing at his study window, gnashing his teeth, as he watched the Balliol Undergraduates filing into the College chapel. A generation earlier, Arnold had so excited the hatred of one school that Lord Melbourne was afraid to make him a Bishop; while Pusey had so aroused the alarms of another, that it was through no fault either of his University or his Bishop that his voice was not effectually silenced. But among the many theological panics, with their invariable accompaniments of malice, slander, and persecution, which have raged in Oxford during the last half-century, it may be doubted whether any was so widespread, so lasting, or so intense as that which will always be associated with the name and teaching of Professor Jowett.

But he has begun to reap the fruits of a long life of unsparing and unostentatious self-devotion, in the general acknowledgment that he, of all living men, has done the most to enlarge and vivify Oxford studies, to transform the relation of tutor and pupil from a merely official connection into a personal tie, and to make the doors of the University easy of access to every form of ability, without distinction of means, station, or creed. These services are at last admitted even by those who dislike his theology most, and the spirit of ecclesiastical rancour is for the moment absorbed in the thoroughly English feeling that good work well done should be ungrudgingly recognised and openly rewarded.

We seem to see in this incident the evidence of other changes of a more general character. No one who has watched the movement of thought at Oxford during the last ten years can doubt that ecclesiastical and theological questions no longer fill the space they used to do in the life of the University. The abolition of tests and the suppression of clerical fellowships have produced their effect, though they have only hastened the progress of an inevitable revolution. The majority of the younger fellows and tutors are laymen, and philosophy and history absorb the energies, some considerable part of which must, under the old system, have necessarily been given to theology. Of those who devote themselves to philosophy, a considerable proportion are Agnostics, of one school or another, to whom all the disputes of all the Churches are as the sounding brass or tinkling cymbal; while the interest of the Hegelians in religious questions is of a speculative kind, and is little, if at all, engaged in the dogmatic and ceremonial differences which divide the different parties in the Church of England. One very natural result of this change is that, in the case of almost all University offices the appointment to which is vested in the residents, the theological views of the candidates are no longer the determining factor in the election. Convocation is still the "general assembly," the highest legislative body, of the University, and in Convocation the clergy are still numerically supreme; but except on the rare occasions on which it acts, purely ecclesiastical forces have a comparatively slight and a constantly diminishing weight. We do not, of course, overlook the great High Church party, which, with its ceaseless stream of recruits, its admirable organisation, and its skilful leaders, is probably as powerful at Oxford to-day as it ever was. But the same causes which have secularised the interests of a large section of the University have tended also to alter the direction of the aggressive energies of the High Churchmen there. Theology like Professor Jowett's is as distasteful to them as ever, but they feel that at Oxford now they are face to face with a more threatening and uncompromising enemy. In the great issues raised by the Agnostic philosophy, such controversies as that which raged over "Essays and Reviews," if not forgotten, assume a secondary importance, and the animosities which they excited grow weaker, and fade away.

KUENEN'S "HIBBERT LECTURES."

The Pall Mall Gazette, reviewing these lectures, remarks that "Professor Kuenen has produced a piece of work which is on the whole rather brilliant and suggestive than remarkable for sustained and coherent argument." Referring especially to the two lectures which contain the admirable sketch of the development of Christian ethics from the higher and more spiritual Judaism, the reviewer writes:—

The prophetic conception of Israel's destiny was succeeded by the compromise of Judaism and by the priestly legislation of Ezra. Judaism was monotheistic; it was based on an ethical conception of Yahweh, and it too looked forward vaguely to a distant future when the whole world should bow before Yahweh. But the immediate effect of the post-exilic was undoubtedly to close the ranks of Israel and to confine Yahweism more strictly than ever to the one chosen people. In the face of this great fact it is Professor Kuenen's task to show how the prophetic ideas still lived and worked in the later Judaism, and how they were gathered up and fertilised by Christianity. In many ways he has acquitted himself of it excellently. The elements of a more spiritual faith, imprisoned as it were, even in the teaching of the scribes, and in Pharisaism itself, are clearly brought out, and we are made to see how the teaching of Jesus represented a revolt already born against the exclusive legalism of the post-exilic thorah, and a return to principles imperfectly enunciated long before by prophets and psalmists. In Palestinian Judaism, therefore, according to the Professor, Christianity finds its full explanation, and he is indignant with those writers who, like M. Ernest Havet, would derive it "presque tout entier" from Hellenism, or make Paul rather than Jesus its founder. But we venture to think that after all the explanation goes but a short way. It throws some light on the position and on the ethical ideas of the founder of Christianity; it does not explain Christianity as we know it historically. And here surely it would have been well to have been more outspoken. Both in his survey of the past and in his dream of the future the author persistently speaks as if Christianity as the world has known it for eighteen centuries was identical with the ethical system of which he unveils the origins. But it was not the ethical monotheism of Jesus, nor even his proclamation of the universal Fatherhood of God which converted the Roman Empire. They were a part indeed, but not the whole. The God came to earth, the miracles, the resurrection, the millenarian expectation—this fairy tale of wonder it was, combined with the financial and charitable organisation which made the early Christian societies such a strong politico-economic force in the lower strata of Roman life, which captivated the popular consent; Greek philosophy laid hold upon the story; the scientific Latin mind organised the Christian Church, and Christianity as we know it was established. Professor Kuenen would have done a service to religious thought if he had drawn the lines of distinction more boldly between the Christianity he analyses and the Christianity of history. As it is, he has endeavoured as far as possible to pass over the vital differences which exist between his own school of criticism and the schools of orthodoxy, for the sake, no doubt, of gaining a wider hearing. Such attempts, however, conciliate no one, while they tend to obscure the lines of religious progress in days when plain speaking is all in all.

DR. PUSEY AND THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

The Liberator says:—

The position of Dr. Pusey in regard to the question of Church Establishments has never been very clearly defined. Certainly, like Mr. Gladstone, he was no idolater of establishments; but he would probably have been content to let them remain, if only he could have shaped them to his will. Possibly, indeed, as it is, his influence has prolonged the days of the English Establishment beyond the term which they would otherwise have reached. But, however that may be, his influence, and that of the Oxford movement, as a whole, has brought a double peril to the Establishment in the near future. In the first place, thousands have been driven into the ranks of the Disestablishment party by the obvious fact that the so-called Bulwark of Protestantism has been converted into a nursery for the Church of Rome. And, secondly, the new life and the higher spiritual tone which have been infused into the Establishment seem likely now to become fatal to its continued existence. The late Mr. Edward Miall, years ago, predicted this result, clearly foreseeing that the new wine would prove too strong for the old bottles. "Take my word for it," he said, "some day the Church will kill the Establishment."

VISCOUNTESS OSSINGTON, widow of the late Speaker Denison, is erecting at her own sole cost a magnificent coffee-tavern at Newark-on-Trent, at an estimated outlay of £20,000.

THE REV. E. PAXTON HOOD commenced his ministry on Sunday at Falcon-square Chapel, one of the oldest Nonconformist places of worship in the City of London.

PROFESSOR HÆCKEL, the most eminent of German naturalists, contemplates the publication of an exhaustive analysis of the Darwinian system. He will probably take advantage of this opportunity to publish some very interesting correspondence he has had with Mr. Darwin, and also to indicate the bearing of his celebrated theory on current theological and ethical theories.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—"Let good digestion attend on appetite."—Holloway's Pills are universally acknowledged to be the safest, speediest, and best corrective for indigestion; loss of appetite, acidity, flatulency, and nausea are a few of the inconveniences which are remedied with ease by these purifying Pills. They strike at the root of all abdominal ailments, they excite in the stomach a proper secretion of gastric juice, and regulate the action of the liver, promoting in that organ a copious supply of pure, wholesome bile, so necessary for digestion. These Pills remove all distention and obstruction, and, from their harmless composition, are peculiarly well adapted for delicate persons and young children; they expel impurities, strengthen the system, and give muscular tone.

Correspondence.

THE LATE WAR IN EGYPT.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The passages "from one of the daily papers" to which Mr. Wicksteed makes allusion in his sermon reported in your last number is, I think, worthy of a more accurate report. It is to be found in the Standard of the 21st of September, and runs as follows:—

"Slippery Pachas apart, Egypt remains to the Khedive. Egypt with its fields of grain, and rice, and cotton, its ignorant and laborious Fellahs, its dams and dykes and profitable mud. Out of these elements an Oriental nation can always be constructed. It is enough that the five millions of people whom the Khedive can again call his subjects are once more wading among their fields, looking after their crops, and providing the resources out of which the European bondholders can be paid."

It does not sound well this, but has the rarer merit of being perfectly outspoken and straightforward, free from all clap-trap phrases about "the cause of freedom and good government." How much this cause is indebted to us the following extracts from the telegrams published in the same paper will show; they refer to the Khedive's return to the Capital:—

"The natives—colonels, chamberlains and officials—were evidently in high glee, and were laughing and congratulating each other that the good times had returned at last."

"No one could have witnessed the bearing of the Egyptian crowd upon this occasion without feeling that England has upon her hands another Dost Mahommed Khan or Wali of Kandahar. These indeed had a party among their people, but the Khedive has not outside his own entourage a single loyal follower. Were the Egyptian people like the Afghans it would need all England's power to sustain Tewfik."

"As I drove through the streets of Cairo on the night of the illuminations curses on the Khedive and threats against Europeans were heard on all sides, the temper of the people being in strange contrast with the outward signs of rejoicing."

"The reception of the Khedive appeared unfortunately but most distinctly cold. Here and there a few of the natives salaamed, but the vast majority of the crowd remained motionless and silent. A remark by an Arab who stood near me was worthy of notice. He said to another Arab who stood by him, 'The Khedive returns like a child in his nurse's arms.'"

What kind of a child it is that we have adopted, and are forcing upon a sullen cowering nation the following extract from the pen of an observer, impartial at least as regards current events, may testify:—

"Prince Tewfik, surnamed Mademoiselle Frederick, is a personage only too closely identified with the worst traditions of his father's reign—with its jobbery, plunder and oppression, and unremarked for a single thought or act promising those qualities which Egypt must demand from her future rulers, if she is ever to enter the comity of civilised nations.—Egypt under Ismail Pacha, by Blanchard Jerrold, 1879."

"No one can be fool enough to imagine that her Majesty's Ministers were influenced by such low motives as personal interest in speculative securities, but that their policy was swayed by consideration for the interests of the immensely powerful clique of money-lenders can scarcely be doubted in view of such an expression as Earl Granville's, 'the pecuniary interests on behalf of which her Majesty's Government have been acting.'"

Leeds.

C. H.

ORNATE SERVICES.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In speeches, articles, and letters, the subject of liturgies has of late been somewhat prominently brought under the notice of your readers. In some of these it appears to be assumed that a more ornate form of worship than was formerly adopted amongst us must necessarily be liturgical; but for this assumption no sufficient reason has been assigned. Our Churches may have all the graces of architectural, sculpture, and painting that the artistic and æsthetic taste of our time demands, and

"perfect music set to noble words," without the introduction of a creed in the disguise of a liturgy. The admiration of beauty in form and colour, of poetic hymns effectively sung, of chants and anthems accompanied by the best music and appropriately rendered, may and does exist along with a strong objection to stereotyped forms of prayer and praise, compulsory on successive congregations and successive ministers, to whom they may not only be distasteful, but who cannot conscientiously use them. They are compulsory, inasmuch as it is inconvenient and expensive to substitute new books for those already in use, and also, and even more, because there will always be some who, from old association and personal preference, cling to the old, though it may be obsolete, forms to which they have been long accustomed. It is painful for those who desire a change to press for it in opposition to the wishes of esteemed friends, and so the forms and phrases that expressed the thought and feeling of a bygone day continue to be used long after they have ceased to give adequate utterance to the convictions and aspirations of new generations of worshippers. That this change must always be going on in our progressive Church has been recognised by Dr. Martineau in the successive hymn-books he has prepared for its use, and more especially in his fine preface to the "Hymns of Praise and Prayer." He has shown that in the hymn-book this progressive tendency may be provided for; but in liturgical forms this is impossible, and thus these forms are seen to be as inconsistent with the Unitarian position as a creed, though, through the inconsistency being less obvious in the one case than in the other, it often escapes notice.

Let us make our churches as beautiful, our music as excellent, our services in every way as attractive as we can, but let us not suppose that in order to do this effectively we must imitate as closely as we may the liturgies of the old creed-bound orthodoxy. With that the old forms and the old phraseology are in harmony; but surely the new faith may find new modes of expressing its reverence and its aspiration more appropriate, and not less beautiful, than those in which the theologies of the past gave fitting expression to their dogmatic and unchanging beliefs.

AN ÆSTHETIC UNITARIAN.

October 3rd.

THE HINCKLEY CONGREGATION. TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Will you please help us in a difficulty? Lately we have a little stir of life in our midst. Strangers have come to our services—so many that we are short of hymn-books. We use Martineau's early edition. If we must buy new ones we shall be tempted to get the recent fuller edition—an expense we are unwilling to impose upon our members. Perhaps some congregation who have lately made this change of hymn-books may have a few of the earlier editions lying by. If such exist we shall be glad to buy them, or to take them as a gift. I wish their secretary would let me know how many, &c.

Hinckley, Oct. 3.

H. ATKINS.

MR. WILLIAM KERMODE, who has resided in Natal for many years, has just issued, through Messrs. Trubner, a handy and exhaustive account of that rising colony. The work will deal specially with Natal as a successful field for emigration, the natural advantages, mineral wealth, prospects of agriculturists, ostrich farming, and also as a safe and profitable field for the investment of capital. The work is intended to be thoroughly matter of fact rather than speculative.

THE Queen's printers, Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, are about to issue an edition of the Book of Common Prayer, furnished with introductions, analyses, and notes by Canon Barry, Principal of King's College. It will be styled the "Teachers' Prayer Book," and will form a companion volume to the "Teachers' Bible." Ten volumes of "The Pulpit Commentary" having now been given to the Old Testament, Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co. propose to commence the issue of the New Testament series with two volumes treating of the Gospel according to Mark. These will be edited by Dean Bickersteth. The Old Testament series will be continued at intervals of two or three months.

Religious Intelligence.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE.

The current Session of this College was opened on Tuesday, at University Hall, Gordon-square, which has now become the property of the College. An address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Drummond on "Religion and Liberty," which is printed in full on another page. Among those who were present on this occasion, which was especially interesting as commemorating the union of the two institutions, were Joseph Lupton, Esq., President of the College; the Rev. Dr. Martineau, Principal; the Rev. Professors Estlin Carpenter, M.A., and C. B. Upton, B.A., B.Sc.; the Rev. Dr. Sadler, one of the Visitors; R. D. Darbishire, Esq., B.A., and the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, B.A., Secretaries; Professor Morley, LL.D., Principal of University Hall; H. Foster Morley, M.A., Dean; the Revs. P. H. Wicksteed, H. Solly, T. L. Marshall, T. Holland, J. Worthington, R. Shaen, W. Copeland Bowie, C. H. Waid, Mrs. E. B. Squire, Miss Tagart, Mrs. S. S. Tayler, Miss Preston, Messrs. Ferrett (Madras), S. Charlesworth (Sheffield), I. M. Wade, J. G. Crawford, R. Martineau, Dr. Plimpton, &c.

At the conclusion of Dr. Drummond's address Professor Morley rose and said he was unwilling with any words of his to disturb the effect of Dr. Drummond's address, but as the Principal of the Hall he had been asked to address the students, and he wished to point out the spirit in which they might work together and learn that true fellowship and religious brotherhood of which they had just heard. That building was founded in 1848, twenty years after University College was founded. The foundation of that College was the first great victory of religious liberty in our modern age. The College was founded and supported mainly by those who were not members of the Church of England, and it was opposed on the ground that teaching not associated with the religious doctrines of that Church was unsafe and pernicious. Thomas Campbell, the poet, was one of the first who had the idea of a large free university open to all without regard to any differences of religious opinion. The opposition was so strong at that time to a place of education not associated distinctively with the theology of the Church of England that a charter was refused to the new university. After much discussion a compromise was effected; the University of London was established as an examining body with examinations and degrees open to all, and what had originally been founded as London University was henceforth University College, London. The Hall was established at a time when there was a decline in the first vigorous life of University College. It was founded to commemorate the passing of the Dissenters' Chapels Act, which was another great victory of religious liberty. It was founded in the year when Pius IX. came to his See with the promise of reforming the old Papacy—the year of movement and revolution throughout all Europe.

The college, in order to avoid difficult and disputed questions, had no chair of theology. University Hall was founded as a home for University College students, where the spirit of religion should have just recognition, without any sectarian restrictions. It was intended to make the Hall as far as possible like a well-ordered English home, where the religious spirit should be cultivated, and the students should feel that they enter into a true fellowship and a real brotherhood. They would now endeavour to make the Hall all that in its earlier days it was not possible to become. Manchester New College had now made itself responsible for carrying out the trust of University Hall. It is henceforth to be a place of training for its own students, and a home for University College students, with the view of bringing them both into closer fellowship. All that could be done had been done to make the building a pleasant place with all the conveniences of home. Within the last sixteen years a new period of vigour had dawned upon University College, and the number of students had almost trebled. The barriers had been thrown down which separate men from women in their studies—(loud applause). The University of London had thrown open its examinations for degrees to all comers and to both sexes. But another question had occupied the attention of the professors. There was a want of more social life among the students. While they were discussing among themselves how to effect this, and were thinking of establishing a company for building chambers, he was asked to take the office which he now held; and he invited the students to assist him in working out the question to which he had referred—(loud applause). He came to his new office with full and cordial recognition of the work of Manchester New College. For carrying out all that they wished in the Hall there was strong help in a body of students like those of Manchester New College quite irrespective of their theological opinions. The Hall is now as full as it can possibly be, opening with thirty six students—(applause). About a dozen of these were students of Manchester New College; about a dozen were picked men who had passed the first examination for the Indian Civil Service; and about a dozen were students of University College. The applications for admission were so numerous that they had been obliged to close their gates to three dozen more applicants. He wished the life there to be as free, happy and cheerful as it possibly could be outside the natural home.

The learned principal concluded with an earnest appeal to the students to second his efforts in promoting a true collegiate fellowship in the Hall, and resumed his seat amidst long-continued applause. The proceedings then terminated.

THE GENERAL BAPTIST ASSEMBLY.

The Autumnal Meetings of this Assembly were held at Dover on the 25th and 26th of September. They commenced on Monday evening with a service in Adrian-street Chapel. The Rev. JOHN HOWARD, of Long Sutton, took the devotional part of the service. The Rev. J. J. MARTEN, Secretary to the Assembly, preached the sermon from 1 Timothy ii. 5, 6. The discourse was followed by the Communion Service, which was well attended. The Rev. T. B. W. BRIGGS presided, the Rev. J. HOWARD offered prayer, and the Rev. J. A. BRINKWORTH gave the address.

On Tuesday morning, at eleven o'clock, the members reassembled in the Chapel for the induction of the Rev. Henry Solly, elected one of the Messengers of the Assembly, in place of the late Rev. John Marten. The Rev. T. B. W. BRIGGS gave the address on this occasion, also the right hand of fellowship to Mr. SOLLY, who, in reply, said he had long felt strongly drawn towards this section of the General Baptist body, for it seemed to him that they held fast to great Christian truths without pushing them to exaggerated extremes, and had rejected certain dangerous errors without committing the common fault of sliding into precisely the opposite fallacies. As regarded the office they had asked him to share with his friend and brother the minister of that chapel; it was an honoured and honourable one. It was very little he could do now to advance their cause—it was too late in the day for him to attempt the large and active labours which such an office would naturally involve. But what little work for them lay within his power he would gladly do; and he only hoped that when he was gone they, and One greater than themselves, would be able to say of him, "He hath done what he could."

The induction service concluded with prayer, after which the brethren and friends, by the kind permission of Colonel Gordon, were permitted to visit the turret tower (on which is mounted the eighty-ton guns) at the end of the Admiralty Pier. They then returned to dinner, in the vestry of the Chapel, which was well served by Mr. Ford, of Snargate-street. After partaking of this substantial repast the company went to the Castle and were courteously conducted through the underground works, the armoury, tower, church, and surroundings. This was replete with the deepest interest to all the friends present, who will not soon forget the pleasure and profit enjoyed as they passed from point to point, and information, historical and antiquarian, was given to them.

At six o'clock tea was served in the chapel. A large company sat down, after which the chair was taken by the minister of the chapel. An anthem was sung by the choir, when Mr. SOLLY read a paper on "The True Basis of a National Church."

Mr. Solly's plan was to some extent based on the lines of National Church Reform Union, but took a wider scope. He desired to see the national church endowments which had been bequeathed for religious purposes strictly employed for the moral and spiritual benefit of the nation. But instead of being exclusively in the hands of one religious denomination, he desired to see them administered by and for all the religious denominations which had been able to make good their claim to a definite and recognised position of Christian usefulness among the people. He thought they should be placed in the hands of an administrative council consisting of equal numbers of clergymen and lay men elected by the various denominations, and which should have power to employ these funds in the support of public worship, the payment of ministers' salaries, the erection or repair of places of worship, the employment of travelling preachers and missionaries, the promotion of religious education, and of various well-considered plans of moral and social improvement and reform. This council should be responsible to Parliament, i.e., to the great representative council of the whole nation, for the faithful discharge of its duties according to the fundamental principles of equal justice and impartial support of religious and moral purposes, but so long as it acted in accordance with those principles it should not be interfered with by the State. It would have no power to regulate doctrines, or to impose creeds, rites, or ceremonies. These, with every detail of church management, organisation, discipline, and administration, would be left to be dealt with by each denomination as at present. But by bringing men to act together for labours of Christ's love, and for moral and spiritual objects in the name of Christ, and in loyalty to Him as the Great Head of the Christian Church, they would all gradually be drawing nearer to each other in Church Fellowship and Christian love. Thus the foundations of a truly National Church would be laid, and the Lord of the Churches would see that wise master-builders were forthcoming to rear the structure in noble and beautiful proportions. He regarded this subject as one of profound practical importance. At present vice and crime—evils of every description—were rampant in the land, and Christian Churches, with all their distracting disputes and discussions, were doing comparatively little to uproot them. If they could only get them to unite on some such common national basis as he had indicated for hearty co-operation against the common foe, none presuming to dictate to or laud it over the rest, employing the vast endowments bequeathed by the piety of their forefathers for Christian purposes, and a holy crusade against the kingdom of darkness and wrong, they might yet hope to see the Kingdom of Light and of God established in all its glory on earth, and preparing the nation for Heaven.

A very lively discussion followed, the speakers taking part being the Revs. T. Rix, J. J. MARTEN, T. B. W. BRIGGS, J. FELSTEAD, J. A. BRINKWORTH, and J. HOWARD. In his eloquent and earnest reply Mr. SOLLY ably sustained the arguments he had advanced in his valuable paper.

The choir rendered essential service by their beautiful anthems, hymns, &c.

On the following day the Rev. T. B. W. Briggs most hospitably entertained a large party of the ministers and friends of the Assembly at his residence, Capel Lodge.

ORDINATION AT TEMPLEPATRICK.

The Presbytery of Templepatrick (in connection with the Remonstrant Synod of Ulster) met on Tuesday week for the ordination of the Rev. F. Martin Blair, late of the Home Missionary Board, to the pastoral charge of the Templepatrick congregation, the pulpit of which was vacated by the resignation of the Rev. Robert Campbell, on account of ill-health. There were present the Revs. Moore Getty (Ballycarry), John Jellie (Carrickfergus), R. Cleland, B.A. (Crumlin), and F. Thomas (Cairncastle), members of Presbytery; James Cooper (Belfast), James Black, M.A. (Manchester), John Hall and English Crooks (Ballyclare), W. S. Smith (Antrim), James Kennedy (Larne), John A. Kelly (Rademon), and the Rev. J. Hamilton, Presbyterian minister, Templepatrick.

A large representation of the congregation, together with many friends from Belfast, Crumlin, Ballyclare, Raloo, Antrim, and Carrickfergus assembled in the church at twelve o'clock, filling it in every part. Notwithstanding the cloudy state of the weather the church, which has been newly furnished with open pews of pitch-pine, new gallery at the south end, and elegant lamp-fittings and upholstery, looked bright and cheerful. The improvements, in fact, comprise a rebuilding of the edifice, with the exception of part of the old walls. The devotional part of the service was conducted by the Rev. J. KENNEDY, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. F. THOMAS from Proverbs ix. 12—"If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself." The explanation and vindication of the Presbyterian form of Church government, and of the principles of non-subscription, were given by the Rev. M. GETTY, who then proceeded to put the usual questions to Mr. Blair and the congregation.

On these being answered, the ordination prayer was offered up by the Rev. R. CLELAND, the ministers present joining him in the laying-on of hands. After the ordination hymn was sung, the charge to the newly-ordained minister was delivered by the Rev. J. BLACK, and the charge to the congregation by the Rev. J. JELLIE. The interesting services were concluded by the singing of the dismissal hymn and the benediction.

A dinner was served in the Templeton Arms Hotel at 3.30, when a large company was entertained by the congregation. The Rev. JOHN JELLIE, who presided, gave the following toasts, which were heartily received:—"The Queen;" "The Prince and Princess of Wales;" The Lord Lieutenant, the Chief Secretary, and Prosperity to Ireland." The name of the late minister, the Rev. Robert Campbell, being announced by Mr. Jellie in affectionate terms as the subject of the next toast, much sympathy at his continued ill-health was expressed by the meeting. The Rev. Mr. GETTY responded on Mr. Campbell's behalf. The CHAIRMAN then proposed "Health, happiness, and success to the new minister," and claimed a special interest in him from old acquaintance with his family, and from having had a part in his early training.—Mr. BLAIR, in responding, acknowledged Mr. Jellie's kindness, and made a happy reference to the origin of the Templepatrick Congregation, over 250 years ago, and its subsequent history. Other toasts followed—"Prosperity to the Congregation," responded to by Mr. WILLIAM KELL (secretary) and Mr. M'ADAM A. BIRKMYRE; "The officiating Ministers," responded to by the Rev. R. CLELAND; "The Ministers of our Presbyteries," by the Rev. W. S. SMITH; "Our English Brethren," by the Rev. J. BLACK. "The health of the Rev. J. Jellie" was given by the Rev. E. CROOKS (who had previously taken the chair on Mr. Jellie's having to leave), to which Mr. BLAIR spoke in response, and the company dispersed.

A soirée was held in the church at 7.30 P.M. There was a large and highly respectable company assembled, numbering over 500. After tea the Rev. English Crooks was called to the chair, and expressed his hearty interest in the proceedings of the day. After an opening hymn a varied programme, consisting of anthems, solos, duets, and readings, was rendered with great taste and spirit by friends who had kindly come from Belfast to give their services.

In the course of the evening one or two short addresses were delivered. Mr. Blair said that it gave him much satisfaction to know that a large number of friends were present who belonged to other denominations, and among them he would especially mention his neighbour, the Rev. Mr. Hamilton. There were also friends from a distance to whom he was much indebted for their presence on that occasion. He was very glad that his former tutor, Mr. Black, had been able to come and take an important part in the impressive services of the morning. Mr. Blair concluded some very earnest remarks by hoping that the services of the day would be an incentive both to himself and to the congregation.

The Rev. J. BLACK, who was warmly received, spoke of the pleasure it gave him to be present, and the interest he had in his former students who were now settled in the north of Ireland. He hoped Mr. Blair and his congregation would not allow themselves to be too easily content with a little success. It was a fault in many congregations of England, and it might be true of some in Ireland, that they were quite satisfied with very small results. No doubt religion was a matter of hidden influences, and the effect of the minister's efforts might not be always visible; but while that was admitted, there was a visible success which we ought to expect. He could not imagine any cause to be in a healthy condition if it was not making a progress that could be seen. The Templepatrick congregation displayed an excellent spirit in what they had recently done for their church, and he only wished to express his hope that their young minister would cherish the enthusiasm of his youth and be their leader for many successful years.

A vote of thanks to the members of the choir, to the ladies who presided at the tea tables, and to the stewards was proposed by Mr. KELL, and seconded by the Rev. F. THOMAS. The Rev. R. CLELAND responded in the name of the stewards, and the Rev. J. A. KELLY on behalf of the ladies.

A vote of thanks to the chairman was passed with acclamation and duly acknowledged. The proceedings were then closed with the benediction, pronounced by the Rev. Mr. HAMILTON.

The Liberal Pulpit.

SOCIAL SCIENCE AND CHRISTIANITY.

[Preached at Nottingham, during the meeting of the Social Science Association, Sept. 24, 1882, by the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.]

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the great and first commandment. And a second like unto it is this. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hangeth the whole law, and the prophets."—Matt. xxii. 37-40.

It is the common place of our time that this generation which now walks the globe has witnessed a development of physical science unparalleled in the history of the world. It is an observation less common, but not less true, that our generation has witnessed a development of philanthropic care and effort such as no previous generation has known. The very weighing down of our hearts with the sorrows and sins and oppressions which rest so dark and heavy on the faces of the peoples is proof that the men and women of to-day are giving a heed to the woes of the nations such as has never been given to them before. There are men of sorrows among us now bearing in their bosoms the world's griefs, wounded for the world's transgressions, bruised for the world's iniquities, who out of their tender hearts cry out that never were such evil times as these. But this very cry of mourning is the sure testimony that the dayspring from on high is already visiting us, that the day-star already shines; and the chastisement that lies on these is the chastisement which shall bring the wide world's peace; and even with these very stripes of theirs the tribes and peoples for whom they bleed will by and by be healed.

And yet, while the philanthropic movement of our day is of wider range than any of which history gives us record, and while in individuals here and there the motive of the movement is as intense as in any prophet who ever stood on any lonely mount of God, the great wave seems to lack something of the dominating sweep of power which has characterised lesser movements from time to time in days gone by.

The philanthropy of to-day cannot compare in vigour, though so much larger in scale, with the wonderful movement of which the early Buddhist histories tell, when good King Asoka, moved by the great compassion of the Master, covered his kingdom with hospitals for the sick, set resting places for the weary and fountains of sweet water all along the dusty roads, and on rock and boulder inscribed in imperishable letters the wise and benignant laws which made pity and love the very pivots of human conduct. The leagues and the unions of to-day with their myriad beneficent purposes, wonderful as they are and bright with blessed hope, cannot compare in intensity of motive and unswerving resolve of achievement with the first outpouring of apostolic zeal which carried Paul through weariness and painfulness, watchings often, hunger and thirst, fastings often, cold and nakedness, stretched even Peter the denier at the last on the rack of martyrdom, and enshrined John in the heart of Christendom, the hero saint of the undying gospel of love. Nay, who will say that, wide, sincere, of bright augury though it be, the social reform of our time has in it the inspiration of dauntless purpose which gave might to the great Catholic companies at their inception, the Society of Jesus and the rest, or the stern and rigid force which their gloomy creed put into the movement of the Puritans of the Old England and the New? What comparison will the decorous interest and the mild plaudits which we accord to the speakers at our Social Science Congresses bear to the white heat of the early Wesleyan propaganda, or the intensity of enthusiasm with which the Anglican movement shook University and Church under the courageous leadership of Newman and of Pusey?

For my part, after all credit is given for the benevolence, the disinterested toil, the love of the true and of the right, of the modern sociologists, while I well know that some at least among them are of the stuff of which in sterner times martyrs have been made, I am painfully impressed with the absence of any over-mastering enthusiasm welding them together in the might of a united purpose. Says the hymn which rises on the air from cathedral and from Bethel, "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God"; who can compare the confused movement of the varied host of our reformers with the steady tramp of ordered soldiery? What banner do they carry at their front? What martial music gives the impulse to their tread?

What, then, is the binding, inspiring power that is missing? What do we lack to give us unity? What spring of enthusiastic purpose is it of which we fail? Behind the vigorous reforms of King Asoka lay the burning conviction that the Master had shown the way by which all living beings might be saved, and the curse of life at last removed from every sentient spirit. Behind the stupendous toil of Paul was the man burning with the living flame of the gospel of Christ crucified. Behind the missionary might of the Jesuits and of the Puritans alike lay the profound conviction that this was God's work that was to be wrought against the phalanx of the scheming powers of hell. Behind the deeds of Wesley and the Wesleys lay the divine passion to save immortal souls. What unifying conviction, what grand, welding, common belief can you show me arming with resistless power the army of the reformers of the day in which we live?

The lack to-day is of a conviction, mighty to impel, thrilling through the ranks of the regiments of workers, moulding them to one indomitable purpose, firing them with the enthusiasm which makes prophets, apostles, martyrs. The marvellous stimulus and consolidating power of a great conviction grasped and held with all the strength of the mind is seen in the extraordinary progress of natural science since Darwin unlocked to thinkers the secret of evolution. Recreated at a touch by the magic formula, natural science has gone forward with great leaps and bounds. The light has gone flooding out all round the field, and earth and heaven are transformed in the great reconstruction under the mastering impulse of one all-solving thought.

No one supreme conviction comparable in solvent power with the idea of evolution in the sphere of physics has seized the heart of this generation in the moral and social sphere. Individuals clasp some supreme conviction to their bosoms, and in the strength of it go forth to high achievement; but the mass is without an inspiration. Though the conviction of one be opposed to the conviction of another as pole to pole, the very fact of intense conviction itself gives the right arm power and kindles divine fire on the pen and on the tongue. Ellice Hopkins holds the whole Evangelical theology with the fervour of a confessor, and the very voice of the Holy Spirit seems to speak with her lips as she pleads for pure hearts and loving homes. The strong soul of Frances Power Cobbe rejects the Evangelical theology, but trembles with the rapture of the fatherhood and motherhood of God, and her brave words ring out from her pages with a power before which generations to come shall marvel, saying, "Verily a prophetess dwelt with our fathers," though to-day not one experimenter makes less sharp the knife of torture for the cry of her remonstrance and rebuke. But as a people, we, the Englishmen and women of this ninth decade of the nineteenth century, are without any supreme conviction; and therefore without union, without inspiration, without might.

But you will say that I forget that this is a Christian people, that the Churches amid all their variance proclaim one God, one Christ, one Redemption, and one Heaven. You will remind me that this very Congress opened with sweet songs of prayer and praise, and the worship of a marshalled throng amid storied stone and the dim, sweet, softened light of a noble English Church. And you will ask is not the Creed of Christendom the very formula you want to back the philanthropic effort of the day?

And while I for my part do not hold what is the Creed on the forefront of the great mass of Christian Churches, yet freely do I confess that if the reformers believed it, it would have power to give their labours all the intensity of motive which they need.

Yes! the doctrine of Protestant Christendom, with its story of imperilled souls, of the pending of a tremendous and eternal judgment, of a God-

Saviour racked and bleeding in infinity of divine compassion for the sinner, believed, has power to lift all Social Science Congresses into Councils of Apostolates, and for modern politicians and philanthropists to give us inspired prophets and evangelists. Believed,—yes! But unbelieved,—professed, but not believed,—spoken with the lips, but not striking to the heart,—it is powerless to build up the fabric of a mighty philanthropy, as the dead dust and ashes that bury old Pompeii to be made bricks and stones for the building of colosseum and forum and basilica. It crumbles to the touch, falls to dust as it issues from the mouth; there is no strength in it save to stifle and to kill.

The Creed of the Churches believed would inspire new Pauls, and new Luthers, and new Wesleys. But with the mass of the people it is dead as an inspiring power; and even those who have not yet found out that they do not believe it, save here one and there another, doubt it in the recesses of their souls. It is no longer true to the current universal consciousness which men breathe as inevitably and unconsciously as they breathe the air; and therefore it cannot save their souls alive or send them out into the world strong with the might of God.

There is a false liberalism as well as a true liberalism current on the lips and in the minds of men. And the false liberalism says that it does not matter what a man believes about God or no God, Christ or no Christ, soul or no soul, but dark eternal death. It is true that it is of higher moment to live up to our beliefs though they be full of error, than to believe correctly on the vast themes of life and death and destiny. It is true that it is better to doubt honestly than to believe dishonestly, better to face doubt and abide by it, than with the arts of self-delusion persuade yourself that you believe what the real man in you does not believe. It is true that variance of belief should be no bar to unity of fellowship, that the stand-off of Churchman from Dissenter, of Orthodox from Unitarian, of Christian from Agnostic is the great social shame and sin of good and earnest men. All this belongs to the true liberalism. But it is not true, but for ever false, that truth is not sacred. It is the false and fatal liberalism not to stand by whatever conviction lives in your own breast, not to cleave to whatever truth you hold in your own right hand. It is the false and fatal liberalism that permits men to abstain from the life-long pursuit of truth. It is the false and foolish liberalism to look for working force in the man or the society that is without the inward power which springs from some clear and strenuous belief.

Behind all these discussions, good and fruitful though they be, on the training of the young and the nursing of the sick, on the helping of the poor and the raising of the fallen, on licensing laws and food supply, on pauperism and sanitation, abides the need of a religion—a religion not of lip and knee alone, nay, nor only of the brain, a religion welded to the soul, a religion which we all with all our heart, and mind, and strength shall grasp and love and live—a religion not of the Sunday or the Church alone, a religion not folded in a napkin and buried in the earth, and only brought out to show when the Lord comes by, but a religion of which we shall lay hold—nay, rather which shall lay hold of us, and, as the spirit drove the Galilean into the wilderness of old, drive us into this tangled wilderness of man's sorrow and difficulty, perplexity and sin. Herein lies the strength of Comtism as against all other Agnostic systems of the day, by which it is laying hold of some of the very flower of our youth—that it knows men cannot be truly men and do great deeds without religion, and after its fantastic kind it presents a religion to us. A religion we must have, or all our well-meaning social striving can only lead to anarchy and all our science land us in confusion. And this religion, whatsoever it be, must be the very truest that our intellects and hearts can reach, and, like the theory of evolution in the realm of natural science, it must give a cohesion and a unity to all our conceptions of life and its laws and purpose.

Without that—a religion, believed of the people, and believed above all of, the workers, and professed while it is believed—our social science may tinker at the vessel of our humanity, and amend something here and something there.

But the great redemption, the earthly salvation, it can never bring about. Poverty will oppress, and drunkenness will scourge, and lust will scar, though Congresses meet for a hundred years. Vain to look for the grand emancipation, that kingdom of heaven on earth which shall consist of diffused art, equal laws, clean cities and sober homes, till a religion moves and inspires as with a martial music the army of our reformers and philanthropists. And that religion must be a religion which dares declare itself wherever men gather to take counsel how to do battle with the evils of the world. How strange a sight to Paul of Tarsus or Augustin of Hippo to behold a gathering of men and women discussing the world's sickness and suffering and foolishness, and vice and crime; looking in each other's faces and asking "how shall we mend the world"—yet no one of them all daring to speak out the creed that fires his own soul—if indeed his soul be aflame at all—for fear of being called to order by the chairman! Yet it is the wise men, not the fools or bigots, of our time who have perceived that we must needs exclude the expression of theological opinion from public discussions of social problems. God grant us soon a religion of which each man may with joy read the response in his brother's heart—so that talking on these things we may each be able in the love of God and man to say the whole thought that we have in us!

If I have shown at all that some great national conviction—some true unity of spiritual churchmanship—is necessary before we can get wisdom or power for the vast work we have to do, I have done what I set out to do. I want England to believe something, more than I want her to believe what I believe. Yet I cannot forbear to say how it seems to me that the sublime, simple, all-sufficing, all-reconciling, all-inspiring creed, is ready to our hands; and how not only is the creed ready, but all the people are ready to believe the creed with mind and heart and strength if only a prophet might arise gifted of God to proclaim it so that all men should hear and understand. That God loves us and that we may love God, and that in the love of God we all are to love one another, that I for my part believe to be the creed that is now and for ever true, and the creed which the English people are prepared to believe when once with prophetic power it is preached to their awakened hearts. It is an old doctrine dimly heard among the peoples of the earth ere ever the name of Jesus fell from Mary's lips upon the ears of her wondrous boy. It is an old doctrine preached with the supremest power of prophecy by Mary's son when he stood forth alone against the world. It is an old doctrine which has ever been the secret of the conquests of Christianity over the heart of man, amid whatever distortions and beneath whatever superincumbent fictions. But it is the new doctrine, ineffably sublime in its simplicity, an offence to the wisdom of this world on the very ground of its simplicity, which alone of all possible doctrines that men can hold can at once welcome every hard-won truth of modern science and philosophy, and conserve the primeval reverence which stirred the great heart of Abraham, the triumphant faith which glowed in the dark eyes of Paul, and the beatific love which shone in the serene face of John. With Patriarchs and Evangelists it hears the voice of God commanding the light to shine, and feels his hand all tenderly laid upon the world; with reformers and philosophers, it bids no man be afraid, strikes off the gyves forged by sacerdotal superstition, and exults in the triumph of every discovery wrested from the unknown and every truth newly reasoned from the recesses of the human mind. It is the one faith that has for its Priesthood mankind, for its Bible all human thought, for its Sabbath eternity, for its Temple the star-domed universe. I believe it is the one faith which lies at the base of all true Social Science, and as it wanes or waxes gives the measure of all social retrogression or advance.

MRS. NATHANIEL MONTEFIORE has given £2,000 to University College Hospital for the endowment of two beds, in memory of her late brother, Sir Francis Goldsmid, and her late son, Mr. Leonard Montefiore.

THE REV. PAGE HOPPS IN AMERICA.

The Boston Herald reports that a large and cultured congregation assembled at Dr. Putnam's church, Roxbury, near Boston, Sept. 10, to hear the Rev. John Page Hopps discourse from the text, 1 Peter iv. 19:—"Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." The sermon, it is stated, was one of those simple, yet effective, appeals to the heart and understanding which, in these days of stilted pulpit oratory, are too seldom heard. The hideous theory that the removal by death of the loved ones of the home circle is but a method employed by the Almighty for the chastisement and discipline of the family was unsparringly condemned by the preacher, who, through his discourse, maintained that the God of all power is likewise a God of law and order, whose rewards and penalties are as unvarying and unfailing as are the courses of the sun, moon, and stars, or as the laws of creation itself. "In this bright and beautiful world," said the preacher, "how often have we to face suffering and deal with it as best we can. The dark, sad problem of human life, growing out of human suffering, is as old as the ages. This problem of life and suffering becomes a still more difficult one when, in the words of Peter, we are to strive that this suffering may be according to the will of God. In this era of church-going it is easy to give utterance to pious phrases, but how seldom does the heart respond to the words uttered by the lips. That this suffering may be endured by those who commit themselves wholly to the will of God—the text of this discourse—is the most difficult problem of all to understand. The apostle calls God 'a faithful creator,' and in that single phrase cuts the knot of mystery and difficulty. Much of what passes current for Christianity in England, and probably in America, is, after all, but a sort of compromise between the pagan and the modern ideas of a supreme being. Praying to the Almighty to change His mind when they become abject supplicants is a sort of slavish service which the so-called Christians of to-day vainly believe to be the love and worship of God. We may be very cultivated and very æsthetic in our modes of worship, but our religion, on such a foundation, will be a series of vain emotions and nothing but fruitless alternations between hope and fear. The pagan idea that God deals directly and immediately with men seems to pervade the minds of too many Christians. True religion teaches us that the unchanging rules and laws of the Eternal, when obeyed, lead to happiness and well-being. It teaches us to commit ourselves to God as to a faithful Creator. Let him who thinks that, because of these unchanging laws the universe lapses into a huge piece of mechanism, consider that it is the Creator of the earth and the heavens who alone can control their destiny, and that the laws of cause and effect are as unyielding as the grave itself. It is a pitiful and a ghastly thought to believe, or pretend to believe, that, because a little child breathes a poisonous atmosphere and dies, that that child was taken by God for the good of the parent! What mother would not lay down her life for her child? There is much to be deplored in this sort of superstition and ignorance. The little child was taken, not to punish its parents, but simply because the laws of the universe had been disobeyed. The poison was not placed at the feet of the little one by God; it was the out-growth of the impurities of the world, coupled with the carelessness and neglect of some one, and the innocent child was the victim, while sorrow and anguish filled the heart of the fond parent. If you ask 'Of what avail is prayer?' I answer, pitilessly, 'None,' if by prayer you hope that the laws of the universe, which are the laws of God, are to be set aside; if by prayer you think to gain that which he has decreed to be impossible. If, however, you pray that God will take you and your children into His Divine keeping, and will accord to you and them that which is best, and in the meantime so live as to conform to his laws and commands, prayer will avail much. In the words of the text, commit yourselves to God, and await his good time and pleasure, and all will be well. Do not attempt to hasten the faithful Creator in the work which is all His own. Let us try to understand the problem; and, if we cannot, let us trustingly commit ourselves to God as to a faithful Creator."

The congregation lingered about the sanctuary at the close, exchanging words of approval and appreciation of the wholesome and simple lesson from the word of God and pleasure at the coming among them of Mr. Hopps.

Literary Notes.

THERE is reason to believe that the essays contributed by Professor Stanley Jevons to the Contemporary Review will shortly be published in a collected form.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND Co. will publish early in October a collected edition of the poetical works of Mr. Lewis Morris. The edition, which will be at a considerable reduction in price, will be in three volumes, obtainable separately, "The Epic of Hades" being the second volume of the series.

THE Academy says that Professor Anfrecht, of Bonn, has recently been staying at Oxford, with the object of collating some Sanskrit MSS. in the Bodleian. He is now on a visit to Cambridge with a similar purpose.

THE cheap edition of Mr. Thayer's book, "From Log Cabin to White House," consisting of 10,000 copies, has been entirely taken up by the trade, and another edition of the same number will be issued from the press immediately.

THE first volume of Messrs. Cassell and Co.'s series of technological manuals, edited by Professor Ayrton, F.R.S., and Dr. Wormell, will be ready in a few days. It will be entitled "Cutting Tools Worked by Hand and Machine," by Professor Robert H. Smith.

THE first part of Mr. Anthony Trollope's new novel, "The Land Leaguers," having reference to Irish life of the present time, will appear in Life on November 15.

It is said that the family of P. J. Proudhon have recently discovered a manuscript of his bearing the title "Le Césarisme et l'Histoire." They propose to publish it.

M. BARTHELEMY ST. HILAIRE, the veteran author and friend of Thiers, has finished his French translation of Aristotle's "Historia Animalium," which will be published immediately by Germer Baillière in three volumes, with reference and commentary. He contends that the text was originally accompanied by illustrations.

ACCORDING to the Athenæum, negotiations for international copyright between France and Germany, which have been going on for some time, are approaching a satisfactory conclusion.

THE London Society for the Extension of University Teaching will open its seventh session this month. Lectures will be delivered at twenty-one centres.

THE veteran historian Leopold Von Ranke is now engaged in preparing for the press the third volume of his "Weltgeschichte." It will comprise the Roman Empire and the beginning of Christianity.

MR. S. H. BUTCHER, Fellow and Lecturer of University College, Oxford, has been appointed Professor of Greek in Edinburgh University. There were eleven candidates.

THE session of Owens College was opened on Tuesday by an introductory lecture by Professor J. E. C. Munro, recently appointed to the chair of jurisprudence at the college. The Dean of the Medical School (Professor Gamgee) stated that it was hoped that the new medical buildings at the college would be completed by January next, so that they might expect to have them ready for the summer session of next year. When these buildings were completed the medical school of Owens College would possess a range of laboratories and lecture-rooms which he thought would be second to those of no medical school in England.

THE Bibliographer for October contains an interesting article on the "Librarians of Cambridge," and also a continuation of "London Signs of Booksellers and Printers," by E. W. Ashbee, Esq., F.S.A.

MESSRS. LONGMAN AND Co. are about to publish an important work by the late Sir William Stirling-Maxwell on the life of Don John of Austria. Attracted to this subject while occupied with the preparation of his "Cloister Life of Charles V.," the author bestowed upon it almost incredible pains for nearly thirty years. The MS., which was recast and rewritten more than once, was privately printed, and further corrections and additions were afterwards made. To illustrate the work he got together a collection of portraits, engravings of statues, gems, ships, weapons, and alphabets, which may be regarded as unique. The whole of this great collection will be used in the large-paper edition, which will be issued in two volumes folio, and of which only one hundred and fifteen copies will be printed. Another edition will be published subsequently in the usual library form, at a price which may render the work accessible to readers generally.

WE have reason to hope that the essays contributed by the late Stanley Jevons to the Contemporary and other Reviews will shortly be published in a collected form.

MR. O'DONOVAN's work describing his travels east of the Caspian during the last three years, and his five months' residence at the Turcoman capital, Merv, will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder, and Co. at the beginning of next week. The author, in addition to a spirited account of his adventures, gives with considerable detail the diplomatic history of what is called the Merv Question. The work will form two volumes, with several maps and copious appendices.

NEW BOOKS.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH AND Co.'s announcements include "Reminiscences of Court and Diplomatic Life," by Lady Bloomfield; "The Life and Times of St. Anselm," by Martin Rule; "Life of Antonio Rosmini-Serbatì," by G. S. Macwalter; "Diaries and Letters of Philip Henry" (father of the commentator), by M. H. Lee; "The Duke of Berwick, Marshal of France," by Colonel Townshend; "John Duncan, Weaver and Botanist," by William Jolly; "Free Trade Speeches of the Hon. C. P. Villiers"; "Demerara Papers," by Everard F. im Thurn; "Notes of a Visit to Russia in 1840-41," by the late William Palmer, selected and arranged by Cardinal Newman; "The Elements of Military Administration," by Captain Buxton—and a new edition of Miss Ellice Hopkin's "Work amongst Working Men." In philosophy and theology their list includes:—"Nature and Thought, an Introduction to a Natural Philosophy," by St. George Mivart; "The Greek Philosophers," by A. W. Benn; "The Origin of Ideas," translated from the "Nuovo Saggio" of Antonio Rosmini-Serbatì; "Notes on Evolution and Christianity," by J. F. Yorke; "The Evolution of Christianity; 'Unconscious Testimony,' or, the Silent Witness of the Hebrew to the Truth of Historical Scriptures," by C. F. Hutton; "A Synopsis of Moral and Ascetical Theology," arranged by the late Rev. James Skinner; "The Chair of St. Peter," by John Nicholas Murphy; "Many Voices," extracts from religious writers from the first to the sixteenth century; "Romanism, Protestantism, Anglicanism; a Layman's View of some Questions of the Day," by Oxoniensis; "A Critical Commentary on the Revised Version of the New Testament," by the Rev. W. A. Osborne; a volume of sermons by the Rev. J. H. Thom, of Liverpool; and a volume by the late H. T. Adamson on "The Millennium." The new volumes of "The Parchment Library" will be "The Christian Year"; "Gay's Fables," edited by Mr. Austin Dobson; a selection of Shelley's letters, by Mr. Richard Garnett; Mr. Mark Pattison's annotated edition of Milton's sonnets; the earlier poems of Mr. Tennyson, and "French Lyrics," selected and arranged by Mr. Saintsbury. To these may be added the first volume of a new series, to be produced in a similar style, but on larger paper; this introductory volume is to consist of a selection from the writings of living English poets. In poetry are announced:—"River Songs and other Poems," by Arthur Dillon; "Birds and Babies," by Mrs. Coxhead; "The Garden of Fragrance," a complete translation of the "Bostân of Sâdi, from the Persian," by Dr. G. S. Davie; "David Rizzio and other Tragedies," by the author of "Genevra," &c.; Lessing's "Nathan the Wise," translated by Eustace K. Corbett; and "Hymni Usitati Latine Redditi," by Mr. Justice Lawson. In the "Pulpit Commentary" series will appear two volumes on St. Mark's Gospel, edited by Dean Bickersteth; and "Jeremiah," by the Rev. T. K. Cheyne. In the "International Scientific Series" will be published translations of Ribot's "Diseases of Memory," and of N. Joly's work on "Man before Metals;" Robert H. Scott's "Elementary Meteorology;" and Professor Sheldon Amos's "Science of Politics."

MESSRS. Rivington have nearly ready "Lectures and other Theological Essays," by the late Dr. J. B. Mozley; a translation, with a preface by Canon Liddon, of Antonio Rosmini's "The Five Wounds of the Church;" the Rev. P. G. Medd's Bampton Lectures for 1882; "Thoughts upon the Liturgical Gospels for Sundays," by Dean Goulburn; a continuation of "Practical Reflections on Every Verse of the Holy Gospels," containing Acts to Revelation; "Selections from the Writings of Canon Liddon; "The Witness of the Passion," by Canon Knox Little; "Meditations, Poems, &c., for Invalids," edited by the Rev. M. F. Sadler; Vol. III. of the Bishop of Lincoln's "Church History," bringing the history down to the Council of Chalcedon, A.D. 451; a series of miniature volumes of selections from various authors, by Mrs. Sidney Lear, entitled "Sunrise," "Noon," and "Sunset;" "Early Influences," with a preface by Mrs. Gladstone; an abridged edition of the "Life of Bishop Gray of Capetown;" a large-type edition in one volume of Mrs. Sidney Lear's "Precious Stones;" and other new editions.

Obituary.

THE REV. DR. CHANDLER ROBBINS.—The death of Chandler Robbins, D.D., last week, removes a minister from the Church whom we loved to think of among the Boston clergy. Born at Lynn in 1810, he was graduated in a distinguished class at Harvard with the Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Judge Geo. T. Bigelow, Rev. W. H. Channing, Judge Benj. R. Curtis, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Rev. Samuel May, and Professor Benj. Pierce. He succeeded Ralph Waldo Emerson in the pastorate of the Second Church, Boston, and remained in that office forty-one years. He had a strongly built and firmly knit frame, and was active, athletic, and determined. He was a man of deep and serious convictions, and looked with such distrust on the tendencies of recent Unitarianism as to give it up altogether as a scheme of divinity. He stood more closely in sympathy with Dr. Rufus Ellis and with Dr. A. P. Peabody than with any of his Boston associates. He reached the happy position where he felt himself in sympathy with the entire Evangelical Church, and was recognised by its members and ministers as far as he was known. He was himself an author, and has left behind him a number of brief histories, historical collections, sermons, and biographies to commemorate him. The literary work of which he used to speak as having given him the most pleasure was "The Social Hymn-book," which he compiled. He had high and deep views of his ministry, whose offices he discharged with tender seriousness, in a manner to impress his congregation and endear them to him. Personally he was a gentleman of attractive manners, scholarly and thoughtful, and a very warm-hearted and plain-spoken Christian.—New York Independent.

THE REV. DR. JAMES MARTINEAU, the Athenæum says, is understood to be arranging materials for a work of an autobiographical character.

NEWCHURCH.—The members and friends of the Unitarian Church assembled in the school-room on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of taking leave of their minister, the Rev. A. Lazenby, and Mrs. Lazenby. Mr. Lazenby having decided to take further collegiate training at Manchester New College and London University, he placed his resignation some time ago in the hands of the congregation, and though they would have gladly retained his services, they felt bound, under the circumstances, to accept his resignation. After tea a meeting was held, presided over (in the unavoidable absence of Mr. John Bentley) by Mr. Ashworth Law, who was supported on the platform by Mr. Thomas Aikin, J.P.; Mr. J. Ashworth (superintendent of the school), Mr. J. W. Ashworth (secretary of the chapel and school), and other friends. The Chairman said they were met to express their appreciation of the services Mr. Lazenby had rendered to the church and school during his ministry amongst them, and also to present to him some token of their esteem. After an address from Mr. John McLaughlin, Mr. Thomas Aikin, J.P., in an appropriate speech, presented to Mr. Lazenby, on behalf of the congregation, as a memento of their esteem, an illuminated address, together with a purse of gold, amounting in value to £30. Among other features of Mr. Lazenby's ministry, the address noticed the untiring energy displayed by him in connection with a bazaar promoted by the congregation. It also spoke of the "kind and valuable aid" always so willingly rendered to the congregation by Mrs. Lazenby. The address was signed by Mr. Aikin, on behalf of the congregation. Mr. John Ashworth, superintendent of the school, next presented to Mrs. Lazenby, on behalf of the elder female scholars, a handsome silver fish knife and fork in case. Upon the knife was the following inscription:—"Presented to Mrs. Lazenby by the elder female scholars of the Unitarian Sunday-school, Newchurch, as a token of respect, 1882." Mr. James Edward Ashworth then rose, as the eldest scholar of Mr. Lazenby's class, to present to him, on behalf of the Young Men's Class, an elegant photograph in handsome gold frame of the members of the class, together with their teachers, Mr. Lazenby, and Mr. Thomas Aikin, J.P., upon which was engraved the following:—"Presented to the Rev. A. Lazenby by the members of the Young Men's Class in connection with the Unitarian Sunday-school, Newchurch, as a token of affection and esteem and appreciation of his valuable services as teacher of the class during his ministry at Newchurch, September, 1882." The Rev. A. Lazenby, on behalf of himself and Mrs. Lazenby, replied in feeling terms, speaking with especial gratitude and appreciation of the support and help he had received from her in his work at Newchurch. On the following day Mr. Lazenby concluded his ministry at Newchurch.

THE REV. H. R. HAWES ON THE CLOSE OF THE EGYPTIAN WAR.—Preaching at St. James's, Marylebone, on Sunday, Mr. Hawes said there ought to be a touch of the "sackcloth and ashes" about our thanksgiving. Personally, he could not exult over the discomfiture of the weak by the strong, for who were the "rebels," and why had we fought them? The rebels were the descendants of those cultivators of the Nile Valley who under the Pharaohs had made Egypt happy and prosperous, and in times of famine the very granary of the world. Would they ever be well governed again? Should we ever send a Joseph to guide her rulers and develop her resources, instead of the greedy speculator, with a "Control" at his back, to levy a crushing interest for money lent to extravagant Pachas? Our English Minister had at length admitted that the "rebel" grievance was real. The interest of our money was, in fact, pitilessly ground out of the people under the "Control," whilst foreigners had usurped the pay and places which properly belong to Egyptians. Arabi had attempted, like Garibaldi, to vindicate constitutional grievances unconstitutionally. He was less respectable and less able than Garibaldi, and he had been beaten. But, although an unwise counsellor and a poor soldier, what national feeling there was seemed to have gone along with him. War might have been waged for the Canal or the Bondholders, or both, and it might have at last become necessary; but that British forces should be used to silence real grievances and crush anything like national aspirations was a calamity—a calamity which no admiration for the ability of our generals and the bravery of our troops should make us forget. Thanksgivings as for a special interposition had been offered up in many churches, but, admitting the war to have been altogether just and needful, he could not adopt that language, for he did not believe in any Divine interposition in this matter. He did believe in the steady and divine triumph of justice and truth and freedom in the long run, but history and experience showed that the triumph was often retarded by the action of subordinate causes, such as "big battalions," and he supposed few people really doubted that we had conquered the Egyptians, not because we were in the right and they were in the wrong, but because we had the "heaviest hand." The notion that in particular battles God fought for one side more than for another seemed to him to be a pagan, or at most a Jewish one. The Romans believed in Castor and Pollux, and Joshua believed in a tribal God Jehovah, who stopped the sun, fought for the Jew, and occasionally put him through some very doubtful transactions. But the religion of Christ spoke of a God of peace and consolation, who was the Father of all men, and who, in spite of their wickedness and weakness, in every conceivable war loved and pitied both sides alike.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH.—The eleventh anniversary of the Theistic Church was observed on Sunday by the congregation gathered in the Langham-hall, Great Portland-street, when the Rev. Charles Voysey, late vicar of Healaugh, reviewed the progress of the movement, which it may be remarked has numbered, among many distinguished supporters, Sir Charles Lyell, Bishop Hinds, Sir John Bowring, the Earl of Harrington, and Erasmus Darwin. In the course of the service, the form of worship being set down in a revised Prayer-book compiled by Mr. Voysey, who alone conducted the service throughout, a lecture "Concerning the Use of Reason in Matters Pertaining to Religion" from "Ten Manchester Lectures" by John Page Hopps, was read in lieu of chapters from Scripture for the lessons. Mr. Voysey, who wore a white surplice and his hood as B.A. of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, retains his orders in the Church, and is strongly in favour of maintaining the union of Church and State as one important safeguard of religion. The congregation were desired specially to remember the Archbishop of Canterbury and his family in prayer and thanksgiving. The responses, anthem, and hymns were sung by an efficient choir of mixed voices. Taking for texts the words "Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not" (Gal. vi. 9), and "Our help standeth in the name of the Lord, who hath made heaven and earth (Psalms cxliv. 7), the preacher said it was with these texts for mottoes they began their work as Theists on the 1st of October, 1871. In these eleven years they had lost by death 187 members of their Church. It had been a hard and uphill fight to make the outside world know and understand their real aims and convictions. Looking only at the surface of things, ordinary people might well be excused for a prejudice against them. They were acting like Nonconformists to begin with, the minister of this church had been deprived of his benefice for heresy. Regarding especially his unbelief in the Divinity of Christ, they might be excused for calling him an "infidel;" for, to large masses of our countrymen, Christ was the only or at least the supreme God. The name of infidel, given in all honesty and handed about from one to another, would lead the outside world to think that they were of course in league with the many cliques of Atheists, Secularists, Positivists, and would-be Revolutionists, who were as much the aversion as they were the dread of all good citizens and lovers of social order. It took years to undo these wholly false impressions. The chief difficulty of all lay, however, in the two great principles of Theism which could not be reconciled with Christianity as universally accepted. Having explained and dwelt on these principles of the cult, Mr. Voysey spoke of daily increasing proofs that their religious beliefs were spreading in all directions, and especially of late among the clergy of the Church of England and other ministers of religion. In connection with this subject he stated that the issue of sermons to friends at a distance, which ten years ago was under thirty copies a week, now amounted to over five hundred, and this, added to the number sold at the hall, made a total of about eight hundred copies. Remarking with thankfulness upon the fact that he had not once been prevented by sickness from performing his functions on Sunday, he stated that provision had been recently made by which the service would be performed as usual in case of his absence. Two years ago the society had been organised in order to secure its permanence after his death or retirement. It was no longer the Voysey Establishment Fund, but the Theistic Church which now claimed their generous and zealous support.—Times.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEAD, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.]

Bassins' (Rev. E.) The Modern Hebrew and the Hebrew Christians, 4/6
Butler's (J. B.) Life of Jean Frédéric Oberlin, 3/6
Dale's (R. W.) The Epistle to the Ephesians, its Doctrine and Ethics, 7/6
Friendships of Mary Russell Mitford, edited by A. G. L'Estrange, 2 Vols., 21/
Geikie's (A. C.) Human Sympathies of Christ, 2/6
Leathe's (Rev. S.) The Foundations of Morality, 5/
Redford's (Rev. R. A.) Prophecy, its Nature and Evidence, 5/

DEATHS.

HUGHES—On the 24th ult., at the residence of her brother, Widcombe, Isle of Wight, Eleanor Hughes, aged 75 years, deeply regretted.
SHUTE—On the 3rd inst., at Liverpool, Ellen Welsford Shute, second daughter of the late Stephen Shute, Esq., of Liverpool and of Crediton, Devon, aged 63.

Quarterly, Price 2s. 6d.

THE MODERN REVIEW.

EDITED BY THE REV. B. CROMPTON JONES.

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER.

The Doctrine of Evolution in its Relations to Theism. By Dr. William B. Carpenter, F.R.S.
 Dr. Kuenen's Hibbert Lectures. By Russell Martineau, M.A.
 Justin's Use of the Fourth Gospel.—II. by Dr. Edwin A. Abbott.
 Dr. Martineau's and Mr. Pollock's Spinoza.—I. By Prof. C. B. Upton, B.A., B.Sc.

Musica Ecclesiastica. By Alexander Gordon, M.A.
 Hamlet and the Tempest. By Frank Walters.
 The Image of Truth. By Miss L. S. Bevington.
 R. W. Emerson. A Letter to the Editor. By W. H. Channing.
 Notes and Discussions: the Origin of the Name "Jehovah." By Prof. A. H. Sayce, M.A.
 Notices of Books.

London: Published for the Proprietors by

JAMES CLARKE AND CO., 13 AND 14, FLEET-STREET, E.C.

THE STORY OF RELIGION IN ENGLAND

By BROOKE HERFORD.

Second Edition.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Subscribers and Schools can now be supplied with this work at Eighteen pence per copy, nett.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 3s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap Iss. 12. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.
TEXTS AND MARGINS OF THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH, 1s.
A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORCOTE.
 Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High-street, Birmingham.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Marquette.

SEASONABLE DELICACY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

As Blanc-Mange, Custard, Baked Pudding, &c.

WITH

STEWED FRUIT OF ANY KIND.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WESTBOURNE TOWER, standing in private grounds, is specially arranged as a health resort for those seeking rest; with cheerful home life, lawn tennis, baths. Terms moderate, include medical attendance.—Dr. NOATON.

APARTMENTS are offered in a small but thoroughly clean and comfortably furnished house; suitable for a gentleman of quiet and regular habits, engaged out during the day. Convenient for the City or West-end.—Further particulars supplied on application to Mrs. Heywood, 100, Calford-road, De Beauvoir Town, London, N.

"THE FORT, MARGATE." — APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON (for Ladies), 8 and 9, YORK-PLACE, PORTMAN-SQUARE.

The SESSION will begin on THURSDAY, October 12. An INAUGURAL LECTURE will be given on October 11, at three o'clock, by Professor BEESLEY, on "Scipio." Ladies and gentlemen admitted on presentation of their visiting cards.

F. KENSINGTON, Hon. Sec.

LONDON AUXILIARY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The Half-yearly RELIGIOUS SERVICE to the Teachers and Friends will be held at Unity Church, Islington, on Saturday, the 14th inst., at 4 o'clock P.M. The Rev. T. W. FRANKELTON will conduct the Service.

Tea will be provided at 6 o'clock; tickets sixpence each. CONFERENCE at 7 o'clock. The Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, LL.D., will take the chair, and a Paper be read by Mr. FREDERIC ALLEN on "Aids and Hindrances to Sunday-school Work."

NORTH-MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Leicester on Tuesday, October 17. The Ministers and Delegates will meet at 10.30 in the School-room of the Great Meeting, Bond-street.

At Noon Service will be conducted in the Great Meeting by the Rev. J. MODER. The Sermon will be preached by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds. A Collection will be made in aid of the funds of the Association.

At 1.30 Lunch will be provided in the School-room; tickets 2s. each. At 2.30 the ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING will be held, under the presidency of the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

On Monday Evening, October 16, a Soirée of the Great Meeting Congregation will be held, to which members of the Association are cordially invited. Tea at 6. Tickets 9d. each.

ERNEST W. ENFIELD, } Hon.
 V. D. DAVIES, } Secs.

LONDON UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICES.

The first of these Services will be held in Little Portland-street Chapel, on Thursday Evening, October 26, 1882.

The Service will commence at 8 o'clock precisely, but friends are especially requested to take their places five minutes earlier, so as not to disturb the devotions of others.

It is hoped that all Unitarian, Free Christian, and kindred congregations in London and the suburbs will be well represented.

The Meeting will last not more than seventy-five minutes, and will be conducted by the following gentlemen:—

The Rev. T. SADLER, Ph.D., of Hampstead; EDWIN ELLIS, Esq., of Guildford; the Rev. ROWLAND HILL, of Bedford; the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds. Organist, Wm. Tate, Esq., of Hackney.

At the close of the Service there will be an Offertory at the doors to cover the cost of the Meeting. Large donations are not desired, as the expenses are but small.

SCOTTISH UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETINGS will be held in St. Vincent-street Church, Glasgow, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th October.

On Sunday, 15th, Sermons will be delivered by the Rev. PHILIP H. WICKSTED, M.A.; Services at 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

A Sermon will be delivered by the Rev. HENRY IERSON, M.A., in South St. Mungo-street Church; Service at 2 P.M.

Meetings will be held on the 16th and 17th as follows:

Monday—
 3 P.M.—An Open Conference with the representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association on the best means of carrying on Unitarian work in Scotland.

7.30 P.M.—Autumnal Meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, DAVID AINSWORTH, Esq., M.P., in the chair.

Tuesday—
 2 P.M.—Meeting of the General Committee of the Scottish Unitarian Association.

3 P.M.—Annual Business Meeting of Subscribers to the Association.

7 P.M.—Annual Soirée. Tea on the table at 7 o'clock, after which a Public Meeting will be held; JOHN PULLAR, Esq., in the chair.

David Ainsworth, Esq., M.P.; S. S. Taylor, Esq.; John Pullar, Esq.; Rev. Henry Ierson, M.A.; Rev. Philip H. Wicksted, M.A.; Rev. H. W. Crosskey, LL.D.; Rev. R. B. Drummond, B.A., and others will take part in the Meetings.

W. J. MILLIGAN, Hon. Secretary.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday October 7, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2103.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

Party Conflicts at the Church Congress ...	661
"Spoiling the Egyptians" ...	662
"Faith and Unfaith"—I. ...	663
Romance ...	664
The National Unitarian Congress ...	664
Education in Switzerland ...	665

OCCASIONAL NOTES ...

REVIEWS:—

Memoir of Daniel Macmillan ...	666
The "Contemporary Review" ...	667
The "Nineteenth Century" ...	667
The "British Quarterly Review" ...	667
The Magazines ...	667
Literary Notes ...	668

OUR CONTEMPORARIES ...

CORRESPONDENCE:—

The late War in Egypt ...	670
---------------------------	-----

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Association ...	671
---	-----

OBITUARY:—

The Rev. James Orr, of Clonmel ...	674
------------------------------------	-----

PARTY CONFLICTS AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

THE recent meeting of the Church Congress in the old and historic town of Derby, to an outsider who tries to form a just idea of it from the reports in the papers, is a curious and interesting study. On some points all reports are agreed, on others certain papers are discreetly silent, while certain other papers ring with discordant cries. All are agreed that the place of meeting was well chosen, that its accessibility from all parts facilitated the attendance and contributed to make it a success. All are agreed as to the large number of visitors, both lay and clerical, who attended, and that an earnest interest was maintained from the beginning to the close of the proceedings. But here the agreement ceases, and the discreet silence of some papers, contrasted with the conflicting cries and comments of others, attracts our notice.

One thing is quite evident, that party spirit is still strong in the Church. The two great parties of which it is almost entirely composed are not content to dwell side by side in the Establishment. They are still animated by a spirit of mutual antipathy and mistrust. Each is watchful of the other, and each exults at any party success. If any one wishes to test the truth of this remark, he has only to glance through the columns of a single number of the Church Times and the Rock. The bishops and other heads of the Church seek to mediate between the contending parties. They dislike extreme opinions one way or the other, but are prepared to tolerate considerable differences of ritual. They do not object to different schools of thought in the Church. Indeed, some approve them as evidence of its national character. As there are different types of thought among the English people, the fact that these find expression in the Church they urge to be a fresh ground for the allegiance of all to it, and a proof of its truly catholic character. These are plausible arguments and strong reasons for a policy of conciliation. Such was the spirit of much of the speaking at the Church Congress. Compromise, Conciliation, Comprehension were the watchwords uttered both by those who read papers and those who delivered speeches—at least through all the early part of the proceedings. This was especially the tone of a large portion of the President's opening address. Nothing could be more suitable, or timely or wisely spoken than the counsel which he gave, "Let them admit their differences—divergences of thought in matters of religion had always existed in the Church, no age had been free from them, not even the Apostolic times—and meet face to face as brother men, brother Christians, brother Churchmen; not to oppose each other, but to understand each other; not to confirm their prejudices, but to adjust their differences."

After this seasonable counsel it was only natural to expect that there should be peace and calm for a time. The expectation, if indulged by any present, was soon dispelled. On the same evening in the Temperance Hall certain questions dealing with matters of the very deepest interest to Churchmen were discussed—Disciplinary laws as affecting the clergy; Criminous and negligent clerks; Church courts; Canonical obedience. The intense party spirit of the Ritualistic and High Church section was brought out strongly at this meeting. One prominent feature was an elaborate paper read by Canon TREVOR, which the Guardian tells us was "extremely successful," and that "its numerous and very palpable hits called forth peals of sympathetic laughter and applause." Against what or whom were those "very palpable hits" directed? Against the law relating to a Church established by law, and against those who in duty bound declare the law and require obedience to it. Every hit, that is every sentence of insubordination, was applauded to the echo. One speaker at the meeting was Mr. J. THEODORE DODD, who said, "The Bishops in the Judicial Committee were bound to decide by statute law, not by God's law. Bishops were useless in the Privy Council if they had to leave the Bible outside. This was a wrong position for the Church, and a partial rejection of CHRIST as king over his church. Let the Bishops repudiate the Privy Council and declare for the Bible, and let Churchmen inform the Royal Commission that it was no use attempting to preserve the Privy Council as the court of appeal for the Church." What does this mean? If anything, it is an argument for disestablishment. Let the Church be disestablished and disendowed, and then it can manage its own affairs and settle its own differences as it pleases. But while it enjoys the prestige of State alliance, while it is a church established by law, having special privileges on that account and forming in itself, by its Bishops sitting in the House of Lords, an integral portion of the legislature, the clear duty of the clergy is to obey the law. Another speaker was the Rev. Dr. BELCHER, of St. Faith's, Stoke Newington, who insisted that the contest now going on was a contest between the Word of God and the Privy Council; and he wound up an animated speech with the remark that "Lord PENZANCE had received a good many hard knocks, but he hoped that the noble and learned Lord would long continue to adorn his present post, for it would be a great danger to the Church of England if he were removed and a better man put in his place"—(loud laughter and cheers). It is difficult to say which is worse, the bad taste of this speech or the argument. What intolerable conceit is shown in the assumption that the Ritualists have the Word of God on their side and that the conflict they have themselves provoked by their extravagancies of ritual is a contest between the Word of God and the Privy Council. And as for the argument, what an admission to make that the putting of a stronger man in the place of Lord PENZANCE would be a great danger to the Church of England! The Church holds its own not because its cause is good, not because it is strong enough in itself to meet any opposition, but because one whom it recognises as an opponent to its pretensions is not a particularly strong man! And a crowd of excited listeners greet the damaging admission with laughter and applause!

But perhaps the most lively meeting of the Congress, and the one which called forth the strongest expression of divergent opinions, was held on Thursday in the Drill Hall, on "The Church and other Communions." The object of the meeting was to consider the feasibility of some degree of union between the Church and other Christian denominations. The Daily News in an excellent report says, that "while indications of disagreement with proposed modes of facilitating union of the Christian Churches were frequent the desire for some rapprochement was apparently common to the whole meeting. First, the possibility of union with the Roman Catholic Church was discussed, and the conclusion was arrived at that with Rome union was impossible, unless the Roman Church would consent to stultify herself by removing the dogmatic barriers she had set up and falling back on the Apostles' Creed as the basis of union. Some of the speakers strongly denounced the Church of Rome, but their denunciation met with indignant protest from a number of those present. A perfect storm arose when one clergyman too vigorously denounced the Romish teaching. The Roman Catholic sympathies of a powerful party at the Congress were unmistakably shown, and abundantly justified what is so often said of the strong leaning of the Ritualists towards Rome. On most points of doctrine they are at one, but the pretensions of the Papacy raise an insuperable barrier. As it is not likely the Church of Rome will abate her pretensions there seems no prospect of union in that direction.

The leading Dissenting bodies came on next for consideration. The discussion was well introduced by Canon CURTEIS in a paper on "The Deficiencies of Dissent." No doubt dissent has its defects, and grave ones, too. No one ever claimed that it was free from defects. However, there was a fairness about the tone of the Canon's paper which entitles it to respectful consideration from Dissenters, and some of the speakers were more ready than we have ever noticed before to acknowledge the great merits of English Nonconformity. But on the other hand a great many vehemently dissented from the liberal sentiments expressed, especially from the suggestion that the Church should "recognise the orders" of the preachers of other Evangelical communities. "This was a startling demand to the High Churchman who shouted 'No, no,' but it had its supporters. The Bishop of NELSON, from whom it first came, reiterated it, in the face of expostulation, with emphasis, pointing to the fact that the ministry of Nonconformists had been blessed with success, and adding the demand that Dissenting ministers should, with proper guarantees for Episcopal sanction, have English Church pulpits opened to them." We can fancy the consternation and alarm which the bare proposal for such a step excited. But the fact that it was seriously proposed at a large meeting of Churchmen, and found some sympathisers, if few, is a striking indication of the advance of liberal sentiment.

On the afternoon of the same day another subject of deep interest to Churchmen was discussed, "Liturgical Changes and Improvements." This meeting brought out strongly the important differences between the High and Low Church parties. Mr. C. L. WOOD, the President of the English Church Union, advocated the alternative use of the first Prayer-book of EDWARD VI. There seems to us nothing very unreasonable in this proposal. It would doubtless meet the wishes of a large number of the clergy and laity, and an arrangement which would make its use optional or alternative could no doubt be made. But it seems to have fallen like a bombshell amidst the meeting. It roused Canon HOARE and the Evangelical party to great wrath. He vehemently protested against any return to the Prayer-book of EDWARD VI. and the Popish breviary of SARUM, poured indignant sarcasm upon the Ritualists, and ironically thanked Mr. WOOD for making the Church acquainted with the designs of the English Church Union. During these upbraidings there was great excitement, which was not allayed by subsequent speeches, on the one hand from Mr. J. BUTCHER, who said the Prayer-book should rather be altered to be more in accordance with the Bible, and on the other hand from Canon GREGORY, who taunted the Evangelicals by claiming to have the majority with him. The President had to interfere to check the violence of the demonstration which greeted the points made on one side or the other by successive speakers. The Bishop of WINCHESTER being asked by the President to close the debate, was obliged to describe what had taken place as "an angry controversy," and endeavoured to calm excited feelings by a display of sympathy with both sides. He suggested that until the different schools in the Church came to understand each other better, they had better "bear with the Prayer-book as it is." The molli-fying tones of the Bishop and the singing of a closing hymn were fully required to calm the excitement of the meeting. So reports the Daily News correspondent. We remarked at the outset on the discreet silence maintained by some papers on certain features of the Congress. We find no allusion to this excitement in the reports of the Standard or the Times. They give us portions of the speeches, but how they were received, or what a marked display of party spirit there was we are not told.

On the whole it may be said the recent Church Congress has afforded striking evidence of the progress of liberal thought in the English Church. Most of the speeches made and the papers read bear witness to this fact. What were regarded as closed questions it is now suggested to consider as open; and proposals the bare announcement of which would have been impossible a few years ago now find open advocates. The old conservatism of the Church is surely declining. A broad and liberal spirit is taking its place, making itself felt and gradually preparing the way for future important changes. Biblical criticism, modern science, the reforming spirit of the age, the advancing education of the people, the changed aspects of modern thought, the decline of the old traditionalism on every side, the earnest quest by men of all schools after fact and reality—all this is telling with effect on the Church of England. The leaders of the Church are aware of this. They are profoundly conscious that the old conservative stationary times are past, that all is movement now; and that the teaching, machinery, and work of the Church must be adjusted to meet the altered needs of the present day. Most reluctant, probably, are the majority of the clergy to recognise all this and admit the need of change. But they are borne along by a current too strong for them to resist, and those who are wisest and most far-seeing are also aware that on this timely adjustment depends the future of the Church of England.

"SPOILING THE EGYPTIANS."

ONE tale is good at any rate till another is told. Mr. SEYMOUR KEAY has now been telling his "Tale of Shame"* for several months, and we cannot hear or see that any other tale has yet been told to prevent it going down to posterity as "good." Every statement is authenticated by extracts from the Blue-books with careful references; and the case made out is so strong, the tale so shameful, and the evidence so complete that we cannot believe any self-respecting body of men affected by it would have quietly consented to allow it to circulate without detailed and convincing refutation, had any such refutation been possible. Our own conviction is strong (and it is based on a previous and independent study of a large number of the Blue-books themselves) that the "Tale of Shame" has not been refuted because it is true; that sooner or later the country will wake up to its truth, and that when that day comes a heavy account will have to be settled by those who are responsible for the deeds recorded in it. Meanwhile the "Tale of Shame" is told in a pamphlet that may be bought for a shilling and read in a couple of hours.

In briefest outline this is the tale. Between the years 1862 and 1873 (both inclusive) English and French speculators lent the late Khedive a sum of £45,500,000, charged to him as £68,000,000, and raising his total debt to Europeans to the sum of £72,000,000. When we remember that in 1864 the total revenue of Egypt was rather less than £5,000,000, the reckless wickedness of these transactions on both sides will be obvious enough. The lending game was now played out. The usurers closed their purses and pressed for the punctual payment of their interest. How were they to enforce their claims? The monstrous debt was hopelessly disproportionate to the resources of Egypt. Strong "pressure" must obviously be applied; but as the whole affair was simply a private speculation it did not seem very possible to bring England's power to bear upon the bankrupt state of Egypt. Our Consul-General, however, received instructions or permission to use his influence "unofficially" with the Khedive and let him understand the "danger" of tampering with his creditors! This he did to such effect that every department of the Egyptian service was starved, salaries were left unpaid, the interest on the "floating debt" was absorbed, and everything was swallowed up by the bondholders. The "pressure" increased with the difficulty of getting the money, and at last it was allowed to assume an "official" character. In the end the Khedive's private estates were seized and mortgaged to European "financiers." The taxes were collected months in advance, the army was left unpaid, the fellaheen were reduced to beggary, and the whole country plunged into the depths of misery, but the coupons of the bondholders were punctually met. European officials were multiplied and Europeans remained exempt from taxes. Finally, the wretched Khedive, on the discovery that in spite of everything he still retained a little "influence" in Egypt was dismissed by the Porte at our desire.

Now it must be understood that when we are told that the "control" has worked well for the Egyptians and has greatly improved their position, the contrast is between the period we have just reviewed (from 1874 to 1879) and the succeeding period (1879-1882). The comparison is instituted between two terms of European extortion and dictatorship, and has no reference to the antecedent state of things when Europe had no pecuniary "interests" in Egypt.

But to resume the tale. In 1879 our creature TEWFIK was set on the throne. "Pressure" was again applied to get the money for the bondholders. It is difficult to record the nature and results of that pressure calmly. The whip and the bastinado were constantly applied to extract the taxes from the wretched peasantry, and our officials knew it. At last it became obvious that no power on earth could permanently extract the full usury demanded by the bondholders. A European commission met to determine how much the rate of interest must be lowered. The result was that they raised the nominal figure of the debt to £90,000,000 and fixed £3,870,000 as the annual interest. Egypt was in no way a party to this at the time. The Powers agreed as to the demands they were to make; Egypt subsequently, at the dictation of English and French officers, adopted the scheme as a measure of internal administration; but at no period did the matter become the subject of direct international engagements between Egypt and the Powers. Money, however, must be raised, and a commission, controlled by two Englishmen, determined to repudiate a claim for the reduction of the land tax after 1886 which the fellaheen had bought years ago for £17,000,000. A paltry payment of one per cent. for fifty years on the cash the fellaheen had actually paid was to extinguish their claim for ever,—“they might fairly be called upon to submit to even larger sacrifices than the bondholders [who were to receive four per cent. on the nominal, eight per cent. on the actual loan in perpetuity] in view of the advantages that would accrue to them from a permanent and creditable settlement of the financial position of their country”! It completes the picture to add that a new tax on another class of landowners was invented to meet the one per cent. temporarily granted these men.

* Spoiling the Egyptians. A Tale of Shame told from the Blue-books, by J. Seymour Keay. Fifth Edition. London: Kegan Paul.

After this there is a gap of eighteen months in the official correspondence. We only know that there had been a “total neglect of necessary reforms in the army,” and that a treacherous attempt made by the Khedive to seize certain officers who presented a petition to him was check-mated by the forcible interference of the men. Much must have occurred during these eighteen months, for when the curtain rises again we find a determined and organised attempt to get a “national ministry” for Egypt. The “Chamber of Delegates” now appears upon the scene, ARAB BEY is the recognised leader of the army, and the army is distinctly recognised by our own officials as the mouthpiece of the nation. Events now move rapidly, and divested of all irrelevant matter, the tale may be told in a very few lines. The Chamber of Delegates insisted on voting that part of the Budget which was not already assigned to the service of the debt. In strict law Egypt was under no international obligations at all with respect to the debt. But the Chamber was willing to regard the settlement of 1880 as constituting an international instrument, and determined not even to discuss the portion of the Budget there dealt with. The internal administration of the unappropriated revenue it was determined to deal with. Now what was the objection to this?

1. That the general interdependence of the various items of a country's finances threatened the bondholders with remote and indirect danger in case the grasp of the “control” upon any part of the Egyptian system should be relaxed.

2. (And this is the Consul-General's telegraphic answer to an express inquiry of Lord GRANVILLE'S) “Official salaries, not regulated by contract, would be under the control of the Chamber, so that it would be able to abolish the Land Survey, which is the result of no international engagement, and to dismiss many Europeans in the Administration.”

Our Consul-General therefore informed the President of the Chamber that the claim in question would constitute a breach of international engagements, that he could not encourage the hope that any compromise would be possible, that in all probability “the only way of obtaining compliance [from the ‘controlled’ ministers of our creature the Khedive] with their demand would be by force, and the consequence of resorting to such means had been clearly stated by the Governments of England and France.”

The Chamber persisted, and the “consequences” ensued. P. H. W.

SELWYN COLLEGE CAMBRIDGE, which has been founded to perpetuate the name and work of the late Bishop of Lichfield, was formally opened on Wednesday, when the Bishop of Ely installed the Hon. and Rev. Arthur Temple Lyttelton as master. At the luncheon which followed the opening, the speakers were the Master, who presided, Lord Powis, the Bishops of Oxford, Winchester, Lichfield, and Nelson, Bishop Abraham, the Vice-Chancellor of the University, and Professor Westcott.

“FAITH AND UNFAITH.”—I.

It has often been remarked by liberal religious thinkers that there is no logical halting place between an acceptance of the dogmas of the Church of Rome and a complete surrender to the claims and teachings of reason and conscience. And it is certainly not a little curious, and in no small degree inconsistent, that those who strongly condemn the principle of authority it its bearing upon the dogmas of that Church do nevertheless cling tenaciously to the same principle in its application to the Christian Scriptures. They speak of the Bible as an immovable rock, upon which man may calmly take his stand, heedless and fearless of the surging stormy sea of doubt and uncertainty around him, forgetting that by their previous arguments they have made this so-called rock a mere floating islet, which may sink at any moment and submerge them beneath the waves.

This inconsistency is discussed by Mr. KEGAN PAUL in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, under the heading we have given to the present article. But instead of contrasting the religion of authority with that of consciousness, he denies, virtually, if not expressly, the very possibility of the latter, and describes the conflict as one between “faith” and “unfaith,” that is to say, between the Church of Rome as the only possible embodiment of faith and the modern spirit as its direct negation. There is no via media, no spiritual standing ground between Rome and Agnosticism. He is blind to the possibility of a spiritual Theism embodying the active essence of all theological dogmas and ecclesiastical systems. Hence his argument is directed not only against the inconsistencies of Orthodoxy, but against our own position. This he seems to regard as being near the bottom of an inclined plane, which extends from the serene and glorious battlements of Rome down to the yawning gulf of Atheism or Agnosticism. It is not difficult, however, to discover several lurking fallacies in his reasoning, which render it powerless in its bearing upon pure spiritual religion.

Beginning with a reference to the condition of the Church of Rome in the Middle Ages, he admits that the “greatest and holiest minds recognised the need of reform” in order to check the luxury of the Popes and the irregularities of certain of the religious orders, and that possibly this could not have been effected “wholly from within.” Since the dawn of Christianity there had been seen in history no such event, he says, as that which on the secular side is called the Renaissance and on the religious the Reformation. Still the “Church looked askance,” even at such early reformers as ERASMUS and ULRICH VON HUTTEN, fearing that “liberty would grow into license.” At length two parties arose, and “each called the other anti-Christian.” The Protestants contended, we are told, that the pure teaching of JESUS had been overlaid by a multitude of ceremonies, and that CHRIST was virtually excluded from his own Church through the abuses of the hierarchy. To weaken the force of the Reformer's argument our author says, they “could not mean that CHRIST was nominally or implicitly assailed by a Church which had his image on every altar, claimed to preserve his body in every tabernacle, to consecrate and consume it daily; whose whole ecclesiastical year was founded on the life of CHRIST, whose very saints, even if, as their enemies said, they had taken his place, were saints only in and because of their relation to him.” No; but what they did mean was that, in spite of all the elaborate machinery of the hierarchy, spiritual religion was for the most part dead, and though the name of CHRIST was on every tongue, his pure spirit was in hardly any heart—that the form was there, the substance gone. When the Catholics, on the other hand, called the Reformers anti-Christian, they meant, continues our author, “that the new spirit of revolt had implicitly in it the denial of CHRIST, and ultimately of God; that if the promises of the Reformers were accepted, there logically followed the downfall of all faith in CHRIST, in God, and in the supernatural, and of course the utter abandonment of the name and office of a church.” Still, even these far-seeing defenders of the Church could scarcely have imagined “whereunto the difference would grow,” while the Protestants thought they should “keep to the end large portions of faith and ritual, which gradually dropped off them.”

It may be noted here that one of the fallacies underlying Mr. KEGAN PAUL's argument consists in his use of the word “faith,” which, as in the statement just quoted, he confounds with what should be spoken of as “belief.” He is, no doubt, in good company here, for this is the common vice of all ecclesiastical writers; instead of taking faith to stand for the soul's intuitive perception of spiritual things which cannot come under the cognisance either of the senses or the intellect, they uniformly import mere matter of belief into the idea, and deny the possibility of its existence without them. But to proceed. The result has justified the wisdom of the Catholics three centuries ago, as we are given to understand; for after the lapse of that period we find “that while the Church is one and the same, Protestantism is not one; it has divided into a thousand parties,” all tending to rid themselves of dogmas once universally accepted. The reactionary party in the Church of England is spoken of as “an apparent exception” to this general statement; but to make even their return to the dogmas of the past “real,” there must be “authority and discipline,” which are to be found only in the Roman Communion. In other words, Ritualism is not to be condemned as a violation of the doctrines of the Reformers, but to be rejected as unreal and inefficacious, because it does not boldly follow in the footsteps of MANNING and NEWMAN. That it is illogical we admit, how it can be considered unreal we are at a loss to understand. With the other sections of the Anglican Church, and among the Nonconformist bodies, “dogma has faded in very few articles,” says our author, and “these are always diminishing in number.” Supernatural aid is almost entirely disregarded, or, at least, vaguely described as “the aid of the Holy Ghost,” but “how that aid is given and applied is left to each.” Certainly, we reply, because each soul is cared for by the Father of Spirits Himself. This at least is what CHRIST taught the world.

Here we reach a part of Mr. KEGAN PAUL's argument which makes special reference to our own denomination. But we must reserve our remarks to our next number.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Rev. Thomas Timmins, minister of High-street Chapel, who lately attended the National Unitarian Conference at Saratoga, New York, has decided to take up his abode in the United States, and has resigned his ministry at Portsmouth.

ROMANCE.

Illusion is one of the agencies of Providence in our spiritual education. An outward, superficial but powerful charm draws us towards many things which prove in the end to be very different from what they seemed. We are not utterly misguided, mistaken and wrong in our allurements and fascinations, but we are partial and one-sided. We see only one of the facets of Nature's Prism, and in youth we gaze long on that angle which reflects and refracts the brightest colour. As age proceeds the crystal globe of life turns round, and the mental vision falls on other facets, differently cut, differently related to the light around them, and therefore yielding a different image, often far less pleasing in form and colour. Providence has a gracious intention in all this. Our minds would never move onward at all towards the Beautiful—clothed in rainbow hues and associated with dancing joys—if at the same time they had clear vision of the Actual, the dull common-place of life, destitute of charm, and accompanied often with pain and care. It seems to be certain that in order to reach a bright ideal in some higher sphere of life we must bravely pass through some dreary and dark experience in our earthly existence; but it is not wise that we should spoil the hours of sunshine by anticipating the hours of gloom. Many good people, having passed out of the bright hopes and poetic fancies of youth into the dull, serious and prosaic work of middle-life or old age, seem to forget how good, beautiful and useful for a time it was for humanity to be stimulated, gladdened and charmed by romantic hopes and expectations—the blooming of life's early flowers—and how sad and unhealthy it would have been had anticipations of blight and decay darkened the mind prematurely. Theology, pseudo-philosophy, and hard, technical, undevout science have done much mischief in this way. They have drawn us out of the sunshine into the shadows of life; they have withered the blossoms that hung from the bough, even at a time when it was natural to "live merrily" under them.

But is it not true that hopes and joys wither and decay; and must not perception of the fact often overshadow the mind of man? Yes! But what is the remedy? To find a new joy to occupy the place of the old. A good gardener, when a plant withers, removes its dead parts or takes it up and plants another; and something analogous to this should be done in the garden of the soul. It is difficult for us who are old to modify and change the romance of our early days without destroying it; it is difficult to alter its forms and associations so as to preserve its essential life and give it a higher purpose and tendency. It is very difficult to put new joys into a heart bereft of the old. And yet this is just what we ought to do or try to do. Living as we do in a universe of infinitely varied and ever varying beauty it is a sacred duty to keep every beauty-enjoying faculty alive and sensitive, to modify its action according to increase of knowledge and change of experience, but not to extinguish its life. In a word, to make [the Romance of Age as vital, as warm and as sweet as the Romance of Youth,] and more healthy in as far as it substitutes spiritual for sensuous traits.

We have recently returned from a visit to Shottery, near Stratford-on-Avon, the residence of Ann Hathaway, and when there thoughts and fancies naturally dwelt on the romantic hours of the young Shakspeare when he went thither on wooing errand to that sprightly maiden. There was plenty of illusion in that love affair; for never, probably, were two young people drawn together by a stronger attractive force in the beginning or more thoroughly disenchanted in the end. He with active fancy, boundless imagination, ever varying thought, and shifting sympathies; she, a pretty coquetish country girl, and nothing more. It was not likely that a genius so large could permanently coalesce with another so small. Yet there must have been about her, as there is, and ever has been about all pretty girls, a certain mysterious superficial charm which derives all its power over our nobler feelings from our tendency to regard it as "the outward and visible sign of an inward spiritual grace,"—beauty external being, unless nature is out of tune and harsh, the proper accompaniments of beauty internal. Alas, for humanity, there is often marvellously little of the inward substance when there is great abundance of the outward sign! But in youth we do not perceive this, and do not believe it. We love the light, beaming eye, the soft cheek, the rosy lips, the rich hair, the expressive brow, the graceful contour of the form, because these things seem to signify a corresponding symmetry within. We know that this correspondence and harmony ought to be, and in our early ignorance and inexperience of actual life we suppose that it must be. Hence we fall in love. Fountains and groves, moonlight and music, stars, flowers, clouds, morning and evening air all minister to our passion. Romance covers us with illusions. Shakspeare, like every other sensitive man, felt the influence of these outward things. They went to his heart; they moved in his brain; they awoke the powers of his fancy; they enkindled his feelings; and in this way, perhaps, even so small a character as Ann Hathaway may, by a mere smile, a little tear, a bright glance, a pretty movement of hand or foot, or one gentle, affectionate word, have stimulated the mighty powers of the young Shakspeare and prepared the way for such creations as Cordelia, Perdita, Imogen and Miranda. The romance of the boy may have cradled the genius of the man. It may have served as the first opening through which the young poet discerned the long vista of human possibilities—a vision very necessary to give impulse and movement to our souls. What are called the realities of life would probably have been much harsher than they now are, had not imagination helped in some degree to mould and temper them before they assumed the concrete and material form.

Mortal man has often been compared to a reed shaken by the wind. But this shaking wind has a freshening, health-giving power. Sometimes it is a breeze of memory, bringing to us who are old the remembrances of youth, the beauty and the perfume of departed flowers, of fresh bright mornings, of calm and silent evenings, of hours of happiness when looks were loving, when voices were soft and low, when words were wise and sweet, when pressure was warm, and kisses were sincere. As the wind bloweth where it listeth the shaking of the human reed varies, according to the region whence the moving influence comes. If from the abodes of gloom and suffering, cold and storm, our spirits shudder, and our cry is "Miserere Domine!" If from the sunny south with light and music on its wings our hearts dance and our song is "Te laudamus Domine!" In either case there is recognition of Supreme Power; an attitude of prayer.

Romantic hopes should, of course, be accompanied by the effort to realise them. Beauty and gladness seen in the distance must be approached through the medium of the duties that are close and near. Ultimately they will enjoy the sweetest rest who have patiently borne the burthen and heat of the day. They who have been unselfish and pure in their lives while here, are the fitting recipients of a joy hereafter. In this respect the romantic expectations of virtuous old age may possibly have a better foundation than that of the ardent young. Bright, beautiful, and usefully stimulative may be the romantic dreamings of youth looking forward into the world; but better still the hopes of spiritualised old age looking beyond the world. Bright is the light—Αἴγλη παμφανόωσα δι' αἰθέρος οὐρανὸν ἵκει—which is discerned through the chinks of "the soul's dark cottage battered and decayed" by time. Sanazzaro, the Italian poet, speaking of the suggestiveness of beautiful dreams, says:—

Godi dunque alma afflitta in pene involta
Che le qui tanta gioja prender puoi
Che farai sù ne la tua patria accolta?

Henry Vaughan, speaking of inward vision, says, "Some strange thoughts transcend our wonted themes and into glory peep." The cheerful old poet Beranger bids us have faith in the renewal and increase of life's beauty:—

Si le Dieu qui nous aime
Crut devoir nous punir,
Pour nous sa main resseme
Les champs de l' Avenir.

And the elegant Virgil cheers us with the belief that human grossness shall be purged away and life made sweet and clean:—

Donec longa dies, perfecto temporis orbe,
Concretam exemit labem, purum que relinquit
Æthereum sensum, atque aurai simplicis ignem.

In a still higher strain Zephaniah speaks of God Himself as bursting out into happy song over his redeemed and purified children:—"He will rejoice over thee with joy; He will rest in His love; He will joy over thee with singing."

On the whole, then, it seems that the pictures which hope and faith bring to the imagination of the ripe and serious mind of age may be even fairer than the glowing romantic fancies of the young. E. A.

THE NATIONAL UNITARIAN CONFERENCE.

We are favoured with the following extract from a letter by Dr. W. B. Carpenter, C.B.:—

SARATOGA, Sept. 22, 1882.

I have just come from the closing meeting of the Conference, which has altogether been extremely interesting to me, especially in the evidence it has afforded of the determination of the Unitarian body to take up, and heartily grapple with, the great problem presented by the regeneration now rapidly taking place in the South, alike in material prosperity and in the condition of the coloured population (the rising generation of which is eager for education and rapidly profiting by it), and by the enormous extension of population, and the wonderful progress in moral as well as in material improvement that is taking place in the South-West. Little doubt seems to be entertained that Ohio (which produced Lincoln and Garfield) is to be the Empire State of the future; and the thoughts of many of the ablest men here are fixed upon the best mode of preparing it to be so. Mr. Wade, a gentleman who has made a large fortune at Cleveland, has offered 350,000 dollars for the establishment of a new college there for the education of Unitarian ministers upon the most liberal basis, conditionally upon the raising of 150,000 dollars more; with a further offer of dollar for dollar upon every amount subscribed beyond this, so as to bring up the whole sum to 600,000 dollars. A very good small committee, including the Revs. J. Freeman Clarke and E. E. Hale (who seem to be now regarded as the leaders), has been formed to draw up a scheme, to which no other condition has been attached by the founder than that "it shall be always open at the top," to receive the highest thought that can be brought to bear upon religious progress. I believe the idea to be that the best men who can be got by liberal payment are to be engaged from time to time to give special courses on subjects they have made their own, in addition to the regular programme of study.

The system here is to hear longer "set" discourses than our Liverpool Conference admitted, and of these the one that has most interested me has been that which I heard this morning from the Rev. F. G. Peabody, on "Liberal Christianity and the Spirit of Worship." Both in manner and matter it was so impressive that I was truly glad to learn that Mr. Peabody is now one of the Professors in the Theological School at Cambridge, which seems taking quite a new start in consequence of the liberal help it has received during the last two years. Altogether I have been most strongly and deeply impressed with the thorough earnestness with which the new conditions wherein the Unitarian body now finds itself are being dealt with.

There was a great discussion last night upon Sunday-schools and services for the young, which I did not at all understand, until I came to learn from Mr. Brooke Herford that the Sunday-schools connected with the Unitarian churches here are entirely for the children of the ordinary worshippers of their respective churches—such as with us the minister would form into separate classes, and that in many instances the custom has grown up of the discontinuance of the attendance of the younger members of families with their parents at the ordinary church services, special services being conducted for them. I could not but feel with Brooke Herford that the expediency of thus breaking up the family association in public religious worship (especially where there is no family worship at home) is very questionable. Robert Collyer made a most telling speech in favour of the "unconscious influence" exercised upon the child's mind by the simple spectacle of his parents' reverence for a power beyond and above themselves; and in this I heartily agree with him.

EDUCATION IN SWITZERLAND.

Switzerland is not behind other countries in philanthropic labours, if we may judge from the report of a society for the maintenance and education of poor, forsaken children, lately started in the Leber district of the canton of Soleure, the statistics of which—considering its short existence—show very satisfactory results. For two years this society has been quietly progressing, and still endeavours in certain limited circles to lighten the lot of the poor as far as its modest means will allow. During the last eight months it has received so many pressing applications that the committee have been obliged to refuse a large number. From the 1st January to the present time no less than sixteen poor children have been put under the care of respectable families, and two boys having left school are now serving their apprenticeship with suitable masters. The number of children at present under the care of the society amounts to eighteen. Nearly all were found in abject poverty and on the straight road to begging, thieving, stealing, and everything which a lawless, irregular life without any proper education would naturally foster. Up to the present time the choice of foster parents has been most fortunate.

Which these worthy people have endeavoured, through kind treatment, to overcome the evil tendencies of the children committed to their care. Almost all these wards have grown so attached to their guardians that they feel much happier than in their former surroundings, and would think it the greatest punishment if they were sent back to the old life. The Committee of the Society consider it their duty not only to write, but to make personal inquiries into the welfare and condition of the children under their protection, so that any chance misdemeanours could be corrected immediately.

In two cases have the Committee, to their intense regret, received notice to withdraw the children, and that only because the foster parents had not sufficient strength and authority to fight against the inherent depravity of their wards. Both children are now placed in respectable families outside the canton, and there is every prospect that better results will ensue. The removal from their former surroundings has, in many cases, worked in a most satisfactory manner on their young, wild natures. We also learn that in Basle, Zurich, and in most of the important towns of Switzerland societies have been formed for sending poor children during the holidays either into the country or among the mountains, where many respectable families are only too glad to receive them, in order that they may recruit their health, or receive a beneficial change of air against the ensuing term of school work.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON.—The session at this college was commenced on Wednesday, 11th inst., by an inaugural lecture on "Scipio," given to a large audience of ladies and gentlemen by Professor E. S. Beesly. The lecturer began by giving an able general survey of the condition of Roman Democracy, describing the mode of election and the state of society. He then traced the rise of the Scipio family, and specially gave a detailed history of Scipio Africanus and all his brilliant military achievements, and in conclusion showed that there was no reason for believing that Scipio was other than a great and successful man. At the close of the lecture Professor Beesly announced the unprecedented success of the students of Bedford College at the recent examinations at the London University, viz., that all the thirteen students that went up for the Intermediate Examinations in Arts and Science passed in either the first or second class; that seven of these went up for honours, and all of them passed, two taking prizes in German and French, the only prizes awarded to women; also that the only woman who took honours in Inorganic Chemistry was a student of this college.

Occasional Notes.

WE learn from the local press that a meeting was held in Liverpool at the end of last week to discuss the question whether a Philological Society should be established in that city. The decision was in the affirmative, and many teachers of languages and other students have sent in their names as members. The object of the society is to study language as a science on the lines laid down in Mr. Max Muller's "Lectures on the Science of Language," and in Whitney's "Life and Growth of Language." It starts upon the basis that language is a historical and moral science, and not merely a branch of physical knowledge; and, with this view, special attention is to be paid to the relations of the Indo-European languages, as within the last half century the knowledge of these relations has revolutionised all preconceived ideas, and created two new sciences—comparative philology, study of different languages; and comparative mythology, study of different religions. It is gratifying to us to record that the first President of the Society is to be our friend and contributor the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, minister of the Hamilton-road Unitarian Church. Of this gentleman the Liverpool Daily Post, in a leading article, writes:—"It is well known that this gentleman shrinks from all forms of publicity other than those associated with his ministerial function; but it is due to the public to say that he has distinguished himself in many and various ways, and that the position to which he has just been elected is one that in Liverpool was his, and his only, of right. Few people who listened to the papers on literary subjects which he read at the Royal Institution, Colquitt-street, during the winters of 1878 and 1879, are likely to forget their power and beauty; and better evidence of the range of his gifts could hardly be desired than is afforded by the fact that at the Literary and Philosophical Society, in January, he read an able paper on a difficult problem in physical science, and that he is now undertaking some of the recent problems in philology."

MISS JENNETT HUMPHREYS has written two delightful papers in the last two numbers of All The Year Round, entitled "Twice Across the Channel when Charles was King." They are founded on Peter Heylyn's "Survey of the State of France," which Southey terms "one of our liveliest books of travel," and certainly Miss Humphreys enters thoroughly into the spirit of her author, who would certainly recognise in Miss Humphreys a pleasant vein of wit and humour.

ON the principle that it is well worth to attend to what is saying and thinking in the opposite camp we quote the following from the Guardian of this week:—"There is plenty of just thought, as far as it goes, in Miss Gertrude Martineau's 'Outline Lessons on Morals,' but it is melancholy to think of teachers turning to use this as a 'text-book,' when so safe a manual as the duty to God and our neighbour is virtually laid aside. The framework here is perfect, but where is the means of infusing life into it? There are chapters on Prayer, Repentance, Self-Consecration, but what are they without the Redemption to make them a reality? We turn page after page of excellently good sense about obedience, freedom, tenderness, gentleness, and the like, and feel as if we were reading of the body without the spirit; of a sort of stoic way of accepting the morals of Christianity; and if this is to be all, we wonder how many of the pupils will act up to the system."

UNDER the ominous heading, "Expulsion for Heresy" the Christian World publishes the following letter:—

Sir,—I beg to lay before you the following statement of facts, and hope that you will give it publicity. Some two years ago I applied for admission into a Baptist church in this neighbourhood on transfer from another Baptist church at Crouchend. I was admitted both into the church and Sunday-school, and have to the best of my ability discharged my duties therein. Some three months ago, however, a resolution was brought forward in the teachers' meeting asking me to resign, because I did not accept the dogma of endless torments. The resolution was carried, but on my refusing to resign a vote of exclusion was brought forward, but defeated, and I was in hopes that Christian charity had prevailed over theological narrowness. At the last church-meeting, however, the pastor re-introduced my "heresy," moving the ground, however, to the doctrine of the Atonement. The dogma laid down was "that Christ died as a substitute to appease God's anger," and, believing that the beauty of the Gospel message is that our Father needed not to be reconciled to us but we to Him, I refused to say "credo," and was therefore expelled from church fellowship, a similar course being also taken as regards the Sunday-school. Discussion was challenged in each case, but refused. On applying for admission no effort was made to conceal my views, and it was at least known that my views were not in harmony with "popular theology." I might mention that all the time a large scroll over the pulpit informs us Sabbath by Sabbath that "God is love." Does not such procedure seem almost a parody on that glorious truth?—Yours faithfully, Hornsey, N., October, 1882.]

CAST-OUT.

The editor adds the following significant note, with which we need hardly express our entire concurrence:—"It can be no very great comfort or honour to belong to such a fellowship, and our correspondent may, therefore, bear his expulsion with perfect patience and even satisfaction."

MR. JOHN MORLEY in a singularly graceful and judicious farewell address takes leave this month of the Fortnightly Review, which he has edited for the last fifteen years, in succession to Mr. G. H. Lewes, the founder and first editor of the Review. Mr. Morley speaks in the following thoughtful words of the result as seen to-day, of the polemical tumult in which he and his contributors have played a prominent part. "The clergy," he says, "no longer have the pulpit to themselves, for the new Reviews became more powerful pulpits, in which heretics were at least as welcome as orthodox. Speculation has become entirely democratised. This is a tremendous change to have come about in little more than a dozen years. How far it goes, let us not be too sure. It is no new discovery that what looks like complete tolerance may be in reality only complete indifference. Intellectual fairness is often only another name for indolence and inconclusiveness of mind, just as love of truth is sometimes a fine phrase for temper. To be piquant counts for much, and the interest of seeing on the drawing-room tables of devout Catholics and high-flying Anglicans article after article, sending divinities, creeds, and Churches all headlong into limbo, was indeed piquant. Much of all this elegant dabbling in infidelity has been a caprice of fashion. The Agnostic has had his day with the fine ladies, like the black foot-boy of other times, or the spirit-rapper and table-turner of our own. When one perceived that such people actually thought that the Churches had been raised on their feet again by the puerile apologies of Mr. Mallock, then it was easy to know that they had never really fallen. What we have been watching, after all, was perhaps a tournament, not a battle."

CAIRO-STREET, WARRINGTON.—On Sunday last the new organ by Messrs. Hopkinson of Birstal was formally opened by T. M. Pattison, Esq., who admirably brought out the rich tones of the instrument to the great delight of crowded congregations. The Rev. Richard Pilcher, B.A., preached, and collections were taken up, that in the morning amounting to £58 10s. 8d., and that in the evening to £73 11s. 1d. This handsome collection, together with subscriptions previously obtained, frees the splendid instrument from all debt.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. Glycerine, in these agreeable confections, being in proximity to the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d. and 1s. 1½d., labelled, "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, L.R.C.P.E., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

Reviews.

Memoir of Daniel Macmillan. By Thomas Hughes, Q.C. Macmillan and Co. 1882.

This is one more of the biographies written from time to time, showing the triumph of will over circumstance, the victory gained by persistent effort over many difficulties. In this respect it has no little interest, but it may be doubted whether the volume before us has otherwise much value. The founder of one of the most notable publishing houses in this country would, one would have thought, have been brought into contact with some of the remarkable men of his time; but with the exception of Archdeacon Hare, the Rev. F. D. Maurice, Charles Kingsley and one or two others, the memoir does not disclose that he was on terms of intimacy or friendship with any of the men whose fame pertains to the period covered by Daniel Macmillan's life. Nor does it throw any new light on the movements of his time, the state of thought or the condition of society. Mr. Hughes may probably, and fairly, reply, that in writing the memoir he had no other intention than to make the world acquainted with the personality of the man, and that for the history of the time in which he lived there already exist other books. All this may be true, but it does not destroy the criticism we feel called upon to make, and that is, that the memoir, while no doubt deeply interesting to many who had some sort of acquaintance with Daniel Macmillan, cannot fail to have but a limited interest to those who had none. Mr. Hughes in his preface claims for the subject of his memoir that he had "a touch, in fact, of the rare quality which we call heroism." We are not disposed to deny this, but we must add that there are hundreds of heroes whose lives deserve quite as much recognition as did this man.

Daniel Macmillan was born at Upper Corrie, in the Isle of Arran, on the 13th Sept., 1813. He was the third son and tenth child of Duncan Macmillan, who was a small peasant farmer there. When Daniel was in his third year the family migrated to the opposite coast, and settled at Irvine, and here Duncan Macmillan carried on business until his death, in 1823, when Daniel was but ten years of age. The two elder brothers, Malcolm and William, had adopted the profession of schoolmasters; the former became the head of the family, and did his best to provide for the household expenses and education of his younger brothers and sisters; but this was not much, and save what he could pick up now and then from his elder brother, Daniel got nearly all his early education from the common school. At the commencement of the year 1824, when he was in his eleventh year, he was bound apprentice to a bookseller and bookbinder of Irvine, to serve him for seven years, at 1s. 6d. a week for the first year, with a rise of 1s. a week for each of the remaining six years. The years of his service were spent in "diligence, honesty, and sobriety," as his master duly testified, and at the end of his apprenticeship he left Irvine for Sterling, where his brother Malcolm, settled there as a Baptist minister, had found a situation for him. There was not enough for him to do here, and, yielding to a strongly felt desire, he went to Glasgow, and entered the service of a Mr. Atkinson. Here it was that he laid the seeds of that ill-health which was his enemy through life. Over work and over study—"very often it was three or four o'clock of a morning before I got to bed"—proved too much for him, and a severe illness supervened, from which he only recovered by returning home, and having a complete rest of body and mind.

In September, 1833, he started for London, with letters of introduction to Messrs. Longman and other "magnates of the Row." His search for employment was not very successful at first; he was at last offered a place at Simpkin and Marshall's at £60 a year, and while he was considering the advisability of accepting this, he received another offer from a Mr. Johnson, of Cambridge, where he was to have £30 a year, together with board and lodging. He would have preferred to stay in London, but a very slight experience at Simpkin's proved to him that his life there would be intolerable. Before accepting Johnson's offer he again tried to find employment in London, but this proved out of the question; and he finally determined to go to Cambridge. In his letters he speaks in terms of great affection of both Johnson and his wife. He remained at Cambridge for three years, and during that time he joined the Baptist community, of which his master and mistress were members. "Calvinistic cobwebs" pressed hard upon him at this time; it was not till later in life that he completely brushed these away. In the second year of his sojourn here his mother died, a great blow to him. There is a very charming description of this mother of his in a letter to his eldest brother, written about a year before her death, which almost bears quoting in full, did our space admit. After speaking of his father, who, it will be remembered, died when Daniel was only ten, with the deepest reverence, as "a hard-working man, a most devout man," who "cared for nothing but his family, that is, did not care what toil he endured for their sakes," he says, "Of my mother I can speak what I do know. I know her as well as ever a son knew a parent, and my persuasion is that she is the most perfect lady in all Scotland. With so little knowledge derived from books, with so very little intercourse with the higher ranks of society, with so little care or thought on what is most pleasing in external conduct, was there ever a lady who so instinctively, so naturally, did what was right, acted with so much propriety in all cases? She has such high and noble notions that no one ever heard her say, or knew her do, a mean thing; no one could ever venture to say an impudent thing to her, or talk scandal in her presence." And then, after some further eulogistic sentences, he says, "The end of the whole matter is, that I think there is nobody like mother in the whole world. If ever I saw one with the same tenderness, strength, and calmness, the same joyousness of heart, with the same depth, I should instantly fall in love with her, that is, if there was any chance of its ever coming to anything. . . . From her we take any mental superiority we may have. What a most beautiful forehead she has! What an eye! What a face, take it all in all! A noble temple for her noble soul!" This is the language of a lover speaking of his mistress, rather than of a son of his mother, and yet there is nothing in the subsequent letters which justifies one in suggesting that the writer was extravagant in his language.

Macmillan stayed at Cambridge in the service of Johnson until the beginning of 1837. He was anxious to get away to London, but his comparative leisure at Cambridge gave him large opportunities for study, reading, meditation and reflection. His note books of that time show, from the extracts he made therein, that his reading was solid if diverse. There are bits from Milton, Andrew Marvel, Voltaire, Gibbon, Boileau, Tasso, Virgil and Landor. He fully intended to be something more than a bookseller's drudge, and no doubt he felt the advantage of the intercourse, slight though it might be, with the reading men of the various colleges. Although he left Cambridge in January, it was not until the end of March, 1837, that he managed to get employment in London. This was with Messrs. Seeley, of Fleet-street, with whom he stayed for six years at a salary rising from £60 to £130. Twice during that period his health gave way, but so highly did his employers think of him, that his place was not filled up. It was during this period that he was joined by his brother Alexander, and his sister Janet. He hoped that the latter would have been able to manage the housekeeping for his brother and himself, but the experiment was not successful, and Janet was sent back to Scotland. The coming of these and the unsuccessful experiment at housekeeping had involved Daniel in debt, to pay off which he had to sell the library of favourite books which he had been collecting all his life.

Soon after his coming to town he had joined Mr. Binney's congregation at the Weigh House Chapel, but he did not continue to belong to it after the year 1842. In a letter written to Dr. Binney, in September of that year, he says: "Dissent and Dissenting systems have been for a long time very hateful to me, so extremely repulsive that I kept them out of my mind as much as possible," and he refers to Mr. Maurice's book called "The Kingdom of Christ" as "a most noble work." He also states that he had been staying with a Churchman, and went with his family to the communion service, which he thought "most suitable." It will be seen what kind of influences were at work with Macmillan; but it must not be forgotten in connection with this that in this very letter he makes statements which go to show how a certain exclusiveness on the part of the seat-holders at Mr. Binney's Chapel had a good deal to do with his being driven for refuge into some of the city churches. Mr. Hughes deprecates this reference, and alleges that "such exclusiveness is at least as common in churches as in chapels," a statement we do not care to dispute, but we are not inclined to go entirely with him in discarding this as one of the influences that worked towards severing Macmillan's connection with Dissent. The Churchman who is referred to in this letter was Archdeacon Hare, one of the authors of "Guesses at Truth," to whom Macmillan owed so much of his ultimate success in life. This book came into his hands in the year 1840, and the perusal of it seems to have filled him with a strong desire to know something of the authors. Accordingly, in September, 1840, he wrote to them, urging them to keep in view "a class very much overlooked, who very much stand in need of guide-books to aid them in the formation of opinions on morality and religion; namely, young men occupied in the different departments of commercial life." With a courteous reply from Hurstmonceaux the matter for a time ended. Two years later an occasion came for Macmillan again to write to Archdeacon Hare; who a month later replies and ends by inviting his unknown correspondent, who was still "only one of the clerk species," to visit him at Hurstmonceaux. Macmillan was unable at first to accept this invitation, but Hare had become interested in his correspondent, and cordially repeated his desire to see him in propria persona. At last he is enabled to accept it, and in a letter to the Rev. David Watt, a missionary in India, he gives an interesting account of his visit. The visit seems to have been mutually pleasing, and the acquaintance soon ripened into a friendship. With Hare's help he was enabled to purchase the business of Mr. Newby at Cambridge, and this became the foundation of the present business carried on by the now well-known publishing firm. The correspondence with Hare, which Macmillan kept up till the death of the former, in 1855, was creditable to both parties, and forms some of the most attractive reading in the present memoir.

Daniel Macmillan was not married until the year 1850, when he was thirty-seven years of age. The engagement was not of above three months' standing; though he had long been attached to the lady, the state of his health and the small returns from his business preventing his entering into an earlier engagement. The marriage proved a very happy one, judging from the letters that we are permitted to read. But his married life was a short one, and much of it was engaged in fighting the grim enemy. The disease of which he had laid the foundations in early life gained upon him, and notwithstanding frequent visits to the warmer temperature of Torquay and the south coast, continual blisterings and doctorings, he passed away at the early age of forty-four years.

The letters in the memoir show that Daniel Macmillan was not a mere man of business, but that he was possessed of a high ideal as to what a publisher's duty should be. He was, too, evidently a man of strong religious conviction, and though his letters teem with many references to his strong faith in God, there is a noteworthy absence of those cant phrases which are so sickening to the strong-minded reader. He was earnestly desirous of benefiting his fellow men, and evidently believed that this was to be done by their becoming disciples and readers of the works of the late Frederick Denison Maurice. His Christianity was of that school, and his admiration for the man brought him into contact with Kingsley, Davies, Hughes, and others, who also belonged to it. He inherited much of his breadth of sympathy from the mother of whom he spoke in such glowing terms in the letter already quoted, and of whom Mr. Hughes says that "without any speculative liberality she had a remarkable openness of mind which expressed itself in such phrases as 'poor body, he has nae room in him, when she heard over zealous persons speaking bitterly of opponents." The portrait which forms the frontispiece to the memoir shows a shrewd, kindly, painful face. Of the way in which Mr. Hughes has executed his task it is grateful to accord this praise, that he has not obtruded himself or his opinions, on the reader, but allowed the letters and journal of Daniel Macmillan very much to tell their own story. It would be well if all biographers were content to efface themselves as efficiently.

R. B.

The Contemporary Review. Strahan and Co.
The Nineteenth Century. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co.

The Contemporary has the advantage of its younger rival in the variety and interest of its table of contents this month. There are two articles relating to theological and ecclesiastical matters. The first, on "Natural Selection and Natural Theology," is a conclusive reply by the eminent naturalist, G. J. Romanes, to Dr. Conder's article in the previous number. In the second Dr. Hayman writes learnedly and elaborately on "Diocesan Synods," an institution which liberal laymen regard with distrust or indifference, as a matter chiefly concerning the clergy, and not in any way recognised by the State.

In the Nineteenth Century there are also two theological articles, "Faith and Unfaith," on which we shall comment separately next week, and "The Site of Paradise," a dry-as-dust article by the Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., about a purely mythical question.

The politics of the day are better represented in the Contemporary than in the Nineteenth Century. It opens with no less than three papers under the generic heading "Egypt," first, "Principles of British Policy in Egypt," by Sir Richard Temple, written from the Conservative point of view of an old Indian governor, who is for maintaining the British influence combined with a recognition of the suzerainty of the Sultan. Second: "Spoiling the Egyptians," a reply to Mr. J. Seymour Keay's "Tale of Shame," by Professor Sheldon Amos, who, having recently resided in Egypt, is able from personal knowledge to correct some errors in Mr. Keay's pamphlet, while he does not appear to us to refute its main positions. Third: "Egyptian Finance," by the eminent financial authority, Mr. M. G. Mulhall, who unfolds a sad story of Khedival extravagance and bankruptcy. The other political papers are "Cloture for the English House of Commons," by G. Baden-Powell, strongly opposed to the bare majority principle, and "The Radical and Revolutionary Parties of Europe," the second part of a valuable paper by Karl Blind, full of information on a subject with which the writer has the most intimate personal acquaintance.

The Nineteenth Century has no purely political article, and, strange to say, not a single word about either Egypt or Ireland. The Abbé Martin contributes an interesting paper on "The French Educational System," in which he speaks warmly in favour of the English denominational systems, and Lord Brabazon advocates "The Early Closing Movement," showing that "freedom of contract" can no more be said to exist in the case of the large number of shop-assistants than it does in that of the clients of Mr. Parnell. "The Financial Condition of Trades' Unions" is shown to be in a satisfactory condition by Mr. George Howell, who is one of the best authorities on that subject; and Mr. Sedley Tayler discusses a kindred subject in his article on "Profit-sharing in Agriculture," which is shown to have been successfully applied to Continental Agriculture. C. F. Keary gives a very readable article on "Roumanian Peasants and their Songs," with several well translated specimens of the latter. The three remaining articles are "A Glimpse of Mexico," a brief sketch of recent travel in that country, by F. Francis; "Handwork for Children," in which Mrs. Jebb advocates mechanical training in elementary schools; and "About Voltaire," a lively and readable, but very superficial, inaccurate and flippant paper by Mr. Alex. A. Knox—a name hitherto unknown—on a subject which has been almost exhaustively treated by Carlyle, John Morley and other eminent writers.

Returning to the Contemporary we can only barely record that the remaining papers are "Foreign Birds and English Poets," a curious mixture of Natural Science and literary criticism, by Phil. Robinson; "Comets," a brief astronomical sketch by R. A. Procter, "What can India Teach us?" a Cambridge Civil Service Lecture by Max Müller; and "Contemporary Life and Thought in France," by G. Monod.

Professor Max Müller in his very interesting lecture writes:—"If I were to look over the whole to find out the country most richly endowed with all the wealth, power, and beauty that Nature can bestow,—in some parts a very Paradise on earth—I should point to India. If I were asked under what sky the human mind has most fully developed some of its choicest gifts, has most deeply pondered on the greatest problems of life, and has found solutions to some of them which well deserve the attention even of those who have studied Plato and Kant—I should point to India. And if I were to ask myself from what literature we, here in Europe, we who have been nurtured, almost exclusively on the thoughts of Greeks and Romans, and of one Semitic race, the Jewish may draw that corrective which is most wanted in order to make our inner life more perfect, more comprehensive, more universal, in fact more truly human, a life, not for the life only, but a transfigured and eternal life—again I should point to India.

The British Quarterly Review. Hodder and Stoughton.

The October number opens with an article on "Rome During the Sieges of the Sixth Century," to which is appended the signature of the well-known historian Mr. E. A. Freeman. It is a picturesque description, glowing with life, of the Rome of Justinian and Belisarius, the latter the greatest and noblest general of the later Roman Empire. Mr. C. S. Miall, editor of the Nonconformist, follows with an article entitled "Is the Church of England a National Church?" expressing the well-known views of the Liberation Society in reply to Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P. The Land Question in England, the next great question of home politics, is discussed from quite the Radical point of view in an article on "Incidents of Land and Pleas for Reform," by Mr. J. C. Fowler, who advocates a reform in the laws of settlement of land, freer sale, and peasant proprietorship.

"Is the Belief in Miracles Reasonable?" is a question answered, of course, in the affirmative by W. Steadman Aldis, a well-known Congregationalist scholar. Anything is reasonable for which there is sufficient evidence; but Mr. Aldis scarcely enters upon the historical question, confining himself to a consideration of the objections of philosophical and scientific thinkers of the Hume School, who dogmatically assert that miracles are impossible. The real difficulty is that extraordinary and highly improbable events require more than ordinary evidence; and belief in many of the miracles recorded in the Old and New Testament is attended with historical, and, in some cases, moral difficulties, which to many thoughtful minds are insurmountable.

"The War in Egypt" is discussed in a very able and candid tone by Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, a high authority on all Egyptian questions. The writer, who is evidently no political partisan, allows that the war has not been popular in England, that it is the unfortunate result of the policy of the late Beaconsfield Administration, and that its real origin is found in the interest acquired in the revenues of Egypt by a body of English and French speculators. Our Egyptian policy "has been almost exclusively in the interests of the bondholders," and we are indebted to the Control instituted by Lord Salisbury in conjunction with the French Government for the whole of this unhappy imbroglio. "We fought indirectly the battle of the bondholders," but "order and good government, and the road to India would never have been threatened but for the action of the Control, the bondholders' agents." We are getting more light every day upon this sad business, and Mr. Stanley-Poole's closing words are very significant:—"The moral to be drawn from the late war and its causes is that Egypt will not be contented and peaceful, so long as it is made the shuttlecock of European financiers and diplomatists. Any new settlement must be founded on the principle of Egypt—not for the stock-broker or the speculator; not for the English and French civilian, nor for Turk, Greek, Austrian, or Italian merchants—but for the Egyptians themselves."

The remaining articles are "Frederick Ritschl," a valuable biographical sketch of the renowned German philologist of Bonn and editor of Plautus, by Professor A. J. Wilkins; "The House of Obrenovitch," a brief account by J. Theodore Bent of the ruling family of Servia; and "Songs of the Italian People," a pleasant literary article with illustrative quotations in Italian by J. Kempe.

An excellent number is brought to a close with the usual full review of "Contemporary Literature" of the quarter.

The Magazines.

Fraser's Magazine brings to a somewhat unexpected and prosaic close the powerful story of yachting adventure, entitled "The Lady Maud." There is also a curious and pathetic little story illustrating the religion of love and service, entitled "What makes People to Love?" translated by "O. K." (Madame Novikoff), from the Russian of Count Léon Tolstoy. Mr. Thomas Bayne has an article on "Mr. Swinburne's Trilogy," pointing out the moral blots on that otherwise splendid poetry. "Old Scotch Judges" is an amusing collection of anecdotes of the old time, by Mr. James Purves. In "Literary History and Biography" that acute critic, Mr. John Dennis, reviews, not altogether favourably, Mrs. Oliphant's "Literary History of the Eighteenth Century," and discourses delightfully on Cowper, Scott, Byron, Wordsworth, Southey, Rogers, and other literary eminences of a past age. Professor F. A. Paley, in an ingenious philological article on "The Antiquity of some of our Familiar Agricultural Terms," shows that many of the commonest of these words are derived from Latin, Greek, and Sanscrit roots. "How I introduced the Telephone into Egypt" is an amusing account by Edwin de Leon of his experiences of official delays and procrastination. We have reserved to the last the most valuable paper in the number, that on "English, its Ancestors and Progeny," by Miss Humphreys, to whose admirable sketches in All the Year Round we have more than once called attention. It is a fitting pendant to the series on the Bodleian Library which have recently appeared in that periodical, and will be read with great interest by the rapidly increasing body of philological students. It consists of two parts. In the first, entitled "The Biography in Meditation," Miss Humphreys, in masterly style, tells the story of the inception of the great enterprise of an English Philological Dictionary, worthy to rival Littré, under the guidance of the Philological Society, and the editorship of Dr. Murray, worthy successor of the late lamented Herbert Coleridge. In the second part the writer shows "the Biography of the English language in progress," and gives a delightfully lively account of a visit to the workshop of the English Dictionary at Mill Hill, and abundantly justifies her conclusion that Philology is one of the most attractive of human studies.

With the present number it is announced the publication of Fraser's Magazine will cease. We wonder that it has existed so long in an age when most of the monthly magazines are reduced to less than half its price, and when the half-crown reviews present more generally attractive features. And so comes to an end, or rather is merged in the coming Longman's Magazine, the once renowned periodical in which appeared the earlier works of Coleridge and Carlyle, Maginn and Father Prout, Thackeray, Kingsley, Froude, and many another eminent author.

The Cornhill, besides its two serial stories, has a delightful sketch of "Miss Edgeworth," founded upon the privately printed memoir of the widow—the fourth wife—of her father, the brilliant and versatile Richard Lovell Edgeworth. Besides pleasant glimpses of the family life, we have interesting references to the once famous Miss Seward, and to Dr. Darwin, father of the late naturalist. There is also the first part of a hitherto unwritten chapter in the literary history of the eighteenth century, "Voltaire in England," which is full of interesting anecdote and historical illustration. There are three pleasant papers of travel, a picturesque sketch of "A Visit to Delhi," an account of "The Kachyens," the strange people who inhabit the great tract be-

United China and Burmah; and "A Glimpse of the United States," in the course of which it is stated that the writings of Dean Stanley are favourite textbooks in Presbyterian schools and colleges. The only remaining article is that on "Some Solar and Lunar Myths," which is full of recondite learning, and is signed with the initials of James Anthony Froude.

Good Words has continuations of the two serial stories, "Kept in the Dark," by Anthony Trollope—by no means one of his best—and "The Golden Shaft," by Charles Gibbon. Dr. B. W. Richardson, who we are glad to see is the Liberal candidate for Finsbury, has the second of his hygienic papers on "Tricycling in Relation to Health," and the Rev. M. Kaufmann also contributes the second of his articles on "Christian Socialists," in which he gives an interesting sketch of Kingsley in his earliest and in some respects his best days. From this last paper we must quote an interesting passage on "The Failure and Success of the Christian Socialists in England":—"The main object of the Christian Socialists, in the first instance, was the substitution of co-operation for competition, association in the place of isolated enterprise, the organisation of labour instead of the scattered efforts of social units, in the general struggle for existence. In this effort the Christian Socialists were not successful; they have not been able to avert 'the horrible catastrophe of a Manchester ascendancy.' Free competition, for better or for worse, prevails as before, and co-operation is only feebly and slowly struggling into existence, as the new principle of industry. The associations established by the Christian Socialists have disappeared after a short-lived existence; nor have the terrible things come to pass in consequence, which Kingsley expected in 1852. But this is partly owing to the legislative measures in favour of co-operative societies passed in Parliament mainly through the influence of the Christian Socialists and their friends, and partly on account of the growing tendency of friendly and concerted action between the masters and the men, as well as the slow but steady development of self-help among the working classes themselves.

Kingsley lived long enough to observe the practical failures of some of his schemes; but he was also shrewd enough to foresee the ultimate triumph of the principles he had advocated, as he says in the last words of the Christian Socialist, when it came to an end:

"The proper impulse has been given, Wait a little longer."

Professor Simpson has an alarming article on "Poison in Common Things," which goes far to convince us that life is hardly worth living, as there is not only "death in the pot," but poison in the air we breathe and "death in the drains." Under the title "The Centenary of a Great Catastrophe," the Rev. W. Benham gives a graphic account of the founding of the Royal George at Spithead. "Between Two Waters" is a lively sketch of an artist's holiday in the Pyrenees, by C. Blatherwick, who gives six excellent illustrations. That ubiquitous naturalist, the Rev. J. G. Wood, contributes an instructive account of "Bee Life," with illustrations, and Mr. Barrett describes the "St. Gothard Railway," also with several illustrations. "A Wife yet not a Wife" is a painful statement by Ada M. Leigh of a veritable experience illustrating the glaring defect of the international Marriage Laws, according to which a well-born and educated woman marrying a Frenchman may be a wife in England and not a wife in France. Finally, the Dean of Chester has an interesting historical article on "Alexandria and the Bible," from which we take the following passage:—"Alexandria was the city of Athanasius. In the mere statement of this fact is summed up a wide range of momentous Church history. A curious story is told of the boyhood of Athanasius; and the scene of it is that very sea-shore with which we have been lately made so painfully familiar. Some boys were playing at baptism, one of them administering the imaginary rite to the rest. The aged bishop of Alexandria, who had been watching the game, sent for them and rebuked them. That boy was Athanasius, who afterwards, as himself Bishop of the same city, won imperishable renown, and was more than once, after exile, received and welcomed back with all the honour that the place could bestow. A city associated with such a biography deserves, if we may so say, a perpetual vitality."

The Magazine of Art with the October number completes the second volume of the enlarged size series. It is a delightful work, and may well claim to be the most popular magazine of its kind in existence. The current number has for its frontispiece an engraving of the admirable picture by J. F. Millet, "The Shepherdess and her Flock." Among the highly attractive articles, which are richly illustrated, are "A Representative American," a biographical sketch of Eastman Johnson, with portrait and engravings of three characteristic works by S. G. W. Benjamin; "Kabyly Pottery," by Madeline Wallace-Dunlop; "The Harbingers of the Renaissance," by Cosmo Monkhouse; "Greek Myths in Greek Art," by Jane E. Harrison; "Studio Life in Paris," by Barclay Day; "The Cathedral of Orvieto," by Julia Cartwright; and "Keramics in Japan," with several quaint illustrations.

The Sunday Magazine continues the two serial stories "Weighed and Wanting," by George MacDonald, and "What's in a Name?" by Sarah Doudney. A picturesque sermon-essay is contributed by the Rev. Phillips Brooks, the well-known Broad-Churchman of Boston, U.S., entitled "Jesus and Man's Individuality." Miss G. C. Gordon Cumming tells the striking story of the American Mission in Hawaii, under the appropriate heading "From Darkness to Light." Among the other contributions are "The Beautiful End of a Noble Life," by the late poet preacher of Wales, Thomas Jones; "On Borrowing and Lending," by A. Dunbar; "King Roy," a story for the young, by L. T. Meade, and the always charming "Sunday Evening's with the Children," by Dr. A. MacLeod.

The Journal of the National Indian Association opens with an interesting sketch of "Peasant Life in Bengal," by Arabella Shore, daughter, we believe, of the late Lord Teignmouth. This is followed by short and useful articles on "Gardening for Hindu Homes;" "Paper Manufacture;" a review of "Ancient Ballads and Legends of Hindostan;" and a continuation of the curious story illustrative of Indian life, entitled "A Spoilt Boy."

Cassell's Family Magazine, continues the two serial stories, "No Proof" and "Was it Wise to Change?" and there is also the first part of a new story in two parts, entitled "His Own Shadow." But the distinguishing features in this popular magazine are the bright and instructive little papers on such subjects as "Household Government," or a happy home well ordered; "Round about Rye," with several illustrations of that quaint old place; "Student-life at Edinburgh University;" "A Glance Through an Elastic Mill," that is a mill where elastic web is manufactured; and "The Worm's Place in Nature," in which Dr. Andrew Wilson gives an epitome of Darwin's latest researches.

We have also received from Messrs. Cassell:—
The New Testament Commentary for English Readers, edited by Bishop Ellicott, Part XXXI.
The Bible Educator, edited by Dean Plumptre, Part VII.

The Illustrated Universal History, Part XIII.
The Family Physician, Part XXXIII., completing a valuable Manual of Domestic Medicine, compiled by Physicians and Surgeons of the Principal London Hospitals.

Literary Notes.

THE article on Manchester in the forthcoming volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica will be contributed by Mr. W. E. A. Axon, of that city.

PROFESSOR GREEN'S "Prolegomena to Ethics," which Mr. A. Bradley is editing, will probably be published by the beginning of January.

BISHOP WORDSWORTH, of St. Andrews, has prepared an edition of the historical plays of Shakespeare, which will be published by Messrs. Blackwood in three volumes.

MISS C. F. GORDON CUMMING'S new book will be entitled "Fire Mountains." It will be published by Messrs. Blackwood, with a map and numerous illustrations.

THE supply of copies of Canon Farrar's new work, "The Early Days of Christianity," is still insufficient to meet the demand. A new edition is announced.

MR. WILLIAM BROWN, of Edinburgh, will issue immediately reprints of "Domestic Manners and Private Life of Sir Walter Scott," by James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, and the "Norwegian Account of Haco's Expedition against Scotland," which was originally printed in 1782.

It is stated that the Revisers of the Old Testament have made so much progress that their work will certainly be finished in a few more months. Indeed, there is even some probability, if the Academy is well informed, that the Revised Old Testament may be ready for publication by the close of next year.

THERE are now no less than five professorships vacant at Oxford—Regius Hebrew, Whyte's Moral Philosophy, Waynflete's Anatomy (a new chair), Corpus Jurisprudence, and Vinerian Law. Some of these have been vacant for many months; and it is an open secret that the boards of electors have found it difficult to make up their minds. It appears (observes the Academy) that the new statutes have made no provision for the case of an equality of votes.

THE Institute of Painters in Water Colours is, says the Athenæum, about to inaugurate a new era in its exhibitions. It has been the custom to admit only the works of members, but the Institute intends for the future to open its galleries to all. The society has existed for forty-eight years at 53, Pall Mall. The Institute will next spring receive pictures under the new conditions, and will open its rooms about the beginning of May.

THE following Civil List pensions have been granted by the Queen, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister:—Mr. John Hullah, for his services as a teacher of music, £150 per annum; Mr. James Rawson Gardiner, the historian and editor of State Papers, £150; and Mrs. Emma Robinson, widow of Canon Robinson, for many years one of the Endowed Schools Commissioners, £80.

PROFESSOR HENRY BRUGSCH, the distinguished Egyptologist, has just published at Berlin an essay on "England in Egypt," in which he argues that all European nations ought to be grateful to England for her prompt intervention on behalf of civilisation on the Nile.

NEW BOOKS.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish on November 1st an édition de luxe of Miss Helen Zimmern's stories retold from the "Shah Nameh" of the Persian poet Firdusi, with etchings by Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A., and a prefatory poem by Mr. E. W. Gosse. Among other works in progress Mr. Unwin announces "The Roman Students; or, On the Wings of the Morning," a tale of the Renaissance, by the author of "The Spanish Brothers"; "Heroic Adventure"; "Tales of Modern Oxford," by the author of "Modern Oxford"; Poems and Hymns, by the Rev. G. T. Coster; "Geographical Questions," by R. H. Allpress; "The Illustrated Poetry Books"; "The Children's Bouquet of Verse and Hymn"; "Dick's Holidays"; "Ephemerides: a New Christmas Annuaire," edited by Edward Walford; and new editions of "Modern Missions," by Robert Young; "Industrial Curiosities" and "Labour and Victory," by A. H. Japp, LL.D.; "Wise Words and Loving Deeds," by E. Corder Gray; and "Footprints," by Sarah Tytler.

MESSRS. TRUBNER and Co. announce for publication in the autumn; "Emerson at Home and Abroad," and "Travels in South Kensington, with Notes on Decorative Art and Architecture in England," by M. D. Conway; "The Bhagavadgita," translated from the Sanskrit by J. Davies; "The Philosophy of the Upanishads," by A. E. Gough; "Manava-Dharma Castra," translated by A. C. Burnell; "Udānavarga, the Northern Buddhist Version of the Dhammapadam," translated from the Tibetan by W. W. Rockhill; "The Vazir of Lankuran. A Persian play, text, translation, notes and glossary, by W. H. D. Haggard and Guy Le Strange; "Report on the Buddhist Cave Temples and their Inscriptions," by J. Burgess, LL.D.; "A Guide to Modern Greek," by E. M. Geldart; "Contested Etymologies in the Dictionary of the Rev. W. W. Skeat," by Hensleigh Wedgwood; and "On Mr. Spencer's Unification of Knowledge," by Malcolm Guthrie. Messrs. Trubner and Co. have also the following works in preparation:—A translation of Hartman's "Philosophy of the Unconscious," by W. C. Coupland; Schopenhauer's "World as Will and Idea," translated by Messrs. Haldane and Kemp; "The Modern Languages of Africa," by R. N. Cust; "An English-Persian Dictionary," by Professor Palmer; "Kalila wa Dimnah," Syriac text, with introduction and notes by Professor W. Wright, of Cambridge; the third volume of Mr. Fausbøll's edition of the "Jataka," with its commentary, in Pali; the "Majjhimanikāyo," the Pali text of one of the principal books of the Buddhist canon, edited by V. Trenckner; a second edition of the late Thomas Wright's Anglo-Saxon and Old English Vocabularies, with index by Professor R. Wülker, of Leipzig; W. F. Poole's "Index to Periodical Literature; also simplified grammars of the following languages:—

Albanian, by Wassa Effendi, edited by Sir Patrick Colquhoun; Assyrian, by Professor Sayce; Basque, by W. van Eys; Danish, by Miss Otté; Modern Greek, by E. M. Geldart; Hungarian, by J. Singer, of Buda-Pesth; Malagasy, by Dr. Parker, of Antananarivo; Modern Persian, by A. Finn, of Teheran; Polish, by W. R. Morfill; Roumanian, by M. Torceanu, of Bucharest; Sinhalese, by B. Gunasekara and H. C. R. Bell; Swedish, by Miss Otté; and Turkish, by J. W. Redhouse.

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION AT BRISTOL.—The 43rd Autumnal Session of the Congregational Union of England and Wales was inaugurated at Bristol on Monday evening by a devotional service in Brunswick Chapel. Up to that time 1,036 ministers and delegates had notified their presence to the secretary, and with these as well as with the general public the building was crowded to the doors. After prayer by the Rev. Samuel Hebdith, the Rev. Eustace R. Conder, D.D., of Leeds, delivered an address on spiritual culture. The minister, he said, should possess consecration to his work, and adaptability to his surroundings, if he would be spiritually cultured. The secrets of success which were the tests of culture would be found in spirituality, prayerfulness, and high-toned piety, but with all this there should be likewise sympathy. The service was concluded with prayer by the Revs. Frederick Hall and Mr. Blackie. The business of the Union began on Tuesday morning with an inaugural address by the president, Dr. Macfadyen, in explanation and vindication of Congregationalism. Motions in favour of the religious examination of the young and in reference to middle-class schools were afterwards adopted. Mr. Carvell Williams complained that Mr. Gladstone had twice been asked to appoint Dissenters on the Charity Commission, and had twice refused. Nonconformists must show that they could compel attention to their demand. A public meeting in advocacy of Free Church principles was held at night.—At Wednesday's sitting it was resolved to petition Parliament in favour of Sunday closing. Delegations from the Wesleyan and Baptist Churches were received. Sectional meetings on lay agency and the Salvation Army were held in the afternoon. Sir Edward Baines presided in the evening over a crowded temperance meeting at Colston Hall. In an opening statement, read by the Rev. G. M. Murphy, it was reported that 1,168 out of 2,575 Congregational Ministers were total abstainers, as were also 323 out of the 383 students of the denomination.—Dr. Macfadyen stated that he, the chairman of the Congregationalists, had recently met the Rev. Chas. Garrett, the chairman of the Wesleyans, and the Rev. J. Jenkyn Brown, the chairman of the Baptists; and the three were life-long abstainers. He appealed to the audience to be total abstainers as a necessity of their Christian principles. Dr. Rayner Batten dwelt on the medical aspect of total abstinence.—The Rev. Newman Hall pleaded the cause of the Blue Ribbon Army. First let them get Sunday closing, then local option.—The Rev. W. J. Woods, of Manchester, urged the claims of temperance on ministers and deacons.—After remarks by the Rev. W. Evans Hurdall, the Rev. Walter J. Mayers moved a resolution in favour of a petition for Sunday closing, which, having been seconded by the Rev. J. S. Russell, was unanimously carried.—On Thursday a resolution was adopted calling on the Government to prevent the incursions of the Boers into the land of the Bechuana, and utterly ruining mission prospects. A letter was read from Earl Granville explaining that the action of British troops in Cairo was intended as a compliment to the Khedive and not to the Holy Carpet. A deputation of fifty-seven Anglican clergymen, headed by the Dean of Bristol, waited upon the Assembly and read an address of welcome and congratulation. The kindly sentiments expressed were warmly received.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Coughs, Influenza. The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the respiratory organs. In common colds and influenza the Pills, taken internally, and the Ointment rubbed over the chest and throat, are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic, this treatment is the easiest, safest, and surest. Holloway's Pills purify the blood, remove all obstacles to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the over-gorged air tubes, and render respiration free, without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits; such are the ready means of escaping from suffering when afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other chest complaints, by which the health of so many is seriously and permanently injured in most countries.

Our Contemporaries.

PROFESSOR JOWETT, VICE-CHANCELLOR.
The Pall Mall Gazette, in an article on "Liberalism at Oxford," writes:—

When the heretic knocks at the door (whether of the University or the House of Commons) his admission will destroy all that makes life worth having. When the course of events has brought him in, the earth is found to revolve on its axis as before. The heretical professor becomes head of his university, and is probably regarded as conservative and old-fashioned by younger generations of freethinkers. When Mr. Bradlaugh has taken his seat everybody will be amazed that he was ever resisted.

The influence of the distinguished man who is now Vice-Chancellor, however, has been too peculiar and too widely spread for him to be dismissed as an ordinary heretic who has been purged by lapse of time. Many generations of his pupils have earned distinction in many walks of life, and all bear in their modes of thought marks of their common master. His subtlety and delicacy of handling is indeed incommunicable; his energy, assiduity and self-devotion are more effective in gaining the admiration of disciples than capable of being imitated by them. No definite conclusions, no well-defined dogmas, mark the school which he has founded. His great gift, as his admirers insist, has been to teach his pupils to look on all sides of a question at once, to be tentative and gradual in their reasonings, to be slow to strike a balance of opposite considerations, as knowing how too hasty conclusions prevent the dispassionate acceptance of new facts, to keep different points of view present to the mind at once, to remember that clearness is often only want of subtlety, and that strength of conviction may be only the measure of absence of knowledge.

Mr. Jowett has developed a philosophy of cultivated scepticism which finds its natural place in an age of transition. "When the old formulas are inadequate to the existing state of thought, and yet are consecrated by antiquity and association, it is very convenient to be able to use them honestly as expressing a partial truth of which new and as yet unpopular theories only supply the other side. We must not part with our old clothes until the new suit is ready, and we shall find that the new wine, if judiciously diluted, can be safely stored in the old bottles." Possibly it sometimes can; but there is always the danger of losing both the old and the new, and as the bottles get older and the wines stronger the risk grows daily greater. It can hardly be denied that the new school of Oxford Liberalism has less leaven and sinew than the old. A young man would be a good deal better fitted for the stress of life if he had been bred under the influence which Mr. Goldwin Smith left at Oxford, than if he had sat at the feet of the Master of Balliol. And if political effects are of any importance, Lord Salisbury may find little to complain of in what Mr. Jowett has done. The most superfine moralisings in the lecture-room did not prevent Balliol from being the home of a sort of cherubic Jingoism. It is a great mistake to think that Latitudinarianism in theology is incompatible with a comfortable, if slightly ignoble, indifference about politics.

The Standard remarks:—

It is quite certain that twenty years ago the appointment of the present Master of Balliol to the Vice-Chancellorship of Oxford University would have been impossible. Mr. Jowett would have had his strong partisans and his uncompromising enemies. Both would have brought all the pressure they could command to bear upon the nominating authority, the Chancellor. There would have been a severe and protracted struggle, which would have ended in the discomfiture of the Professor of Greek. As it is, the whole business has been settled in the most quiet and amicable manner possible. Mr. Jowett's turn came, and Mr. Jowett was selected by Lord Salisbury to serve, without protest or objection, without the interposition of hindrance or impediment of any kind. There could be no more conclusive or grateful testimony to the progress of liberality and enlightenment at Oxford or elsewhere. The scandals of one decade are the commonplaces of the next. Men begin with persecution, and end with toleration. Perhaps the process may have its incidental disadvantages as well as its merits. The surrender of convictions involves a certain loss of energy; and an age in which all religions are allowed security and quarter is not likely to be productive of any great spiritual movement.

THE CHURCH CONGRESS AT DERBY.
The Nonconformist writes:—

A review of the proceedings of the Derby Congress cannot fail to leave one very distinct impression on an observant mind. There was not a reader or speaker of any note who did not betray the conviction that the position of his church in this country is about to undergo one of the greatest of changes in its history. Where altered relationships to the State were not mentioned, they were implied in new maxims asserted, new preparations demanded, and a new attitude recommended. Canon Barry, Earl Nelson, and some other speakers looked straight in the face the fact that the Church of which they are ornaments has failed to make good its claim to be the Church of the nation; but there were others able to see that lamentations over neglected duty are now vain, and that it is necessary to prepare to exchange an untenable and embarrassing position for one of solidity and freedom. This feeling found its plainest expression in the sermon which Dr. Walsham How, Bishop of Bedford, preached on Saturday in Lichfield Cathedral. The Bishop foreshadowed, with no uncertain hand, a time when his Church would have to pass through an ordeal like that through which the Irish branch of the same Church had passed, and earnestly besought his hearers to prepare for it by drawing closer together, by perfecting their machinery, and, above all, by grasping "the great truth of the spiritual reality and life and mission of the Church." When the crisis came, he is reported to have said, "Not theories of ecclesiastical dignity or order, not claims of spiritual supremacy which would be laughed at or ignored, not these things, but the holy lives and loving labours of her sons and daughters would avail the Church." This is sound advice, the spirit of which cannot be too earnestly recommended to Christians, whatever may be the circumstances of the communion to which they belong.

DEPTFORD.—The first of a course of lectures arranged by the London District Unitarian Society for delivery in the Lecture Hall, High-street, was given by the Rev. Jeffery Worthington on Thursday evening on the subject, "What Unitarians think about God." There was an attendance of between sixty and seventy, made up mainly of working men. The chair was occupied by the Rev. H. Wheaton, supported by the Revs. J. Vanderstraeten and G. Carter, A. J. C. Fabritius, Esq., and members of the Deptford Chapel Committee. The remaining lectures will be delivered on Tuesday evenings, the next lecturer being Mr. G. Carter.

THE LIBERATION SOCIETY AND ITS WORK.—The executive committee of the Liberation Society have issued a circular to their supporters, relative to its operations during the coming season. They congratulate them on the fact that domestic questions are likely during the next session to receive more attention from Parliament than from exceptional circumstances they have done in the last two sessions, and expect that new demands for reform will exercise a stimulating influence on the public mind, and make it possible to press the disestablishment question with increased earnestness. The society's triennial conference will be held next May, and there will be careful preparation to render it effective. The number of meetings and lectures will be increased, and new efforts will be made to advance the society's principles through the medium of political clubs and other associations. The London School Board elections will be used as a means of urging that the surplus City charities should be applied to educational, instead of to ecclesiastical, purposes. There will be a renewal of agitation in support of Mr. Peddie's motion for the disestablishment of the Scotch Church; and next session the cemetery, the burial fees, and the training college questions will be dwelt with. Information is being collected relative to vicars' rates, Church-rates to repay borrowed money and other ecclesiastical exactions, and also as to the proceedings of the Charity Commissioners in regard to endowed schools. The committee state that, as soon as they can do so with advantage, they will deal directly with the Establishment in England and Wales, and meanwhile they urge the several local organisations to carry on with fresh energy a movement which, it is stated, has already made the most marked progress, and will in a few more years be crowned with complete success.

Correspondence.

THE LATE WAR IN EGYPT.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I am sorry to differ from Mr Bartram, with whom I so often heartily agree, but I cannot admit the justice of his strictures on Mr. Wicksteed's letter, and I must add that if the Egyptian policy of our Government admits of no better defence than Mr. Bartram has adduced, it is, indeed, in desperate case. Mr. Bartram thinks that the existence of any National Party in Egypt has been fairly tested by the utter collapse of the military rebellion.

It is easy to kick a man when he is down, but it is not very generous. The flower of the Egyptian army massed at Tel-el-Kebir was totally routed by a surprise.

Now look at the logic of the supporters of our armed intervention! When Arabi was strong and his influence predominant they said, there is no National Party; the country is simply overawed by this military despot! Now that the military despot is overthrown by a superior power, we are asked, where is the National Party? But surely if Arabi was strong enough to suppress any manifestation of loyalty to the Khedive and love of British influence which were, we were told, so ripe, the man who conquered Arabi, and scattered his army to the winds is a fortiori strong enough to suppress any manifestation of a contrary sentiment. But really, in face of the facts the question whether there was or was not a National Party in Egypt is childish in the extreme. Egypt was saddled with a nominal debt of £90,000,000, only half of which it ever actually received. Save £16,000,000 spent on the Suez Canal no part of this sum was ever laid out on the improvement of the country at large, the whole of the remainder was wasted by the personal extravagance of the Khedives or consumed in the payment of interest. Speaking roughly, one half of the entire revenues of the country was yearly paid away to foreign bondholders, to satisfy whose claims not only were the taxes collected often two or three years in advance, and by means of cruel torture, but every department of the national administration was starved, and the claims of every other creditor were disallowed in favour of the European bondholders, to say nothing of the swarms of well paid foreign officials, whose salaries still further drained the resources of the country. Now either the Egyptians knew nothing of all this, or they were all absolute idiots, or else there was and must have been a National Party. And it was to maintain this status quo, this horrible and unendurable control, say rather confiscation, that the Egyptian campaign was undertaken. It was to this end that the Chamber of Delegates was refused the right of voting its own Budget, even after the revenues set aside for the payment of the interest on the debt had been excluded from consideration.

It was to this end that the ultimatum demanding the resignation of the National Ministry and the exile of Arabi Pasha was presented, with a full knowledge that it would be rejected. Now I am not laying the guilt of all this upon the present, or even on the former British Government. Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues, as well as their predecessors, may have been, and probably were to a great extent, deceived by the resident European officials, as has invariably been the case in all our unjustifiable aggressions. The pity is that with the example of so many historical parallels before them, historical parallels which have served as the basis of many a withering denunciation in Midlothian and elsewhere, our Government should have so easily suffered themselves to be hoodwinked by their underlings abroad. I am willing to credit Mr. Gladstone with perfect sincerity when he professes (as the other day at Penmaenmawr) that this war (which by-the-by he told us once was not a war at all) has been carried out from a love of peace, and, he adds, on the principles of peace; because, forsooth, "we have been putting down a military anarchy, and it is impossible for any country to prosper under a military tyranny." But I should like in conclusion to ask Mr. Gladstone through your columns two or three simple questions. If we were not at war when Alexandria was bombarded, when did we begin to go to war? If we have been at war, when, against whom, by whom, and according to what standard of international right was war declared? What is the difference between this irregular warfare and high-handed brigandage and piracy, for which ministers are amenable to impeachment? Is a military anarchy the same thing as a military tyranny, and if not, which was it that we went to put down in Egypt?

If it is impossible for any country to prosper under a military tyranny, is it easier for any country to prosper under a foreign military occupation? Finally, is it the duty of England to deliver other countries from military tyranny by means of a military occupation? And if so, why not begin with Germany rather than Egypt, save that Germany is strong and Egypt is weak? Only the other day Professor Mommson said to me the one thing which enabled Germans to endure the otherwise intolerable burden of a military despotism was the dread of a foreign occupation. Would it not be natural to credit the Egyptians with similar sentiments?

I am sorry that Mr. Bartram considers this Egyptian question only of a secondary interest. It is to me no matter of secondary interest that those in whom we trusted have involved us in a war which I regard as one of the wickedest that has ever stained the page of history, a war barbarous in its inception, insane in its objects, and disastrous in its results. If a Conservative Government, or if a foreign Power had acted thus we should have been loud in indignation; but when it is the work of a Liberal English Minister, the champion of struggling nationalities, I, for one, am overwhelmed with shame. I go to Brussels next week to plead the cause of international peace and arbitration at a conference there to assemble. The association I represent has its headquarters but a stone's throw from the place where all this carnage was decreed. Already in Berlin the taunt has been thrown in my teeth, "Did your association prevent the bombardment of Alexandria?" With what face will Englishmen stand up in that Conference at Brussels and pose as the advocates of arbitration, when an English Government plunged its country into war at the very moment when deliberations were proceeding at Constantinople. No, the mere fact that the wrong we have done is irreparable, so far from reducing the subject to one of secondary interest, lends it a tragic interest all its own. It is no matter of secondary interest to remember that we have made widows and orphans by the hundred here, and by the thousand in Egypt. It is no matter of secondary interest that a whole battalion of Egyptians was blown into atoms in a moment. It was no matter of secondary interest that the masses of this country have been hideously demoralised by greedily devouring day after day announcements of "great slaughter" placarded and paraded by the Press. And least of all is it a matter of secondary interest to me that there should no longer be left in our land any great political party to raise an indignant protest against these dreadful doings. All the more from the bottom of my heart do I thank men like Mr. Wicksteed and a few more honourable exceptions, who are not afraid to be "in the right with two or three," and to be allowed a humble place among their decimated but not discouraged, persecuted but not forsaken, ranks is a glory I covet more than the prowess of Sir Garnet Wolseley.

E. M. GELDART,
Foreign Secretary of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, 38, Parliament-street, S.W.

BLACKPOOL.—A bazaar held here on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th inst. was so successful that the fund for building a new chapel now amounts to £560.

CAMBRIDGE.—Mr. Alfred Ernest Steintal, M.A. (London), third Wrangler and bracketed Second Smith's Prizeman, 1881, has been elected a Fellow of Trinity College. Mr. Steintal is son of the Rev. S. A. Steintal of Manchester.

PROFESSOR JOWETT, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, was on Monday elected Vice-Chancellor of the University for the ensuing year. He nominated as his deputies Dr. Liddell, Dean of Christ Church; the Rev. Dr. Evans, Master of Pembroke; the Rev. M. Pattison, Rector of Lincoln; and the Rev. Dr. Bellamy, President of St. John's.

Religious Intelligence.

NORTHUMBERLAND AND DURHAM UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The anniversary services in connection with the Northumberland and Durham Unitarian Christian Association for Missionary Purposes took place on Sunday, Oct. 1, in the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, when excellent sermons were preached to large and appreciative congregations by the Rev. F. E. MILLSON, of Halifax.

On the following day a conference of the members, together with delegates from the various churches in connection with the Association, took place in the library of the church. The Rev. ARTHUR PAYNE (the President) occupied the chair, and briefly reviewed the history of the Association since his connection with it. He also referred to its present condition, alluded to the fact that it now had a good chapel at each mission station, and a well-tried nucleus of members, and spoke hopefully of its future prospects.

The Rev. H. IERSON, M.A., who attended the anniversary meeting as a deputation from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, assured the meeting of the sympathy of that Association with the work that was being carried on in the North of England. He thought that the policy which was now being inaugurated of placing separate ministers at Barnard Castle and Darlington was the right one, and he trusted that in the future the work would be carried on prosperously.

Mr. WARD and the Rev. F. WOOD explained the position at Middlesbrough, which, though they had had to pass through a period of great difficulties, they now regarded as encouraging.

Mr. ROBERT ELLIOTT followed, and referred to the state of Choppington, which he could not say was of a cheering character. There he thought they were in a low state. Their great drawback was the losses they sustained from emigration. Although they had lost through this cause, other countries had gained, for those emigrants had carried away with them to other lands the liberal ideas which had been implanted in them at Choppington. However, they hoped for better times, and that they would shortly be in a more flourishing condition.

Mr. THOMAS HORNBY alluded to the changes that had taken place at South Shields. Mr. Lambelle had been appointed permanent minister over the congregation, and had so far given great satisfaction. Their Sunday-school was in a good condition, and altogether there was a very hopeful outlook.

Councillor W. A. SNAITH then explained the position at Darlington. Although at present they were without a minister the congregation held very well together. The Sunday-school went steadily on, and he hoped their church in that town would be an increased centre of usefulness when they got a minister permanently settled among them.

Mr. G. GLOVER, Councillor JOSEPH ELLIS, Mr. J. HOWIE, the Rev. WM. ELLIOTT, and others continued the conference until the proceedings came to a close.

The customary soiree then took place in the school-rooms, when a respectable company sat down to partake of the good things provided by the ladies of the congregation. After tea the annual meeting was held in the church. The Rev. ALFRED PAYNE again presided, and among those present were the Revs. F. E. Millson, H. Ierson, M.A., W. Elliott, and F. Wood, Councillors Joseph Ellis and Barker Ellis, Messrs. Lambelle, G. G. Laidler, J. Glover, W. L. Fallows, J. Johnston, &c.

The PRESIDENT, in opening the proceedings, said men and women had stood up for our faith in the past and had glorified themselves by their faithful testimony. Their mantle had fallen upon them to-day, and it was for them to see that they were worthy of it. They had had a difficult year—he did not wish to say an unsuccessful year, for that was not the case. They had not been unsuccessful. They had held their own. The congregations were not in a worse position than they were twelve months ago, and this of itself was under the circumstances a reason for gratification. There were two methods by which the operations of missionary associations could be carried on. The first was to select a town, and the man, who should be imbued with the missionary spirit and full of religious enthusiasm, and with that degree of intelligence and culture which would enable him to do his work in an effective manner, and then having obtained a suitable place of meeting, put him there to do an independent, steady, and persistent work. The other way was to select the town and the room for meeting, but not to send a missionary, trusting to lay agency, without any pastoral supervision. In the latter case nothing was done from Monday morning till Saturday night to promote the growth of the cause. This method was hampered by many a difficulty, and unfortunately they had largely to conduct their operations in the north according to it. If they could manage to send a missionary to work the whole year round at each of their mission stations it seemed to him that the success they craved for would come much more rapidly than it did at present. But, in spite of many drawbacks, he was glad to be able to state that the services had been regularly sustained at all their mission stations, with the partial exception of Choppington. He would not further occupy their time except simply to express the hope that those who had come together that night would find the meeting animated by the right spirit, and that they would all have a season of refreshment, encouragement, and renewal of zeal—(loud applause).

Mr. W. L. FALLOWS (the secretary) and Mr. JONAH JOHNSTON (the treasurer) respectively read the report for the past year and the balance sheet. The following are the chief items in the report:—

ANNUAL REPORT.—1881-82.

The Committee regret that they cannot use terms expressive of satisfaction in the operations of the Society. Those operations have been carried on in the face of serious difficulties, which have been to a large extent unavoidable, but which have certainly delayed the progress of the work. In the first place, both of the ministers of the assisted congregations have ceased their labours in this district; in the next place, the missionary, who had been in charge of the stations at Barnard Castle and Darlington, also severed his connection with the Association early in the year; and, in the third place, two of the very faithful and hard-working lay preachers—viz., Mr. J. Watson and Mr. T. G. Robson—have been the subjects of serious illness, that of the former being of a most dangerous character. The task of simply sustaining the Sunday services in the various congregations has been no easy one, and any extension of labours has been wholly out of the question. The difficulty is, however, only a temporary one, and the Committee trust that during the ensuing year its effects may wholly pass away, and that their successors may be enabled to return to more energetic efforts for the growth of the Unitarian cause in the North of England.

The Committee feel that the time has arrived when the various congregations should rely less upon the pecuniary help of your Association, and make strong and decided efforts of their own to approach nearer to the condition of self-support, which is the ultimate aim of your endeavours. They do not shrink from saying that it is their decided opinion that sufficient self-sacrifice and earnest faithfulness have not lately been manifested by those congregations, and that the subscribers may justly look for a considerable increase of zeal amongst those who benefit from their funds. A decision has been arrived at to place the stations at Darlington and Barnard Castle on the footing of "Assisted Congregations," by giving them substantial help towards the appointment of ministers of their own, instead of putting them under the superintendence of a single missionary.

The Report refers with the greatest possible satisfaction to the "Conference of Unitarian and other Free Churches," held recently at Liverpool, from which it is hoped lasting good will proceed to encourage and stimulate all the Liberal Churches in the land.

BARNARD CASTLE.—The missionary, the Rev. F. H. Williams, terminated his connection with the Association, and left this station in February last, since which time the services have been chiefly maintained by our lay-preachers. The congregations have been scarcely so good as they were before that date, but have been as large as could well be expected under all the circumstances, the old members still remaining as faithful as ever to the cause. Death has removed some of these, however, and the Committee hope that in a short time the friends here will engage an energetic minister, who will, by an active pastorate, increase the number of adherents to our cause, enlarge the Sunday-school, and extend the influence of our liberal faith in the town. Towards that object the Committee have promised the sum of £75 per annum, for two years certain. Efforts have been made to cancel the debt upon the property lately purchased for Congregational purposes, the British and Foreign Unitarian Association having kindly made a grant of £25, and other friends having subscribed various sums. The completion of this work will also demand the energies of the Congregation as soon as a minister shall have been appointed.

CHOPPINGTON.—Partly through lack of preachers, and partly through the small response to efforts at this station, services have been held here during the past year only once in three weeks. The Committee fear that instead of their expectation that this would lead to larger attendances being realised, the result has been the reverse. It is a matter that ought not to be disguised, that the constant loss of members by emigration from the district seems to have so dispirited the few that remain as to prevent that energetic action on their part from which alone success can flow. The Sunday-school continues to exist in a very fair condition, and it is to be hoped that it may result, in the future, in the enlargement of the congregation, especially if the Committee should find themselves able to resume the weekly services. This would be done at once, on Sunday afternoons, but for the distance of Choppington from Newcastle.

DARLINGTON.—The work of the missionary, who preached here on alternate Sundays, ceased in February last; since then this station has been without any pastoral supervision. The services have been uninterruptedly sustained, largely through the self-denying zeal of Mr. G. Lucas and Mr. Councillor Snaith, to whom the Committee are exceedingly grateful for their earnest efforts. The attendance at the religious services has been fairly good, and the work of the small Sunday-school has been faithfully continued. The Committee has offered the sum of £75 per annum, for two years certain, towards the stipend of a settled minister in this town, and they are hoping to hear, in a short time, that one has been appointed; there is here a large and promising field of work if a suitable labourer could be found. The debt of £300 still remains upon the chapel, and as this necessarily cripples the resources of the congregation, the Committee would be glad to see an effort made to clear it off. They believe that such an attempt would meet with a hearty response from the Unitarian public.

MIDDLESBROUGH.—The ministry of the Rev. W. Stoddart at this place closed with the month of April last, and the circumstances of the congregation were such that the Committee felt that no time should be lost in the appointment of a successor, and, as at the moment the congregation was not in a position to take the necessary steps, the Committee appointed the Rev. F. Wood, who has recently seceded from the Ministry of the Free Methodist body, as missionary in this town. The appointment was made for three months, but has been subsequently extended to six months, and will expire in the course of next November. The stipend paid is at the rate of £100 per annum, to which the friends at Middlesbrough contribute at the rate of £40, and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at the rate of £30 per annum. The Committee are glad to learn that it is the intention of the Middlesbrough Congregation to appoint Mr. Wood as their minister, upon the termination of the present arrangement, and the Association will contribute £55 per annum to the stipend for two years.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—The cause in this town lost the services of the Rev. R. Cowley Smith at the end of April last, when he removed to Stanington, Yorkshire. Since that time the friends at Shields have availed themselves of the valuable assistance of Mr. Lambelle, who, for some years past, has afforded the Association considerable help as one of the lay-preachers. Mr. Lambelle's addresses have been highly appreciated, and the congregation has kept well together. It is intended, therefore, to continue the present plan in the future. The arrangement, however, not being quite in the line of the Association's ordinary operations, the congregation at Shields will cease—at least for the time—to occupy the position of one of the assisted churches, and will assume that of perfect independency.

The Treasurer's balance sheet shows that at the close of the financial year the sum of £77 6s. 8d. remained in his hands. This unusual surplus has resulted from the vacancies in the various pulpits referred to above, and is counted upon in making the promises of substantial aid towards filling them in the future. As heretofore, the Committee thankfully acknowledge the generous aid of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, [without whose annual grant their work would have to be brought to an end, and whose deputation to this meeting, the Rev. H. Ierson, (M.A.), they most cordially welcome.

In conclusion, the Committee urged upon all Unitarians in the North of England the necessity of increased zeal on behalf of the great trust committed to them in bearing earnest testimony to our blessed faith.

The CHAIRMAN proposed that the report and balance sheet be accepted and printed for circulation. He would not detain them by referring to each item in the report. He would just refer, however, to the circular issued some short time ago to the assisted congregations for increased effort. He was sure they would take that stimulant in good part. They must know that the work could not be carried on without self-sacrifice on their part, and as they were receiving the assistance of all those who entrusted their money to the hands of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association he was sure every one of them would feel that it was their solemn duty to do not merely as much as they easily could, but to do that which cost them an effort to promote the cause they had at heart. The next point to which he should refer was that they had found that the work at Barnard Castle and Darlington could not be effectually carried on by one minister. He was glad to believe that they were taking a right step in having a minister at each place. He would also draw their attention to the fact that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had made a grant of three copies of the "Positive Aspects of Unitarian Christianity" to the Newcastle Free Library. As they were no doubt aware, the Association had on a former occasion made an extensive grant to the same library; and he had it on the best authority, that of the theological books circulated in Newcastle, their preponderated very largely—something to the extent of 700 per cent. They had a balance in hand, but they would want all the money they could get, and if they spent it all they hoped that at last the seed which they were sowing would bring a harvest of good results—(applause).

The Rev. F. WOOD seconded the proposition. He could not say much about the report because he had only recently commenced work in the district, but he thought they could fairly congratulate themselves upon it, and take heart and hope and encouragement from it. Looking a little wider than their own district they might see that Unitarian principles and thought and sentiment were spreading. Their energies were not directed solely to the establishment of mission stations and churches, but to sowing the seeds of Unitarian sentiment broadcast throughout the land, impregnating society with Unitarian principles—and this was a most important work. He was glad that the British and Foreign Unitarian Association had made this one of its features. It was bearing fruit. Without exaggerating, he thought he might say that there were evidences on all sides that it was doing so. The members of the other churches generally were recognising more and more the value of a free and open attitude and spirit towards all light and truth. They were not looking exclusively for light and truth to the past, but were recognising the importance of freedom of thought. On every hand they found people more ready to admit that Unitarians had done work in the past, and that Unitarian sentiments and beliefs were spreading in the community at large—(applause).

The motion, on being put to the meeting, was carried unanimously.

Mr. LAMBELLE moved a vote of thanks to the officers and Committee of the Association for the past year, and submitted a list for the ensuing year for the approval of the meeting. When they looked at the changes which were at work in the world, and the growing influence of Unitarianism, they felt that there was cause for them to stand firmer together, and to be more loyal to the truth they espoused, and not to divide themselves on points unessential to the spread of their principles. He trusted, therefore, that they would all unite in spreading the principles they professed. In South Shields the work was going on, and they were determined that it should go on; and to help on the work he asked for their sympathy, their prayers, and their good wishes.

The proposition was seconded by Mr. F. C. SLATER, and adopted.

Mr. JOHN GLOVER moved a vote of thanks to the Rev. F. E. Millson for his services in preaching their anniversary sermons on the previous day, and offered a hearty welcome to that gentleman for his presence there that night. He thanked Mr. Millson very sincerely for the words of warning and also of encouragement which he had given them in his sermons. They were, he could assure him, refreshing and strengthening, and he asked them all to express in the most hearty manner their appreciation of Mr. Millson's services.

Mr. G. G. LAIDLER seconded the proposition. In the course of his remarks he urged increased and more regular attendance at their services, and thanked the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for the manner in which they had supported the Unitarian cause in the North of England in the past, and trusted that that help would be extended in the future, so that they in Newcastle might be able to realise one of their great desires—to establish a mission in their own town—(applause).

The Rev. F. E. MILLSON was loudly applauded on rising to respond. He expressed his thanks to them for the vote they had just passed. There were one or two things which were passing in his mind, which he thought he might properly say to them. First of all, he was greatly interested by the allusions which had been made about our free way of thinking and acting. He wished that they did not so very often furnish people with something else to say. It was said that they were liberal and thoughtful, but still, they were making little progress. They had, however, begun to see what was undoubtedly the case, that a great deal of the liberalism which they admired when followed up to its source might be traced to Unitarian faithfulness and outspokenness. If they could have the revelation they would be much surprised at the part Unitarian outspokenness had played in producing the generally liberal feeling of to-day. Then he found that people might travel a long way without getting off the skirts of their own troubles. He found that the same difficulties which were familiar to him were familiar to them. In the West Riding they complained that their churches were crippled by the mission work they had to do. Somehow in these mission stations they confessed to a certain amount of failure from year to year. He was in favour of doing more work in the large towns. These were keeping up many of their small country stations out of a mistaken principle of honour. They felt that it would be dishonourable to give them up. But there were many things which militated against the success of those little places. There was emigration, for instance, and changes in the trade of small communities which were not felt in larger ones. Their work also lay not so much in making converts from the other churches as it did in serving the needs of the great detached multitude who had long ago bid good-bye to the churches, and who were waking up to the position in which they were finding themselves. He had, therefore, always given the secularist a hearty welcome, because he felt that the secularist needed it more than others. He believed many of those people were beginning to feel their want, and that there was a dissatisfaction at the aching void into which Secularism had betrayed men, and that they were beginning to look for the hand of help, and if the Unitarian churches were to hold out that hand he was sure they would gain by it. He did not advocate very greatly the aggressive tactics of our churches. He had taken stock of the results of what are called polemics in our work, and in each instance he thought their friends had come away with small results. Sometimes when he had read the reports of those controversies and of their effects on ourselves he was reminded of the story of an old painter who had a vision of the face of Christ, and who set himself as the crowning work of his life to paint a picture in which that blessed figure should form the centre. And the painter set to work, and the thought was so vivid with him until at last it is said there grew out of the canvas the very face of Christ. But before the picture was finished this painter fell into a quarrel with one of his acquaintances, and he conceived the design that in this picture, which was to hand down to the ages the image of the Christ, he would introduce his friend, now his enemy, as Judas. But the story goes, as the figure of Judas grew clearer the Christ faded, the lineaments grew dim, and at last the image of the Christ disappeared. And so it would be with us. If we delighted in pointing out the defects of the other churches the danger was that our own Christianity would suffer, and that we, ourselves, would become less Christian, less Christ-like. Mr. Millson resumed his seat amid loud applause.

Councillor JOSEPH ELLIS moved that the meeting offers a cordial welcome to the Rev. H. Ierson, M.A., and desires to express its thanks for the continued support of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, in an earnest and energetic speech, in which he expressed the thanks of the people of this district for the grants given by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association towards carrying on the work. There was, perhaps, never a time when that aid was so necessary as now. They had put their shoulder to the wheel, and they meant that that wheel should go forward and not backward. They had planted mission stations, and he considered it their duty to render them every assistance in their power.

The Rev. WM. ELLIOTT seconded the resolution, in which he expressed the hearty pleasure they all felt at having Mr. Ierson among them, not only on his own account, but as the representative of an Association that was carrying on a great, a glorious, and a necessary work. Mr. Ierson would see that they were not satisfied with their work in that district, which he considered was a hopeful sign, and an evidence that it was their determination to do better in the future.

The vote of welcome was carried by acclamation.

The Rev. HENRY IERSON, who on rising to respond was loudly applauded, after some remarks on various points connected with the missions, said he knew there was good practical work done in everyone of the mission stations throughout the country. Of this he could give them proof after proof if the time and occasion served. Taking the attendances at these places of worship, and comparing them with the attendances in the large towns, they would find the former were quite as successful as the latter. He did not think there was so much in comparison for the larger chapels to plume themselves upon. As to the maintenance of these stations, he would ask in what way they were to get at outside people who did not go to any place unless they gave them a centre round which they could gather. That was what had to be done. He never expected that the Unitarian body was going to be the all pervading sect in Christendom. It seemed to him that a great many desponded without reason, because we were not gathering the whole world. The majority of men were attracted by outside show—ritualistic forms, blood and fire, music, anything—no matter what. But the thinking classes were not to be attracted that way. Some people were strongly moved by numbers, and fancied that that was success. But for himself he had never expected to belong to a popular body. What they had to do was to lift up their testimony to the simple truth and the practical value of earnest convictions with reference to religious opinions! Some Unitarians might look for more obvious success. He wished to impress upon them his belief that there had never been a genuine earnest Unitarian effort put forth which had not borne some fruit. If God had meant to make the Unitarians a great cathedral body or sect he supposed God could have done so, but he did not think God meant that for them. God had not been against them, but their own defect of earnestness: they had not kept abreast of the times and their great opportunities. There was a time when Unitarians had to be the pioneers. They did not seek controversy, and when engaged in it it had been thrust upon them. At least that had been his general experience. The pioneering work of the past—the negative work, the breaking down of old dogmas, if that was necessary, had been pretty effectual. But that kind of negative work was not done in these days so much through specific Unitarian controversy. Scriptural texts were not relied upon as formerly, but the question now asked was what were the facts of the universe and their interpretation by scientific methods and scientific laws. It was this which was breaking down the common beliefs of the time. If this was so what was their duty? Was it their duty to sit quietly at home while other people were going to the front? Many people imagined that those grand scientific discoveries had taken away the whole groundwork of religion. They, however, did not believe that, and it was their duty to stand forth and let people know that the sentiment of religion was in perfect harmony with the facts of the universe and with scientific investigation. Let them go forth and make that grand reconciliation clear and plain. If they would only take up this great work they would not be found to fail in the future any more than they had failed in the past. He believed from his deepest soul that if Jesus were there that night it was just this grand work that he himself would set before them as the true work for the Unitarians in the time to come—(loud applause).

After remarks from Messrs. T. SOUTHERN, S. PESCOE, T. G. ROBSON, J. BAMBRIDGE, and Councillor J. BARKER ELLIS a highly interesting meeting was brought to a conclusion. During the evening anthems were sung by the excellent choir of the church, under the direction of Councillor Barker Ellis, Mr. W. Stephenson presiding at the organ.

BIRMINGHAM: CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH.—The annual meeting in connection with the Sunday-schools and Home Mission carried on under the auspices of the Church of the Messiah was held in the girls' school-room, adjoining the church, on Tuesday evening. Mr. F. Ryland presided; and among those present were the Revs. Dr. Crosskey, Dr. Laird Collier, J. B. Gardner, and E. T. Russell; Dr. Russell, Messrs. S. Greenway, J. A. Kenrick, W. J. B. Tranter, Heap (missionary), T. H. Russell, E. H. Lee, W. Lowe, T. G. Lee, J. Kimberley, &c.—The Chairman read the report of the girls' school, which stated that it would be remembered that some years ago they entirely gave up secular instruction, and had since then adopted a gradual series of religious lessons at all the morning classes. This scheme appeared to have answered admirably, although the difficulty in establishing it was very great. Teachers and scholars were somewhat adverse to the idea, as was shown by a perceptible decrease in their attendance, but the superintendents were pleased to state that there were now more scholars' names on the books than had been the case for many years, the number having risen since 1880 from 142 to 172. The average punctual attendance for 1880-81 was—morning 84 per cent., and afternoon 83·6 per cent. The difficulties in connection with the afternoon school were very great, as the teachers were conspicuous by their absence. The subscriptions to the relief fund had slightly increased this year, and as usual the larger portion had been expended in dispensary tickets, which were always in great request, and much appreciated, and a small amount had been laid out in relieving cases of sickness and distress, while two girls were sent to the Children's Convalescent Home at Solihull, and another enabled to take a place of domestic service.—Mr. W. J. B. Tranter (the superintendent of the boys' Sunday-school) read the report of that department, which spoke with pleasure of the excellent conduct of the scholars during the year. The number attending the adult class, conducted by Mr. Heap, had risen from eighteen in 1876 to forty in the present year. The number of scholars in the school at the commencement of the year, including the adult class, was 192, and at the end of the year 207, showing an increase of fifteen. The average attendance at the morning school was 83·6 per cent., and at the afternoon 80·4 per cent. The bank had again been conducted in a satisfactory manner, £137 2s. 2d. having been deposited, and £135 19s. 2d. withdrawn, as against £94 18s. deposited, and £93 0s. 5d. withdrawn last year. The average attendance of the teachers was 94·1 at the morning school, and 83·4 at the afternoon school.—Mr. David Heap (the missionary) presented his report, which stated that the aid afforded by the Mission was not confined to the expression of an opinion or the giving advice, for in the year just ended ninety-three separate grants were made from the poor fund with the object of enabling recipients to tide over their temporary troubles.—The report of the treasurer (Mr. T. H. Russell) stated that the total amount of the income for the year of the mission and schools was £280 13s. 7d., and the expenditure £272 18s. 1d., leaving a balance in hand of £7 15s. 6d.—The Chairman moved the adoption of the report, and Mr. Greenway seconded the resolution, which was carried.—A vote of thanks was then passed to the Rev. Dr. Crosskey for the appeal made by him on Sunday last on behalf of the schools; and the rev. gentleman replied in suitable terms, and then moved a vote of thanks to those who had been actively engaged in the different branches of the schools and missions. In doing so, he remarked that the existence of secular education at the Sunday-schools in the past did not mean that they did not give any moral and religious teaching, for the moral and religious influence of those whose names were honoured among them, and who had in past times taught in the schools was the supreme power. The withdrawal of secular teaching was in order to give freer room and opportunities to the teachers to extend their moral influence and religious teaching. This alteration was at first received with suspicion, or rather fear: but it had passed away entirely. He knew from the reports that there was a large and generous religious life within the schools, and that an ardent spirit was spreading throughout both departments. There was a wonderful amount of voluntary and devoted work going on in connection with the Church of the Messiah, and he was thankful that it was going on so nobly, and that the spirit among them was deepening. Mr. J. A. Kenrick seconded the motion, which was carried.—The Rev. Dr. Laird Collier then addressed the meeting, and deprecated the too early education of the young. He had frequently seen instances where a child whose education had commenced at ten years of age had surpassed another who began at five years, and he therefore was of the opinion that children should not be educated until they reached eight years of age, for their intellects were simply dwarfed and smothered by being taught things before they were ready to receive them.—The meeting then terminated.

TENTERDEN.—The chapel here was re-opened on Sunday last, after having been closed three weeks for repairs. Harvest thanksgiving services were held—the decorations of fruit, flowers, &c., being very beautiful indeed. The amount of the offertory was £12 11s. 4d.

MATTHEW ARNOLD AND VOLTAIRE.

Many people seem to be grieved that Mr. Matthew Arnold has spoken approvingly of Voltaire's intellectual characteristics; but I hope that all of us are strong enough in our religious faith to do justice even to the opponents of it. Voltaire has been loaded with more opprobrium, perhaps, than any other of them; yet he had most conspicuous and admirable merits. His sullied memory is partially redeemed from reproach by the fact that he was possessed for a whole lifetime by a burning hatred of injustice and falsehood. The real work of his life, the work which will be remembered for ever, was to smite all forms of what he thought intellectual falsehood, and all classes of men that dealt therein. He made terrible mistakes and committed terrible errors; he was often reckless where caution was an imperative duty; he was often irreverent amid the most hallowed sanctities; he was often so untrue to his principles as to use falsehood to strike falsehood; he, too often, acted in a spirit which has debauched the conscience of France almost as much as the teaching and the example of the so-called religious men whom he assailed. But in spite of these blots on his memory he had lucidity, and he taught the intellect of his country to look facts in the face. No class of beings could be more different from Voltaire than the literary triflers who affect to speak in his name; and the Voltairianism of Janin was about as much like that of the heresiarch as the antics of small Ritualistic priests are like the rigours of St. Anthony. Voltaire was no mere mocker; he was the most tremendous iconoclast that the world ever saw; and his mocking was that of a man in earnest, and stung with indignation, far beyond the reach of a persiflage.

He has been called the apostle of infidelity, the denier of the truths of religion, the subverter of Christianity. But it must be remembered, in the first place, that in his writings Voltaire has repeatedly expressed his love and reverence for Jesus; and that his conception of real religion, as distinguished from theology and historical dogma, may be found in the fact that he believed in Quakerism. It must be remembered, too, in the second place, that he saw Christianity, if not only, chiefly in the form of Papal Catholicism; and I fancy that there have been as strong and as long-continued assaults on Christianity in that sense as those of Voltaire. His great war was waged against the Church of Rome. Particularly it was against the Gallican Church, which was a Church of great persecution, bigotry, and misused power. Just before his birth, and during his own age, his country was filled with brawls and cruelties excited and exercised by the priesthood. The quarrels of the Molinists, the Jansenists, the Quietists, and the disgraceful exhibitions of the Convulsionaries, absorbed so much the talent and perverted so much the uprightness and charity of men of first-rate genius that we turn with pity and loathing from the misuse of one of the best gifts of God. Voltaire had it deeply at heart to put an end to these discussions. He would prevent such men as Bossuet and Fenelon from expending their vast talents in unworthy squabbles. He would convert such men as Pascal and Racine from sacrificing their abilities at the altars of superstition. He wished to redeem such of his countrymen as were slaves to the priests from the miseries of bigotry and ignorance. He most ardently desired to liberate those whose piety was enlightened from persecution at the hands of bigots. The cruelties exercised on the Huguenots raised a tumult of generous indignation in his benevolent heart—a heart which had a boundless faith in justice and humanity. The insolence and barbarity with which the French priesthood endeavoured to quell all rebellion to their authority roused his anger and pointed his sarcasms. Liberty for the mind was the one aim of his life. It was a noble and useful aim. But in passionately urging it he went too far. He did not differentiate between the truths of New Testament Christianity and the multifarious, sometimes ridiculous, often pernicious additions of the Papacy. His heart revolted from the series of intolerable evils brought on the world by the Roman theology and the Roman ecclesiastical system; he forgot the civilisation produced by the Gospel, and even the uses of the system of Rome during days of feudal barbarism; he saw only the evil, and visited the whole with his reprobation, his ridicule, his unflinching and unwearied opposition. He fell into great and mischievous mistakes. France owes to his mighty labours and powerful influence a great and swift advance in civilisation and in enfranchisement from priestly thralldom. But he went beyond the useful and the right in his struggle, and, not contented with warring against superstition, he made inroads into the fields of rational piety. This must be admitted and censured; but let us admit and censure it without rancour, without flinging at him an opprobrious name, feeling grateful at the same time for the good he did achieve, and acknowledging our respect not only for his abilities but for his motives also.

Let justice be done to him and to all men, whether for or against what to us are great Christian verities. There is hardly any book that I should more welcome than a fair, impartial, and discriminating work upon the great sceptics. For myself, I feel that our youthful ideas of those men taught us by the pulpit, and that the public opinion of to-day, need reconsidering and revisal; and I am thankful that Mr. Matthew Arnold has assisted us towards this desirable end in reference to one of them.

S. F. W.

THE REV. STOPFORD BROOKE.

The editor of a recent American edition of a selection from Mr. Brooke's sermons writes to the New York Independent as follows:—

"The writer of an interesting review of Stopford Brooke's hymn-book in the Independent for Aug. 31 has a few preliminary words upon the subject of Mr. Brooke's withdrawal from the Church of England. 'The reasons for that step,' he says, 'have never been made clear to us at this distance;' and he adds that Mr. Brooke seems to 'eschew explanations.'

"Permit me, as one familiar with Mr. Brooke's thought and work, and interested especially in his present movement, to say, for the sake of any to whom, like your contributor, the reasons for Mr. Brooke's withdrawal from the Church of England are not perfectly clear, that he stated his reasons very freely and fully at the time of his withdrawal; first, in a letter addressed to the congregation of Bedford Chapel, and published in many of the religious as well as secular newspapers in England and this country; and then in a special series of sermons upon those doctrines, wherein he differed from the standards of the Church of England. These sermons, I regret to say, have not been published in this country, nor yet in permanent form in England.

"Without these, however, the matter is very simple. The Church of England, by her doctrinal standards and various offices, requires of her clergy that they 'unfeignedly believe all the Canonical Scriptures of the Old and New Testament' (see the 'Ordination Service'); the doctrine of 'everlasting damnation' (see 'Litany,' &c.); the doctrine that Jesus Christ 'made upon the cross, by his one oblation of himself once offered, a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world' (see 'Communion Service'); the doctrine of Miracles; the doctrine that except one keep 'whole and undefiled' faith in 'one God in Trinity and Trinity in Unity,' 'without doubt he shall perish everlastingly' ('Athenasian Creed'), &c. Mr. Brooke believed none of these things, and, consequently, he had no right to remain in the Church of England. The ground of his withdrawal was simply that of common honesty.

"It is true enough, as has been said, that many men who believe as Mr. Brooke does, nevertheless remain in the Church. He himself was told this very plainly by his brethren of the Broad Church, at the time of his withdrawal. 'A large number of the liberal clergy disbelieve in the miraculous,' said Mr. Capes; 'but, being men of robust and simple minds, take things as they are,' and go serenely on. And Mr. Haweis advised the Broad Churchmen all to stay in, unless forcibly put out, continuing to preach what they pleased, and sure that they will be furnished with consistent prayer-books in good time. Mr. Brooke's mind—unfortunately or fortunately, as one chooses to look at it—was not of this 'robust and simple' order. He believed that it is well to maintain as high a standard in the Church as in the world, and that morality still has a proper place in the things of religion, as well as in the ordinary dealings of life.—Respectfully yours

"EDWIN D. MEAD."

The Independent adds:—"Doubtless, as an honest man, Mr. Brooke was compelled to withdraw. A man who denies supernatural revelation and miracle has no right in any Evangelical Church, however 'robust' he may be."

THE NATIONAL UNITARIAN CONFERENCE.

This body, representing the best thought and culture, as well as the activities of the Unitarian denomination, met in its accustomed place in the Methodist church, Saratoga, New York, on Tuesday, Sept. 19. The Conference, which was well attended, was opened by prayer by the Rev. James Freeman Clarke. Governor Long, of Massachusetts, presided. After the addresses of welcome a business committee was appointed, and report was received from the General Council, which is appointed by one Conference to serve until the meeting of the next. The report gave a résumé of the work accomplished by the Conference since its organisation in 1866. Since the previous meeting of the Conference, two years ago, $18,000 had been raised to build a church edifice in Ann Arbor, Mich. The effort to get $50,000 for the Meadville Theological Seminary had failed. The council proposed that $150,000 be raised to endow the Seminary. Two years ago it was voted that $50,000 yearly were needed for missionary work, but only two-thirds of that sum had been received. The increase of contributions in the last year is, however, large. The Rev. A. D. Mayo, under the auspices of this Conference, had spent two winters in the south, using his best efforts to encourage the spread of the American idea of common schools there.

The Rev. J. Page Hopps, of Leicester, England, a delegate to the Conference, was received. He read a paper on "Jesus Christ's Unfulfilled Ideal of Religious Unity," prefacing it with letters of greeting from the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association and from the members of the monthly meeting of Protestant Dissenting ministers of Warwickshire and the neighbouring counties, which last organisation had Dr. Priestly among its founders one hundred years ago.

He was followed by another English delegate, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, with an essay on "Influence of Science on Progress of Religious Thought." A report from the American Unitarian Association was then read. It described the plans and work of the Association, and showed how they were hindered by want of money. The Secretary of the Western Conference showed how Unitarian churches had been built in that section, which is not "western, but central, and reaching ground." The Conference is pushing forward in Colorado and New Mexico. It charged New England Unitarians with lack of aggressiveness and with being too conservative, and joyously suggested that they should join the Western Conference. It congratulated itself on a well-fixed treasury, an unprecedented increase of societies, and healthy and vigorous growth. The report of the Middle and Southern Conference stated that the Conference had no missionary at work; but most of its societies were in good condition. The Buffalo Church complained of the prevalence of Ingersollism in that city and the lack of interest in church matters shown by immigrants from New England. The report from the New England Conference stated that Unitarianism was never in a more healthy and prosperous condition. The New England churches are liberally aiding Unitarianism throughout the country, having furnished over $800,000 in the past two years for church and benevolent work.

On the second day the church was well filled, notwithstanding the assembling of the Republican State Convention. The Rev. George Batchelor read an essay on "The Place of the Unitarian Body in the National Life of America," which was followed by an account of missionary work in the Southwest, by the Rev. Charles S. Allen, of New Orleans. The Conference took a collection, amounting to nearly $6,000, in aid of the New Orleans Church, which has a debt of $15,000. A report was presented by Mr. Dorman B. Eaton in favour of the union of the National Conference and the American Unitarian Association, which was thoroughly discussed.

On the third day the Rev. J. C. Learned read an essay on "The Future of Religion." In the matter of the proposed Wade Theological School, in Cleveland, a committee was appointed to confer with Mr. Wade. The following amendment to the constitution was proposed and adopted:—

"While we believe that the preamble and articles of our constitution fairly represent the opinions of a majority of churches, yet we wish distinctly to put on record our declaration that they are no authoritative test of Unitarianism, and are not intended to exclude from our fellowship any who, while differing from us in belief, are in general sympathy with our practical purposes and aims."

The Rev. Oscar Clute discussed the outlook of Unitarianism, and a resolution was adopted in favour of total abstinence. The evening was given up to a discussion of the education of the young.

Friday was the last day of the session. Prof. Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard, read an essay upon "Liberal Christianity and the Spirit of Worship." It was a discussion of what goes to make up true worship. Among the means of deepening the feelings of devout Christians, the essayist said, some favour the introduction of liturgical forms in public worship. The great growth of the English Church, with its liturgy, has been noted as an argument for a liturgy; but we find also the informal Baptists and Methodists growing rapidly. The perfunctory and hasty manner in which many priests in liturgical churches go through their services was sharply criticised and deprecated. Dr. Peabody believed a fixed form of service to be a corrective, but it had great faults as well. The redemption of American life from its prose and worldiness, so far, he said, the churches have not effected. It chiefly proceeded from literature bred of New England Unitarianism. There is no demand of the times so plain as that for the increase of the spirit of worship in our administration of religion. Social fellowship does not of itself create religious fellowship, while religious fellowship does carry with it all the elements of sociability. Returning to the subject of liturgy, the fact is stated that a form of worship which shall accurately respond to the convictions of thoughtful worshippers, in times when theology is a living study, must be a flexible and variable form. Whatever claim we may recognise in inherited and uniform methods, it still remains that the Church which stands for progress must stand by the principle of freedom in prayer. The function of the sermon was discussed and its right to exist was said to lie in its intimate relation with the spirit of worship and its co-ordination with the rest of the service of prayer and praise.

The Hon. E. B. Hoar was elected president, and the Rev. R. N. Bellows secretary, and a council of twenty-one selected.

Professor Carroll C. Everett reported for the Cambridge Divinity School that, whereas it had only two resident professors two years ago, two more had been added since the last session of this Conference, and the next term will begin with six resident professors, one of whom is now on the sea. The Committee on Credentials reported about six hundred delegates present, and that the total number of persons attending was over 2,200, being more than have been present at any previous session. A resolution was adopted to raise $50,000 annually during the next two years for the American Unitarian Association. The Rev. J. L. Jones, of the Committee on the endowment of the proposed Wade Theological School at Cleveland, Ohio, stated that Mr. Wade had pledged himself that when the Committee secured $150,000 he would add $350,000 and, if they would raise $50,000 more, he would add an equal sum to make the grand total $600,000. The Conference closed with the doxology and benediction.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD re-assembled on Thursday after their summer recess. Mr. E. N. Buxton, the chairman, in accordance with a custom originated by the late Sir Charles Reed, made a statement as to past educational operations of the Board and the results. While the number of schools built by the Board, together with those which were found in existence, would more than suffice for the children of London as it was in 1870, London had increased during the past twelve years to such an extent that the Board still found themselves in arrear. The charges against the management of St. Paul's Industrial School and the consequent action of the Board met with some explanatory observations at the hands of the chairman. As to the expenses of the Board, the chairman could not hold out any expectation that the education rate for the ensuing year would remain below sixpence. Friday, the 24th November next, was fixed for the triennial general election of the Board.

The Government of Japan have resolved on the establishment of 53,760 primary schools. The whole empire is divided into eight collegiate departments with one college to each department. Even children under six years of age will be compelled to attend the primary school.

Obituary.

THE REV. JAMES ORR OF CLONMEL.

In addition to the losses which our Church has lately sustained by the removal of several worthy ministers we deeply regret to record the death on the 30th ult. of the Rev. James Orr, Clonmel, co. Tipperary.

Mr. Orr was a member of a highly respectable family belonging to the congregation of Moneyrea, near Belfast, and was brought up under the ministry of the Rev. Fletcher Blakeley, who, more than half a century ago, was one of the most intrepid and successful vindicators and promulgators of our liberal views in the North of Ireland. Immediately after the formation of the Remonstrant Synod of Ulster several educated and independent young men, inspired with an earnest desire to assist in promoting the principles of that little band, became probationers or licentiates in connection with the Remonstrant Synod, some of whom were soon invited to labour in England, and some in the South of Ireland, as well as in their native province. By the United Presbytery of Munster Mr. Orr was sent, we believe, in the year 1831 to supply the congregation of Clonmel, which had been vacated by the removal of the Rev. William Crozier, who had just become successor to his early preceptor, the Rev. Arthur Nelson, of Rademon. Mr. Orr's services were so acceptable to the congregation of Clonmel that he was almost immediately invited to become their stated minister. There he indefatigably laboured for the last fifty years; not only among his own little flock, but among all classes and creeds of the Southern Irish he has been engaged in incessant efforts to promote the temporal comfort, the social improvement, and education of the people.

Mr. Orr has been a frequent contributor to the pages of the Inquirer, and from time to time he published several sermons and treatises of considerable literary merit, and all breathing a spirit of independence and of earnest aspirations after truth, freedom, and practical usefulness.

From Mr. Orr's knowledge of the condition of the tenant farmers in the North and the South of Ireland, and we believe from his own experience, too, he could not help contrasting the comparative independence and comfort of the former with the serfdom and many grievances under which the latter unhappily laboured. His warm heart felt deeply for his suffering neighbours, and his manly voice and his energetic pen were often enlisted in vindication of the rights of humanity. At the commencement of the recent agitation for an amendment of the Land Laws he was, from his sanguine and earnest temperament, perhaps too readily induced to join in the early efforts of those who ultimately proved to have ulterior and less justifiable objects in view. No man, however, more thoroughly deprecated the "boycotting" and the revengeful cruelties which seemed afterwards to be encouraged by reckless unprincipled hirelings and ambitious agitators. This will be manifest to those who have read with any attention his able letters in the Inquirer. Indefatigably, too, among his countrymen, did he endeavour to inculcate lessons of kindness, goodwill, and peace, urging them to assist in the efforts of a paternal Government whom he regarded as at length awakening to the actual causes of discontent, and resolved to redress all real grievances.

As to his theological views, while Mr. Orr, from his bold and outspoken phraseology, might generally be regarded as a man of the Broad or Advanced School, he was yet eminently conservative and deeply reverential—thoroughly inspired with lofty hopes and anticipations, and the firm trusting and abiding faith which breathed throughout all the utterances of our great Master, the writings of the prophets and apostles, and the messengers of divine truth. It is but a few weeks since some controversial letters appeared in the Inquirer on the subject of the Resurrection. Mr. Orr has just enunciated his views upon the matter in an admirable and popular discourse, which, we trust, will find its way into the hands of many of our readers.

Mr. Orr was endeared to his numerous friends, whom his genial and affectionate disposition refreshed and cheered, whether when they visited him and his hospitable family at Airmont, overlooking the beautiful valley of the Suir, or when he came occasionally to visit the friends of his younger days in the north. The last of these visits he paid about two months ago, when, besides cheerfully joining in some Sunday-school excursions, he preached with as much vigour and freshness as in his younger days in the pulpits of some of his brethren. His last illness was of short duration. A sharp attack of rheumatic fever rapidly prostrated his wiry and vigorous frame. He leaves behind him a sorrowing widow and three daughters, and three sons, the eldest of whom is a most intelligent and model farmer, instructing and improving the neighbouring farmers in Tipperary—another a successful medical practitioner in Killyleagh, and the third the Rev. B. J. Orr, M.A.—a former student of Manchester New College, and now the esteemed minister of York-street, Belfast. S. C. N.

The funeral took place on Oct. 30, in Rathroman churchyard, near Clonmel. The remains were followed by a considerable number of neighbours and fellow townsmen of all religious denominations, as well as by friends from the distant localities of Belfast, Dublin, Portarlington and Cork, who thus testified their respect to the departed. The funeral service was conducted by his co-Presbyter, the Rev. W. Whitelegge, of Cork, who, in his address at the grave, said:—On this mournful occasion, when we are about to consign to the tomb the mortal remains of our dear departed brother, I should be sadly deficient in the discharge of this solemn duty were I to omit saying a few words, which my long intimacy enables me to do, and which I trust will be in some measure consoling to those who have most reason to mourn his loss.

Our venerable friend, who for half a century presided over the Non-subscribing Presbyterian Congregation of the neighbouring town, fulfilled earnestly and efficiently the duties of his sacred office. That office, in connection with any denomination, is for the most part one of such uneventful uniformity as to afford little or no material for public interest or record. The quiet and small congregation to which our friend's ministerial duties were through his lengthened life confined still further narrowed his career, but I can truly say froze not the genial current of his soul.

His devotional services were able—sometimes eloquent—always earnest and heartfelt. His piety, deep and true, found utterance not alone in words on Sundays and on stated occasions—but flowed uniformly, constantly, and consistently through every channel of his daily life—refreshing, invigorating, and irradiating, all his human relationships with the divine beauty of holiness.

As a husband he was tenderly affectionate. As a father he devotedly discharged his parental duties, bringing up his children to useful and honourable professions and avocations, and in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. As a citizen he was active in the promotion of the welfare of his fellow citizens, and his sympathies were ever on the side of the weak, the poor, the afflicted and oppressed.

As a patriot, though not prominent, he was a sincere, out-spoken, and ardent advocate of reforms which he honestly believed to be desirable if not necessary for the future peace, progress, and prosperity of his native land.

Deeply consolatory should it be to all who lament his loss that he has left behind him the memory of such private virtue and public worth, and that we are thus enabled to believe in humble and trustful confidence in the divine promise that he has now received the Heavenly welcome to all faithful souls—"Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

REVISION OF THE AUTHORISED VERSION.—The Company appointed for the revision of the Authorised Version of the Old Testament finished their seventy-seventh session on Friday week, at the Jerusalem Chamber. The following members attended:—The Dean of Peterborough, Dr. Alexander, Mr. Bensly, Dr. Chance, Mr. Cheyne, Dr. Davidson, Dr. Douglas, Mr. Driver, Dr. Ginsburg, Dr. Gotch, Archdeacon Harrison, Dr. Kay, Professor Leathes, Professor Lumby, Mr. Sayce, Dr. Robertson Smith, Professor Wright, and Mr. Aldis Wright (secretary). Communications were received from the Bishop of Llandaff, Professor Birrell, and Dr. Field, who were unable to be present. The second revision of the Prophetic Books was completed, and that of Job commenced. It is stated that the Revisers have made so much progress that their work will certainly be finished in a few more months. Indeed, there is even some probability, if the Academy is well informed, that the Revised Old Testament may be ready for publication by the close of next year.

We understand that the Rev. Stopford W. Brooke (son of the Rev. Stopford A. Brooke), will preach at Little Portland-street Chapel to-morrow, morning and evening.

DR. HERZOG, the well known editor of the "Real-Encyclopædie of Protestant Theology and Church History," died Erlangen on Sept. 30.

A MEMOIR of the late Canon Pearson, of Sonning, is in preparation.

MR. MATTHEW ARNOLD's recent address at University College, Liverpool, is to be printed in the next number of the Nineteenth Century.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15.

LONDON.

Rev. STOPFORD WENTWORTH BROOKE, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Rev. CHAS. VOYSKY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Conway's (M. D.) Travels in South Kensington, with Notes on Decorative Art and Architecture in England, illus. 12/
Correspondence of Robert Southey and Caroline Bowles, edited by E. A. Dowden, 14/
Christian Year (The), 6/
Daniels's (Rev. W. H.) Short History of the People called Methodists, 6/
Darwin (C.) Memorial Notices from "Nature," 2/6
Hutton's (J.) Journalistic London, 12/6
Osborne's (Rev. W. A.) Revised Version of the New Testament, a Critical Commentary, 5/
Ramann's (L.) Franz List, Artist and Man, 1811-1840, 21/
Romanism, Protestantism, Anglicanism, by Oxoniensis, 3/6

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

MARRIAGES.

LAWFORD—THOMSON—On 23rd August, at Kamesborough, Melbourne, Lindsay Crompton, second son of George Lawford, Esq., of Nightingale-lane, Balham, to Maggie Jane, eldest daughter of W. K. Thomson, Esq., of Melbourne.

NEW—ROSCOE—On the 11th inst., at the Brixton Unitarian Church, London, by the Rev. J. Hamilton Thom, of Liverpool, Geoffrey New, fourth son of Herbert New, of Evesham, to Margaret Henrietta Roscoe, of St. Margaret's, Mitcham, younger daughter of the late William Caldwell Roscoe.

DEATHS.

JAMES—On the 10th inst., at his residence, Marlborough-hill, St. John's-wood, London, Christopher James, aged 50 years.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary Newspaper, and Record of Reverent Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

ADVERTISEMENT SCALE.

Up to and inclusive of first five lines . . . 2s. 6d.
Each line afterwards 0s. 4d.
For Six consecutive insertions, 25 per cent. less.
For Thirteen " " 50 " "

THE LATE REV. W. A. POPE.

London, August 22, 1882.

The death of the late William Annette Pope by a fall on the Great Gable, Cumberland, on August 7, has left Mrs. Pope and her six girls (the youngest being only five years old) without any provision at all.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to make an immediate effort on their behalf.

During the last three years of his life Mr. Pope was the minister of the Domestic Mission, Spicer-street, Spitalfields. The Committee of the Mission, therefore, feel that in addition to the invitation to the general public already issued by private friends, they may especially call for the aid of their own supporters in assisting the widow and children of their late missionary.

Prior, however, to his settlement in London Mr. Pope had been for twelve years actively engaged in various localities, both in the neighbourhood of Liverpool and in the Eastern Counties, in the service of the Unitarian cause. In view of these labours, and of the sacrifices which his change of opinions involved, the Committee feel justified in enlarging the area of their appeal, and asking the help of members of the free churches generally.

LAST LIST OF CONTRIBUTIONS.

	£	s.	d.
Amount last advertised	1848	18	0
Anon., per Rev. J. Worthington	1	1	0
Mrs. Turner	1	0	0
The Misses Harrowin	1	1	0
A. C. B.	2	2	0
Friends at Brighton, per Rev. T. R. Dobson	4	5	0
Rev. F. Summers	0	10	0
Members of George's-row Mission, per Rev. F. Summers	5	9	1
Dr. R. T. Nichols	0	5	0
R. H. Brocklebank, Esq.	1	1	0
G. W. Broad, Esq., Diss	1	0	0
Miss Ellen Stone, Leicester	2	0	0
Mrs. Wm. Sharpe	5	0	0
Dr. T. S. Watson, Bath	5	0	0
Rev. J. C. Odgers, Bristol	1	1	0
E. C. B.	5	0	0
Theo. Code, Esq., Marazion (2nd don.)	5	5	0
Miss Williams	5	5	0
"Astley Bridge"	0	5	0
Miss Haslam, Bolton-le-Moors	5	0	0
P. H. E.	2	0	0
Frederick Haines, Esq.	2	2	0
Mrs. Benjamin Carpenter, Nottingham	1	1	0
Samuel Bourne, Esq., do.	0	10	0
Misses E. and A. Castle, do.	0	10	0
A Friend, do.	0	5	0
Wm. Bolton, Esq., do.	0	5	0
Wm. Gill, Esq., do.	0	5	0
Wm. Hugh, Esq., do.	0	5	0
Joseph Radford, Esq., do.	0	2	6
Edwin Smith, Esq., do.	0	2	6
A. J., do.	0	2	0
John Rowlinson, Esq., Liverpool	2	0	0
Mrs. Allen, Bath	1	0	0
Edward Cobb, Esq., do.	1	0	0
Mrs. Fisher, do.	0	10	0
Miss Holland, do.	1	0	0
Mrs. F. Jolly, do.	0	10	0
Miss Lemann, do.	0	12	6
Mrs. C. Moore, do.	2	0	0
Mrs. Robberds, do.	1	0	0
Rev. F. W. Stanley, do.	0	10	0
Miss Wallace, do. (2nd don.)	0	10	0
Smaller sums, do.	2	6	0
A Friend, Keswick, per Rev. F. W. Stanley	0	10	0
Swansea Friends, per Rev. J. E. Manning	7	4	6
Mrs. Taylor, Bolton	1	0	0
Mrs. L., per Rev. J. T. Marriott	1	0	0
Friends, do.	1	5	0
John Thomas, Esq., Prestwich	1	1	0
Miss Shaen	1	0	0
Charles Thomas, Esq., Bristol	5	0	0
John Warren, Esq., Nottingham	2	0	0
"W. G."	20	0	0
Mrs. Richard Harwood, Pendleton	1	1	0
Mrs. Ashworth, Manchester	3	3	0
John Maitland, Esq., Borrowdale	3	3	0
Rev. J. L. Joynes	1	0	0
Mrs. C. E. Grainger	0	10	0
Editors of the Unitarian Herald	5	5	0

P. MEADOWS MARTINEAU,
6, Christian-street, Commercial-road, E.; or
J. ESTLIN CARPENTER,
Leathes House, Fitzjohn's-avenue, N.W.

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certificate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by correspondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials. Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL

RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE

ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.

ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING

AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or 8, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHARING-CROSS LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

A GENTLEMAN, aged 21, with five years' mercantile experience in Swansea and Liverpool, desires a situation as Clerk or Traveller, &c. Knows French and some German; the best references given.—Apply to A. D., INQUIRER Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

A LADY, occupying comfortable apartments, seeks another lady to join her. Two bed and sitting rooms, piano, bath, &c.—References exchanged; for particulars, address E. C., care of Mr. Philips, 16, Railway-street, Altrincham, Cheshire.

DIXON'S IRON CHAPELS, SCHOOLS, &c.

ARE tasteful in Design, Economical, Durable, made of the Best Materials, and erected in the most careful manner. Can be taken down, removed, and re-erected at small cost.

Careful comparison of Specifications, Structural and Architectural details, Materials and Workmanship are invited before placing orders. IRON CHURCHES, &c., usually on hand or in progress at the Works. IRON BUILDINGS for all purposes and all Climates. Catalogues, Designs, Estimates, and all information on application.

ISAAC DIXON, Windsor Iron Works, Liverpool

Quarterly, Price 2s. 6d.

THE MODERN REVIEW.

EDITED BY R. CROMPTON JONES, B.A.

CONTENTS FOR OCTOBER.

The Doctrine of Evolution in its Relations to Theism. By Dr. William B. Carpenter, F.R.S.
 Dr. Kuenen's Hibbert Lectures. By Russell Martineau, M.A.
 Justin's Use of the Fourth Gospel.—II. by Dr. Edwin A. Abbott.
 Dr. Martineau's and Mr. Pollock's Spinoza.—I. By Prof. C. B. Upton, B.A., B.Sc.

Musica Ecclesiastica. By Alexander Gordon, M.A.
 Hamlet and the Tempest. By Frank Walters.
 The Image of Truth. By Miss L. S. Bevington.
 R. W. Emerson. A Letter to the Editor. By W. H. Channing.
 Notes and Discussions: the Origin of the Name "Jehovah." By Prof. A. H. Sayce, M.A.
 Notices of Books.

London: Published for the Proprietors by

JAMES CLARKE AND CO., 13 AND 14, FLEET-STREET, E.C.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 3s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap Iss. 1s. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

TEXTS AND MARGINS of the REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH, 1s.

A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT of the NATIONAL CONFERENCE of UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High street, Birmingham.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatten, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

SEASONABLE DELICACY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

As Blanc-Mange, Custard,
Baked Pudding, &c.

WITH

STEWED FRUIT

OF ANY KIND.

SUNDAY LECTURE SOCIETY.

PRESIDENT.

W. B. Carpenter, Esq., C.B., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S.

VICE PRESIDENTS.

Professor Alexander Bain.
 Edward Frankland, Esq., D.C.L., Ph.D., F.R.S.
 James Heywood Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A.
 Right Hon. Sir Arthur Hobbhouse, K.C.S.I.
 Thomas Henry Huxley, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S., F.L.S.
 Benjamin Ward Richardson, Esq., M.D., F.R.S.
 Charles Siemens, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S.
 Herbert Spencer, Esq.
 W. Spottiswoode, Esq., LL.D., Pres.R.S.
 John Tyndall, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S.

The LECTURES at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM-PLACE, on Sundays, commencing each Afternoon at Four o'clock precisely.

Twenty-one Lectures (in three series), ending 18th March, 1883, will be given.

The first Series of Seven Lectures will be as follows:—

Oct. 22.—BENJAMIN W. RICHARDSON, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., Vice-Pres. S.L.S., on "Charles Darwin."

Oct. 29.—Professor WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D., St. Andrew's University, on "The True, the Beautiful, and the Good."

Nov. 5.—E. B. AVELING, Esq., D.Sc.Lond., on "The Borderland between Living and Non-Living Things."

Nov. 12.—WM. LANT CARPENTER, Esq., B.A., B.Sc., F.C.S., on "The Sun." (With Oxy-hydrogen Lantern Illustrations.)

Nov. 19.—P. MARTIN DUNCAN, Esq., M.B. Lond., F.R.S., on "The Metamorphoses of Insects and their Philosophy."

Nov. 26.—Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A., Incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone, on "Garibaldi."

Dec. 3.—Professor H. N. MOSELEY, M.A., F.R.S., on "Life on the Ocean Surface." (With Oxy-hydrogen Lantern Illustrations.)

Members' Annual Subscription, £1, due 1st of October in each year, entitles them to a ticket (transferable, and admitting to the Reserved Seats), and to fourteen single Reserved Seat tickets available for any lecture.

Tickets for this Series (one for each lecture) to the Sixpenny Seats, 2s.

For Tickets and Lists of the Published Lectures apply (by letter) to the Hon. Treasurer, Wm. Henry Domville, Esq., 15, Gloucester-crescent, Hyde-park, W. (remittances to be made by cheque, by post-office order, payable at the Post-office, Porchester-road, W., or by postage stamps).

Payment at the Door:—One Shilling (Reserved Seats); Sixpence, and One Penny.

The entrance in Mortimer-street is exclusively to the Reserved Seats.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

BOURNEMOUTH. — WESTBOURNE TOWER, standing in private grounds, is specially arranged as a health resort for those seeking rest; with cheerful home life, lawn tennis, baths. Terms moderate, include medical attendance.—Dr. NORTON.

APARTMENTS are offered in a small but thoroughly clean and comfortably furnished house; suitable for a gentleman of quiet and regular habits, engaged out during the day. Convenient for the City or West-end.—Further particulars supplied on application to Mrs. Heywood, 100, Calford-road, De Beauvoir Town, London, N.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

NORTH-MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at Leicester on Tuesday, October 17. The Ministers and Delegates will meet at 10.30 in the School-room of the Great Meeting, Bond-street.

At Noon Service will be conducted in the Great Meeting by the Rev. J. MODER. The Sermon will be preached by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds. A Collection will be made in aid of the funds of the Association.

At 1.30 Lunch will be provided in the School-room; tickets 2s. each. At 2.30 the ANNUAL PUBLIC MEETING will be held, under the presidency of the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS.

On Monday Evening, October 16, a Soirée of the Great Meeting Congregation will be held, to which members of the Association are cordially invited. Tea at 6. Tickets 9d. each.

ERNEST W. ENFIELD, } Hon.
V. D. DAVIS, } Secs.

LONDON UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICES.

The first of these Services will be held in Little Portland-street Chapel, on Thursday Evening, October 26, 1882.

The Service will commence at 8 o'clock precisely, but friends are especially requested to take their places five minutes earlier, so as not to disturb the devotions of others.

It is hoped that all Unitarian, Free Christian, and kindred congregations in London and the suburbs will be well represented.

The Meeting will last not more than seventy-five minutes, and will be conducted by the following gentlemen:—

The Rev. T. SADLER, Ph.D., of Hampstead; EDWIN ELLIS, Esq., of Guildford; the Rev. ROWLAND HILL, of Bedford; the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds. Organist, Wm. Tate, Esq., of Hackney.

At the close of the Service there will be an Offertory at the doors to cover the cost of the Meeting. Large donations are not desired, as the expenses are but small.

LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET CHAPEL

The Members of the Congregation of Little Portland-street Chapel will be happy to see any friends who purpose attending the UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICE on Thursday, October 26, for an hour's social intercourse before the gathering in the Chapel. Tea will be provided in the Girls' School-room, Portland British Schools (entrance in Little Titchfield-street), at half-past six o'clock.

SCOTTISH UNITARIAN CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The ANNUAL MEETINGS will be held in St. Vincent-street Church, Glasgow, on the 15th, 16th, and 17th October.

On Sunday, 15th, Sermons will be delivered by the Rev. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED, M.A.; Services at 11 A.M. and 6.30 P.M.

A Sermon will be delivered by the Rev. HENRY IERSON, M.A., in South St. Mungo-street Church; Service at 2 P.M.

Meetings will be held on the 16th and 17th as follows:

Monday—

3 P.M.—An Open Conference with the representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association on the best means of carrying on Unitarian work in Scotland.

7.30 P.M.—Autumnal Meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, DAVID AINSWORTH, Esq., M.P., in the chair.

Tuesday—

2 P.M.—Meeting of the General Committee of the Scottish Unitarian Association.

3 P.M.—Annual Business Meeting of Subscribers to the Association.

7 P.M.—Annual Soirée. Tea on the table at 7 o'clock, after which a Public Meeting will be held; JOHN POLLAR, Esq., in the chair.

David Ainsworth, Esq., M.P.; S. S. Tayler, Esq.; Henry Jeffery, Esq.; John Pollar, Esq.; Rev. Henry Ierson, M.A.; Rev. Philip H. Wicksteed, M.A.; Rev. H. W. Crosskey, LL.D.; Rev. R. B. Drummond, B.A., and others will take part in the Meetings.

W. J. MILLIGAN, Hon. Secretary.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Maritime.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday October 14, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2104.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

Canon CURTEIS on Unitarianism ...	677
The Congregational Union... ..	678
"Faith and Unfaith,"—II	679
Prof. AMOS on "Spoiling the Egyptians" ...	680

OCCASIONAL NOTES

REVIEWS:—

In Christ; or, the Believer's Union with his Lord	682
"The Modern Review"	682
Literary Notes	683

OUR CONTEMPORARIES

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

London Auxiliary Sunday-school Association... ..	688
North-Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association	688
Welcome to the Rev. J. Page Hopps	689

CANON CURTEIS ON UNITARIANISM.

AT the Church Congress last week a paper was read by Canon CURTEIS, the author of the Bampton Lectures on "Dissent in Relation to the Church of England," the subject of which was "The Deficiencies of Dissent." The tone of the whole paper was excellent, and nothing could be better than the earnest desire manifested "to put out of the way by some painless extinction that fruitful parent of all controversy, dissension, intolerance, persecution, and war—a mutual misunderstanding." With much that the learned Canon says on the deficiencies of Dissent of the Puritan type—its narrow theories on Church government and the relations of Church and State, and its defective conceptions of Bible authority, we are thoroughly agreed. We have no more love of Dissent as such than we have for the Church of England as at present constituted; many of us, indeed, greatly prefer the latter. Speaking for ourselves and those who agree with us, we may add that we are Nonconformists—a term which better describes our position than Dissenters—because we differ theologically from the creeds and articles and other traditional matters embodied in the existing formularies of the Church of England, not because we dissent from its ecclesiastical constitution, or hold any abstract theories of the unlawfulness of the union of Church and State. Government by Bishops or by Presbyters is a matter of indifference to most of us, and on the whole we prefer a National Church with its orderly discipline and Stately worship—if only it were really a broad and comprehensive one—to any of the existing denominations, whose ideals have no attractions for cultured minds. But unfortunately there are indications from the present state of parties both inside and outside the Establishment that instead of becoming a really National Church it is little more than a congeries of hostile sects waging bitter and constant internecine strife, and kept together in unnatural union by the artificial bonds of State alliance and support.

The second type of Dissent to which the Canon referred was the Wesleyan, respecting which he expressed the conviction, by no means shared by that powerful but somewhat narrow and exclusive sect, that there is nothing to prevent its reunion with the Church from which it originally issued.

Canon CURTEIS next proceeded to "the third and deeply interesting type of Dissent which calls itself Unitarian," a name, he added, which is wholly misleading. Why so? The word "Unitarian" is not identical with Monotheist, which latter term of course includes all varieties of Christians, as well as Jews and Mahometans. It is strictly and properly, as every student of ecclesiastical history must know, the correlative of "Trinitarian," and is the proper designation of a Christian who believes in One GOD existing in one person, the Father alone, as contradistinguished from those who believe in One GOD in three co-equal and co-eternal persons. It is an adequate and well understood theological term with a very definite meaning, and it is simply misleading and inaccurate to claim it for Trinitarians and to deny its use to the Christian party to which it belongs by clear historical right.

The claim of Unitarians, the Canon writes, is simply this: "Within the lines of the heart's loyalty to CHRIST to enjoy an unrestricted freedom of the intellect." These few words exactly describe our position—perfect intellectual freedom, combined with the heart's loyalty to CHRIST as our highest ideal, and the purest teacher of the absolute religion. Not all, perhaps, would accept even so simple a declaration of faith as this; but for our own part we do most entirely and heartily, believing that in this way alone do we come most surely to the knowledge of GOD the Father of all. But the defect of Unitarians we are told by our candid and courteous critic is that "the Church's counter-claim to authority is a purely educational one, and is not meant to fetter thought in any way." Putting aside for a moment the educational question, we should like to have a clear idea of what is really meant by the Church's "counter-claim to authority?" Is it the authority of venerable antiquity, the unbroken succession of the priesthood, the voice of ancient Councils and Synods? Then the Roman and the Greek Churches have an infinitely higher claim on our submission than any other, and the Anglican Church is simply schismatical in separating from the Catholic Church of Christendom and becoming a purely national Church with all its insular peculiarities. Is it the authority of the Primitive Fathers? The more we know of them the less are we disposed to accept them as authoritative, however interesting and valuable their writings are as authentic testimonies of the state of Christian thought and life in their own age. Is it the authority of the ancient creeds, and the Thirty-Nine Articles of CRANMER and his colleagues? The learned Canon knows as well as we do that these venerated creeds and articles are the embodied thought and speculations of fallible men living in an uncritical age when old traditions were confounded with Scriptural truths. The authority of the Church after all resolves itself into the authority of individual theologians and party leaders; and when we hear of the catena patrum we cannot but call to mind the well-known engineering maxim that the strength of a chain is not greater than its weakest link. What the authority and boasted uniformity of the Church of England this day are worth is sufficiently indicated in the internal strife which is continually going on within its pale, and the conflicts of its opposing parties, each anxious to destroy the other, as witnessed at every Church Congress—at none more conspicuously than at the Congress at Derby.

"The Church of England does not fetter thought," we have just heard, yet in exercising her purely educational authority we are told, "those that come to school with her must of course submit to her system, learn by her catechisms, get by heart her creeds, form themselves to prayer by her Liturgy." This sort of submission, the writer adds, "is the ordinary demand of every teacher in the world." This is quite an intelligible demand on the part of the Church, but is it a reasonable one, and is it really in accordance with the demand of every teacher in the world? In all other departments of human thought and investigation except theology would any sane person submit himself to the instruction of a teacher who had pledged himself to foregone conclusions and subscribed certain authoritative articles which formed a barrier against further knowledge and inquiry? Would a professor of English literature have much chance of getting a class who was understood to be pledged as one of the conditions of holding his office to a particular theory as to the authorship of the "Icon Basilike," or the "Letters of Junius?" Would any teacher of Science be listened to with ordinary respect if he were understood to be pledged to the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, or to mediæval theories of light and heat, which prevented him from accepting the latest conclusions of Professor TYNDALL; or to ancient Cosmogonies which compelled him to reject that of LYELL and the Geologists? And what would be said in any branch of secular knowledge of the man who could only teach the accepted conclusions of modern science on pain of losing his Professorship or putting sophistical and non-natural interpretations on the obsolete systems to which he was solemnly pledged. Only fancy a teacher compelled in advance to subscribe a Quicunque Vult in Science:—"Whosoever wishes to know aright must not believe with those detestable heretics TYNDALE, HUXLEY, and DARWIN, or without doubt he shall perish everlastingly." The analogy of the Church as an educational authority with that of "every other teacher in the world" is a singularly unfortunate one, and, as will be seen, in reality makes strongly against the claim which is put forward on her behalf.

"So long as there are babes in CHRIST—and that is always—must not men be taught by formula and symbol?" Yes! but must we not also look to the Church, even regarded as an educational authority, to give strong meat for men and women as well as milk for babes? And can its teaching be accepted as sound and satisfying to the spiritual and intellectual life, unless the formulas are accurate and the symbols the fitting expression of deep underlying realities?

In concluding his brief and perhaps necessarily superficial paper, Canon CURTEIS told his clerical audience that "the Church of England has been lightly abandoned by men who ought to have placed their intellectual strength at her disposal, and who would have been repaid a thousandfold in warmth of worship and in enlargement of heart." Good heavens! Lightly abandoned! Does not Canon CURTEIS know as well as we do that our Presbyterian forefathers were simply driven out of the National Church against their will by the imposition of impossible demands on their faith? That new articles of conformity were added to the old with the express design of making it dishonourable for them to remain? Does he not know that those, who at subsequent times have either voluntarily left the church of their fathers, or remain outside in the cold shade of Non-conformity, have done so of painful necessity, in obedience to the highest monitions of conscience, and after careful examination and deliberate rejection of the whole system of mediæval and Calvinistic theology embodied in the Creeds and Articles? For the sake of "warmth of worship," and even "enlargement of heart," we cannot sacrifice the higher claims of intellectual honesty and sincerity of outward profession.

In view of the demands made upon our faith in the formularies of the Church of England it seems to us as clear as any axiom of mathematics that no one can honestly remain in that Church or connect himself with it as a professed member and communicant who does not ex animo, and without any reserve or qualification whatever, believe (1) in the supernatural origin of Christianity with its whole apparatus of miracles and prophecies; and (2) in the doctrines commonly called "Orthodox"—the Trinity, the Atonement, Justification by Faith alone, and, notwithstanding any authoritative decision of the Judicial Committee of Privy Council—Eternal Punishment? Granting all the attractions of its stately worship, and the manifold social and other advantages connected with membership of a powerful Church, religious Liberals must still remain aloof from its pale in obedience to the stern voice of duty and the claims of perfect intellectual sincerity, until its theology is revolutionised from its very foundations. Canon CURTEIS, we are sure, is one of the last men to sanction insincere conformity, and his Essay, courteous and candid as it is, like his Bampton Lectures, only tends to confirm us in our resolute nonconformity. Yet with our whole hearts do we respond to the concluding words, in which he eloquently says, "Thousands of good men are weary to death of sectarian strife; thousands are seeking a haven for their storm-tossed souls, and a loving shelter where their children shall be tenderly welcomed and gently won to God. And among men of science God alone knows how many yearn—as for a restful paradise—for a communion reformed from gross superstition, yet still lovely with beauty of worship, peaceful with holy order, and powerful—by symbolism rather than by preaching—to draw men to Christ, while leaving them intellectually free."

Until the Church of England approaches nearer to the ideal described in these glowing words we cannot "hearken to the voice of the charmer, charming never so wisely."

THE CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

THE late meeting of the Congregational Union at Bristol was on some accounts less interesting than that of the Church Congress at Derby. It was a smaller gathering and a tamer affair altogether. There was not the earnest discussion, the conflict of opinion which imparted such deep interest to some of the Church meetings. The subjects discussed were practical enough, but of narrower aim than those debated at the Church Congress. Even the Chairman's address was disappointing. It was very much of a jocular character, and seemed intended quite as much to provoke laughter as to arouse earnest thought. Of course, it had some good points, some wise counsel. The jokes alternated with earnest appeals to Congregational zeal and fidelity. But, indeed, according to his own account, there is little room for jesting. This is the picture Dr. MACFADYEN gives us of Christian England to-day:—

"Out of the idea of individual consecration comes most naturally the hope that one day every knee shall bow to Christ, and every tongue confess him to the glory of God the Father. Nothing seems more unlikely at present. Apollyon straddles over the whole breadth of the way. It is a question whether at home we are even holding our own. We may say of many a Church what Robert Hall once said of the Cam, that it seemed to be standing still to see people drown themselves. Unbelief is openly avowed, and it is that unbelief which not only is ignorant, but is content to be ignorant. The idolatry of the age embraces both sense and intellect. The nation seems preyed upon by vultures of lust and superstition. Our large populations look like citadels of vice. Go with anyone familiar with the haunts of misery and sin, jungles in which lurk all things hideous and venomous, and you will have laid bare scenes which will make the heart bleed and the flesh quiver. Tear away for a moment the crust which hides the volcano which is seething beneath us, and you will hear moanings and mutterings, hissings and screechings, that suggest defiance of God and fearlessness of man."

If that be a true picture of the present state of things, surely we may expect something more from the head of a great religious denomination than a string of anecdotes and smart sayings, interrupted with bursts of laughter. Yet the subject of the address was a fine one, namely, Fidelity, or, as the author chose to put it, "Faithful in a very little, faithful also in much." Accordingly, after a becoming tribute to the memory of departed worthies belonging to the Congregational Church in Bristol, among whom special mention was made of ROBERT HALL and JOHN FOSTER, Dr. MACFADYEN proceeded to urge the importance of faithfulness to Congregational principles. He maintained that Church questions are not trivial or unimportant. They have their just claims on the consideration of all who are capable of serious thought. He objected to the diffusive charity which helps the members of Independent congregations to escape into other churches. This is a warning which applies to ourselves quite as much as it does to the Congregationalists. It is a spurious liberality, which is indifferent to denominational interests, careless of loss or gain in a denominational sense, and leaves the dissatisfied and the untaught to wander whither they list.

From this point Dr. MACFADYEN went on to speak of the importance of fidelity both in little and great things:—

"This is a principle capable of endless illustration in every province of the Christian life. Fidelity, we preachers are constantly reminding our hearers, is the same quality in little things as in great. The rivet firmly driven into the ship's side illustrates the same thoroughness as the engines that are well constructed. Faithfulness in little things prepares the way for faithfulness in greater things. If you are entrusted with one talent, and hide it in a napkin, or bury it in the ground, instead of laying it out to usury, the sentence will be passed, 'Thou wicked and slothful servant—take the talent from him and give it to him that hath ten talents.' We use the terms great and small; we cannot be sure that God uses them as we do. He often hangs the heaviest weights on the smallest wires. He is as careful of the little as of the great. He clothes the lily, He feeds the ravens, He maketh small the drops of rain. Small and little are not the same in history. Richard Cobden was justly criticised for one of his later utterances when contrasting America with Greece, and enforcing the importance of the study of modern geography. He seemed to argue against classical study, because when he went to see a celebrated river of Greece it was so small that the women of the village had dammed up its waters to wash clothes. The moral and the literary value of the stream was not to be estimated, it was argued, by the number of water drops of which the stream was composed. Athens and Jerusalem are small cities, yet they have filled a large place in history. Greece and Palestine, Switzerland and Britain are little countries, yet they are the eyes of the earth. Now the law which holds in other departments of Divine government holds in the ecclesiastical."

Here, again; does not the speaker's thought apply forcibly to Unitarians? Our denomination is one of the smallest in Christendom, and our denominational operations are almost insignificant as compared with those of the popular churches. But is that any reason why we should be less faithful or less earnest? Rather is it not an additional reason that, small as our part may be, it shall be done well? We are sometimes tempted to be careless and dissatisfied because our part is so small. To this feeling, however, we must not yield. Our denomination is a small one, but our cause is noble. It is that of liberty and progress, and the untrammelled search for truth in the sphere of religious thought.

Among the great variety of subjects on which Dr. MACFADYEN'S discursive address lightly touched were those of unity, uniformity, creeds. It was vain, he said, to hope for unity by any mechanical method. Such methods have been tried, and have failed. Even if they had succeeded the unity would have resembled the rubbing together of substances rather than the melting of souls. There may be an absence of dissension when the unity of death prevails, but that is not Christian unity. There may be a unity arising from ignorance. The fences that divide the fields may be hidden in the fog; but when the sun rises the fences are there as before. This is not Christian unity. Neither is unity to be found in uniformity of belief. The cry against creeds, if by the word is meant the formulation of religious thought, is ignorant and useless—ignorant because the Christian Church has always formulated its thought; and useless because the human mind must do so. But no attempt can be more futile than the attempt to impose creeds. Growth is hindered. The creed is like the shell which encases the egg, it arrests development. Action is prevented. All the faculties are bound as by an iron chain. Above all, harmony is at an end. Every Ecumenical Council was marked by the founding of some great heresy. Even the Vatican decrees, enforced only by spiritual power, are not enacted in our day without leading to a secession. Among churches constituted as our's are, unity is not thus violated. They are elastic and do not break with a blow. The unity of the Church must come, as Dr. MACFADYEN seems to believe, by the modification and adjustment of its theology according to the higher thought and truer knowledge of to-day. Experience has shown that the unity of the Church is not to be sought for by uniformity of worship enforced by State decrees. One experiment has been made in England which may last the world for ever. That policy has made one half of England Nonconformists. It has caused a social cleavage in the nation that extends to the smallest hamlet. It has engendered the most unseemly strifes, and has inflamed the most unchristian animosities. The parties in the Church show that uniformity of worship enforced by Act of Parliament is the last quarter from which to look for the unity of the Christian Church. This conviction is shared by all Nonconformists, however widely they may differ on other points. Here there is a common ground among them which marks them off very distinctly from the Established Church with its formal creeds and Parliamentary enactments.

Dr. MACFADYEN advances high claims on behalf of the Church of which he is a member. It is natural that he should do so. We believe that his claims are to a large extent justified. "Our system says," he remarks, "worship in the way your own experience tells you is the best for you, apply your intelligence to the question, and whatever modes approve themselves on trial, whether they belong to this age or past ages, you may adopt them." Who can doubt that in this way the Christian Church would attain a truer unity than in any other way—unity of spirit amidst diversity of operations? Every feature of our worship, he adds, conduces to the true conception of man's dignity. With this agrees our polity. There is no man so poor who is not welcome to our fellowship. We withdraw no rights from the weakest or the meanest. Every brother is expected to form his opinion and to record his vote. A Church faithful to such principles must be itself a home of freedom and an influence for liberty. With liberty Dr. MACFADYEN's sympathies are strong, and he characterises in a few vigorous sentences the free spirit of the age. "Personal freedom is the basis of modern civilisation. The nations are learning the first principles of commercial freedom. Political anomalies are one by one being ended, social injustices are being removed. Religious liberty is so far understood that the maxim is accepted—it is a duty to tolerate the intolerant. Human brotherhood has become an aspiration, and the aspiration is on its way to become a fact, because the dignity of man, as made by God and redeemed by CHRIST, is rooted in the Christian Church."

We are glad that these sentiments found such emphatic utterance at the Congregational Union. It is these sentiments which sustain, and will broaden still more the political and religious liberties of England. And the Congregational body is doing a good work in disseminating them and making their influence felt throughout the land. All that the Congregational Church needs is a little more latitude—not to be pledged so much to its Orthodoxy. That change we believe will come in time. It is coming now. A broad and liberal school is springing up and uttering its sympathies with no uncertain sound. We have commented lately on the liberal utterances of certain leaders of that school, and pointed out how distinctly they amount to a surrender of what have hitherto been regarded as the distinctive dogmas of orthodoxy. The advance is all in one direction—towards a broader and more reasonable interpretation of the Christian faith. In the Established Church the same movement is going on, but there it is met by the advance of sacerdotal pretension in an opposite direction. Of this counteracting tendency there is not the slightest symptom in the Congregational Church. Whatever progress it makes is a real unqualified gain to the cause of liberal thought and rational faith.

"FAITH AND UNFAITH."—II.

WE return to the article under this heading in the Nineteenth Century, in order to notice that part of the argument which makes special reference to Unitarianism and to Catholicism.

"In the Broad Church portion of the Church of England," writes Mr. KEGAN PAUL, "and in some of the sects outside of it, there is an increasing tendency to approximate to the theology known as Unitarian. Almost all the chapels which belonged to the old Presbyterian Church in England, to those clergy which separated themselves on the enforcement of the Act of Uniformity, have become Unitarian by insensible gradations." But the danger does not end here, for "The Unitarian body is by no means stationary, and among the leaders of thought in that community the teaching grows less and less dogmatic, tending to restrict itself to the simple enunciation of Theism, and the need of a life morally correct and intellectually graceful. There are next to no Unitarian poor,"—except the ministers, it might have been added.

Now it is worth while to consider here how far this statement of our position is reliable and accurate. Is it true that the teaching from our pulpits tends more and more to restrict itself to a simple enunciation of Theism, and the need of a life morally correct and intellectually graceful? Is it not far nearer the truth to affirm that side by side with our approach to pure Theism the deeper things of the Spirit are growing in importance among us? Does it not appear from almost every representative sermon that we are anxious to supplement the more "morally correct" and "intellectually graceful" with a spirit of tender and beautiful piety? And though there may be "next to no Unitarian poor" this does not arise from any inherent unfitness of our views for the humbler members of society, but from their incapacity to free themselves from the orthodox dogmas of childhood and from various social causes. But while our author's argument is weak in its application to ourselves it is forcible enough in its bearing upon some of the orthodox dogmas. We agree with him that many "assail the historic church with unmeasured vituperance, while their own principles, or what they take to be such, implicitly involve the admission of their adversaries' dogmas." Denying so much they "should deny much more;" by doing otherwise they incur, as we have said, a grave charge of inconsistency. But while we are willing to believe that at no distant day a great contest must be fought out, not between two forms of the Christian faith, but between that faith as a whole and the ultra tendency and position of the modern spirit, we cannot allow with our author, that there is no alternative but victory for Rome or Agnosticism, except in so far as the latter, while accepting the inner light of the spirit, may affirm that "nothing can be concluded accurately and positively," respecting matters which lie beyond the sphere of faith, but were once thought to be part and parcel of it.

In discussing and defending the various dogmas of Catholicism Mr. KEGAN PAUL endeavours to show that they are not inconsistent with received philosophical and theological ideas. Starting with what forms the pièce de résistance, so far as this portion of his paper is concerned, he says:—"There is perhaps no dogma which has called forth more indignant remonstrance from its opponents than that of the Mass, and in this the one point, that CHRIST, whole and entire God, the Saviour of mankind, is, so to speak, localised in the wafer, or bread consecrated by the priest." Now as regards this dogma he is not, he says, "concerned to deny or to minimise the enormous difficulties involved, but simply asserts that it is not more difficult than the ordinary admission of ninety-nine men out of every hundred believing Christians." This is a poor argument, since it proves nothing, and is based on an assumed, almost universal, existence of a dogma of the most irrational kind, though we are previously given to understand that all dogma has nearly ceased to exist in Protestant churches. Anyhow, the Athanasian Creed is repeated in the Anglican service, and it is "enough that the Son is stated to be God infinite and incomprehensible." "But if God be infinitely great he is also infinitely little; size has nothing to do with the question." Then, again, God is spoken of as being in the smallest things, while the Bible, "to which all appeal," constantly affirms that "God who is everywhere is present more particularly in certain places." When people go to church, too, they "think God is in a special manner there." This being so, "on what principle do they decline to go a step further, and to admit that it may have pleased him to place himself in a still more special mode and under certain conditions in the sacrament, in that which CHRIST gave as the express sign of his abiding with the Church? Once let it be granted that he is in any degree and under any condition localised, the size of the particles naught, and he who framed the exquisite meshes of the fly's wing, or the microscopic fibres of the lichen, may choose the smallest spot in which to show His greatest and divinest Power. . . . And if any say that the localisation of the Deity may be granted, but not the change of the substance of bread into the substance of flesh, with which in this case it is intimately and to many minds inseparably linked, it lies with them in contradicting this to define what substance is, since he who declares himself a believer in, fully admits with those who deny transubstantiation, that the outward semblance, species and accidents of bread and wine remain wholly unchanged."

It is easy to disentangle the true from the false in this argument, and to show that as a whole it cannot command the assent of any open and unbiassed mind. In the first place there is no localisation of the Deity—either in the Biblical expressions seeming to indicate it or in the belief of the pious worshipper that he will feel more of God in church or chapel than he would at his own fire-side. Instead of any objective change in God, there is merely a subjective change in ourselves, wrought in us by the law of association, and the calm, solemn atmosphere of the sanctuary, which attunes our hearts to a perception of sacred things. Then, again, it is philosophically impossible to conceive of the infinite as localised in one spot or point, because the very idea of infinitude embraces the wholefield of existence. If our author means that God is more in the wafer as he is in the "meshes of the fly's wing" then we have nothing to urge against his argument; and if, further, all he means by a change of substance in the wafer is the power the latter may have to produce a subjective change—a change of substance it may be in the soul of the worshipper—we are also in agreement with him. But what in this case becomes of the dogma of transubstantiation, which teaches that CHRIST as "whole and entire God" is localised in the wafer? That the soul may be touched and subdued to high and heavenly things through the memory of CHRIST, and that the dogma of the Mass is no more than a recognition of this may be admitted; but this is a very different thing from what the Church teaches. And though there may be a reasonable element in the doctrine of Purgatory, and though again the doctrine of Indulgences or supererogation for venial sins may be as philosophical as the vicarious atonement of CHRIST for deadly ones, we are bound to declare that our author has proved nothing but the inconsistencies of the whole orthodox system of belief.

PROFESSOR AMOS ON "SPOILING THE EGYPTIANS."

In the current number of the Contemporary Review Professor Amos undertakes to show that the author of "Spoiling the Egyptians*" "has made the Blue-books tell a tale which is, and even if he had told it accurately would still have been, the reverse of truth."

We have read Professor Amos's article repeatedly and carefully, and have found that it completely fails to establish this position. Some parts of the "tale" told by the author of "Spoiling the Egyptians" may need more or less qualification, or—to use Professor Amos's own word—"revision," but no part of it appears to us to be in any sense or to any extent "reversed," and in the next edition the author might insert everything that Professor Amos complains of his omitting, emphasise everything that he complains of his passing over, omit or qualify everything that he challenges as inaccurate, and yet leave the "tale of shame" essentially as he has already told it; indeed, in some respects Professor Amos's defence appears to us to give a blacker version of the business than is contained even in Mr. Keay's indictment.

After some general remarks about the possibility of essential factors in any political situations finding imperfect expression, or no expression at all, in the Blue-books, Professor Amos goes on with a ludicrous flourish of trumpets to reveal two facts which could not be brought forward adequately in public documents, but which change the whole face of the controversy. 1. That the late Khedive was a voluptuary and a spendthrift. 2. That England was encumbered by the ruinous and uncertain policy of France and other Powers. Surely it needed no voice from the catacomb to tell us that! It is quite true that Mr. Keay says nothing about the late Khedive's character and habits, but it is equally true that Professor Amos's version of them is as notoriously current in England as it is in Egypt; and that, if true, it only serves to bring out in bolder relief the infamous character of the original financial speculations which lie at the root of the whole mischief. As to the other revelation, it is certainly quite unnecessary to travel beyond the Blue-books in order to see that English and French sinuities and cynicisms have given each other a good deal of trouble, and that, on the whole, France has had the best of it.

All this is an elaborately futile attempt to "trail the herring" across our path, and to escape the necessity of meeting Mr. Keay's facts by launching out into vague generalities that have no bearing on them.

When we come to the facts we have to thank Professor Amos for bringing out very clearly the shameful way in which the European money lenders perpetrated "the fraud of isolating (the Khedive) from his country as a borrower, and then again merging him in his country so soon as he became a debtor."

Later on in his essay Professor Amos allows it to be unfortunate that during these fraudulent proceedings England's "paternal concern for the well-being" of Egypt had been "intermittent," but he boldly asserts that when in 1876 England did interfere, although the bondholders naturally came forward prominently, "yet there is nothing whatever to show that it was the claims of British or other creditors, and not the general condition of Egypt—looked at in the light of the permanent interests and policy of Great Britain in that country—which originally determined, and has since continuously maintained, English intervention. On the contrary," he continues, "there is abundant evidence to show that the monetary claims of private persons only entered incidentally into the policy of the British Government; and they only entered at all, because in Egypt solvency and good government were, or were honestly believed to be, inextricably intertwined."

The hardihood of this statement can only be appreciated by those who are minutely acquainted with the details of the question, but it may be submitted to a ready test supplied by the facts allowed and, in many cases, emphasised by Professor Amos himself.

The method adopted to secure these laudable objects, in which the interests of the bondholders only appeared incidentally, is described by Professor Amos as "that of sequestrating the whole revenues of the country; of providing out of the assets and income, on the one hand, for the punctual payment of the interest of the debt, with arrangements for its gradual extinction, and, on the other hand, for the expenses of the administration of the country; of discharging the Khedive from personal responsibility for the government of the country, and yet inviting his co-operation in a scheme of reformed administration; of putting every obstacle in the way of increase of debt; and of ensuring that the cruel and extortionate modes of collecting taxes from the peasantry should be exchanged for a civilised machinery, which should press just as lightly upon the people as possible."

Now observe that according to Professor Amos the motive of England was to make Egypt (not the Khedive but Egypt) solvent, and that, too, for her own sake and England's, not for the sake of the creditors. Surely if this were so England's first care would have been to expose and defeat the "fraud" by which Egypt and the Khedive had been confused. No harm could come to anyone but the bondholders, and they would only meet with a small part of their deserts if the Khedive became bankrupt. So far was this from being the case that England put forward the representative of the bondholders themselves (the perpetrators of what Professor Amos rightly or wrongly calls a "fraud") as her agent; and the one unbending principle of action was the "securing by severe determination by the British Government, that, while the scheme was being put in force, the successive coupons must at all hazards be paid." This determination, under the circumstances of the case, involved the free use of the whip and the bastinado, the collection of taxes in advance and other abominations, for which the British Government became morally responsible. Professor Amos's answer is that Ismail had shown himself quite equal to using such methods of tax-gathering on his own account, and that if our iron grasp on him had been released he would have continued his extortion, but he, instead of the bondholders, would have got the money! The interests of the European creditors appear to us to play more than an incidental part in this programme.

But as well as the European there were native claims on the Egyptian Government. The fellaheen for a cash payment variously stated, is estimated at £17,000,000, at £12,000,000, and £10,000,000, had purchased a claim to exemption after 1885 to the amount from taxation of £1,700,000 a year. No "fraud" had been practised by the fellaheen—no "stain" attached to their claim. But how was it treated in comparison with the others? A European claim of about £100,000,000, representing a real payment of say £50,000,500, on which £34,000,000 had already been paid, was satisfied by the payment of 4 per cent. on the claim, and about 8 per cent. on the cash, in perpetuity. The native claims for a revenue of £1,700,000 from 1885 onwards, for which from £10,000,000 to £17,000,000 had been paid in cash, and on which not a farthing had been received, was commuted for a payment of from 1 to 1½ per cent. on the cash, payable for only fifty years.

What has Professor Amos to say to this piece of evidence as to the motives of the British Government and the "suicidal" character of the part played by the bondholders? He does not deny, he does not explain, he does not defend it. But he says that some of the English and French officials would have done still worse if one particular English official had allowed them, and that the Egyptian peasants were despoiled not in the interests of the bondholders, but of the Egyptian revenue. That is to say, when the whole financial system of Egypt was put into commission by the Europeans, they first laid hold of the uncompromised taxes to satisfy the claims of the bondholders, and then instituted a shameless act of spoliation to supply revenues for the internal administration.

"Save me from my friends," must surely be the cry of many a bondholder and placeholder who reads Professor Amos's defence.

On one point only Professor Amos makes out a fair case for further investigation. Mr. Keay lays great stress on what he calls the "municipal character of the Egyptian decrees concerning the liquidation. He maintains that Egypt never entered into international engagements at all. The point is of considerable, though not of primary, importance; and Professor Amos hotly contests it. It is a rather technical question, and perhaps after all—to use a phrase employed by Professor Amos elsewhere—"belongs to the delicacies of diplomacy, not to the realities of politics." It is enough to note on the one hand that the Egyptians always declared that they would abide by the terms of the law of liquidation, and on the other hand that Professor Amos himself implicitly raises the question whether Egypt was constitutionally capable of entering upon international engagements in such a matter at all, seeing that she is but a province of the Ottoman Empire. We merely refer to the matter lest we should seem to ignore a point on which Professor Amos really has something (though nothing conclusive) to say.

Want of space compels us to refrain from pointing out in detail how the strength of Professor Amos's attack varies in inverse ratio to the importance of the position he assails. How he is compelled to substitute what he chooses to suppose Mr. Keay intends to insinuate for what he actually says (and what simple-minded persons like ourselves supposed him to mean), in order that he may have something to deny, and how completely he admits the damning facts of the "Tale of Shame."

P. H. W.

LEICESTER.—On Thursday week a presentation was made by the congregation of the Free Christian Church to their late choirmaster, Mr. H. Riley. The testimonial consisted, of a purse of gold and a handsomely bound volume of Arthur Sullivan's "Church Hymns," which bore the following inscription:—"Presented to Mr. Henry Riley, together with a sum of £18 10s., by the members and friends of the Free Christian Church, Leicester, in recognition of his valuable services to the congregation as choirmaster during the past sixteen years. Leicester, Oct. 12th, 1882." Appropriate speeches were made by the Rev. J. Moden, the minister, and others, who referred to the valuable work Mr. Riley had done, not only as leader of the choir, but also in connection with other institutions of the church, and to the warm esteem in which he was held by the whole congregation and many friends outside. The choir, under the direction of Mr. Hitchcock, rendered two anthems during the evening, the proceedings being brought to a close by the singing of "Abide with me."

* An account of this pamphlet was given in the Inquirer of Oct. 14th.

Occasional Notes.

"THE time when ministers scoffed and derided Darwin and his disciples," says the Christian Union, "has for ever passed." Not quite. There are still ministers and laymen among English Unitarians who scoff at Darwin, and think that Darwinism is essentially irreligious and atheistic. But the progress of thought goes on all the same.

It is stated that the Unitarians recently assembled in conference at Saratoga did not patronise the Sulphur Springs extensively; they are not fond of sulphur. A new illustration of the doctrine of the "Perseverance of the Saints" was, we are told, furnished by Governor Long, who presided the four days in which the Conference was in session, without once calling any one to the chair to relieve him. The perseverance of other saints on the last day, who so exercised the gift of tongues as to continue the session beyond train-time, alone prevented the presiding officer from declaring the Conference adjourned sine die.

THE Boston Herald (U.S.) says:—"It is related of Joseph Cook that when he was a boy he took a pile of books out into the fields, and became so absorbed that he forgot to come home to dinner. Joseph is now on his way back to Boston; won't somebody send him some books? Perhaps, if the pile is big enough, he may forget to come back." The Index hopes no one will act on the suggestion of the Herald, as Joseph Cook is needed in Boston. His presence there gives inspiration to the wit of the Boston press. The Index looks forward to his return, and will be greatly disappointed if he should fail to repeat his "incontrovertible facts."

THE REV. DR. PEABODY, of Harvard, who preached a few weeks ago in one of our metropolitan chapels, returned at the end of September from his European tour. The Christian Register writes:—"Though no longer preacher or instructor at Harvard, his personal influence at Cambridge will always be powerfully and graciously felt; and there are many students who will lean on him for direction and advice. Dr. Peabody has been something more than a university preacher; he has been a university pastor; and as long as he lives under the shadow of the University, students will not suffer this relationship to be severed."

THE REV. DR. NEWMAN SMYTH, whose very heterodox book we reviewed a few weeks ago, has successfully passed the ordeal of a Congregational Council at New Haven, and has been installed as pastor of the Centre Congregational Church of that city. His examination is reported as a searching one, from which he came off with flying colours, the Council agreeing to install him by a vote of thirty-three to one. This may indicate that the Council was very liberal or that Dr. Smyth was not so heterodox as has generally been supposed.

HERESY, however, has migrated from Andover to Newton, and invaded the Theological Seminary at that place. The teachings of Professor Gould, the able professor of New Testament Criticism, have become too liberal to harmonise with the more rigid Calvinism of his colleagues; and after a short but sharp contest Professor Gould has been invited to leave by a vote of thirteen to nine. It is strange, says the Christian Register, that a Baptist seminary is not willing to tolerate such fresh and enlightened scholarship as we are assured Professor Gould brings to his work. Harvard has now two Baptist professors in its Theological School, who are engaged not for their religious views, but for their eminent scholarship. It is unfortunate for Newton that it should not be willing to endure one of its own denomination who is admirably fitted to serve it.

In the course of a speech at Exeter lately the Lord Chancellor said, "It is, as nearly as possible, fifty years ago since I was one of an Oxford reading-party—a party of six students under the late Dean of Wells, of which another member was the present Archbishop of Canterbury. The reading party was assembled the first time

I came into this county at the neighbouring beautiful village of Seaton. I will not say I learned all I had intended to learn, but at least I began to learn to appreciate and to love Devonshire. It may, perhaps, interest some of you to hear that a Nonconformist minister of that place happened at the same time to be engaged in composing a poem on the beauties of his native village, and I suppose, there being a dearth of local subjects, he introduced our reading party. With a prophetic insight into the future, he bestowed upon one of the members of that party a mitre, upon another the ermine of a judge; and when I was first made Lord Chancellor, ten years ago, the present Archbishop of Canterbury reminded me of that party. I am sorry to say that the prophet is forgotten in his own country, for when we were at Seaton the other day we endeavoured to find him, but he was not to be found." Our venerable friend the Rev. James Taplin, in a very interesting communication to the Devon Weekly Times, throws some light upon the fortunes, or rather misfortunes, of this long-forgotten poet. He tells the following melancholy story:—"The poet has been in his unknown grave for more than two score years, a pauper's grave in the village churchyard, unmarked by stone or wood, and now 'uncoffin'd and unknown.' The writer of this knew his early beginning, with his antecedents, and befriended him in the days of his distress. He was a Nonconformist minister, educated at a Congregational college, a man of good culture and a great genius. He left the Congregational Connexion about the years 1816 or 1817, and became minister of an infant Unitarian congregation at Reading, Berkshire. His name was John Smith. He subsequently removed to Maidstone, where unpleasant differences occurred between himself and certain members of the church, which caused him to remove into Devon, where he was elected as minister of George's Meeting, Colyton. Here he remained for two years, when dissensions arose, chiefly from his strange erratic habits and irritable disposition. Being expelled from the pulpit, he took up his abode at Seaton, intending to devote himself to literary pursuits. The writer of this, strongly sympathising with his position, ministered to his frequent wants, aided by a generous and excellent lady, who paid for the publication of his first volume of poetry, entitled 'Seaton Beach,' to which Lord Selborne referred, giving him the pecuniary advantage of its sale. He was in great poverty while at Seaton, and has been known to feed for days, with a wife and child, on the sea-weed which he gathered on the rocks and boiled for a meal, sometimes with and sometimes without bread. He also published an account of Rattenbury, the great smuggler of Beer, the Rob Roy of Devon, which was a clever production, and had a wide circulation."

MR. GEORGE MACDONALD, the novelist, in a lecture at the Weigh House Chapel, last Tuesday evening, on Tennyson's poetry, spoke of "In Memoriam" as the real utterance of the heart of our time. Tennyson, when his friend Arthur Hallam died, was assailed with a great and terrible doubt as to a "hereafter." His faith gave way for a time. Then his soul began to pour itself out in the saddest song, broken here and there by a few notes of melody—the "In Memoriam." Now there was no man who spoke more strongly for immortality than did Mr. Tennyson.

WHAT are those of the clergy to do who are accustomed to look up to their bishops as almost infallible authorities on points of faith and doctrine when the right reverend fathers differ so widely among themselves? On Tuesday, for example, the Bishop of Liverpool, preaching at the consecration of a church at Southport, thanked God for what the Salvation Army had done in having been the means of plucking the roughest and most degraded from the burning. The Salvation Army had reached those who had not hitherto been reached. On the other hand, the Bishop of Peterborough, speaking at a visitation at Leicester the same day, expressed himself almost contemptuously of the same movement, contending that those who made attraction of masses depend on sensational accompaniments of religion would find they had debased and degraded religion to little purpose. If they could only attract masses by irreverence and such extravagance they had better begin by burning their Bibles. In that book was no irreverence, no slang, no profanity, and while it recorded the success of the greatest mission ever held, and the conversion of prizefighters, gladiators, and most abandoned outcasts of the day, the conversion was effected without profanity or irreverence.

By the way, why is a bishop's visit to his diocese always called a "visitation," the word usually being applied to a "special dispensation of divine wrath or vengeance," a "retributive calamity or trouble?"

WE learn from the Christian World that at the Congregational Union at Bristol the Rev. Edward White, so well-known as the advocate of the "Conditional Immortality" theory, was as amusing, caustic, and illogical as usual. He laughed at the scientific men who believed in evolution, poured scorn on those critics of the Scripture text who, like Professor Robertson Smith, consider that Deuteronomy was not written in the Egyptian desert, but at a much later age of Jewish history, and then specified as a potent influence tending to promote unbelief, "the spirit of intolerant orthodoxy." Some of his hearers imagined, adds the Christian World, that during the earlier and greater part of his speech he was himself manifesting that spirit with a vengeance; for if men like Professor Smith and Dr. Abbott are to be discredited and scorned, there can be no free and honest literary criticism of the Bible books at all. It is vain to glorify the critics of past ages, while refusing to do honour to their equally reverent and more able successors.

In his "Valedictory" to the readers of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. John Morley refers to the "pressure of time of his own imposing," under which the late Professor Clifford often did his work, and as an instance of the intensity of that pressure, we are told that "a paper of his on the 'The Unseen Universe,' which filled eighteen pages of the Review, was composed at a single sitting, that lasted from a quarter to ten in the evening till nine o'clock the following morning." No doubt Professor Clifford did not come to his task without previous thought on the subject, but it may be doubted whether it did not deserve something more than a twelve hours' consumption of midnight oil. Brilliant as may have been the iconoclasm, one cannot help feeling that it was superficial when we read of an article on such a subject being dashed off in this style.

POOLE.—On Sunday last special harvest thanksgiving services were conducted by the Rev. F. Teasdale Reed, who in the morning preached a very appropriate sermon from the words "The eyes of all wait upon Thee," and in the evening delivered a very able exposition of the parable of the Good Samaritan. The attendance at both services was encouraging. The church had been prettily decorated for the occasion with fruit, flowers, and appropriate inscriptions.

MAIDSTONE.—On Thursday evening, October 12, the Rev. E. Ceredig Jones, M.A., minister of Earlstreet Chapel, presented Mr. R. T. Nicholson with a handsome gold watch, on behalf of the Sunday-school, the choir, and some of the members of the congregation, as a token of their esteem and appreciation of his valuable services in connection with the various church institutions. In the course of his address Mr. Jones referred in feeling terms to his young friend's approaching departure for University College, Oxford, where he is going to pursue his studies as an external student of Manchester New College, and spoke of the zeal and earnestness with which he had devoted himself to his high vocation, and the promise he had already given of a successful ministry by the excellent abilities he had displayed while conducting the monthly services for young people. He also mentioned the interesting fact that three of the special hymns sung at the chapel on the previous Sunday had been composed by his friend. Mr. Nicholson acknowledged the gifts in a touching speech, in which he reviewed his connection with the church, and the pleasure and profit he had derived therefrom. Addresses were also delivered by Miss Raiton, Mr. F. W. Ruck, Mr. A. M. Ruck, and Mr. E. Weeks. At the close of the proceedings one of Mr. Nicholson's hymns was sung.

Reviews.

In Christ; or, the Believer's Union with his Lord. By A. J. Gordon, D.D. Author of the Mystery of Healing. London: Hodder and Stoughton. 1882.

The title of this small volume sufficiently indicates what its subject is. It consists of ten short essays, reviewing the Christian's relation to Christ. The first is introductory, the nine following take up the subject in this order:—Crucifixion in Christ, Resurrection in Christ, Baptism into Christ, Life in Christ, Standing in Christ, Prayer in Christ, Communion in Christ, Sanctification in Christ, Glorification in Christ. The book will doubtless be acceptable to those—a very large number—with whom Jesus Christ is the Alpha and Omega of religious faith, hope, trust, and blessing.

It is saturated with the sentiment of the Christian's indebtedness to Christ in every relation of life. Thus in the first essay we read:—"Nothing is more striking than the breadth of application which this principle of union with Christ has in the gospel. Christianity obliterates no natural relationships, destroys no human obligations, makes void no moral or spiritual laws. But it lifts all these up into a new sphere, and puts upon them this seal and signature of the gospel in Christ. So that while all things continue as they were from the beginning, all, by their re-adjustment to this divine character and person, become virtually new. Life is still of God, but it has this new dependency in Christ, 'of Him are ye in Christ Jesus.' The obligation to labour remains unchanged, but a new motive is given to it by its relation to Christ. 'Forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.' The marriage relation is stamped with this new signet, 'Only in the Lord.' Filial obedience is exalted into direct connection with the Son of God. 'Children obey your parents in the Lord.' Daily life becomes 'a good conversation in Christ.' Joy and sorrow, triumph and suffering, are all in Christ. Even truth, as though needing a fresh baptism, is viewed henceforth 'as it is in Jesus.' Death remains, but it is robbed of its sting and crowned with a beatitude, because in Christ 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.'"

This passage will suffice to indicate the tone and spirit of the book. It illustrates how completely the popular Orthodoxy puts Jesus in the place of God; and justifies itself by teaching the doctrine of the Incarnation. Here there is a broad difference between the Orthodox and the Unitarians. The latter keep clear the distinction between Christ and God, and the blessings which come from Jesus they ascribe to him mediately as the instrument or channel through whom they were communicated from God—his God and our God—to mankind. The popular Orthodoxy makes the medium the original source, and so doing gives the glory of God unto another. We cannot speak of Christ as the author of this book does: it would be inconsistent for us to do so. Not that we do not reverence him, and honour him, and estimate highly his life teaching and character, but that we do this in a spirit different from that of the popular theology. We believe that the great object of Christ's mission was to lead men in trust and penitence to God, who sent him, and that it is a perversion of his mission and work to exalt him in the place of God, and represent him as the end, the goal of all religious trust and aspiration. This in our judgment is the capital error of Orthodoxy. And so deeply is the popular mind pledged to that error that any different view is at once stigmatised as dishonouring to Christ and as infidelity. The prevailing tenor of Christ's teaching in the Gospels leads us to the Father as the fountain of all blessing, wisdom and might, and to do his will as the one condition of salvation. It is also the tenor of the Gospel teaching that Christ derived all his gifts of authority, wisdom and power from the Father, and therefore did not possess them by any inherent right of his own. They were bestowed upon him by God, and he was ever faithful in their use. Our gifts are also derived from the same source, and Jesus is an example to us of the fidelity to God and duty with which they should be employed. On this simple ground Christian Unitarianism takes its stand and claims to have on its side the teaching of Christ in the largest and broadest sense.

A devout spirit pervades this volume, and it is written in a chaste and simple style, but its strongly pronounced Orthodoxy will make it acceptable only to those who cling to the traditional faith. In illustration of this point we add one more quotation:—

"The whole course of the divine life is from Christ to self, and not from self to Christ. To begin an expiation in one's own sufferings, hoping that it may end in fellowship and union with Christ's sufferings, is not only to transpose, but completely to vitiate the order of grace. There is nothing of ours, soul, body, or spirit, that is without blemish. And when we understand that our very tears need themselves to be washed in the blood of the Redeemer, and our very penitence to be sanctified in his exceeding sorrow, we shall gladly turn wholly to the perfect offering. And so from that reliance on penance and mortification, which, however sincere, is an obtrusion of self into that realm of sacrifice which Christ alone can fill; and from that searching in a bruised conscience for peace, which, however honest, is but an attempt to discover in self that sin offering which can only be found in the bleeding Lamb of God, how gratefully we turn to Christ crucified as our only true resting place for comfort! 'Let me know that I have repented enough and suffered enough' is the voice of a faith that is still in bondage to law. 'Let me hear that Christ died in the stead of sinners, of whom I am chief,' is the voice of a faith that is free. That he was forsaken of God during these fearful agonies, because he had taken my place; that on his cross I paid the penalty of my guilt. Let me hear, too, that his blood cleanse from all sin, and that I may now appear before the bar of God, not only pardoned, but innocent. Let me realise the great mystery of the reciprocal substitution of Christ and the believer, or rather this perfect unity, be in them and they in him, which he has expressly taught; and let me believe that I was in effect crucified on Calvary and that he will in effect stand before the throne in my person; his the penalty, mine the sin; his the shame, mine the glory; his the thorns, mine the crown; his the merit, mine the reward. Verily, thou shalt answer for me, O Lord, my Redeemer. In thee do I put my trust, let me never be confounded."

Or, as the writer puts it in another place:—"He (Christ) holds us in himself, and presents us to the eye of the Father, bright in the shining vestments of his own righteousness, and rich with the dowry of his blood-bought merit."

We leave this to speak for itself. Those who approve this teaching will find more of it in the volume before us; those who do not will have had sufficient in the extracts given above.

C. F. B.

The Modern Review, James Clarke and Co.

If the October number of this valuable Review does not interest us so much as it ought we fear that it will only argue want of due appreciation on our part. But in truth we are so spoiled by the ample banquet spread out before us in the three principal monthly Reviews that we are surfeited by the time we come to the ponderous Quarterlies, and our intellectual appetite can only be stimulated by provision of the daintiest and richest sort. It is no use disguising the fact that while the new number has articles which will be prized by various classes of thinkers it fails to move lightly and gracefully over the restless sea of modern thought.

Dr. W. B. Carpenter's Sion College address on "Evolution in its Relation to Theism," and Professor Upton's fine philosophical paper on "Spinoza," seem to us the most valuable in this number; Mr. Russell Martineau's review of "Dr. Kuenen's Hibbert Lectures," and Dr. E. A. Abbott's "Justin's Use of the Fourth Gospel," are the most learned; Mr. Alx. Gordon's delicate piece of literary criticism on the authorship of "Musica Ecclesiastica," the work better known as the "De Imitatione Christi," and Mr. Frank Walters's "Hamlet and the Tempest; a Shakesperian Contrast," are to us at least the most interesting. Miss L. S. Bevington's allegory entitled "The Image of Truth," seems to us a feeble rhapsody, cumbrous and incoherent, altogether unworthy of a place in the Modern Review; and finally, Mr. Channing's Letter to the Editor on "R. W. Emerson," explaining why he did not write an article on his late friend, while it is interesting, like everything that comes from that pen, is more suitable for the columns of a newspaper than for a Review, and only calls attention to the fact that an article on Emerson should have appeared. We miss also articles on "Natural Religion" and "Mozley's Reminiscences," the two most remarkable books of the season, for which two at least of the present articles might easily have been postponed; while the Allegory might well have been suppressed altogether. Still we are thankful for what we have, and readily acknowledge that the Modern keeps up its reputation for refined scholarship, even if it fails to attain the popularity and extended influence of the great monthlies.

Dr. W. B. Carpenter's extremely instructive address was delivered, by request, as a reply to one previously delivered by the President of Sion College, before Darwin's death, and it may be taken as a sequel to the same writer's biographical essay on the "Life and Work of Darwin" in the July number. The writer's main purpose is to show that the general and accepted doctrine of Cosmical Evolution applies also to Biological Evolution. He vindicates the principle from theological opposition and misrepresentation, and in a fine passage expresses his conviction that "the true genius of Protestantism is now coming to be recognised as consisting in its protest against any infallible authority whatever; in its cordial welcome to every truth of science or criticism which has been accepted by the general voice of those most competent to decide upon its claims." It would occupy too much of our space to analyse the article, and we can only call attention to one of many interesting passages in which the learned doctor, after stating it as a simple matter of fact that "the very highest grade of humanity is only attained by a process of continuous evolution from the very lowest and simplest," proceeds as follows:—

"If, then, we have to trace back our own ancestry to a primeval type now represented by races whose limited capacity makes them incapable of receiving any culture much higher than their own (save through an education prolonged through many generations), why should we shrink from attributing to these last the ancestry to which their bodily and mental organisation distinctly points? And why should we assume, in the case of Man, a special creative exertion of Divine power, when everything points to a continuity of the same original plan of action, that has previously manifested itself in the progressive evolution of the highest Mammal from the primordial jelly-speak?"

"To myself the conception of a continuity of action which required no departure to meet special contingencies, because the plan was all-perfect in the beginning, is a far higher and nobler one than that of a succession of interruptions, such as would be involved in the creation de novo of the vast series of new types which Palæontological study is daily bringing to our knowledge. And in describing the process of evolution in the ordinary language of Science, as due to 'secondary causes,' we no more dispense with a First Cause than we do when we speak of those Physical Forces which, from the Theistic point of view, are so many diverse modes of manifestation of one and the same Power. Nor do we in the least set aside the idea of an original Design, when we regard these adaptations which are commonly attributed to special exertions of contriving power and wisdom as the outcome of an all-comprehensive intelligence which foresaw that the product would be 'good,' before calling into existence the germ from which it would be evolved. We simply, to use the language of Whewell, 'transfer the notion of design and end from the region of facts to that of laws,' that is, from the particular cases to the general plan, and find ourselves aided in our conception of the infinity of creative not wisdom and power, when we regard it as exerted in a manner which shows that not only the peopling of the globe with the plants and animals suited to every phase of its physical conditions, but the final production of man himself—the heir of all preceding ages, with capacities that enable him to become but 'a little lower than the angels'—was comprehended in the original scheme."

In addition to the articles we have mentioned above, there is a note by the Rev. Professor Sayce on "The Origin of the Term Jehovah," in reply to the Rev. T. Tyler; and the number concludes with "Notices of Books," by Messrs. P. H. Wicksteed, R. A. Armstrong, R. B. Drummond, and others.

Literary Notes.

IN the October number of the Edinburgh Review is an article on "Shelley and Mary," containing important documents from the Shelley Papers which present in a new light some incidents in the life of the poet.

MR. DAVID BOGUE will shortly commence the publication of a series of original biographical handbooks entitled "Eminent Women." This series, to be issued under the editorship of Mr. John H. Ingram, will be written entirely by women, and is to be devoted to short but comprehensive biographies of women eminent for their genius, virtues, actions, or associations. The works which have already been arranged for are not compiled from existing publications, but are chiefly based upon original unpublished material, and are therefore likely to prove of permanent and more than ordinary interest. The earlier volumes of the series will include "George Eliot," by Miss Mathilde Blind; "Emily Brontë," Miss Mary Robinson; "George Sand," by Miss Bertha Thomas; "Mary Lamb," by Mrs. Gilchrist; and "Maria Edgeworth," by Miss Helen Zimmern.

MR. PHIL ROBINSON, the author of "In my Indian Garden," &c., has in the press the first volume of a work on the "Natural History of the British Poets." The first volume is called "The Birds of the Poets," and contains copious quotations from the poets from Chaucer to Wordsworth, with critical and humorous comments. Messrs. Chatto and Windus publish it. Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. are bringing out another work of Mr. Robinson's, detailing his experiences among the Mormons in the early part of this year. His account is said to be highly favourable to the people of Utah.

MR. ROBERT LANGTON, of Manchester, announces the publication of "The Childhood and Youth of Charles Dickens." The book will be extensively illustrated from original drawings, &c.

UNDER the title of "Heart Chords" Messrs. Cassell and Co. will publish a series of volumes by well-known divines intended to stimulate, guide, and strengthen the Christian life. The contributors to the series will include Bishop Cotterill, Dean Montgomery, Dean Bickersteth, Dean Edwards, Dean Boyle, Canon Farrar, Canon Boyd Carpenter, Professor Blaikie, &c.

COLLECTORS and students of the history of art in England will be glad to learn that it is the intention of the Royal Academicians to reprint and publish, with indexes prepared under the direction of Mr. Eaton, Secretary to the Academy, the whole of the catalogues of the exhibitions of the body from the first to a comparatively late period. This reprint will be sold at a price sufficient to pay the expenses of the undertaking, not more.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, AND Co. are about to publish a cheap edition of the illustrated re-issue of Gilpin's "Forest Scenery," edited with notes bringing it up to date by Mr. F. G. Heath, author of "Autumnal Leaves." It is a curious fact that the existence of the third edition of "Forest Scenery," which was revised by Gilpin himself, and which forms the text of Mr. Heath's reprint, was unknown to Sir Thomas Dick Lauder, first editor of this famous work, and there is no copy of it even in the British Museum.

THE proposal, originally made by Mr. Thackeray, that a memorial should be erected to Fielding has lately assumed a definite shape. Mr. Arthur Kinglake, having received sufficient promises of support to justify the step, has commissioned Miss Margaret Thomas, the sculptor of the marble bust of Somerville, recently placed in the shire-hall at Taunton, to execute a fitting memorial to the great novelist. The work, when completed, is to be placed in the same building with that of Somerville.

MR. EDMUND GOSSE, whose recent volume on "Gray" in the "English Men of Letters" series has been so favourably received, has undertaken for Messrs. Macmillan and Co. a complete edition of Gray's writings, the first that has ever been attempted.

ARRANGEMENTS are already being made for the sixth international congress of Orientalists, which is to be held next year at Leiden. The date fixed is from September 10 to 16. The local committee of organisation is thus constituted:—President, Professor Dozy; vice-president, Professor Kuenen; secretaries, Professors de Goeie and Tiele; treasurer, Professor Pleyte. Is there one of our English Universities, the Academy asks, that could show names so distinguished in every branch of Oriental learning as this little Dutch town?

MESSRS. TRUBNER AND Co. will publish before Christmas a new poem by Mr. Edwin Arnold, entitled "Pearls of the Faith; or, Islam's Rosary"; being "The Ninety-Nine Beautiful names of Allah," with comments in verse. This poem, or rather series of poems, professes to be the utterances of an Indian Mussulman respecting the life and religion of Mohammed by means of legends, records, and traditions of Islam, as in "The Light of Asia" Buddha's life and doctrine were treated from the standpoint of an Indian Buddhist.

THE volume of "Studies in Philosophy," which Mr. W. L. Courtney, of New College, Oxford, will shortly publish with Messrs. Rivington, treats of the following subjects: Ancient Idealism—Parmenides; Ancient Hedonism—Epicurus; the Failure of Berkeley's Idealism; a Chapter in the History of the Word "Cause"; the New Psychology; the New Ethics; "Back to Kant"; Kant as a Moralist and as a Logician; the Hegelian Religion. It will be seen that Mr. Courtney is not afraid to touch some of the burning questions of the day.

THE one authentic likeness of Auguste Comte, a portrait by the sculptor Etex, has recently been the subject of judicial proceedings in France. Comte's widow, who died in 1877, bequeathed this portrait to M. Wyruboff, who though editor of the Revue Positiviste, is not a member of the strict sect of Positivists. Thereupon M. Laffitte, Comte's own executor and the recognised directeur of the Positivists, disputed M. Wyruboff's right. The Court at that time decided that the portrait should be delivered to neither, but remain in the custody of Madame Comte's legal representative. That gentleman, however, is now dead; and the matter has again come up for legal decision. On this occasion the right to possession has been awarded to M. Laffitte. The bust, therefore, will now be placed in the house Rue Monsieur-le-Prince, No. 10, in which Comte died in 1857, and which has ever since been religiously preserved by his disciples as their headquarters.

A MEMOIR of the late Canon Pearson, of Sonning, is in preparation.

THE article "Malta" in the next volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica has been entrusted to Miss Toulmin Smith.

A NEW novel by Mrs. Oliphant, entitled "The Wizard's Son," will be begun in the November number of Macmillan's Magazine.

THE Academy regrets to hear that Dr. Schliemann, who has recently been on a visit to Paris, has not yet shaken off the malarious fever contracted in the Troad. He hopes, however, to return to his home at Athens by the end of this month. His forthcoming work on the results of his excavations at Hissarlik last winter will be published simultaneously in English and in German. It will contain a chapter on "Trojan Ethnography," contributed by Mr. Karl Blind.

A COMPLETE re-arrangement of the pictures and sculpture in the National Portrait Gallery has been resolved on, and will be commenced forthwith.

GORTON.—A pleasant re-union of the teachers, scholars, and congregation of Brookfield Church was held on Saturday evening last to bid welcome to the lady whom the pastor, the Rev. Dendy Agate, B.A., has recently taken to wife. While they were on their tour it had been determined by the teachers and scholars that the happy event should not be allowed to pass unmarked, and the requisite sum of money having been readily subscribed, a splendid drawing-room clock was secured as a gift to Mrs. Agate, while at the same time the scholars of his class purchased a beautiful writing case and inkstand for presentation to Mr. Agate. On Saturday these presentations took place. Colonel Peacock (in the absence of his father, Mr. R. Peacock) occupied the chair, being supported by the Revs. S. A. Steintal, of Manchester; W. Mitchell, of Longsight; and L. Scott, of Denton; and Mr. Charles Heywood of Longsight. The choir also occupied seats on the platform, and Mr. C. H. Wrigley presided at the piano. The presentations were made by the chairman in a suitable manner, and was appropriately acknowledged by Mr. Dendy Agate. Other addresses followed from the gentlemen above named.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

[The following address on "The Influence of Science on the Progress of Religious Thought" was delivered before the Unitarian Congress at Saratoga, on Sept. 19, by William B. Carpenter, M.D., F.R.S.:—]

MR. President, my sisters and brothers,—Called by your courtesy to take this early part in the proceedings of your great meeting, I cannot but feel that this call has been very much due to the name I have the honour to bear. It is not only on account of what I myself have been able to do in science and in education, but it is as the son of Lant Carpenter, the friend of Greenwood, of Tuckerman, of Channing, of Henry Ware, of Andrews Norton, and of others with whom my youthful recollections are strongly associated, and as the brother of Mary Carpenter, whose name is known to you as one of the foremost among the philanthropists of her time, that I am now invited to address you. When it was kindly left to myself to choose a subject for this address, I felt that I could most fitly select one that would rise naturally out of my own half-century's work as a student, as a learner, as a teacher, and as a labourer in the domain of science, because throughout that time my thoughts have constantly been directed to the relation of scientific progress to religious inquiry. As one who may now be considered in some degree a veteran in this service I have thought that some of the results of that consideration might be fitly offered to an assembly like this, and might present in some respects a pleasant variation from those other lines of thought and feeling which such addresses as that of my friend Mr. Page Hopps would be likely to follow. As your own Emerson has so well said, "Thought moves the world"; and I so constantly see the influence of scientific thought in extending, modifying, and elevating religious thought, and in breaking down those barriers to which Mr. Hopps so eloquently alluded, that I cannot but feel it to be our special business, as a perfectly free-thinking body, to make every use and every application of scientific thought that our intelligence and culture may bring within our reach.

Now, what do we mean by science? Science I regard as the intellectual interpretation of nature, as distinct from the poetic or the artistic interpretation, each of which has its own especial field. The man of science (whatever his particular department of research) studies the phenomena of nature with senses rendered acute by habits of observation, aided by instruments capable of revealing to him what his unaided senses do not allow him to discern. He brings to that study perceptive powers trained to accurate appreciation of the indications of his senses, and of the instruments by which those senses are, so to speak, perfected and extended. He then applies to those perceptions the reasoning powers cultivated and disciplined by careful training, for the construction of a fabric of thought upon the basis of the facts which he has observed.

Now, the first consideration that I would bring before you is the vast extension of our religious conceptions which science has given us. I need not go over ground which is familiar, I presume, to all of you. I need not discuss the revelations of the telescope, the certain information which we have gained, not only as to the vast numbers, but as to the vast distances of the celestial bodies—information which gives us the nearest approach to the conception of infinity that our finite minds are capable of receiving. It was said by a great thinker, at a time when we seemed to have come pretty nearly to the end of what we could learn from the telescope alone, that its revelations enabled reason to soar into heights where the imagination could scarcely venture to follow. I think you must feel the truth of this remark; but I would now ask you to follow me to a still greater height, by tracing a few of the steps in the progress of that most remarkable inquiry which the invention of a totally new instrument, brought to a remarkable degree of perfection within the last quarter century, has enabled the scientific investigator to carry out, this inquiry having been prosecuted by the application of the strictest and severest scientific reasoning to the inductions given by the spectroscopic. If any one, a quarter of a century ago, had ventured to assert that within twenty-five years from that time we should be able to study the chemical and physical conditions of every body that the telescope can render visible with the highest powers possible to use, that we should be able to follow by its means the actual progress of that great evolution of the physical universe which is now regarded as beyond the reach of discussion, every one would have believed him a dreamer. Yet during those years, that which you remember as the nebular hypothesis has passed into the condition of an approved and accepted theory.

It chanced to me not long ago to be present at a clerical meeting in London, at which the writer of a paper spoke of the nebular hypothesis as one that we never hear discussed now; the difficulties attending it were so great that scientific men had put it aside. I was called upon to speak with reference to this subject; and I ventured to suggest that this reverend gentleman must have lived in a cave during the last thirty years, and that he was now in the condition of Rip Van Winkle, for the reason that he did not hear this theory discussed was simply because it had passed beyond the reach of discussion. It is a thing perfectly well established and settled, not in all its details, as conceived by LaPlace, but as regards its general features.

What does this mean? It gives us the conception of a creation not finished and completed, but one which is always going on, which has been going on from the time when there was but one diffused fire-mist. It gives us a distinct conception of a beginning, for it is inconceivable that there should have been an infinite existence of matter in any shape except in a condition of perfect homogeneity. If thus perfectly homogeneous, it would have remained in the same condition through all eternity. The moment a departure from that state takes place change begins the great evolution. What could have produced this change but the will and power to disturb that homogeneity? There must have been a beginning, and the work of creation has since been going on through all time as a continuous act. We can now study by the spectroscope not only the birth of worlds, but the ages of worlds—the ages of the various members of our planetary system. We can, for instance, say with regard to Jupiter and Saturn that they are still in an early stage of evolution. We used to be taught that Jupiter is no heavier than water and Saturn as light as cork, and we used to surmise what could be the material of these globes. We could not suppose Saturn was made of cork, but could only speculate what were the materials of which these planets are formed, and whether they correspond in any degree with those of our own globe. We now know that they do. We know that the question of their relative specific gravities is the question of their degree of consolidation, and that on their respective degrees of consolidation is their ability to sustain organic life. There have been many books written on the question, "Are there more worlds than one?" We can now say with certainty that Mars, and probably Venus, do more or less correspond to our own earth, while Jupiter and Saturn are not yet in that condition; and that the moon, on the other hand, having cooled more rapidly, after passing through that consolidation, is now, in her old age, like dried up scoriæ of extinct volcanoes.

These are facts of science, and I think you must feel that they tend in a most remarkable degree to the extension and elevation of our religious thought. These processes are going on with grand uniformity of sequence, in the vast depths of space, in every aggregation of matter that the telescope can discern.

The Unity of Creation is the great fundamental idea which all science tends to establish. You are all familiar with the first great extension of that idea, from the terrestrial to the celestial, in that identification of the attraction of the earth for the moon, and of the sun for the planets, with the attraction of the earth for the stone that falls upon it, which was made by the genius of Newton, and with the subsequent extension of that idea to the stellar universe, which has been made by the study of the motions of the double stars, which have been found to follow the law of universal gravitation. We now find the same unity of composition and the same manifestation of continuous orderly sequence in the process of consolidation.

And so completely has this idea of continuity now taken possession of the scientific mind of the day that several of our ablest physicists consider it the better method of studying the history of the evolution of our system to work backwards from its present condition; and, beginning with the action of the sun and moon in the production of the tides, to investigate the effect which this must have had during the earlier periods of their history, in the determination of the present rates of axial and orbital movement of the earth and moon.

These general considerations lead us to geological inquiry—that is, to the history of our earth since the first formation of its solid crust—and give a new and most interesting direction to that study.

No one now questions that the earth has cooled down from a molten sphere, a condition like that which Jupiter and Saturn will present when they shall have shrunk by consolidation—we cannot say how many millions of years hence. They have not yet by any means arrived at the condition in which geology regards the earth as having commenced. Some idea of the vast lapse of time required for geologic change may be derived from simple observation (such as I have just had the opportunity of making for myself on the great chasm of Niagara) of operations that have been in progress during the latest phases of its history. The educated eye can there see with certainty the gradual attrition of the hard rock over which the great cataract flows; and, from the known rate of that attrition, it can be affirmed that at least thirty thousand years must have been required to scoop back that great chasm. That change has been probably made since man made his appearance on the earth. At any rate, since the general surface of that region took its present shape after the last considerable period of disturbance. I have had again the opportunity of seeing those most ancient mountains of your country, the Laurentian, the study of what I believe to be the first form of living existence contained in those rocks having been the special object that brought me on a visit to Montreal. There we are carried back to periods of time so remote that it is almost impossible to conceive them. The phenomena of geology are presented on so much grander scale in this great continent than in our country that our comparatively limited ideas have to receive an extension and enlargement, of which we had scarcely a conception. The researches of your Prof. Marsh in the earliest tertiary strata, or those which connect the chalk with the tertiary, bridge over one of those great gaps which former geologists were wont to consider the most marked epochs in geological history.

Prof. Marsh tells us that, in making these researches, strata were brought to light which have to be measured by the mile in thickness where we have them only a few hundred feet. Think of the enormous lapse of time involved in the deposition of that one formation, and think what the lapse of time was from the early elevation of those Laurentian mountains, the slow degradation of which formed those ancient paleozoic strata, over which I have been lately passing for hundreds of miles.

The ideas to which geological science thus introduces us in regard to the immense lapse of time required for the production of the long series of stratified deposits that form the crust of our globe, and to the continuity of the same methods of operation in that production, strongly imply identity of causation. Science determines the identity of physical causes and the continuity of their operation. Geological science no longer concerns itself with the great cataclysms which were once supposed to interfere with the orderly succession of formative processes—sweeping off the animals and plants of each period, and introducing a new series with each new group of mineral deposits. Geological science for many years has completely adopted the principle of continuity, and accepted it in its fullest entirety. There may have been more active changes at certain periods than at others, but there never has been a cessation of change. The same processes are in operation at the present time as when the Laurentian mountains were worn down by air and water, to supply the materials of the sedimentary strata at their base.

These facts have a direct bearing on religious thought in extending our ideas not only of the vastness of creation, but of the continuity of creative operation, and in leading us to those conceptions of order and system which strangely (to my mind) have led some to see in all this the result of blind necessity. Yet in every one of those great specimens, if I may use the term, of order and symmetry that are presented in the architecture of a beautiful building, in the successful operations of a well-disciplined and well-commanded army, in the admirable harmony of a well-directed orchestra, what is that but the result of plan, design? I have never much rested on any individual instances of design, as proving the purposive adaptation of means to ends. For I have seen too many instances of "chance" suitability (in the fitting of furniture to a house, for example) to allow me to feel that such an argument as Paley's could be rightly based on single incidents of adaptation. But my own mind rests with the greatest satisfaction on the great conceptions of order and uniformity to which we are led by geological science, and on these highest adaptations (as the human eye or the eye of the insect, each perfect in its kind) which have come into existence and attained perfection through a long series of antecedent changes.

One great object of the man of science is the discovery of laws which express these uniformities of nature. There is a certain set of scientific men who constantly speak of the laws of science as regulating phenomena. Against this expression I always utter my protest, fortified by the authority of such masters of the Logic of Science as Herschel, Mill, and Whewell, all of whom agree that a law, in the scientific sense, is nothing more nor less than an expression of the uniformities which science discerns in nature, without any controlling or coercive power whatever. It is only by a mistaken analogy that such expressions can be compared with the laws of a State. But even a law of the State does not govern. It is the power behind the law that governs, and the law is an expression of the will of that power. Any law of nature, as conceived by science, really expresses in human language the nearest approach that man can form to the ideas of the Creator. Kepler, that devoutest of men, when he discovered his great laws of planetary motion, rejoiced that he had been permitted to think the thoughts of God. It is the highest privilege of the religious scientific man to be able to believe that every step that he takes in giving a higher to the generality, a larger comprehensiveness to his expressions of the uniformities of nature, is leading him more and more to grasp the ideas of the Creator.

I come now to the scientific conception of force and power. It is not so many years ago that several of our ablest mathematicians and physicists were expressing every mechanical phenomenon in terms of motion, thus departing from the path marked out by Newton, who expressed them in terms of force. I am glad to say that, in this and other departments of physical science, men are now returning to the thought that it is in terms of energy or effective force that the phenomena of nature are to be best expressed. Modern science, moreover, grasps the idea of the unity of the forces of nature. There is not one force called electricity, another called heat, another chemistry. These are merely modes of expression of certain manifestations of the great energy of nature, which it is necessary to classify and arrange. All scientific men now accept the doctrine that energy is one, and that there is neither beginning nor cessation of its action.

The unity of the physical forces being thus the highest conception of science, I side with those who push their speculations as to physical causation to the utmost limit, and hold that nothing ought to check their perfect freedom in this kind of investigation, as long as it is based upon accurate data and carried on upon sound methods. For, after all, it can land us only in the conception of one force operating under a great variety of conditions, and in a statement of the law or general expression of the conditions under which that force acts. When we have attained that conception, science ends. It seems as if, in some directions, we are approaching a law of such generality as shall include even the law of gravitation in the same expression as other great laws of physics, and have a glimpse of the solution of Newton's great difficulty of action at a distance, without any intervening medium. We are like observers in a great mill, watching machines in motion and tracing all this motion to one common force coming by a shaft through the wall, that one shaft bringing in all the power that does this work. Whence that power? We have to go to the other side of the wall to find out its source, and we trace it to a steam-engine or a water-wheel; so that in each case it ultimately comes from the sun, because the fire that boils the water is maintained by the combustion of the coal that was formed by the light and heat of the sun in bygone ages, while the water of the water-wheel is pumped up by the solar heat of the present time. In physical science, we thus get to the sun as the source of all our "energy." But whence the light and heat of the sun? We go back to nebular matter and chemical change; and we frame the best theories we can to account for its maintenance, the most remarkable of which is that of Dr. Siemens, who conceives of the sun as a great self-feeding furnace, continuously regenerating itself.

Such ideas as these, while they constitute the life-blood of science, have a most important influence in the extension and elevation of religious thought.

Having dwelt so long upon this point, I must be brief in what remains. One of the most important of the influences of science on religion has been its emancipation from the trammels of authority. We all know what these trammels were in the Middle Ages. We know it was not merely the Church of Rome with its dogmata, but the support that the Church gave to the dogmata of Aristotle that was the great obstacle to progress. If I were to tell you now some of the conceptions that it would then have been heresy to question, you would be surprised that grown-up men and women could entertain notions so childish—such, for example, as that the planets must move in circles, because the circle was the most perfect figure. And when Kepler found that Mars and other planets moved in ellipses, he promulgated it with fear and trembling, lest the Church should proceed against him for violating Aristotle's theories. And when Galileo dared to assert that the weight of ten pounds would fall no faster than a weight of one pound, it was so far against the prevailing doctrine that he had to prove it by ascending the leaning tower of Pisa, and in the presence of all the professors of the university let fall these two weights simultaneously, which fell in the same time, according to his prediction. That was the first step in the emancipation of science. It was then clearly and definitely proved that the authority of Aristotle was no longer to be trusted; and since then thought has step by step gone forward.

Geological inquiry has been the last opponent of theological prejudice. It has happened, rather curiously, that this prejudice has been strongest in Protestant countries, perhaps stronger in Great Britain than elsewhere. Why? You all know that Roman Catholicism was not based upon the Bible. It was based on the authority of the Church. The Church undertook the explanation of the Bible, or of such parts of it as it chose to pronounce upon. But, when Luther and Calvin and Melancthon undermined the authority of the Roman Church they were not prepared to accept perfect freedom of thought. They felt that they must base their doctrines on authority; and they fell back on the Bible, and so, as Dr. Martineau has told, the early Protestantism was as much based on an infallible book as Catholicism on an infallible Church. We all know what that idea of the infallibility of Scripture has led to. We know how geology has had to fight its way inch by inch, especially in our country. I remember pretty nearly the whole history of the conflict, and I could tell you of most curious occurrences in connection with it.

Let me mention one of the last, which will strike you as most childish. You are familiar with a book of considerable value, Dr. W. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible. I happened to know the influences under which that dictionary was framed. The idea of the publisher and of the editor was to give as much scholarship, and such results of modern criticism, as should be compatible with a very judicious conservatism—(laughter). There was to be no objection to geology, but the universality of the deluge was to be strictly maintained. The editor committed the article "Deluge" to a man of very considerable ability; but, when the article came to him, he found that it was so excessively heretical that he could not venture to put it in. There was no time for a second article under that head; and, if you look in that dictionary, you will find under the word "Deluge" a reference to "Flood." Before "Flood" came, a second article had been commissioned from a source that was believed safely conservative. But when the article came in, it was found to be worse than the first. A third article was then commissioned, and care was taken to secure its "safety." If you look for the word "Flood" in the dictionary, you will find a reference to "Noah." Under that name you will find an article written by a distinguished Professor of Cambridge, of which I remember that Bishop Colenso said to me at the time, "in a very guarded way the writer concedes the whole thing." You will see by this under what trammels scientific thought has laboured in this department of inquiry.

The antiquity of man has had to fight its way, but no one now would venture to question that great truth. For a long time our English geologists were excessively conservative. Any man who would venture to question the accepted theories was told to be silent; and it was only when my friend Professor Prestwich, whose leanings were all in the other direction, brought forward as a thing beyond the reach of question the fact that in the gravels of the valley of the Somme flint instruments must have been deposited before the erosion of that river channel, and that there must have been an enormous lapse of time between the deposit of the upper and the lower gravels in which they are found, it was not until this was brought before the world in a form which could no longer be denied that the antiquity of man was granted. Then was brought up a mass of evidence which had been long accumulating, and the question was discussed until a conclusion was attained which no one now questions.

I might go through a number of such cases, but that one must suffice. This enfranchisement of thought is one of the greatest benefits that scientific progress has conferred upon religious inquiry.

Once more, I would say that one of the most important influences which science has exercised and is exercising is the cultivation of the love of truth for its own sake. "Prove all things: hold fast that which is good," is the motto of every true scientific man—(applause). The readiness to confess error has been the characteristic of all our most eminent workers. I remember that, when Professor Liebig was taunted with a mistake he had made, he replied, "Show me a man who has made no mistake, and I will show you one who has never worked." Every man of genius who has opened up a new path of inquiry has, from the very nature of things, made mistakes in the early periods of his inquiries. It was inevitable that he should sometimes go upon a wrong track. How can a new and difficult country be explored, except by frequent divergence from the path that subsequent experience may prove to have been the best?

I could not point to any more notable exemplification of that attribute—the love of truth for its own sake—than was given in the life of the great man whom we have lately lost. With Charles Darwin, as Professor Huxley said, "the love of truth was the passion of his noble nature." And what has been the result? With a splendid carelessness of personal calumny and all selfish considerations, he simply followed on, step by step, his great inquiries. Nothing was too small or low for his investigation. The earth-worm was not too trivial a subject for his study. Nothing was too mean, nothing too remote from his scientific range of thought. Everything was brought in and combined by that wonderful philosophic power of assimilation which he possessed in a degree beyond any man of his time, perhaps of all time. What has been the result? I recently attended his funeral in Westminster Abbey along with, I may say, the greatest gathering of intellect that was ever brought together in our country. The whole of its long choir was crowded with those who had come together to do honour to his memory. From those most impressive solemnities in our great National Mausoleum, I went straight to the small gathering of the Council of our Unitarian Association, which happened to be held on the same afternoon in a back room of Essex-street, Strand. And there I ventured, with the assistance of my friend Mr. Channing, to formulate a resolution which should express the feeling of that Council on the occasion. It was a most congenial duty to be requested to convey that resolution to Mrs. Darwin, and to be able to add what might make it of special interest to her. The Darwin and Wedgwood families had been closely associated in early days, as free religious inquirers, with Priestley and Unitarianism. Charles Darwin's father was a seat-holder in the Unitarian chapel at Shrewsbury; and, though Charles Darwin was baptized in the Church, some of his brothers and sisters were baptized by the then minister of that chapel. Knowing this, I ventured to say to Mrs. Darwin that this resolution might come to her with the more interest as having been framed in immediate sequence to the services at the Abbey, and because it came from a body, however small, that had never been afraid of any truth whatever.

It was well said in an "orthodox" pulpit in Montreal, a few weeks ago, that the life of a scientific man, honestly devoted to the search for the true and the good, is in itself an eloquent sermon. "Every man who serves truth serves God, and the unconscious servants are often the truest servants of all." I claim that many of my scientific friends who are earnestly devoted to the cause of scientific truth are true servants of God, though they may not be consciously serving him, for they are all striving to promote that ultimate victory of knowledge over ignorance, of truth over error, of light over darkness, which is the greatest work of science. And it will be through the reflection of that light in religious thought that the highest influence of science will be ultimately exerted, by promoting that victory of good over evil, of right over wrong, which will constitute the real millennium of our race.

THE SARATOGA CONFERENCE REVIEWED.

The Christian Register of Boston, U.S., has an interesting article, reviewing the recent "National Conference of Unitarian and other Churches," from which we take the following passages:—

In spite of railroad accidents, political conventions, and overcrowded hotels, the National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches has held, at Saratoga, its tenth annual meeting with distinguished success. In many respects the Conference will be a memorable one. It was the largest in point of numbers and the longest in its duration that has ever been held, a gratifying indication of the interest that prevails in the aims, methods, and ideas it illustrates. The papers read were of a high order of ability, earnest, thoughtful, suggestive, hopeful, and stimulating. The discussions were brisk, free, breezy, ardent, but broad and catholic in spirit. Business was despatched with commendable promptness. The devotional meetings were well supported. The missionary meetings were thronged. The social opportunity, one of the grand privileges of the Biennial Conference, was richly enjoyed. The Conference moved in no conventional rut. Party sutures produced no gaps. The Convention was knit together as by a common purpose. It was a genuine Unitarian Conference. The general unanimity was accented by a characteristic independence. The deliberations of the body were full of surprises, most of them of an exhilarating and grateful character. You could not tell from a man's antecedents just how he would speak or vote. Conservative and radical lines were beautifully blended or altogether rubbed out. If we had to put in three words the general tone and spirit of the Conference, we should say it was pre-eminently marked by breadth, earnestness, and courage. Its breadth was shown in the new plank it laid down to widen its constitutional platform, or to relieve it at least from further imputation of sectarian narrowness. Its earnestness was manifest in the close attention to business on hand, and the measures taken to lay out work for the future. Its courage was seen in the promptness with which the new article in the Constitution was adopted, and the firmness with which the Conference took a new step forward in declaring its position on the temperance question.

A NEW ARTICLE.

It was among the marked surprises of the session that the new article in the Constitution was passed without debate, and with only one dissenting voice. The Conference did not in the slightest abandon the Christian basis on which it was erected, but the new article is an interpretation of the constitution in the interest of the old Unitarian principles of Liberty and Love. While to many this new article may have seemed unnecessary, to others it was a grateful expression of the freedom of our fellowship. The article adopted is as follows:—

ART. 10. While we believe that the preamble and articles of our Constitution fairly represent the opinions of the majority of our churches, yet we wish distinctly to put on record our declaration that they are no authoritative test of Unitarianism, and are not intended to exclude from our fellowship any who, while differing from us in belief, are in general sympathy with our purposes and practical aims.

GREETING THE ENGLISH DELEGATES.

Before beginning his address, Mr. Hopps asked permission to discharge the duty that had been intrusted to him, of bringing the greetings and good wishes of the British and Foreign Association of London. Mr. Hopps said that he was also intrusted with a message of love and greeting from the counterpart of this Conference, the English National Conference, which held its first meeting in Liverpool last May. [Applause.] Mr. Hopps also read the following letters:—

The Members of the Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and the Neighbouring Counties assembled at Tamworth on the 31st of July, 1882, deputed their friend and brother Rev. J. Page Hopps to present their fraternal greetings to the delegates assembled at the Saratoga Conference and their hearty wishes for the success of the good cause which the Conference represents.

D. MAGINNIS, F.R.H.S.,

Secretary of the Monthly Meeting.

P.S.—The Monthly Meeting was established in 1782, and is engaged on arrangements for celebrating, this autumn, its centenary. It has numbered among its former members Revs. Dr. Priestley, Benjamin Carpenter, James Scott, J. Kentish, S. Bache, S. Hunter, John Gordon, Hugh Hutton. Among its present members are Revs. H. W. Crosskey, LL.D., Dr. Laird Collier, Charles Clarke, F.L.S., J. Robberds, George St. Clair, W. Carey Walters.

D. M.

Old Parsonage, Stourbridge,
August 10, 1882.

The Committee of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association are glad to take the opportunity of the visit of their fellow-worker, Rev. J. Page Hopps, to the Saratoga Conference, to convey to all those united to them by the common bond of liberal Christianity, there assembled, a cordial greeting from the Association, and their deep sympathy in the aims and work of the Conference.

ERNEST W. ENFIELD,

Hon. Sec. N. M. P. & U. A.

The reading of the letters was received with applause.

Dr. William B. Carpenter, F.R.S., of London, was next introduced amid great applause. His address upon the "Influence of Science on the Progress of Religious Thought" was warmly received. [The address is printed in full elsewhere.]

At the close of Dr. Carpenter's address Rev. Edmund B. Willson moved a vote of thanks to the English brethren from the other side of the sea, saying: "My words will not be taken as a mere formality. They cannot doubt from that most potent proof, the looks, the sometimes hushed listening, and the frequent hearty applause, how entirely they have spoken to our satisfaction. I am sure that we shall feel that their presence here, and still more their words, have signalled this meeting of the National Conference—(applause). The first of these two gentlemen made us feel that we are entirely competent, while the great world is waiting to settle whether it will include us or not, to turn around and include them. And, as we go on in this very large attempt, we may meantime, perhaps, take a look across at our English brethren, and begin there—(applause). I am sure I can say what you all feel, that we seem to find in them something so similar, so identical in mental operations, habits of view, anticipations, and visions that we do not see the difference, except that just now we sit very humbly at their feet as the best of teachers"—(applause). James Freeman Clarke seconded the motion. Having enjoyed the large hospitality of the Unitarian body in England, and having seen the good work being done there, he could hardly refrain, he said, from expressing his conviction of the importance of that work at the present time. He confessed that, previous to his recent visit to England, he had the notion that they were rather tied up to the discussions of theological questions and controversial matters, which notions all disappeared the moment he entered their assemblies. For, if there is any live activity and energy here, if there is any looking forward and not backward, if there is any devotion to practical work, that same spirit is as fully exercised by the Unitarians of England. There are young men there who, like Mr. Hopps, are engaged in doing every kind of practical work, bringing the working classes into the churches and helping on every measure for moral and social reform. In all the movements which have been so largely advanced in late years in behalf of temperance and education, in lifting up the downcast, the fallen, the forsaken, Mr. Clarke was glad to bear his testimony that the English Unitarians were doing a grand work—(applause).

The vote of thanks was unanimously passed, to which Dr. Carpenter replied:—"I thank you most cordially, my kind friends, for the welcome you have given me here, and the kindness with which you have listened to me during what, I fear, must have been a rather tedious address following upon those you have heard; but still, I venture to hope I may have left some thoughts with you or, as my friend Robert Chambers used to say, 'dibbled in a few ideas which may fructify at some future time.' If I have suggested any new thoughts, my task will be very well and effectually done."

Mr. Hopps also replied in a few words, expressing regret that he could not remain throughout the session of the Conference, but saying that he should take back pleasant and blessed memories of this country and of the dear friends he had made here.

The following resolutions were adopted:—

"Resolved: That the National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches of America here assembled send fraternal greeting to the 'Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and the Neighbouring Counties' of England on the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of that organisation. The labours and sacrifices of Priestley are not forgotten in America. Accept our hearty congratulations and God-speed, with the wish that another century may find this liberal organisation still young and thriving."

"Resolved: That the National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches now sitting at Saratoga cordially respond to the kindly and fraternal greeting of the North Midland Presbyterian and Unitarian Association, communicated most acceptably through the presence of the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and sends its best wishes for the success and perpetuity of the Association."

GENERAL CONCLUSION.

Not so brilliant as some former Conferences in discussion of great principles and theoretical problems, and lacking the potent eloquence of that hushed but not forgotten voice, Dr. H. W. Bellows, this session was eminently practical in its tone, catholic in spirit, intelligent in its deliberations, wise and earnest in its decisions. The most valuable of its results is that which is least reputable; the rekindled inspiration, the reawakened faith, and the creation of an invigorating atmosphere, at once natural, fraternal and devout.

ROTHERHAM: THE CHURCH OF OUR FATHER.—The yearly harvest festival services were held in the Church of our Father on Sunday. The pulpit, sedilia, communion table and rails, candelabras, and organ were all decked in very good taste with wheat, barley, oats, fern-frondage, camelias, gladioli, white, pink, and scarlet; trailing festoons of ivy relieving choice blossoms, pendant clusters of grapes, crowned with broad leaves fresh from the vine, and a magnificent pile of fruit in the centre of the font, fringed with moss and gracefully disposed foliage. Every seat, too, had its ornamentation of fern, ivy, and wheat ears. The services were conducted by Mr. C. L. Corkran (late domestic missionary in London), who preached two very excellent discourses. The attendances were large morning and evening, and good collections were made on behalf of the quarterly expenses of the church.

Our Contemporaries.

THE HIBBERT LECTURES.

The Athenæum, reviewing Professor Kuenen's recent lectures, writes:—

The main fault of the Hibbert Lectures is that they give opportunities for men who have already written much on some special religion merely to repeat in popular form ideas more elaborately worked out previously. M. Renan's addresses were simply a repetition of his previous books, often, indeed, consisting of a string of extracts from them. To Professor Kuenen, however, this need of stating in shorter compass the results of previous investigations has been a distinct advantage. As a writer his worst fault is prolixity; his fellow worker Professor Wellhausen contrasts favourably with him in this regard. The confined space in which he has been obliged to move in the Hibbert Lectures has undoubtedly concentrated his forces and given vividness to his outlines of Israel's religious development. The contrast between the popular and the prophetic conceptions of the religion of Yahweh, the ethical character of the latter, the stereotyping of Yahwism in the Law, are all sketched with a firm hand. The leading assumptions of the school of Graf have now become familiar to students of the Bible in this country, mainly owing to the éclat de scandale gained by the utterances of Mr. Robertson Smith. Whether they will stand the test of criticism remains to be seen. Meanwhile they are gaining ground daily, and where Professor Kuenen formerly spoke as the advocate of an unpopular view, he now speaks in the confident tones of a leader of a victorious theory.

The conciseness of topics has led to a conciseness of phraseology which makes this volume very spirited reading. There is no lack of epigrammatic force, and none of this has been lost in Mr. Wicksteed's version, which fully deserves the thanks and praise freely given to it by Professor Kuenen in his preface. Let a word of commendation be added, too, for the fine ethical spirit which pervades the author's criticisms and rightly forms his test of the comparative value of the religions he has discussed.

"UNITY AND PEACE" AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

The Spectator, in an article under this heading, writes:—

Excellent things are said on the propriety of Christians living together in entire agreement upon all essentials, and entire tolerance upon all non-essentials; and then, when all is done, it turns out that essentials, instead of being the things upon which it is easy and natural to agree, are precisely those upon which it is easy and natural to differ. The tendencies which have separated Protestants from Catholics, Anglicans from Rome, and Dissenters from the Church of England, are not of yesterday, and there is no indication, that we can see, of any disposition to treat the distinctions that have grown out of them as of diminished importance. The plain moral of all this talk about reunion is that it is perfectly idle. There can be no union between Churches unless they are substantially one already. If ever this identity is restored, external reunion will either follow as a matter of course, or be no longer necessary. But the restoration of identity will come, if it comes at all, by each Church thinking more of her own faults, and less of her neighbours'.

Nothing could better show the truth of what we have more than once said, that the differences which part the Ritualist from the Evangelical party in the Church of England are greater than those which part the one from Roman Catholics and the other from Dissenters. Canon Hoare, if he were forced to make the choice, would far rather hold communion with a Dissenter who "sticks by the blessed truths for which the Reformers died," than with Mr. Charles Wood. Mr. Wood has far more in common with a priesthood which to this day uses a liturgy scarcely differing from the "great English rite of St. Osmund," than he has with Canon Hoare. Unity of belief between parties so completely at issue with one another is an unattainable dream. The only thing that can be secured, if the people wish it, is such a degree of comprehensiveness in the Established Church as that it may continue to embrace both. At present, it must be owned, the prospect of obtaining this degree of comprehensiveness seems as remote as ever.

It is unfortunate that the triumph of comprehensiveness can only be secured by a succession of highly technical law-suits; but nothing else would give the time that seems to be needed to bring Englishmen to the conviction that comprehension, and comprehension only, can save the Established Church.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY ON MOZLEY'S "REMINISCENCES."

The Archbishop of Canterbury has contributed a short article, occupying little more than six pages to Macmillan's Magazine for October, under the title of "Thoughts Suggested by Mr. Mozley's Oxford Reminiscences." The Archbishop styles the "Reminiscences" a "very clever and interesting series of sketches," describing "a whole galaxy of the ablest young men in Oxford forty years ago, scarcely one of whom escaped the overmastering influence of the remarkable man who is now Cardinal Newman." He doubts whether the whole history of opinion exhibits a stranger spectacle than the following:—

Men brought up in old-fashioned orthodox homes, or under the religious influences of Simeon and his school; others again who came from worldly houses, where no particular religion was in vogue, suddenly abjured the old "Thirty-nine" Article definition of the Church, which had stood their fathers in good stead ever since the Reformation, and placed themselves under the protection of a form of Church, which was vigorous certainly in the fourth and fifth centuries, but respecting which they scarcely seemed to inquire whether it represented adequately the teaching and discipline of the age of the Apostles.

This, in theory, well-compacted scheme of ecclesiastical government seemed to them and to their leader to offer a powerful barrier against the ever-encroaching liberalism which had sprung from the spirit of the age. They were deaf to all warnings that their theories, legitimately carried to a conclusion, must bear them further and further from their own mother Church. So powerfully had the early teaching of Newman represented English High Churchmanship as the best barrier against the Church of Rome, that they were not staggered in the allegiance they had at first formed, even by the appearance of Tract XC., contending as it did that a man might be loyal to the Thirty-nine Articles, and yet practically hold every doctrine of the Church of Rome. Nay, even the subsequent secession of their leader to Rome, after this view of the Thirty-nine Articles had been almost universally repudiated, passed without much affecting them, and the great man found himself followed by comparatively only a handful of the least judicious of his friends.

Forty years have passed, and of these young men, or their immediate friends and followers, some have become Bishops, some Judges, some Ministers of State; many are members of Parliament; many more are earnest hard-working clergymen; and there can be no question that under their influence the ecclesiastical aspect of the nation has been greatly modified. And yet, while all this has been going on, the question still remains whether the mass of the religious population of England is not as essentially Protestant as before. Hence the danger, by no means an imaginary one, of an ever-widening gulf between the clergy and the laity. The moderation, we may venture to say, of the Episcopal Bench has for the present averted any such calamity.

It is a mistake, as I believe, to ascribe, directly or indirectly, to the influence of the Oxford movement, the marked change which has, with the general approval of the clergy and laity, taken place during these very years in the arrangements and architecture of our churches and in the conduct of divine worship. The change is to be observed beyond the limits of the Church of England. It is not less evident amongst the Presbyterians of Scotland, and even the most rigid of English Dissenters have thrown themselves into the æstheticism of the day. It is doubtful whether the fathers of Nonconformity, if they were to rise from their graves, would not be scandalised at the ritualism of their descendants. The movement is, as men say, "in the air," but whencesoever it came, we thankfully find in it a centre which brings divergent elements together. Leaving out of question a few enthusiastic and ill-advised persons who have sought to revive in England the dresses appropriate to some of the doctrines identified with the Church of Rome, union has sprung up in the very ground which is sometimes supposed to be abandoned to the mere shibboleths of party strife.

But a question remains before which all minor matters shrivel into insignificance—the age has become sceptical. The great University of historic orthodoxy is regarded by many as a hotbed of free, if not anti-Christian, thought. Within the last few months the most eloquent representative of the Oxford school preached a sermon in which he warned his hearers that Oxford will in a few years at the most cease to be a Christian University. If this be his belief, the bulwark of a fourth century Church, to which the old leaders trusted as a refuge from the storm, powerful to resist the coming invasion, has crumbled in dust. I do not myself believe that Oxford is really given up to the free-thinking which this master in Israel dreads. There is a system of theology and religion which counts all forms of belief that are without its own limits as little better than no belief at all. Many hold that amongst Oxford undergraduates there is at the present moment more real religion, shown in a quiet, practical way, than was to be found forty years ago. Tutors, it is true, there are here and there, who do not hesitate to disseminate opinions of which they ought to be ashamed; but happily their boldness is not the measure of their influence. How came they where they are? Who is responsible for that wave of secularism which for the last few years has raged so violently within the University? How different might have been the University's fate, and indeed the fate of religion throughout the country, if the dominant party in Oxford had not endeavoured to stiffen the great national Church after an alien and antiquated model? It is the province of a national Church to stand forward boldly amongst the warrings of contending sects, speaking to all in a loving spirit of large and expansive charity, ready to welcome and guide and influence every earnest believer in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Half a century ago the spiritual life of England centred in the Evangelicals. Mr. Mozley, a High Churchman of the old-fashioned type, has spoken with such bitterness of this party in the Church as to show that he discerns its superficial defects more clearly than its intrinsic worth. Most of the great preachers and pastors of that time belonged to the school he despised, though its influence was more perceptible at Cambridge, and in the large towns than at Oxford. All things conspired for the triumph of the Oriel School over ardent youths returning from their homes, fed by the "Old Yellow Sermons," transcripts of Addison's Spectator or Cicero de Officiis, to listen to "the marvellous strains of that unrivalled voice which in the purest English which had ever sounded from a pulpit called up burning thoughts that searched the conscience and supplied stores of wisdom for the coming trials of life."

Of Dr. Arnold and the reasonable and large-hearted system of Christian teaching, of which he was the representative, the Archbishop writes:—

Arnold did not die till 1842. Up to that time the fame of his teaching and life had scarcely pervaded the land, though he had been the author of several volumes of sermons. It was his biography by Arthur Stanley, and the two highly spiritual volumes of sermons containing his last utterances, and published on his death, that secured his wide and enduring influence. Before 1842 the Oriel school had entrenched themselves tolerably securely in their camp. A weekly newspaper, written with great ability and by eminent men, supported their opinions throughout the kingdom. Unlike the analogous organ of the Evangelicals, which, whatever else of general information it might contain, obtruded party theological opinions more vigorously than well, it delicately took for granted as the substance of Christian truth the theories of its own school, while a large portion of the newspaper was given up to politics, domestic and foreign, and to reviews of the latest literary works. The ability of the writers in this paper, and their high character, may be judged of from the fact that many of them have been justly promoted since the present Prime Minister, who at one time at least might have been called the great lay high priest of the Oxford school, has attained the distinguished post in which he is believed by the mass of the nation to overshadow all his predecessors. Meanwhile, unobtrusively but most effectively, during nearly twenty years, Keble, bringing his marvellous poetic feeling to bear upon the spiritual yearnings of the day, had been conciliating towards his own school of theology the hearts of the majority of educated people. For a long time, indeed, preferment never visited the Oxford school, except that which they won with their own right hand. At the very time when they were most powerful, and seemed to carry all before them, there was a shrinking suspicion of "what it would all lead to" very prevalent in the land.

But now it might be supposed the Arnoldian element would have free course. The biographer of his great master was settled in Oxford. The charm of Arthur Stanley's life and loving heart can never be forgotten. He had anything but sympathy for the peculiar system of the Oriel school. He had been strengthened every term by the arrival of fresh pupils from Rugby, very few of whom were attracted by the fashionable novelties. But whatever the reason might be, Arnold and his teaching had never become widely popular. This was no doubt due in part to the many conflicts of his vigorous life; he was known to be well acquainted with German theology, an unpardonable sin in the minds of the old orthodox and Evangelicals; nay, he was the intimate friend, almost the follower, of the Chevalier Bunsen, who, writing much and speaking always, let it be clearly known that old forms of Christianity in his estimate required remodelling. Moreover, Arnold had at times allowed himself to write and speak somewhat bitterly out of the strength of his feelings. The success which attended his Oxford lectures on modern history, when Lord Melbourne appointed him to that chair within a year of his death, showed how well he was suited to attract and guide the young. His name and teaching, however, were certainly somewhat unpopular with the great body of quiet Christians, and to this unpopularity was added amongst his Oriel friends no small portion of fear inspired by his known powers of influence.

But the strength of Arnold's teaching, where it had fair play, was soon exhibited. The biography was hailed throughout England and all over the continent of America. Men rejoiced to welcome a manly, straightforward, expansive, Christian system which, holding as for dear life, to the Divinity of Christ, and deeply imbued with the spirit of St. John's Gospel, had a marvellously attractive power. It troubled them not with the dry bones of departed controversies, but ever asked them with the voice of a trumpet—"What are your own personal relations to the Father, and the Saviour, and the Holy Spirit?" It pointed out to them how the Christian religion was no matter of forms and compromises, how it breathed the Saviour's love into the soul, and ever inculcated the following of His example; how it looked far beyond the individual, and the section of the Church to which the individual belonged, to the commonwealth as part of God's workmanship into whatever political form it might be moulded. He could not conceive of a State, doing perfectly its duty as a State, without the moving principle of religion. He spurned all theories of separating education from religion, or state-craft from that refining leaven which alone can enable a statesman to seek for his countrymen the highest objects of their existence. And so the system went forth on its trial to bless other lands if it scarcely escaped stifling within its own University. It had its triumphs in the East as in the West. Bishop Cotton, of Calcutta, was the very impersonation of it; and to the nature of this teaching, which he had imbibed from Arnold, more than to any other cause, is to be attributed the astonishing fact that a man, with so little external attractiveness, should have wielded amongst the civilians of India a power unknown to any other of the great men who have occupied the seat.

But the Nemesis has come at last. Let us grant that there has been infused into the Church of England a much more reverential regard for the externals of public worship, and that much of this may have had its rise even from the unconscious efforts of the first leaders of the Oxford school; let us grant that a system of parochial arrangement has arisen which enlists the co-operation of zealous workers—both men and women—and which by means of guilds and other associations has increased the hold of the pastor upon his flock. Though here and there are to be found eccentricities of worship which sensible men of all schools deplore, which are often a scandalous cause of quarrel in a parish, and which the fathers of this movement never contemplated, yet on the whole it must be frankly allowed that much of the work which has sprung from the good men of Oriel has made the parish church far more attractive and useful than it was of yore.

But, meanwhile, throughout the length and breadth of England what is the view of Christianity which is welcomed by the great mass of intelligent, religious men? It is often said that Arnold is the father of the scepticism which unfortunately prevails so largely in much of our periodical literature and of those whom it leads. No statement can be more utterly untrue. Men point to the much-loved character of Arthur Clough, and the way in which his faith seemed shaken from its foundations; but his case was most peculiar—exposed to the overwhelming influence of two contending torrents, one bearing him to Rome, the other to the fathomless abyss of an unknown scepticism. It is not fair to argue from isolated and extraordinary examples. I repeat my opinion that the life and letters of Dr. Arnold and the last two volumes of his sermons set forth that view of a comprehensive, loving, yet zealous Christian teaching which approves itself to the consciences and seeks to be embodied in the lives of the vast majority of intelligent persons throughout the kingdom. There is no talk here of High, or Low, or Broad. I believe that the best men of the time have a dislike of all "schools of theology." They desire a religion which shall serve them and their neighbours in life and in death, without tying them up to unnatural phrases, or locking up their feet, whether they will or no, in the stocks of some antiquated system of discipline. Christ and God ever present, the Holy Spirit blowing where He listeth, the regularly ordered and familiar ordinances of the Church, are far more to them than any technical definitions or strict orders of the schools.

The Archbishop comes to the following charitable conclusion, with which our readers will heartily concur, even while they may think with us that the writer of this interesting paper fails to grasp the deeper principles involved in the great conflicts he has described:—

No one can reflect on the history of the school which Mr. Mozley has set before us in so vivid a picture, without regard for the men, and without believing that out of so much goodness real good must have come to the Church of Christ. In some sense I know nearly every one mentioned in his catalogue, and honour their persons or their memory. The great leaders were beyond me in age and position; with many of the rest I was intimate. Two names rise before me as my dearest friends; they both became Roman Catholics early in these struggles, but through changing scenes of life I had opportunities—alas! few and far between—of keeping up my intimacy with both. One died three years ago, the other but a few months since. Two more single-hearted and devoted men I believe never lived. There is something inexpressibly solemn in looking back on the struggles of forty years ago. No human intelligence can weigh with perfect accuracy the good and evil of any system honestly and vigorously maintained in the spirit of prayer. I am inclined to believe of this school that its day is past, but it will certainly leave behind it lasting traces of many a useful and self-denying life. The great leader, who long since passed into another Church, whatever he may have done amongst his new co-religionists, can scarcely have equalled the glory of his triumphs over so many souls of first-rate intelligence in his early days. I have great difficulty in understanding what could have induced Mr. Mozley to devote a whole chapter to disproving the theory that his great hero is a sceptic. Of course a Roman Catholic's estimate of the rules by which Protestants attempt, each for himself to attain truth, is entirely different from anything to which we are accustomed, who feel that we cannot with a safe conscience substitute assent for conviction. But all the testimony of his surroundings, and all his published utterances seem to speak of the old man's quiet age wearing away in works of calm Christian usefulness, such as his soul loves.

Meanwhile the Church and the world seem entering on totally new phases. The good or evil of the future is far beyond our ken. Many lessons may be learned from the past, both for imitation and avoidance. We who are nearing the end need not be distracted if we can cast our care on Him who cares ever for His Church and people.

THE LATE MR. MARSH.—On Tuesday the religious funeral service for the late Mr. Marsh, the United States Minister to the Italian Court, was celebrated at the Protestant cemetery by the Rev. Dr. Nevin. Mr. Marsh was the author of the well-known "History of the English Language," republished in Dr. William Smith's "Students' Manuals."

Religious Intelligence.

LONDON AUXILIARY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The autumn meeting of this society was held at Islington on Saturday last. A religious service was held in Unity Church, and an inspiring sermon was preached by the Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON. The attendance at this service was small, but at the meeting held in the adjoining schoolroom afterwards many more were present, and the room was well filled. In addition to the speakers there were present the Revs. W. C. Bowie and Spears, Miss Preston, Miss Sharpe, Miss M. Martineau; Messrs. Wellings, E. B. Squire, and most of the students of Manchester New College. The chair was taken by the Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, and a practical paper was read by Mr. FREDERIC ALLEN, entitled "Aids and Hindrances to Sunday School Work." The principal aids, he pointed out, were punctuality and regularity in attendance on the part of the teachers, preparation for the class, method, music, special services for the children, and the character of the teaching. There were also supplementary aids to be sought for in the co-operation of the parents, week-evening meetings for the children, bands of hope and singing classes. Among the hindrances he specified careless and irregular teachers, want of class-rooms, meagre supplies of books, too many rules, apathy of congregations, and large classes. All these aids and hindrances were separately considered, and received their meed of praise or blame.

The paper was followed by a discussion, which was led off by the CHAIRMAN, who called attention to the excellent service now being rendered by Professor Carpenter in the classes for teachers conducted by him at Little Portland-street Schoolroom. He thought that teachers did not recognise so fully as they should do the peculiar sacredness of the duty their voluntary labour cast upon them; it is because it is voluntary, and not such as they are compelled to do, that they are called upon to give up more time and attention to it. With regard to the preparation for the class, it was not merely the preparation of the special lesson that was required, but teachers should prepare themselves indirectly by reading such books as would be likely to interest their classes and enable them to illustrate their lessons or to answer the questions likely to arise. The teaching, too, should be religious in its purest and simplest form.

Mrs. BARROWS (Blackfriars Mission) thought that if teachers were to realise more fully that they were preachers and their classes were their congregations we should hear less of irregularity and want of punctuality.

The Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON referred to the services held once a quarter on Sunday morning in Unity Church, which were essentially for the children. He did not like services held in the schoolroom, but thought that children should be encouraged to attend the chapel services.

Mr. I. M. WADE recommended some of the more recent publications of the Sunday School Association as excellent means of preparing teachers. He liked the old-fashioned plan of the children reading round, and deprecated the practice of teachers reading to their scholars. One of the best aids to a Sunday-school was a good library, which should contain some books of reference. He also maintained that each school was entitled to special aid from the minister, not that he should teach, but that he should lead and guide the teachers. One of the great wants of the schools was more organisation, but this everybody seemed afraid of, and in the cry for unlimited freedom the fear of being thought sectarian, and the exaltation of the individualism of the individual, all attempts at organisation were lost sight of.

Mr. HOWARD CLARKE thought that one principal aid to Sunday-school work was a cheerful schoolroom, and the presence of flowers. He felt that as a teacher he was often a learner.

Mr. BARTRAM did not share Mr. Wade's dread of unlimited freedom and thought, that in attempting to crush out individuality, in order to secure uniformity of teaching we should be sacrificing much that we could not afford to lose. Referring to some remarks of Mr. Allen's relating to the temperance question, he felt bound at the risk of saying what at the present time seems unpopular, to protest against the strong and intemperate language in which the advocates of total abstinence spoke on this subject. Although practically a teetotaler himself he felt compelled to condemn the unjust and often untruthful language too often employed. With regard to the Chairman's remark that the teaching in our schools should be religious in the purest and simplest sense, he would like to add the word "widest," and maintained that whatever was calculated to ennoble the character of the children should be taught, and that we should not take a narrow view of the term. He considered that it was a mistake for teachers to go to their work with the view of increasing the numbers of any particular church; rather they ought to think of the good of the children committed to their charge, irrespective of other considerations.

Mr. HUDSON (Stamford-street) thought there was great need of systematic teaching; for this a leader was required, and who could be better fitted for this than the minister? They wanted, too, to be abreast of the times in religious thought, and there again the minister was the best person to help them.

Mr. FRIPP (M.N.C.) wholly differed from Mr. Bartram on the temperance question. He would like to ask him if he ever heard of a teetotaler being in the workhouse or being brought before the magistrates. He thought that it was a mistake to teach so much out of the Bible; children grew to look upon it as a lesson book, and to hate it in after life. He did not object to the stories in it being taught as stories.

The Rev. C. H. WAD spoke of the work now being carried on at Spicer-street, and read a list of lessons prepared for the year by the late Rev. W. A. POPE. He, too, thought we wanted systematic teaching.

Mr. HUGON S. TAYLER challenged Mr. Bartram's views as to what should inspire the teacher. He thought every teacher should try to bring his scholars to the church or chapel to which he belonged. He thought that the School Board compromise, which required the Bible to be read without explanation, tended to make the reading of it mechanical. It ought not to be swallowed whole, but parts of it only should be taught.

Mr. CALLOW made some discursive remarks about music, and was followed by the Rev. F. SUMMERS, who thought Mr. Bartram was wholly right in what he had said, but that the level was too high. He himself moved on a lower plain, and he could only teach children with the hope of getting them into his own church.

Professor CARPENTER thought that Provident Societies and Bands of Hope were both valuable aids to the Sunday-school. With respect to the question of regularity and punctuality he feared that a bad example was too often set in the churches themselves. He advocated the publication of a book of annotations upon the Gospels; and strongly urged the teachers to make a study of child life. An old Rabbi had said that he had learned much from those above him, more from his equals, but most of all from those below him. He believed teachers would learn very much from their children.

A few words in reply were offered by Mr. ALLEN, and with the singing of a hymn and a short prayer an interesting meeting was brought to a close.

NORTH MIDLAND PRESBYTERIAN AND UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meetings in connection with this Association were held at Leicester on Tuesday. The members and delegates met in the schoolroom at the Great Meeting at half-past ten o'clock, when the ordinary business was transacted. At noon service was conducted in the chapel by the Rev. J. MODEN, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds, to a good congregation. Taking as his text John x. 10 the rev. gentleman dwelt upon the need of worship as rooted in the necessities of man's nature, and the value of religion for its own sake, and as enabling men to live good and useful lives. At half-past one o'clock lunch was served in the upper schoolroom.

The Rev. J. P. HORS occupied the chair, and among those present were Messrs. E. Clephan, W. Kempson, A. Paget, Gittins, W. Adams, E. F. Cooper, T. F. Johnson, F. J. F. Kirby, G. Gibbons, H. Norman, A. Else, A. Atkins, Cumberland, A. H. Paget, W. Raven, H. Johnson, C. F. Rose, the Revs. Dr. Briggs (Cambridge, U.S.A.), J. Moden, J. C. Lunn, R. A. Armstrong (Nottingham), T. L. Marshall (London), R. Hill (Bedford), V. D. Davis (Nottingham), C. H. Osler (Sheffield), H. W. Ellis (Great Hucklow), C. H. Wellbeloved (Mansfield), J. Fox (Newark), R. Cowley Smith (Stannington), W. Shakespeare (Ilkeston), A. Farquharson (Cheshfield), E. P. Hall (Loughborough), and others. The tables having been cleared,

The Rev. J. F. HOPPS, in opening the proceedings, said he thoroughly believed in the work that the Association was doing, and he wished that it could do more. He hoped in the future they would see their way to more work, but that could only be done by their obtaining larger funds or by sending their ministers as missionaries into the districts in which they worked. He had suggested that week evening services should be held at Hinckley, and they had been conducted with considerable success. In other places he had recommended that similar meetings should be held. They could not spare their ministers on Sundays, but they might go into the neighbourhoods in which they laboured on week evenings. He was prepared to do his share of this work, but somehow or other the plan had not commended itself to the committee, and he confessed that he was not quite satisfied with the operations that the Association had engaged in. He did not wish to throw difficulties in the way, and should be glad if the organisation could undertake extended work. Hitherto he felt that it had been to some extent unprofitable, but they had much to do, and he hoped they would succeed in doing it in the future in a greater degree than they had in the past.

The Rev. V. DAVIS, one of the secretaries of the Society, then read the following report of the Committee:—

COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

The past year has been one of considerable movement in the right direction with at least some of the congregations of the district. Enough has been done to encourage your committee in the belief that their efforts are not in vain; but there remains still a wide field which only larger means and increased exertion can cover.

The interest awakened in the financial position of the Association at the last annual meeting has resulted in a rise of the amount of contributions from £67 16s. to £93 17s. 6d., of which £12 was received from the Rev. Eli Fay in redemption of his promise that the Sheffield list should be doubled. Nevertheless, when all the grants have been paid which it was seen to be essential to the welfare of the congregations of the district to make, the treasurer reports that there will be a balance of about £10 due to himself. The annual collections, in spite of the special appeal of the committee, were slightly less than last year. Your committee therefore feel that they cannot too urgently press this fact on the attention of the friends of the Association, that if its works to go forward, more funds must be raised. The value of this work will be best appreciated after a perusal of the following statements in this report, and the appended special reports from the congregations of the district.

During the past year the congregation at Newark have held steadily on their course. If there has been no large increase in numbers there has been a decided strengthening of the union which binds the regular members together, and the congregation are convinced that the time has now come for making a determined effort to build a larger and more attractive chapel. They believe that the fact of their having to meet in the present building has been one serious hindrance to their more rapid progress. This conviction your committee share, and desire to commend this cause to the hearty support of the Association.

In last year's report it was mentioned that a series of week-day services had been held at Hinckley, and that it was intended to resume the effort in the autumn. This was done with such satisfactory results that since the beginning of the year regular Sunday services have been held, and it is hoped that with the help of your Association and of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association a regular minister will very shortly be established there.

The work of the Rev. J. C. Lunn at the Free Christian Church at Leicester has borne good fruit. The congregation since his resignation has been partly dependent on the funds of the Association, but they report that the church is now in a thoroughly satisfactory condition, and under the ministry of the Rev. J. Moden they look forward to a prosperous future.

At Greak Hucklow and Bradwell, under the care of the Rev. H. W. Ellis, and at Ilkeston, under the Rev. W. Shakespeare, the cause of Liberal Christianity is faithfully upheld. The Ilkeston congregation have suffered many disappointments during the past few years through depression of trade and the removal from the town of their most active supporters, but those who remain are earnest friends of the cause and do what they can.

"Not faint but 'still pursuing' our uphill task," is the report of the Rev. Rowland Hill from Bedford. Your committee feel that there is no congregation in the district more deserving of the earnest sympathy and support of the Association than that at Bedford.

After very serious consideration your committee have decided to withdraw their aid from the support of services at Flagg. Last year their grant was made on condition that the congregation should raise £5, and when this was not done the grant was discontinued. Your committee felt that there were not sufficient grounds for hope of permanently good results to justify the expenditure of the funds of the Association in this cause, when all, and more than, all of the limited means placed at their disposal were needed by congregations of the district, where there was a wider sphere of action and real hope of the establishment of permanent congregations.

Your committee report with great regret that the Northampton congregation have withdrawn from the Association in order to join the Midland Christian Union, Birmingham having now become a more convenient centre for them than Nottingham.

The congregation at Lincoln have also withdrawn from the Association.

The Rev. Barnard Gisby has retired from the pulpit at Derby.

Your committee are glad to learn that the Rev. R. Cowley Smith may again be reckoned among the ministers of the district after an absence of six years, having settled at Stannington with every prospect of a successful ministry.

Your committee trust that enough has now been said to show that the Association does not exist in vain, and that it is worth while maintaining its efficiency. Seven congregations in the district are more or less dependent on the Association for their chance of doing good work and maintaining their position as upholders of the liberal faith in these North Midland counties, and it rests with the friends of the Association to say by their liberal support that this work shall not fail.

There are signs of prosperity and new earnestness in this district as throughout the country. The Conference of Liberal Churches in Liverpool was not held in vain; it has shown that there is real enthusiasm in our people, if only the right appeal is made. The building of the Channing Hall at Sheffield and the paying off of the debt of £2,000 on the new High Pavement Chapel at Nottingham bear witness to the scale on which our work may be done. Your committee ask that the needs of the smaller congregations of the district may be as generously supplied.

Mr. COOPER having presented his financial statement, which showed a balance of about £10 due to the Treasurer,

The CHAIRMAN moved the adoption of the report and balance-sheet, and repeated that he did not think the work which they had done was such as should satisfy them. He did not say for a moment that any money had been misapplied, but he did not think that they had done what they might have done and what they should have had the means to do.

Mr. E. CLEPHAN seconded the motion, and expressed regret that Mr. Hopps had returned from America with such gloomy feelings. When they looked at the history of the Association he thought they would agree that they had made great strides, and they should rather be encouraged than discouraged. He did not say that they might not have done more, for he believed that Unitarians did not know exactly what their position was, but they might be urged to do more, and he trusted that funds would enable them to undertake fresh enterprises.

The Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG supported the resolution, and appealed to Mr. Hopps to assist the committee in their work in the future more than he had done in the past. He joined last night in heartily welcoming the chairman back from America, but he must say that they did not miss him much in that Society while he was away. The next time he went to America he hoped they would miss him more, and urged him to bring his criticisms to the committee and help them in the work which they wished to do.

After a few words from the Rev. J. C. LUNN, the motion was carried.

The CHAIRMAN moved a vote of thanks to Revs. J. Moden and C. Hargrove for their services during the day, and that a hearty welcome be given to the representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, the Rev. T. L. Marshall.

The Rev. Dr. BRIGGS seconded the motion, which was supported by Mr. T. F. JOHNSON, and carried.

The Rev. J. MODEN, in acknowledging, referred to the great improvements made in the internal decorations of the venerable Presbyterian Chapel in which they had assembled in the morning, and spoke on the relation of Art to Religion.

The Rev. C. HARGROVE also returned thanks, and in an earnest speech said the position of the Unitarian denomination compared with other Christian bodies was most miserable. They had not so many ministers as the Romish Church had bishops, and compared with the Church of England or the Congregational or Methodist bodies their proportions were very small indeed. But they had a great work to accomplish in standing boldly forth in favour of the spirit of free inquiry and a liberal Christianity, and he urged them to renewed efforts in aid of the cause which they had at heart.

The Rev. T. L. MARSHALL spoke of the work of the Association which he represented, commending it to those present. He said that if ever the committee of the Association felt as their chairman did, discouraged at the temporary failure of some of their efforts, they took heart when they looked at what had been accomplished, and at the activity of the provincial churches. They had heard of the great success which had attended the Sunday afternoon services held in the Temperance Hall during the winter months by their chairman, and of similar services held in Kidderminster and Sheffield, and were seriously considering the question of doing similar work in London—(applause). Mr. Marshall concluded his address by entering into a criticism of the paper read by Canon Curteis at the recent Church Congress at Derby on the relations of Church and Dissent, contending that Unitarians must hold aloof from the Establishment while it held the belief, first of all, in the supernatural origin of Christianity, with its whole apparatus of miracles and prophecies; and, secondly, in the doctrines commonly called orthodox.

The CHAIRMAN next moved a resolution expressing satisfaction that the church at Newark proposed building a chapel, and cordially recommending the effort to the support of its members and the public, which was seconded by the Rev. C. H. WELLBELOVED, and carried.

The CHAIRMAN then moved a resolution expressing regret at the departure of the Rev. J. C. Lunn, of Leicester, and the Rev. B. Gisby, from Derby, and welcoming the Rev. J. Moden and the Rev. Cowley Smith into the Association.

The Rev. C. H. OSLER seconded the motion, which was carried.

The officers of the Association were then appointed for the year, Mr. M. Hunter, Mayor of Sheffield, being elected President, and the Rev. A. W. Worthington, late secretary, visitor.

A vote of thanks to the Leicester friends for their hospitality was then passed, on the motion of Mr. J. HUNTER, of Sheffield, seconded by the Rev. R. HILL. The proceedings then terminated.

WELCOME TO THE REV. J. PAGE HOPPS

On Monday evening at Leicester a soirée of the Great Meeting congregation was held to welcome the Rev. J. Page Hopps on his return from America, where he represented the British and Foreign Unitarian Association at the recent National Conference at Saratoga. At the same time the ministers of the district and other friends of the North Midland Association, which held its annual meeting the following day, were cordially welcomed to Leicester. The large room of the Great Meeting schools was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and the tables were covered with photographic albums, pictures, microscopes, and various other objects of interest. More than three hundred ladies and gentlemen were present, including most of the ministers and others of the district, whose names are given in the report elsewhere of the annual meeting of the North Midland Association. After tea the chair was taken by

E. Clephan, Esq., who gave on behalf of the congregation a hearty welcome back to their minister, and in the course of a very interesting address dwelt upon the importance of maintaining and, as far as possible, raising the educational standard of our ministry. The welcome was seconded by Mr. Alfred Paget in a few appropriate words. Mr. Page Hopps, who was received with great applause, then gave an interesting narrative of his varied experiences in America, dwelling upon incidents of travel, the Saratoga Conference, and the state of our Transatlantic churches; concluding with an emphatic declaration that he was so thoroughly satisfied with his position in Leicester that he had declined to listen to any overtures from his friends to settle in America. After some very effective music from the choir, the Rev. T. L. Marshall, who was cordially received as a representative of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, said that they had all felt assured that they would be thoroughly well represented at the Saratoga Conference by two such accomplished men as Dr. W. B. Carpenter and Mr. Page Hopps. He then followed with some interesting reminiscences of his own early life in Boston, when he had the privilege of hearing Emerson, Channing, Dr. Greenwood, and Dr. Tuckerman; was present when William Lloyd Garrison was dragged through the streets of that city with a halter round his neck, and was introduced as an English boy to the notice of that eminent statesman, John Quincy Adams. The Rev. Dr. Briggs, of Cambridgeport, U.S.A., followed with a few genial words, expressing his interest in the proceedings and the pleasure with which he revisited England. The Rev. R. A. Armstrong closed the proceedings with a very effective appeal on behalf of the North Midland Association and its missionary efforts at Newark, Great Hucklow, and Ilkestone. The evening, which was one of great interest and enjoyment, was agreeably diversified by an excellent selection of music, performed by the very efficient choir of the Great Meeting.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD, at their weekly meeting on Thursday, discussed at considerable length the question whether the scheme for higher elementary education, prepared by the School Management Committee, should be debated and disposed of now or after the general election next month. Mr. Mark Wilks, the Chairman of the Committee, ultimately agreed to the postponement for a week. The subject of savings banks was also debated, but the Board declined to vote upon it.

DEPTFORD.—The anniversary Sunday-school sermon was preached in Church-street on Sunday last by the Rev. George Carter, who also gave the second lecture of the course arranged under the auspices of the London District Society in the Lecture Hall, High-street. At the latter there was again a good gathering of persons, who manifested great interest in the address, at the close of which the lecturer was very freely questioned on its subject matter. The chair was occupied by the Rev. W. Copeland Bowie, who will deliver the next lecture.

CAMBRIDGE.—At a cost of over £40,000 Ridley Hall, near Cambridge, built for the purpose of training young men in the evangelical principles of the Church of England, is now completed. Its formal opening took place on Wednesday. A sermon was preached at Trinity Church by the Rev. T. P. Boulbee, London, and in the evening there was a large gathering at the Hall in sympathy with the movement. Bishop Perry was in the chair, and speeches were delivered by Archdeacon Richardson, Revs. Canon Hoare and Child, and others.

ROTHERHAM.—On Wednesday evening a goodly number of persons assembled in the Rotherham Unitarian Church, under the presidency of the pastor, the Rev. W. Blazeby, B.A., to hear a lecture on Father Mathew, with personal recollections, by Mr. C. L. Corkran, of London. The lecturer rejoiced at the vast strides temperance was taking, and commented upon the very significant annual reduction in the revenue of the country from the use of intoxicating liquors. He gave a most interesting account of the meetings held in Ireland by the great Apostle of Temperance. The lecturer's personal recollections of the movement, and his telling anecdotes and vivid illustrations, gave the lecture a most graphic character. A vote of thanks was proposed by Dr. Cobham, and seconded by Thomas Tasker, Esq. The choir sang two anthems, and two hymns were also introduced. The Chairman said all persons must rejoice at the great good which was being accomplished by the temperance advocates, both in social, domestic, and religious sense, and said the same must tend to the prosperity and happiness of the nation.

CHELMSFORD.—The quarterly social gathering of the Unitarian congregation took place on Wednesday evening, Mr. E. Fyson presiding after tea at the business meeting. The balance sheet, read by Mr. Wray, showed a small sum in hand. The Secretary, Mr. A. Madocks, reported that the average attendance of adults at the Sunday services for the past quarter was, morning eighteen, evening twenty-three. The elocution class had been recommenced, the singing practice held weekly, a Band of Hope recently started, and a collection in aid of the fund for the widow of the late Rev. W. A. Pope resulted in contributions amounting to nearly £8. Mr. J. K. Orams read a short report of the Sunday-school work. After the business was concluded, singing and recitations occupied the remainder of the evening. The purchase of a new harmonium formed the subject of a conversation. The harvest thanksgiving services were held on the following Sunday. The morning subject was "Sowing," based on the text "God is not mocked," &c., and the service was conducted by Mr. E. Fyson; while the evening discourse, by Mr. Madocks, appertained to the "Reaping," the text being "The harvest is past, the summer is ended," &c. Appropriate hymns were sung, and the decorations of fruit, flowers, cereals, and autumn foliage were both profuse and tasteful. There were good attendances at both services, and at the school.

KINGSWOOD.—The annual harvest thanksgiving was held on the 8th inst. The church was most tastefully decorated by the young ladies of the congregation, with roses, fuchsias, dahlias, &c., which far exceeded the usual display on such occasions. The bouquets of wild flowers brought by the school children were remarkably good for the season. Large congregations assembled at both services, especially in the evening when the place was crowded in every part. The Rev. James Taplin preached in the morning from Isaiah ix. 3, "They joy before Thee according to the joy in harvest," showing the reason the people had for joy as the yield of grass and grain had not been so abundant for the last ten years. The service in the evening consisted of reading the scriptures, prayers, and divine song. Select pieces from Haydn, Handel, and Sullivan were rendered with great effect by musical friends from Birmingham. Then annual services were introduced by the present minister of the congregation to encourage the humbler classes to contribute towards the support of the Birmingham Hospitals. The amount collected at the doors was £5 10s.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH EXTENSION IN LONDON.—On Tuesday a Conference was held, under the presidency of Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., in the Board-room of the Memorial Hall, relative to Congregational Church Extension in London. There was a large attendance, necessitating an adjournment to the library, which was well filled. From statements made by the Rev. Andrew Mearns (secretary) and Mr. Edward Spicer, we gather that a proposal had been made to the Jubilee Committee of the Congregational Union of England and Wales by a gentleman deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of London, to give for Congregational Church Extension in the metropolis £2,000 per annum for five years, on the condition that £18,000 a year in addition was raised; or to supplement, in the same proportion, any less sum contributed for new work in London, and further to give for every Congregational Hall erected in London, up to twenty, £100. Mr. Morley, in urging the claims of the movement, said that in the true spirit of Christian citizenship all Christian people in London were called upon to render active Christian service. There was never a time when the common people heard more gladly the preaching of the gospel. They did not want learned essays, but practical yet simple teaching. His own intention was to apply his gift to secure the largest amount of sittings where most needed. Mr. J. Spicer, J.P., the Revs. Dr. Clemance, J. G. Rogers, Dr. Kennedy, Dr. Hanney, G. Martin, and others took part in the subsequent proceedings, and a resolution was unanimously passed pledging the meeting to heartily sustain the London Congregational Church Extension Committee, under whose auspices the Conference was held. Proof of this was given in a tangible form, promises to the extent of £14,000 being handed in. The Jubilee Fund thus amounts to more than £200,000. The proceedings, which were marked by great heartiness throughout, closed with a vote of thanks to Mr. S. Morley, M.P.

DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN.—On Wednesday a public tea meeting was held in St. James's Hall, which was very tastefully decorated for the occasion with evergreens, banners, and scriptural mottoes—"God is love;" "God is one," &c. The after meeting commenced at eight o'clock, and was very well attended. Mr. J. De Maine-Brown presided, and the meeting was addressed by the Rev. S. Fletcher Williams, and Mr. J. Barron. Mr. De Maine-Brown contributed a number of curiosities of books: A copy of the Geneva or Breeches Bible, in black letter, 1600; a copy of the Authorised Version, black letter, 1613; Wickliffe's Testament, translated 1382; a copy of the Syrian New Testament, edition by Gutbirio, Hamburg, 1664; a copy of Luther's Bible, in black letter, of very peculiar shape and binding, 1726; a copy of a pocket Bible, authorised version, Old Testament, 1782, New Testament, 1669, a curious illustration of the preciousness of the "Word of God in those days," in more senses than one; a copy of Tyndale's Testament, first made 1526; a copy of the Latin Vulgate, from the celebrated Plantini's printers, Amsterdam, 1567; a copy of John Wesley's Thomas A' Kempis, 1737; and, by way of contrast, a copy of the same, Benham's Version, in exquisite binding, every page bordered with antique sacred designs. Mr. Williams said his visit to the island had been very pleasurable. He had come to render whatever services he could to the infant movement, and was pleased to see the progress made by the Unitarians of Douglas during the past year. At the close of the season last year the number of persons at the tea meeting was sixteen, but this year the number was eighty-one, increased to 100 after tea. That was an increase not surpassed, at least by any other church on the island. The rev. gentleman spoke encouragingly to the meeting, and gave a sketch of his own progress from Trinitarianism to Unitarianism. The son of an orthodox minister, he and two brothers were educated for the ministry in the faith of their father. One of his brothers had also become a Unitarian. They found the faith they had adopted more in accordance with the Scriptures, more in accord with reason, and secure from the assaults of scepticism in any form. The advance of science had no alarms for Unitarianism. The two departments of truth ran in parallel lines, not antagonistic, but mutually supporting. But above all, Unitarianism was a practical religion, and by a practical test they were willing to abide. The tree is known by its fruits. Mr. Barron said he had not always been a Unitarian—four years at most. In his early years he heard but little of it, and was shy of it. The religion he had been taught made him afraid of God. There was so much in it about everlasting punishment that he feared at night to sleep lest he should awake in hell. He often thought of the text, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and Unitarian truth had made him free. He found the truth in the Bible a firm rock; standing there he had no fear. The dreadful doctrine of everlasting punishment was now seldom taught in neighbouring churches. The ministers seldom preach it! the intelligent portion of their audiences would be offended, having ceased to believe it. They were much encouraged by their progress here, and hoped that before long they would have a place of worship of their own in which to meet. On the motion of Mr. Barron, seconded by Mr. Edgar Robinson, thanks were voted to the ladies who had presided at elegantly decorated and well-provided tables; to the singers, to the Rev. Fletcher Williams, and others, who had rendered hearty and gratuitous help, promotive of the enjoyments of the evening. The proceedings terminated by Mr. Dawson moving a vote of thanks to the Chairman, seconded by Mr. Lewthwaite. A full report of Mr. Williams' lecture on the Deity of Christ is given in the Isle of Man Times. His second lecture on "What has Unitarianism done for England," will be reported in the next number of the same paper.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Nothing preserves the health so well as these alterative Pills in changeable weather, or when our nervous systems are irritable. They act admirably on the stomach, liver, and kidneys, and so thoroughly purify the blood, that they are the most efficient remedy for warding off derangements of the stomach, fever, diarrhoea, dysentery, and other maladies, and giving tone and energy to enervated valetudinarians. All who have the natural and laudable desire of maintaining their own and their family's health, cannot do better than trust to Holloway's Pills, which cool, regulate, and strengthen. These purifying Pills are suitable for all ages, seasons, climates, and constitutions, when all other means fail, and are the female's best friend.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

We learn from the Daily News that so far as is at present known, most of the sitting members of the School Board will seek re-election. Sir John Bennett, who in the City of London division in 1879 was fifth at the poll, being 299 votes less than Mr. Gover, the fourth member, has again issued an address. He was elected in 1873, and now offers to devote his knowledge of the best educational systems in Europe and America to the service of his fellow-countrymen. He lays down the principle that our ships, our shops, and our warehouses must be filled by the goods which a well-directed technical training will enable English hands to supply, and he adds, "The millions that our ignorance sends abroad must go into the pockets of our better-instructed artisans at home." Another candidate announced for the City division is Mr. H. C. Richard, of the City of London College, and he has signified his intention of supporting none but such a practical system of education as ratepayers should be asked to pay for. The present members of the City, however—Mr. Spicer, Miss Hill, Mr. Bonnewell, and Mr. Gover—are understood to be ready to appeal again to the constituency. In Chelsea Mrs. Webster, Dr. Gladstone, and Mr. Freeman, the vice-chairman, are willing to stand, but the fourth member's (Captain Berkeley) intentions have not been declared, and nothing has yet been definitely stated with respect to the newly-added representative. Mrs. Surr in Finsbury, has resigned on account of ill-health, but the Rev. Dr. Wainwright, the Rev. Mark Wilks, Mr. Lucraft, and Mr. Roberts will appear for re-election, though not Sir U. K. Shuttleworth. In Hackney all the members will offer themselves for re-election. In Greenwich it is likely that the sitting members—Mr. H. S. Gover, the Rev. T. D. C. Morse, Mr. Richardson, and Mr. J. E. Saunders—will be re-elected without opposition. In Westminster Miss Simcox does not enter the lists, but the Rev. B. Belcher, Mr. Ross, Mr. S. C. Buxton, and Mr. G. Potter, will seek re-election. Three candidates have been mentioned for the declared vacancy, viz., Mr. Burdett-Coutts, Mr. A. Rutzen, and Mr. W. Wren. Of the six members for Lambeth it is known that Miss Muller, Mr. Heller, Mr. White, and the Rev. J. E. Murphy will contest the election; an attempt is being made to induce Mr. Kemp-Welch to stand again, and it is understood that Miss Eva Muller will be a candidate. Other new candidates are mentioned, including Mr. Whiteley, Mr. Stockbridge, and Mr. Wiseman. It is hoped that Mr. E. Lyulph Stanley may be induced to rescind his half-formed resolution of retiring from Marylebone. The Rev. Dr. Angus is not expected to be put in nomination again for this division. Mrs. Westlake, the Rev. J. R. Diggle, and Mr. A. Mill have signified their willingness for re-election. In Southwark Miss Helen Taylor, Mr. Corry, Mr. E. Hawkins, and Miss Richardson will not retire; but there are two or three new candidates. In Tower Hamlets Mr. Buxton, Chairman of the Board, offers himself again, as do one or two of his colleagues; but it is not yet known how many candidates there will be for this division, although they would at present appear to be unusually numerous.

BARNARD CASTLE.—The Rev. Joseph Taylor, of Newcastle-under-Lyne, has been appointed minister of the Free Christian Church, Barnard Castle.

BIRMINGHAM.—The Old Meeting Congregation have engaged the Rev. Stopford W. Brooke to supply the pulpit for six months.

THE REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER, the New York correspondent of the Standard says, on Tuesday made a statement of his belief, and withdrew from membership of the New York and Brooklyn Association of Congregational Churches. He rejected the doctrines of the Atonement, of original sin through Adam, and of man's inability to obey the laws of God. He believes in future punishment, and in the divinity of Christ. The comments which followed Mr. Beecher's declaration were, it is stated, mostly favourable to him, and it was remarked that there was no reason why he should resign. One reverend speaker gave it as his opinion that Mr. Beecher was as truly Evangelical as any other minister, and this remark was greatly applauded. The Plymouth Church retains its connection with the Association of Congregational Churches.

Teachers' Notes for July and October. The July number opens with two excellent papers by two of the many editors of this periodical, "A Plan of Work for Sunday Schools," by Miss Edith Gittins, and "Changed Methods to Suit Changed Conditions," by the Rev. F. E. Millson, which appeared in full in the Inquirer just after its delivery at the Whitsuntide meeting of the Sunday School Association. Miss Swaine contributes an instructive article on "The Everyday Life of Bible People," and the Rev. Dendy Agate continues his excellent lessons on "The Proverbs." But in many respects the most valuable article in this number is that by the Rev. F. E. Millson with the long title "Some Account of the Old English Gilds, with a Suggestion for the Application of the Gild System as a Method of our Sunday Schools." In the first section Mr. Millson gives an interesting account of the old Gilds, one of the many good old institutions swept away by the rapacious hands of Mr. Froude's modeling; and in the second part he draws up a very attractive and quite practical scheme of a "Gild of Fellowship" for our Sunday-schools, and a "Young Men's Friendly Society," both of which we should like to see carried out into effective operation. We have so little real fellowship in our congregations and schools that we should act wisely in introducing and cherishing a really good plan of the kind now suggested. But we are inclined to regret that Mr. Millson has reprinted as a specimen the rules of St. John the Baptist Parochial Gild as they embody associations and a whole train of ideas with which we have little or no sympathy. But what we do want is to introduce more poetry, symbolism, and really picturesque ceremonialism into our dull and monotonous daily life, and especially in connection with our churches and Sunday-schools. The October number contains three articles: "Doctrine in Dialogue," by the Rev. F. E. Millson; "Lessons on the Growth of Moral and Spiritual Ideas," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, showing how the Israelites came to understand the sufferings of those who love God; and Parts Five and Six of Miss Edith Martineau's "Lessons on Seeds of Character," which are written in a charming style, and are full of felicitous illustrations. Mr. Millson's article is a series of dialogues for Sunday-schools, written in a delightfully homely style, with a slight infusion of the Yorkshire dialect, explaining some of the difficulties often felt by children in doctrinal matters, and answering the objections to our views they frequently hear from friends belonging to other sects. These valuable dialogues should be reprinted by the Sunday School Association and circulated extensively through our schools.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 22.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

WEDNESDAY.

British and Foreign Unitarian Association Meeting of Council at 3 P.M.

THURSDAY.

United Devotional Services at Little Portland-street Chapel at 8 P.M.

* * Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Courtney's (W. C.) Studies in Philosophy, Ancient and Modern, 12/
Creighton's (M.) History of the Papacy during the Reformation, 2 Vols., 32/
Frost's (T.) Modern Explorers, 5/
Guthrie's (M.) On Mr. Spencer's Unification of Knowledge, 12/6
Hood's (P.) Oliver Cromwell, his Life, Times, Battle-fields, and Contemporaries, 7/6
Japp's (A.H.) Industrial Curiosities, 3/6
Rhys's (Prof.) Early Britain, Celtic Britain, 3/
Senior's (N. W.) Conversations and Journals in Egypt and Malta, 2 Vols., 24/
Smith's (G. B.) Life and Speeches of Right Hon. John Bright, M.P., popular edition, 7/6

Wedgeood's (H.) Contested Etymologies in the Dictionary of the Rev. W. W. Skeat, 5/
Wratislaw's (A. H.) John Hus, 3/6

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

DEATH.

WHITE—On the 19th inst., at Fairfield, Loughboro, Mary, widow of the late William White, aged 86.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

A DISCOURSE ON CHRISTIAN UNITARIANISM. By JAMES TAPLIN. Price 3d.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

APARTMENTS are offered in a small but thoroughly clean and comfortably furnished house; suitable for a gentleman of quiet and regular habits, engaged out during the day. Convenient for the City or West-end.—Further particulars supplied on application to Mrs. Heywood, 100, Calford-road, De Beauvoir Town, London, N.

A GENTLEMAN, aged 21, with five years' mercantile experience in Swansea and Liverpool, desires a situation as Clerk or Traveller, &c. Knows French and some German; the best references given.—Apply to A. D., INQUIRER Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

A LADY, occupying comfortable apartments, seeks another lady to join her. Two bed and sitting rooms, piano, bath, &c.—References exchanged; for particulars, address E. C., care of Mr. Phillips, 16, Railway-street, Altrincham, Cheshire.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

SEASONABLE DELICACY.

BROWN & POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR

As Blanc-Mange, Custard, Baked Pudding, &c.

WITH

STEWED FRUIT
OF ANY KIND.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

As a means of bringing to the notice of those who desire to have useful books for teaching and healthy literature for their children, the Sunday School Association will send a copy of each of the following works (their ten newest publications), carriage paid, on receipt of postal order for ten shillings.

Remarkable Women as Examples for Girls. By ANN SWAINE.

Elements of Morality, in Easy Lessons, for Home and School Teaching. By Mrs. CHARLES BRAY.

Stories from the Life of Moses. By R. BARTRAM.

Stories from the Book of Genesis. By R. BARTRAM.

Short Sermons to Children. By Three Cousins.

Sacred Smiles; being Notes for Teachers of Bible Classes and others. By P. E. VIZARD.

The Life of Jesus, in Twenty Lessons for Sunday Schools. By Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A.

Outline Lessons in Religion. By Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

The Story of Religion in England. By Rev. BROOKS HERFORD.

Young Days, the Vol. for 1882 (the seventh), in illustrated boards.

Address, WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS' MANUAL.

A few copies of Vols. III, IV., and V., comprising thirteen quarterly numbers of this excellent serial (originally published by the Manchester District Sunday School Association), neatly bound in One Volume, cloth, lettered; may be had post free for 1s. 9d.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 3s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap 1ss 12. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

TEXTS AND MARGINS of the REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH, 1s.

A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT of the NATIONAL CONFERENCE of UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE. Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High-street, Birmingham.

Just Published, price 1s. 6d.

TRUE TO HIMSELF. The Story of Savonarola. Written for Young People by FRANCES E. COOKE, Author of "Footprints," "A Boy's Ideal," &c.

SWAN, SONNENSCHN, and Co., Paternoster-row.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

Third Edition, pp. 116. One Shilling, or 13 stamps.

SKIN DISEASES TREATED HOMEOPATHICALLY. By WASHINGTON EPPS, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. Describes and prescribes for fifty varieties of skin diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

Enlarged Edition, pp. 360, bound, 1s., or 14 stamps.

HOMEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By Drs. RICHARD and WASHINGTON EPPS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

SUNDAY LECTURE SOCIETY.

PRESIDENT.

W. B. Carpenter, Esq., C.B., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S.

VICE PRESIDENTS.

Professor Alexander Bain.

Edward Frankland, Esq., D.C.L., Ph.D., F.R.S.

James Heywood, Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A.

Right Hon. Sir Arthur Hobhouse, K.C.S.I.

Thomas Henry Huxley, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S., F.L.S.

Benjamin Ward Richardson, Esq., M.D., F.R.S.

Charles Siemens, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S.

Herbert Spencer, Esq.

W. Spottiswoode, Esq., LL.D., Pres.R.S.

John Tyndall, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S.

The LECTURES at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM-PLACE, on Sundays, commencing each Afternoon at Four o'clock precisely.

Twenty-one Lectures (in three series), ending 18th March, 1883, will be given.

The first Series of Seven Lectures will be as follows:—

Oct. 22.—BENJAMIN W. RICHARDSON, Esq., M.D., F.R.S., Vice-Pres. S.L.S., on "Charles Darwin."

Oct. 29.—Professor WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D., St. Andrew's University, on "The True, the Beautiful, and the Good."

Nov. 5.—E. B. AVELING, Esq., D.Sc.Lond., on "The Borderland between Living and Non-Living Things."

Nov. 12.—WM. LANT CARPENTER, Esq., B.A., B.Sc., F.C.S., on "The Sun." (With Oxy-hydrogen Lantern Illustrations.)

Nov. 19.—P. MARTIN DUNCAN, Esq., M.B. Lond., F.R.S., on "The Metamorphoses of Insects and their Philosophy."

Nov. 26.—Rev. H. R. HAWES, M.A., Incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone, on "Garibaldi."

Dec. 3.—Professor H. N. MOSELEY, M.A., F.R.S., on "Life on the Ocean Surface." (With Oxy-hydrogen Lantern Illustrations.)

Members' Annual Subscription, £1, due 1st of October in each year, entitles them to a ticket (transferable, and admitting to the Reserved Seats), and to fourteen single Reserved Seat tickets available for any lecture.

Tickets for this Series (one for each lecture) to the Sixpenny Seats, 2s.

For Tickets and Lists of the Published Lectures apply (by letter) to the Hon. Treasurer, Wm. Henry Domville, Esq., 15, Gloucester-crescent, Hyde-park, W. (remittances to be made by cheque, by post-office order, payable at the Post-office, Porchester-road, W., or by postage stamps).

Payment at the Door:—One Shilling (Reserved Seats); Sixpence, and One Penny.

The entrance in Mortimer-street is exclusively to the Reserved Seats.

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

Edited by MAX MULLER. Vols. I. to XII. inclusive. Quite new, for 6s. per vol., carriage paid.—Address to Rev. F. Sydney Morris, 1, St. Mary's, York.

COLYTON, DEVONSHIRE.—The Pulpit of

George's Chapel will be vacant at the close of the year. Applications for the same will be received by Messrs. B. W. HIGGINS and T. STRAWBRIDGE, the Chapel Wardens, after the 25th of December next.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady

(daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (pianoforte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Marquette.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR

COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN

STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gattton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APART-

MENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE

UNIVERSITY HALL,
GORDON-SQUARE, LONDON.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

PROGRAMME of LECTURES for the SESSION 1882-83.

Principal—Rev. JAMES MARTINEAU, D.D., LL.D.

Ethics: Monday and Friday, 2 P.M.

Greek: Monday, 1 P.M.

Professor JAMES DRUMMOND, LL.D.

Introduction to the Criticism of the Gospels: Tuesday and Thursday, 9 A.M.

History of Doctrines: Senior, Tuesday, 11 A.M.

Junior, Thursday, 11 A.M.

Pauline Epistles: Tuesday, 1 P.M., Thursday, 10 A.M.

Elocution: Thursday, 12 noon.

Professor J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.

Junior Hebrew: Wednesday, 10 A.M., and Friday, 11 A.M.

Middle Hebrew: Monday, 4 P.M., and Friday, 10 A.M.

Senior Hebrew: Wednesday, 12 noon, and Friday, 12 noon.

History of Religion of Israel: Monday, 3 P.M., and Wednesday, 11 A.M.

Criticism of the Pentateuch: Wednesday, 9 A.M., and Friday, 9 A.M.

Elocution: Monday, 1 P.M.

Professor C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.

Junior Mental Philosophy: Tuesday, 9 and 10 A.M., and Friday, 3 P.M.

Senior Mental Philosophy: Tuesday, 11 A.M., and Friday, 2 P.M.

Latin: Tuesday, 12 noon.

For further information, please apply to the Principal, the Rev. JAMES MARTINEAU, by letter, or at the Hall before any of his lectures; or to

R. D. DARBISHIRE, Esq., B.A., 26, George-street, Manchester; } Secs.
Rev. H. ENFIELD DOWSON, B.A., Gate Cross, nr. Manchester.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON (for Ladies), 8 and 9, YORK-PLACE, PORTMAN-SQUARE.

A Course of Lectures on Physiology will be given by C. STEWART, Esq., on Saturdays, at 3 o'clock.

F. KENSINGTON, Hon. Sec.

LONDON UNITED DEVOTIONAL SERVICES.

The first of these Services will be held in Little Portland-street Chapel, on Thursday Evening, October 26, 1882.

The Service will commence at 8 o'clock precisely, but friends are especially requested to take their places five minutes earlier, so as not to disturb the devotions of others.

It is hoped that all Unitarian, Free Christian, and kindred congregations in London and the suburbs will be well represented.

The Meeting will last not more than seventy-five minutes, and will be conducted by the following gentlemen:—

The Rev. T. SADLER, Ph.D., of Hampstead; EDWIN ELLIS, Esq., of Guildford; the Rev. ROWLAND HILL, of Bedford; the Rev. CHARLES HARGROVE, M.A., of Leeds.

Organist, Wm. Tate, Esq., of Hackney.

At the close of the Service there will be an Offertory at the doors to cover the cost of the Meeting. Large donations are not desired, as the expenses are but small.

CONIGRE CHAPEL, TROWBRIDGE.

The congregation at Trowbridge are making an effort to provide their Chapel with what has long been sorely needed, viz. a new Organ. About £150 have been already subscribed, but as considerably more will be required, the congregation (mainly a working-class one) trust they may have the pleasure of receiving help from friends at a distance, towards the accomplishment of their object.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Rev. J. FELSTREAD, Conigre Parsonage, Trowbridge; or by Mr. E. DOBSON, 3, Gloucester-road, Trowbridge.

A SOIREE will be held in the MEMORIAL HALL, Manchester, on Tuesday, November 7, when the PORTRAIT of the Rev. G. H. WELLS, M.A., will be presented by the subscribers to the Trustees of the Hall, and an ADDRESS to Mr. Wells.

Tea at 5.30. The chair will be taken at 6.30 by the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A.

A Ticket for the Soirée will be sent to every subscriber.

CHAS. T. POYNTING, Hon. Sec.

Fallowfield, Manchester.

THOS. DIGGLES, Treasurer,

22, Booth-st., Manchester.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday October 21, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2105.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

Unwonted Fraternisation ..	693
The Efficacy of Prayer ..	693
Reasonable Religion.—I. ..	695
Jesus Christ's Unrealised Ideal of Religious Unity ..	696

REVIEWS:—

Christianity and Modern Scepticism ..	698
The Magazines ..	698
Literary Notes ..	699

OCCASIONAL NOTES ..

700

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

British and Foreign Unitarian Association, —Council Meeting ..	701
British and Foreign Unitarian Association, —Provincial Meeting in Glasgow ..	702
Unitarianism in Aberdeen ..	705
Altrincham: Welcome to the Rev. J. Edwin Odgers, M.A. ..	705

THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—

The Rev Broke Herford ..	706
--------------------------	-----

UNWONTED FRATERNISATION.

THE late gathering of the Congregational Union at Bristol was distinguished by one incident of a highly interesting character—the fraternisation of clergymen of the Church and Dissenting ministers in the old Broadmead Chapel, where ROBERT HALL and JOHN FOSTER had preached in their day. This alone would suffice to make the recent meeting of the Congregational Union memorable. Whoever suggested the idea, it was a happy thought, and it was carried through in a manner that reflected credit on all parties concerned. The number of the clergy who formed the deputation was considerable; they belonged to various ranks in the Church, and came freely from all parts in the immediate neighbourhood. The speeches delivered were in good taste, and the impression left on the mind after a perusal of the published report of the proceedings is eminently gratifying to one whose sympathies transcend the limits of narrow sectarian distinctions, and who desires to see the old antipathies of Churchmen and Dissenters buried and forgotten. It was a distinct indication of the better time that we believe is coming; and as a sign thereof it was a movement in the right direction. The deputation of the clergy at Bristol was a return of similar courtesies by Nonconformists to Churchmen on a former occasion. It will be remembered that at Leicester the Nonconformist ministers of the town presented their congratulations and good wishes to the Church Congress. In return, a number of the clergy of the Church of England came to the meeting of the Congregational Union to express their brotherly feeling and good wishes. And really this is all. It must not be understood to imply more than it really meant. It had no political significance. The clergy still maintain their rights and privileges as belonging to the Established Church; they do not abate one jot or tittle in this respect; they do not advance one step towards the Nonconformist position; and the Dissenters maintain as strongly as ever their antagonism to the principle of a State Church. There is, consequently, no surrender of principle on either side, while at the same time there is a cordial spirit of friendliness and goodwill. This is just as it should be. Both parties can look back on the affair with the satisfaction that comes of what is honest and sincere. No doubt there is a party in the Church that strongly disapprove of the whole thing; but with the present marked advance of liberal sentiment generally their disapproval does not count for much. Candid thinking minds everywhere are outgrowing the spirit of exclusiveness. Those who still cling to it are finding it more and more difficult to hold their position. Not by any sudden revolution is the change brought about, but by the gradual progress of toleration and enlightenment. If these courtesies between Christian Churches become more frequent, more widely extended, and were more earnestly reciprocated, in a little time a better spirit would universally prevail, and it would be no longer possible to point, as has been done before now, to the want of charity between Christian denominations. In the past, Churchmen and Dissenters have stood too much apart. Often their relations have been anything but cordial. They have not understood each other; they have been strangers to the good points on either side. In future this misunderstanding, it appears likely, will grow less and less, and a better mutual acquaintance take its place. It is high time that it did so; the spirit of distrust and antagonism has ruled long enough. Differences there must be, controversy there will be and need be, for it is by controversy that opinions are sifted, mistakes and errors exposed and the truth elicited. But why should not each party credit the other with sincerity and honourable feeling in the advocacy of its own cause? Take the great question of the disestablishment of the Church. What bitter things have been said by the parties on both sides! What unworthy motives have been attributed by Dissenters to Churchmen for clinging to the Establishment, and by Churchmen to Dissenters for seeking its removal! It has been said that Churchmen were only holding to the loaves and fishes; it has been said that Dissenters in their opposition to State Churchism were only animated by envious feeling of the superior advantages which the Church enjoyed, and that their anxiety to free the Church from "State patronage and control," in order to secure for it a larger liberty, was sheer hypocrisy. Thus, neither party credited the other with an honourable spirit of opposition. The fraternisation at Leicester and Bristol ought to convince all that there are good and true men on both sides, who sincerely take opposite views on this great question.

The clergy who took part in this deputation were evidently aware their motives might be misconstrued. The speakers were therefore very careful to be explicit on this point. They left no room for doubt as to what their position and motives were. The deputation claimed no representative character. The members spoke and acted simply for themselves, and did not conceal the fact that many of their clerical brethren did not approve of the step they were taking. Thus, the Rev. J. M. WILSON, head master of Clifton College, whose speech was one of the best, said: "There are men, Bristol clergy, whose names are conspicuous by their absence from this address, who hold the very highest reputation among us, and whom we on this platform would be the first to honour. When I name such men as Archdeacon NORRIS, Canon MATHER, Mr. RANDALL, Mr. COLE, and Mr. CORNISH, and say that we regret the absence of their names, their names should be received with the deepest respect from you as well as from us. They take a different perspective of Christian duties from those of us who are on this platform. The unity of the Church stands in their foreground, the unity of Christian bodies stands in ours." This is frank and honourable, and equally outspoken was the chairman in his reply:—"It would be altogether folly on the part of sensible men such as you are, and such as we claim to be, if we were to blink this fact—that your theory of Church polity is different from ours, and if we were to overlook the fact that sometimes it may be necessary in the assertion of the one or the other for some of us to come into apparent conflict with one another. If it should be so, we trust, gentlemen, that you will always bear in mind that we mean to be fair opponents, that as far as possible we are prepared to extend the neutral zone in matters in which there is no need of controversy." Dr. MACFADYEN'S reply was equal to the occasion; and we are glad to find that he can speak in an earnest elevated tone, soberly and seriously, without bringing to his aid a number of questionable anecdotes and jokes provoking laughter, like those which marred his opening address. At the close Canon GIRDLESTONE bade his Congregational brethren God-speed. We think all present must have felt that a benediction rested on the meeting which had been so auspiciously carried through by all who took part in it.

THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

SOME men would think nothing too mean or small to ask GOD for, seeing that GOD cares for all; for the cattle of Nineveh, for the ox that treadeth out the corn, for sparrows, for the grass of the field.

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small;
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all.

Some men, again, while they would not hesitate to pray for great things, would think it below the awful dignity of approach to GOD to pray for little things; such as a successful venture in business, a successful hit at cricket, to speak well at a meeting or in "the House," to bring out a book that "takes" with the public. They would reprove a child who should ask GOD for a new doll. But, on the other hand, they would hold that individuals and nations, in great straits and at great crises in their private or public lives, not only may but ought to pray to GOD, the Upholder of the Universe, that He would modify the course of nature in accordance with their great and pressing necessities. In fear of sudden death they would pray for a providential deliverance. In times of famine or drought they would pray for rain or for a "blessing" on the harvest. In times of pestilence or war they would recognise the "visitation" of GOD, and pray for a removal of His heavy hand of affliction. In fact, it is a curious creed of some people that GOD never "visits" His people except in wrath; forgetting that in many cases famine, and in nine cases out of ten war and pestilence are the result of man's ignorance, folly, or crime.

Some lastly would restrict their prayers to spiritual matters. They would pray for the heathen at home and abroad, for the spread of the Gospel, for the true advancement of their country, for all who are in sin and sorrow, for the departed that they may rest in peace, for the salvation of the souls of men—Thy Kingdom come, Thy Will be done.

Now as regards any direct value of prayer to GOD, the writer, while most in sympathy with those first mentioned above, can agree with none of them. If the prayer be in accordance with the Will of GOD, then in any case the thing prayed for will come to pass. If the prayer be not in accordance with the Will of GOD, it would be well that the prayer should not be granted (as it assuredly will not be granted by GOD), and it would be well that the petitioner should be glad that it should not be granted—that he should say and feel, not my will, but Thine be done. For, first, we cannot, if we would, alter the Will of GOD by prayer (notwithstanding many superstitious and idle stories to the contrary), and, next, we ought not to wish to alter the Will of GOD, because it is a good will and a wise will. Christianity is mutable because it has the progressive vitality of a healthy organism. But the Organiser Himself is immutable through the ages. For any direct purpose our prayers are as idle as the childrens' castles in the sand.

Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small, Though with patience He stands waiting, with exactness grinds He all.

CHARLES KINGSLEY many long years ago expressed what we have urged above in clear simple language. "Can you or I," says he, "change GOD's will by any prayers of ours? GOD forbid that we should, my friends, even if we could; for His will is a good will to us, and His name is love." Nay, let us leave all these matters in the hands of GOD, with perfect trust that His "loving and large comprehension of our confused ways and works" (to quote Mrs. OLIPHANT), "must not be less, but infinitely more, indulgent and tender than that of any man," more wise and sufficient than that of ourselves.

Shall we, then, cease to pray? Are all GOD's gracious promises with regard to prayer idle words? Are we to set aside the example of the Son of Man pouring forth in his extremest need and his sorest agony his last passionate pleadings? Shall we leave GOD to deal with us as He will, without one thought, seeing that He will do the best for us, whether we will or no?

Ah! that would be to abandon the most powerful spiritual weapon ever forged by the Father of the spirits of men to overthrow evil and to work good. That would be to run counter to the whole course of the history of the world. So far from throwing away prayer, he who lives a true life, he who would do GOD's work, must and will be instant in prayer. Only his prayer (whether expressed in the simple language of petition that he first learnt at his mother's knee, and that has become endeared to him by time, and, perhaps, by the services of his Church, or however expressed) must not be so much request as communion with GOD. Let him speak with GOD on all things great and small; on his pleasures, his sorrows, his troubles, his desires, his sins, his aspirations, his affections, his work, his failure, his joys; let him babble to GOD (for a man's wisdom before GOD is as the prattling of a child with his father) of his domestic affairs, of his country, of his relationships with his brother men. Then GOD will answer him, and give him liberally, good measure, pressed down and running over. For thus we shall not alter GOD's will, but learn to bend our wills to GOD's. Thus, too, we shall accomplish the greatest spiritual work possible to our nature.

For it is a law of GOD in spiritual things that to seek is to find, as in the fable of the sons working their father's field to find a treasure. "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," and to desire earnestly is to obtain. It is not that prayer or importunity wrests blessings from GOD—that is absurd—but that prayer is itself the blessing. Prayer is not the desire to get, but the need to ask. A true man who believes in GOD cannot absent himself from GOD. He knows he will get, but prayer is a necessity of his nature. It is also a law of GOD in spiritual matters that when the minds of many are eagerly set on one thing and they come together to accomplish it, their hearts will inflame each other, and they will be set on fire with the spirit of enthusiasm that will change the course of the world. And it is thus we appreciate the truth of the words—"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Blessed words, because they are no metaphor, but a reality!

He, then, that will live a true life will be instant in prayer: that is, he will be in accustomed communion with GOD, alike in his sorrows and in his lightest moments, keeping, as far as possible, his daily thoughts in the guidance of GOD. When troubles, public or private, press upon him, his communion may, from the infirmity of human nature, take more closely the form of petition. He will (perhaps) be able to join in National days of thanksgiving and days of humiliation, but if he knows the Father's hand and feels clearly the secular providence of GOD, he will not easily take part in prayers for fine weather or against plague, or what not, because it will be dissonant with his dependence on and his filial relationship to GOD.

It has been said above that prayer is not the desire to get, but the need (or hunger) of the soul to ask; and that it is one of the most important factors in the spiritual work of the world. JESUS passed through forty days of what he described to his disciples as his temptation in the wilderness. Then he was strong enough to work his work. When Diabolus had possession of Mansoul he gave the captains of the town as the choicest weapon of his armoury "a dumb and prayer-less spirit." So when the Ancient Mariner tried to pray, the curse was on him, and

A wicked whisper came and made
My heart as dry as dust.

We would further try to point out that it would be foolish for a man to refuse to pray because he cannot alter the will of GOD, and because GOD will do the best for us, whatever we do, or say, or think. For GOD cannot go beyond our wills. In Ezekiel the pleading cry of GOD breaks out bitterly, "Why will ye die? I have no pleasure at all in the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live." Let us then learn to bend our wills to GOD's. Prayer being, in its essence, as we have pointed out, desire mingled with love and trust, it is certain that without prayer no great spiritual work can be accomplished, and "salvation" becomes a very misty word.

So far from prayer being a useless form, to be scoffed at by the wise man, and to be discarded (as Miss HELEN TAYLOR suggests) with the other superstitions of our infancy, its tremendous spiritual power has often worked mischief when employed by eager-hearted men thinking more of self than of good, and more of their object than of GOD's will, or when employed by strong-willed men not soberly directed by the wisdom of GOD or by love for their fellow men. For if prayer be strong desire, joined with a belief in the power of GOD to accomplish the desire, and not regulated and modified by a sense of right and a willingness to submit to GOD's ways, and if it be a law in spiritual matters that to seek is to find, then such unscrupulous seeker will often find what he seeks to the irreparable ruin of himself and others. That the wicked CENCI could call down death on his absent sons by a curse unknown to them is a superstition of the Middle Ages not yet wholly disbelieved, but there can be no doubt that many a man armed with the panoply of confidence in self, trust in GOD, an overbearing will, and a bad cause, or a good cause made bad by self-seeking, has accomplished superhuman wonders, and wrought incredible wrongs. But this only proves the truth of the adage—corruptio optimi pessima est. Enthusiasm is powerful. Whether powerful for good or evil depends upon the colour with which it is tinted.

Let us add a few quotations from very diverse writers bearing out what has been advanced above, viz., that prayer is not the desire of getting but the necessity of asking; that, though we cannot change the Will of GOD by prayer and ought not to wish to do so, yet that spiritual life is so thin and bloodless without constant communion with GOD that it is hardly to be dignified with the name of life at all. Dr. BAYNE (we think it is) says:—"Prayer is its own answer; to wait till it is heard, and only on condition that it should be heard, is not to pray at all." WALTER SCOTT in "The Heart of Midlothian," says very finely:—"Without entering into an abstruse point of divinity, one thing is plain; namely, that the person who lays open his doubts and distresses in prayer, with feeling and sincerity, must necessarily, in the act of doing so, purify his mind from the dross of worldly passions and interests, and bring it into that state when the resolutions adopted are likely to be selected rather from a sense of duty than from any inferior motive." In a somewhat similar spirit Mr. SHORTHOUSE observes in "John Inglesant":—"His books saved him from utter prostration and despair; they, and a secret help which he acknowledged afterwards; a help which, to men of his nature, certainly does come upon prayer to GOD, to whatsoever source it may be ascribed: a help which in terrible sleepless hours . . . calms the heart, and soothes the brain, and leaves peace and cheerfulness and content in the place of restlessness and despair." Mr. STOPFORD BROOKE, speaking of prayer prayed in bitter need, in "The Spirit of the Christian Life," observes:—"And GOD comes, the Infinite Love, undeterred by our long neglect, touched by no false human jealousy of His honour, smiling at our petulance, pitying our pain, with all the happy readiness of infinite tenderness, to do the best for us, to make us feel that, though we did not see Him, He has been with us all our life." Our last quotation shall be a noble one from ST. AUGUSTINE:—"Longing desire prayeth always, though the tongue be silent. If thou art ever longing, thou art ever praying. When sleepest thou prayest? When desire grows cold."

These passages describe the true efficacy of prayer. Many quotations might be made of a very different sort, describing prayer as efficacious in bringing about the direct interposition of GOD in a miraculous fashion, breaking the laws of nature, and disturbing His orderly providence, and doing good to one or a few at the expense of the suffering of many. The most extraordinary detailed statement of modern times that has come under the notice of the writer is in a historical romance intended for Protestant children, written by the "Protestant" Dr. NEALE, describing how the "Catholic" City of Antwerp was miraculously saved from the unsuspected night attack of certain Protestant invaders by the secret prayers of a nun, who was sustained through her vigil by an angelic whisper. But germs of similar fatuity and pernicious nonsense are to be found in plenty, scattered through old and new writings. With such hard-lived survivals, however, from an ancient order of thought we need not here concern ourselves. H. C.

REASONABLE RELIGION.—I.

WHAT is meant by this term? Is its meaning the same as Rational Religion? Well, hardly, we think. The difference seems to us to be this: While reasonable religion is a religion that can be accepted by the reason after the most searching scrutiny of its credentials and nature, let it come through what medium it may, rational religion is one that comes by way of the logical faculty alone—emotion, sentiment, authority, and revelation being allowed no influence in the decision. Thus understood Rationalism is seen to be a stunting of the mind in matters pertaining to religion, as much so as if the eye alone were employed to do the work of all the rest of the senses—that of touch, taste, smell and hearing. Of course, we know that the attributes of physical things cannot be ascertained in that way, and that by way of the cold, dry light of reason the heart of many of the realities of life cannot be reached. Rationalism insists that the mind wants the truth and the truth alone, not sentiment, or emotion, or the glowing aspects of things which imagination throws over them; and if the sum of being was not essential to the truth, and if there are no facts in the physical world which the eye could not reach, so there are no realities which the reason could not find out without the aid of any other faculties, the Rationalist would be right. But there are facts in the material world that are invisible to the eye, yet tangible to the touch, audible to the ear, and perceptible to the smell; so there are facts in the moral world which reason cannot discern, nor logic weigh. By way of mere logic no noble emotion ever came. Reasonable religion accepts the evidence of every part of man's nature, sentiment, emotion, hope and aspiration, as well as the bare facts of the senses and their laws. The facts of the soul are counted as well as the facts of the intellect. Bearing those realities in mind, they will enable us to understand how it comes about that while the Rationalist, as such, is generally high and dry in his nature, with little of fecund and quickening power over the spirits of men; while even the bolder of irrational dogmas has so often life within himself to such a degree that he is enabled to stir life in others.

We have been led into these reflections by a little volume containing nine discourses that has fallen into our hand, bearing the name of "Reasonable Religion," by the Rev. D. P. FAURE, minister of the Free Protestant Church, Cape Town.* In their special way they are remarkable utterances from the Theistic standpoint, manly, outspoken, and betokening intense conviction on the part of the writer. They have been published, the preface tells us, "because their contents might convince some that Modern Theism does not content itself with criticism and denial, but also has something positive to say; and, in the second place, that some few Sceptics, Agnostics, and Materialists might perhaps by them be brought to see that even when faith in supposed infallible authority, and in all external authority, has been cast aside, there is still solid ground left upon which to found a reasonable faith." We are sure that they will answer the purpose for which they are published. The author is so frank in his admissions, he concedes so much—indeed, more than he need do sometimes—for the sake of clearing the ground, that he is sure to disarm prejudice in all but the most obstinate minds, and so help to rouse at least a hope in the minds of the Agnostic that the glorious faith in GOD and Immortality—that a righteous will of infinite resources rules the universe, and that human beings will live a life of eternal progress—may be true. And if this hope once gets fairly kindled, it will shed a light on many problems to their partial, if not complete, solution.

The first discourse is under the heading, "Morality Independent of Religion," in which the preacher tries to make it clear that morality in and of itself is so important that it needs no extrinsic sanctions. If it could be demonstrated that GOD does not exist, if the future life could be proved a dream of the fancy, it would still be best to live pure and righteous lives. Taking the nature of things as they are, and the relations of men as they actually stand to each other, the author thinks there can be no question about the truth of this statement. But two questions present themselves to our mind as we ponder this position. The first is, how far are we warranted in giving any other name than that of expediency to a course of conduct dictated by calculations of benefits that will be brought to us in this life alone? And whether it would really be a state of happiness after all, which necessitated a constant reference to self-conscious calculations of personal gain or loss, is more than doubtful to us. Surely if we never abandon ourselves to the finest impulses of the heart and conscience, in our relations to our fellow-men, forgetting debateable questions of gain or loss, we shall never attain that glow and exaltation of mind which is alone true joy. Our second question is, whether in shutting out spiritual reasons for living pure and upright lives, and admitting only the temporal benefits in our consideration, the dignity of such conduct would not be so lowered, and its far-reaching importance so departed from, that losing its best significance, it would result in such a loss of lofty enthusiasm for the right and true that in time all kinds of expedients by which an end might be reached would come to occupy a common level? Thus it might come about that ethical considerations would give place, altogether to mere expediences. What then, would become of the morality of men in the true sense of that term? In judging of the results of the working and influence of principles we have not only to consider the first generation of those who adopt them—taking as they do the leaven of that which they leave behind with them, added to the zeal of converts—but also after generations to whom they are simply an inheritance. Expediency lying on a low level of thought has a tendency not only to depress the vision but also to shorten its range. We believe, therefore, that if the spiritual influences could be banished from moral aims, and it were universally accepted that what is most conducive to the temporal welfare of all concerned, is best—which is the Secularist's ideal of life—then not good but evil would in the long run result, if not immediately.

But Mr. FAURE's object in urging his thesis is a good one. He wishes to find a ground of morals for those who have abandoned all religious sanctions. He is alarmed at the present aspects of the world's thought. He believes that there is going on in our midst a change in men's conceptions, a more important change than any which the world has undergone since the downfall of paganism and the overthrow of the Roman Empire. Nay, he goes further than that, for he holds that "the present revolution in the opinions and beliefs of men, of all classes of men, the highest cultured as well as the labouring classes, stands unparalleled in the world's history." He is not far wrong in saying this, and the reasons for it are not far to seek. Formerly intellectual movements were confined to the pen; what knowledge or education existed was confined to them; and the great masses, ignorant of their meaning, toiled and suffered, and obeyed their superiors without much thought. Now some degree of knowledge is the possession of all, and what the thinker works out in his study, or genius discovers in its high hour of intuition, is borne on the wings of the Press to the home of the working men, as well as to the halls of learning, and the libraries of the rich. No sooner is a thought uttered in our day than it seems as if the very atmosphere diffused it everywhere to mingle among the potent influences that determine the destinies of mankind. We live in momentous times, when everyone who has a word of power to utter has a vaster responsibility than ever before, as he speaks to a multitude that no man can number. In greatness, if not in its intrinsic nature, the revolution, in the opinions of men, stands unparalleled in the world's history.

But Mr. FAURE must have written some of his words hastily, as the preacher is often bound to do in preparing his weekly tale of work, when he says that at the time of the downfall of the Roman Empire "the question was a comparatively small one of a change of belief. It was Pagan religion against Christian religion. It was the purer creed subverting the weaker one. Now it is something very different. Now the question is not this religion or that religion, it is religion or no religion." We should have thought that GIBBON alone would have furnished him with facts for a different conclusion. All the testimony of the times he speaks of bears the same witness. Scepticism had eaten out the heart of faith from great multitudes among the thoughtful classes, while coarse and savage superstitions made the masses drunk with fanaticism. That immorality of the grossest kind prevailed is not only the testimony of PAUL in the earlier chapters of his Epistle to the Romans, but also of the Satirists, and the serious moralists and historians of the time. If ever a new faith was needed to redeem men from utter unbelief in GOD and His moral laws, and to lift them up to life and righteousness, it was when Christianity set out on its beneficent mission of converting the Roman Empire. In our day Agnosticism widely prevails; but bad as moderns are, they have not sunk to the depths of vice when the old gods had lost their power; and the new faith was but beginning its work. Mr. FAURE, however, is so anxious that what is pure and good shall prevail in the relations of men, that he becomes vehement and eloquent in his urgings that morality belongs to the nature of man, and that it is the best for him, religion or no religion, whether existence ends with the grave or it extends through eternity. Nay, he is so urgent on this point that he goes out of his way to insist that the time of Israel's non-belief in the future life was the period of its highest and purest morality. And he contrasts the incentives to pure and noble living of the Agnostic favourably with those that influence the followers of CALVIN and KNOX. He goes on to urge that "Morality is independent of religion, independent of belief in any theological dogma. Morality, so far from standing or falling with theology, has often been much the worse for being influenced by theology." He goes on to show that the orthodox theological doctrine of the Atonement has a paralysing effect on the moral nature, as also the belief that we must be good to avoid hell and gain heaven; and if there were no religion apart from these and similar dogmas he would be right; but surely in these statements he forgets for the moment the well understood distinction between religion and theology—between true piety, love of a faith in GOD, and the specific doctrines he mentions. He urges that if men cannot believe in another life they should pitch this one high so as to get all the good out of it they can. To live in order to eat and drink, to enjoy mere sensuous pleasure, is to live a mere animal life. "The basis of morals is in the higher impulses of our human nature," he insists, "which do not suffer us to rest content with a mere indulgence of the lusts of the flesh, which make us miserably unhappy, while our higher aspirations are not satisfied, which are incessantly urging us to strive after higher joys than the material." Yes; this is true of the thoughtful and good, the brave and pure, but what of those who are not thoughtful, but who are lost to the loftier impulses in utter indifference, and in the urgings of passion and appetite which never look beyond the moment's gratification?

* Published by Ovan de Sanot de Villiers and Co. Cape Town. 1882.

But we have written more at length than we intended when we began. Our comments on the author's religious teachings in opposition to the lower tendencies of our time we must reserve for another article.

W. M.

BEDFORD CHAPEL, Bloomsbury, will be re-opened for service to-morrow, after having been closed for several weeks for painting and repairs.

JESUS CHRIST'S UNREALISED IDEAL OF RELIGIOUS UNITY.

The following paper was read by the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS at the Unitarian Conference, Saratoga, U.S.A., September 19:—

What have "Unitarian and other Christian Churches" to do with Jesus Christ's or any other ideal of religious unity? Wherever such Christians exist, in a really living state, they exist as Christians-militant; they make some people happy, but they are apt to make others miserable; they preach a gospel of charity and freedom, but at present they provoke agitation, opposition, disunion. What can such Christians have to do with religious unity?

The same question might have been asked of the master himself, with even keener significance. The Scribes and Pharisees, and good people who were not Scribes and Pharisees, were probably content enough till he appeared. Who was he, a poor carpenter, with his handful of questionable followers,—fishermen, tax-gatherers, and the like,—who was he, to challenge the venerable orthodoxy of Israel, and to even seem to correct Moses and supplant the Temple? So they harassed him while he lived: and speedily hurried him to the cross. And yet this Jesus the divider was really Jesus the uniter; and he who seemed to come as a discord came really as a harmoniser, whose heavenly ideals, even now, not yet realised. May we not, with all humanity, say that it is so with us? We are at the earlier stages of our career, even as Jesus was when the Jews misunderstood and killed him. We are only dividers as Jesus was a divider, when he said to the Jews—"You are not the only children of God. God is a spirit, and his worshippers are they who worship Him in spirit and in truth." In like manner, we are bearing testimony to truths that divide men only because they come into conflict with traditional beliefs and methods that have already broken up, and that now persistently break up the brotherhood. Our teachings will cease to divide men when men cease to condemn one another.

But we are not the only dividers in Christendom. The condemning creeds of Christendom divide also, but they divide because they cast out; while we divide only because men will not give in to the truths that would make casting out impossible. We shall cease to be dividers when all Christians cease to be excluders. Others divide because they set up narrow terms of communion; we divide because our terms of communion are at present too broad. We offer to Christendom the ideal of a universal Church. It may be an audacious thing to do, seeing that we are comparatively but few; but it is not our fault that we are few. They who disparage us on that account have the remedy in their own hands. They can come from behind their sectarian entrenchments, and join us on the open field. Jesus and his twelve poor followers—and one of them a traitor—were also a few, but they held the key of the world; and gave to humanity an ideal of religious unity which is to-day so far from being realised that many begin to doubt whether it will ever be realised at all. But we are trying to realise it. If we are excluded, we reply by announcing truths that shut out no one. We bear witness to the unity that underlies all diversity. We are not a sect; for we have not cut ourselves off, and we cut off no one. We may be "the voice of one crying in the wilderness;" but we are trying to prepare the way for the Church of the Future, whose terms of communion will be co-extensive with the supreme beatitude of Jesus:—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

It is not egotism or self-assertion, then; it is a gentle and grateful acceptance of a divine ideal, when we say that there is not only some resemblance between Jesus the apparent divider and ourselves, but that we are actually bearing witness to the very truths he told—truths which for 1,800 years have been working in the world, not without results, but ineffectually, so far as complete acceptance is concerned. We humbly claim to represent that very doctrine of universality which came as such good tidings from his lips, but which, strange to say, his followers have seemed so little to care for,—which indeed, by their banning of one another, they have seemed so ready to repudiate or ignore. It gives us no pleasure to talk about these things, but we cannot help it while these things remain. We are not Sectarians, disputing for our side; but pleaders for the religious unity for which we believe Jesus longed.

What, then, was Jesus Christ's ideal of religious unity? It is found in such living characteristic sayings as these: "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy," "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God," "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." What we submit to Christendom, then, is this—that Jesus Christ declared the "merciful" should find mercy; that he promised to the "pure in heart" that they should see God; that he included among the children of God "the peacemakers;" that he expressly made mutual "love" the test of discipleship to himself; and hence, that his ideal was, religious unity on the basis of mercifulness, purity of heart, the promotion of peace, and mutual love. To some that may seem a poor account of the terms of Christian communion: but what would have happened if Christendom had all along adhered to it, and been loyal to it? The history of the past eighteen hundred years would have been unstained by some of its foul chapters; "religious wars," bigotries, persecutions and excommunications would have been unknown; and by this time we should be praying, with some hope of its fulfilment, the dear old prayer;—"Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is heaven."

Alas! the Master's ideal was too high for poor humanity. The evil spirit that leads men to exclude and condemn found its way into the assemblies of the early Christians; it made a home for itself at Rome; it tabernacled at Wittenberg, and pitched its tent at Geneva, and sat with the divines at Westminster, and, for all I know, has been heard of even in Andover and Chicago, Boston and Saratoga; and to-day, after all these years of Christianity, one of our most difficult undertakings is to make way against the solid opposition of churches that would turn the grace of God and the mercy of heaven in to the heritage of a few; and now, when we talk of Christian unity, it is like the telling of an idle dream.

The great creeds of Christendom, difficult to comprehend in many respects, are always clear about the clauses that condemn. The Christian Church, as an organisation, has never been really favourable to freedom and inclusiveness; and, if we took its verdicts as echoes of the decisions of Heaven, we should be driven to the conclusion that the great bigot and excommunicator of the universe was the Creator of it. What strange infatuation is it that has led men to imagine that the favours of the Almighty are distributed with reference to the opinions held by such poor frail creatures as we are! And yet these opinions, embodied in creeds, have been set up as the measuring lines of the Infinite; and have actually been made the test of fitness for His kingdom. "Believe and be saved" is their great persuasive: "Believe not and be lost" is their leaning argument.

If we indulge the hope that in the life to come we shall remember what we thought here, it is worth while asking ourselves how we shall regard some of the ideas that now seem to have such sway. If the angels can be amused (and I hope they are, and know not what there is to prevent them) it must surely amuse them to think of the old quarrels about words and creeds, and especially of the old imagining that heaven would be peopled only from these favoured churches on earth. But perhaps they are too sorry for us to be amused; and think of us as we think of men who are condemned to work for life in the mines, and who come at last to judge of all things by the light of their own poor lamps.

How it must astonish a real Calvinist—I mean a human being with all the spiritual limitations of Calvinism—to find himself surrounded in the heavenly world (when he gets there) by men and women whose portion he believed would be the outer darkness! I like to picture to myself the meeting between Cyril and Hypatia; or the meeting between Servetus and Calvin; or the meeting between John Wesley and Theodore Parker. I suppose they all have to make the best of it when they find that the great God is not a partisan,—that the Creator of us all loves us all,—that the Father is not as partial as some men believed Him to be. But of this we may be sure, that if any of the children do not fall in with the heavenly Father's ways, He will not send any of their brothers or sisters away to please them. So John Calvin will have to make it up with Servetus, or go wandering on in the dark until he does. But, indeed, it is our joy to believe there will be no difficulty in this, but that the tides of divine charity will so quickly flow into all hearts that half the bliss of heaven will consist in reconciling the enmities of earth.

Why cannot we begin that new life now? Only one thing is wanted;—that we shall let the Father speak within us all,—that we shall cease to force ourselves to believe what our baffled and hard pressed brothers said centuries ago,—that we should do as Jesus did;—listen for the voice within. Yes, it is the dead hand of the past, and not the living spirit of the present, that builds these barriers between the hearts of those who might be comrades and brothers. And we speak of these things now, not as antagonists, but because we want to be comrades and brothers. We speak of them, too, because the hour is propitious, and because the signs of better things are all around us. Thousands upon thousands of good and gracious men and women in all the Churches are better than their creeds,—are, in spirit, with us, in spite of their creeds,—are quietly waiting to see the old creeds float away on the rising, freshening tide. Thousands upon thousands of others are willing enough to let us go unmolested, unthreatened, and even cheerily saluted, on our search after truth; and I suppose our presence here in this building is a pleasant indication of that. If any, then, on the other side tell me I have drawn a picture they cannot recognise as their portrait, I can only reply—I do not mean it for you at all. I mean it for those whom it does resemble; for those who still exclude us here, and predict our exclusion hereafter.

We venture, then, to ask the maintainers of condemning creeds to give an account of themselves in the light of the Master's ideal. We tell them, not in any spirit of assumption, not even as disputants, but as brothers, that they mistake the Father; that their creeds that damn, their votes that exclude, their tests that bar, are as nothing to us—that, in our judgments, they only shut up the makers and maintainers of them to, at best, the thin and narrow boundaries of the heavenly kingdom—to an artificial church of man's creating, which is not the church of the living God at all. We answer their threat's with Christ's beatitudes. We put over the Athanasian Creed "our dear Lord's Prayer." We tell them that their anathemas are rejected by the spirit of this better time, from which neither they nor their creeds will be able to escape, and which contradicts, in our streets and homes, on Monday, the maledictions uttered at the altar on Sunday. We tell them that the men who, in venturing to distribute the allotments of the Almighty, drove Priestley from his native land, and sent Theodore Parker to perdition, went into the spiritual land of Egypt and the House of Bondage in doing it, from which they will be led into the promised land, here or hereafter, only by such men as these whom they would have driven into the outer darkness. We tell them that they who doubt or deny the salvation of "heretics," such as Channing, or Emerson, or Florence Nightingale, need above all things to sit at their feet; and that they may, perhaps, have to do so in heaven, to learn the lessons of universal charity they would not learn on earth. We tell them that the New World has answered the Old World—that a voice from Cambridge has answered the voice from Geneva:—

"Must it be Calvin, and not Christ?
Must it be Athanasian Creeds,
Or holy water, books, and beads?
Must struggling souls remain content,
With councils and decrees of Trent?
And can it be enough for these
The Christian Church the year embalms
With evergreens and boughs of palm,
And fills the air with litanies?"

Then, if we asked by what right and on whose authority we say these things, we fall back upon our ideal of a perfect God, and upon the unrealised ideal of Jesus; for we must believe in a perfect God at all hazards, and stand by that ideal against the world, seeing that it is this very ideal which enables us to believe in God or the future at all. And if we are asked how we know that our ideal is more than a pleasant dream, we say that such an ideal carries its own evidence with it. Because it soars beyond all our haggard doubts and narrowing fears; because it helps us to grow out of our poor sectarian monotones and dead levels, and shines like a heavenly sun upon our dark earth-problems, it must be true. But we have no choice. We must cleave to our ideal of a perfect God, as Jesus did. But a God who set up ecclesiastical tests, or who, by threats of eternal loss or by promises of eternal gain, could seek to bribe or frighten honest men into the suppression of their thoughts; a God who could shut out Spinoza from His mercy, or Bruno from His pity, or Servetus from His goodness, or who could for ever exclude any one from his redeeming love, is not a perfect God.

What, then, are we to do? Our duty is plain. We must urge upon men to consider whether all attempts at religious finality have not been mistakes,—whether our forerunners and ourselves have not all been on pilgrimage,—whether the perfect ideal is not even now waiting for its fulfilment, and whether that ideal will not at last be realised only in the realisation of Jesus Christ's ideal,—in the universal belief in a God who gives the kingdom of heaven to the poor in spirit, who comforts the mourners, who feeds those who hunger, and refreshes those who thirst after righteousness, who loves the merciful, who shows Himself to the pure in heart, who calls the peace-makers His children, who champions the persecuted, and keeps ready for them the kingdom of heaven.

It may be said that this carries us beyond Christendom altogether, and includes all seekers after truth as acceptable to God, even in the so-called Pagan world. I reply, so much the better. There are other names "under heaven," besides the name of Jesus, wherein men may be saved. Jesus himself being the judge, "they shall come from the East and from the West, from the North and from the South," into the kingdom of heaven, and it is under his guidance that there—

"In one immortal throng we view, Pagan and Christian, Greek and Jew."

The ideal of Jesus includes them all.

But it is time to describe a still wider, a still more inclusive circle; to pass, not only beyond the confines of the Christian Church, but even beyond the sphere of things usually connected with the word Religion, in order to ask whether it is not true that in our own time the brightest intimations of the divine ideal of unity are to be found in the so-called secular life of our nineteenth century civilisation. Everywhere the spirit of unity, the spirit of brotherhood is taking the place of the old spirit of division, antagonism and selfishness. Everywhere the great discovery is being made that Paul was absolutely right when he said that "God hath made of one every nation of men, for to dwell on all the face of the earth," and that this contains as much good political economy as good religion, much and as cosmopolitan common sense as Christian love. Is not that same spirit seen in all the most characteristic movements of our time, for the abolishing of slavery, for the relief of the poor, for the healing of the sick, for the doing away with the spirit of caste? and we cannot leave these out of our reckoning in thinking of religious unity; for what lies at the heart of all these things but the spirit of brotherhood? and what glorifies and sanctifies, underlies, overarches, and enfolds this human ideal of human brotherhood but the divine ideal of the fatherhood of God? Yes! the advance of humanity is the realisation of the thought of God; and it is only in the unity of this advance, as comprehending all forms and forces of human society, that we can see the full significance of the ideal of Jesus which found expression in his great prayer, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven."

It is here, in our search for the ideal unity, that we come face to face with that which touches the very highest point of religious idealism in our day,—the universality of the true priesthood, not of a sacerdotal order, but of man, a—priesthood whose temple floor is the whole earth, whose altar is for living and not for dying sacrifices, whose incense is the offering of just and gracious deeds,—a priesthood that has for its ritual the daily intercourse of humanity,—a priesthood that knows no consecration but such as is brought by a consecrating affection, which binds together in one holy communion service of loyalty to God the little maiden dutifully desiring to learn her letters, and the great statesman, longing for the inspiration that shall lead him wisely through the social jungles of his time. Not yet achieved is this, not yet even consciously approached by the majority, but ever possibly ever before us, as the dream of the best and really greatest of mankind.

The workers for religious unity, then, have to win not only the church, but the world. They have to convert not only Synods and Assemblies, Conferences and Churches, but Cabinets and Parliaments, Federations and Councils. They have to lead to the feet of the great uniter, clothed in their right minds, not only bishops and priests, theologians and preachers, but kings and presidents, statesmen and soldiers, princes and labourers, politicians and schoolmasters, merchants and editors, that all may conspire to keep "the green pastures" unsullied, and "the still waters" calm, for the one flock scattered over the continents and islands of the world. This is the ideal work, and he who has this ideal nearest to his own heart must be nearest to the heart of Jesus.

And now, if, in your name, I say that this is our ideal work, it will be in no mood of arrogance or conceit. It is a simple matter of fact that, in our faith, we have not the faintest echo of a damnatory clause; it is a simple matter of fact that we do not set up doctrines, or opinions, or rituals, as standing between God and any of his children; it is a simple matter of fact that we stand unreservedly on the great sayings of Jesus, that the merciful shall find mercy, that the peacemakers are the children of God, that the pure in heart shall see Him; and that they who most truly love one another are most truly His disciples. We can, therefore, quite naturally rise above all sectarianisms to the work which is as high above sectarianism as the heavens are higher than the earth—to the work which is the true ideal of Jesus, the creation, not only of a united church, glorious a thing as that would be, but of a united humanity. This is the ideal work, and we must face it, though its magnitude oppress, and its splendour dazzle us.

What though we be but few in so large a world? We are not too few for faith and hope; and they tell us it was a lonely man on Patmos who heard "the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders;" and who saw the "great multitude which no man could number, out of every nation, and of all tribes and peoples and tongues, standing before the Throne," while "every created thing which is in heaven and on the earth, and under the earth, and on the sea, and all things that are in them," joined in the mighty psalm of praise, and blessing, and honour, and glory for ever. And if he—the lonely dreamer—could see and hear those things, surely we, who are not lonely, may, and we may be sure that the ideals of man are the promises of God.

BELFAST.—The Rev. A. Lancaster, of Whitechurch, Salop, has received and accepted the office of missionary to the Domestic Mission, Stanhope-street, Belfast.

THE STRANGER IN LONDON.—That the great City will ere long be hardly recognisable by its former denizens, all the world has heard. The visitor passing up the Thames now finds his eye gratified by the many handsome edifices recently erected. As he reaches the famous Victoria Embankment, there rises over him on the right hand the new Times office, and on the left hand the new tower-crowned works of Messrs. JAMES ERSS & Co., both phases of Italian architecture. It may be said that these two buildings are types of the far-reaching business energy of the nineteenth century, for it has resulted from such means that these two establishments have brought themselves to the fore, and that the annual issue of each has come to be estimated by millions. During the last year the number of copies of the Times issued is estimated at 16,276,000, while the number of packets of ERSS'S COCOA sent off in the same period is computed at 14,749,695. The latter is a large total, when it is borne in mind that in 1830 the consumption of COCOA throughout the whole kingdom was but 425 382lbs., there then existing no preparation of it such as this, which by the simple addition of boiling water would yield a palatable drink. Truly time may be said to work many changes.

Reviews.

Christianity and Modern Scepticism. By the Rev. A. G. Girdlestone, M.A. London: Hodder and Stoughton. 1882.

The spirit of Mr. Girdlestone's book is worthy of all praise. It is frank and manly. It carries us right on with its unfailing openness. The conviction that we are in contact with a man of complete sincerity in word and manner is not frequently "borne in upon us" at the time when writers in theology attempt to teach what they secretly doubt, and when instead of giving us the light of certainty they make their own inner darkness visible by the haze of their faint belief. But Mr. Girdlestone so speaks as to give the welcome and helpful impression that he himself knows where he stands, and is able to show foundations beneath his feet, whether they are such as will be stable to others or not. Another merit in his book is his estimate of "doubters" and "unbelievers." He does not attribute "doubt" and "unbelief" to depravity of heart. The old notion that rejection of the Evangelical faith was due to the carnality of man's moral nature, to the rebelliousness of the will against God's laws, or to gigantic pride of intellect, finds no mention here. Mr. Girdlestone takes very different ground, and attaches no moral stigma to intellectual un-faith. Perhaps the mental phenomena out of which his book has arisen would not have appeared, or would not have been so wide-spread if the Christian Church had but caught and held the spirit in which he regards the doubts of our time.

The arguments of the book must be appraised by the limited intentions and aims of their author. Mr. Girdlestone distinctly tells us that they are addressed primarily not to sceptics, but "to my fellow Christians, and especially to my fellow-workers, whether in the ministry, in the schoolroom, or the home." With this express avowal of the author's purpose as to the class for whom he has written, several times repeated in other forms, it would be unjust to judge his reasonings by the standard of effectiveness for the conviction of sceptics, or by their value as answers to the objections and theories of sceptics. Mr. Girdlestone's appeal is confined to his fellow Christians. And this for a very good and sufficient reason. He has searched for the causes of religious doubt, first and foremost, among Christians themselves; and having found them or most of them in that quarter, he thinks it the business and duty of Christians to remove them. And herein Mr. Girdlestone is no doubt perfectly right: scepticism is the legitimate offspring of untenable, irrational, dogmatic Christianity.

Mr. Girdlestone traces the causes of religious doubt to four things:—

1. Inconsistency of the lives of believers with their creed.
2. The Scriptures, as often taught and handled by believers, and in consequence by unbelievers.
3. Natural science, as often viewed both by believers and unbelievers.
4. Philosophy, as often ignored or misused by believers and unbelievers.

From this it will be seen at once that Mr. Girdlestone goes upon a track with which most liberal religionists are familiar, and there is, therefore, no necessity for our following him minutely. His wish is to guard those of the same faith as himself against the partialisms of opinion and errors of method which have been prolific generators of unbelief. And with this cardinal object in view his remarks under the second head are particularly noteworthy in emphasising a radical defect of orthodoxy in the method of using the Bible. In considering the claims and objects of the Scriptures he adopts the now common position that it is an injustice to the Bible, and an injury to its real purpose, to take it as a text-book of science, or a standard of chronology. Having illustrated this point, he proceeds to the important matter of the true principle of interpreting the Scriptures. And here he notes the serious damage done to Christianity by the fatal habit Christian teachers have of divorcing minute textual criticism and exposition from the main objects and tendency of the Bible as a whole. With Canon Farrar he urges that in the use of isoated texts and fragments one must consider (1) the true meaning of the words; (2) who spoke or wrote them; (3) their connection; (4) the circumstances under which they were addressed; (5) the persons to whom they were addressed, with the impression they were originally intended to convey; (6) any apparently opposing statements; and (7) decide finally on all in the clearest light of the life and teaching of Jesus Christ. Forgetfulness of these essential criteria of true interpretation has led to wrong methods of handling the Scriptures, and these naturally have suggested and justified similar methods as employed by non-Christians in holding the Bible up to ridicule. Is it noticeable that where passages of Scripture are discussed in sceptical works they are almost uniformly dealt with unfairly and in a narrow spirit? Mr. Girdlestone answers without hesitation that "this treatment does not arise of necessity from anything unfair or narrow in the sceptic, but from methods inherited or derived from generations of Christian teachers." He, therefore, strongly presses upon his fellow-believers that the general scope of the Scriptures and the due proportion of truths are important to be borne in mind with reference to the prevention of scepticism.

Another point which he very rightly accentuates is the relation of Christianity and Secularism to the practical realities and duties of this life. He plainly sees and admits that one of the sources, if not the principal source of the strength of Secularism, is its tenet that as the fact of a future life is at all events susceptible of some degree of doubt, while the fact and the necessities of a present life are matters of direct sensation, it is therefore prudent to attend exclusively to the concerns of that which is certain and immediate, not wasting energies required for present duties by a preparation for remote and merely possible contingencies. Now, on this creed Mr. Girdlestone contends, and contends with the force of truth, that Christianity is the highest and best Secularism. He is compelled to admit that there is, or at least has been, too much justification for the opinion that "if everybody minded religion the world would come to a dead-lock." This opinion is due to the exaltation of creeds and ceremonies at the expense of the every-day religion of goodness; to the acceptance of Christianity only as an insurance against a future misery and as a passport to a future bliss; and to the association of it with asceticism. But he argues that, truly apprehended and plainly taught and shown in our lives, Christianity is the best Secularism, that it works better than any other system in our ordinary pursuits and occupations. It really formulates the principles for industry and honesty, for mutual respect and kindness between employers and employed, for happiness in home life, for purity and righteousness in social relations, and in civil and national affairs; and it adds what Secularism cannot offer in pointing "to a power beyond ourselves to aid our feeble and fickle energies in carrying out such purposes."

In our judgment this is the true position to take on the Secularistic creed. Christianity, as the science of right-living, has been weakened as a theory of religion and robbed of practical power as a working religion, by being mainly represented as "other worldiness." But it is a religion primarily and essentially for this life, containing all the best that Secularism can present, and adding elements of inspiration for the individual, domestic, social, and civil duties of life of which Secularism is destitute. Moreover, even while it has been enfeebled by being divorced from practical life and viewed chiefly as a preparation for the future, it has produced the highest style of Secularists. To whom do we owe the great advances of the last fifty years in social, political, and religious freedom? To men who were Secularists pure and simple? Or to men who were Christian Secularists, and who found the inspiration of their beneficent lives and works in the Christian royal commandment, and in Christ's ideal of the Kingdom of God on earth? The truth is that the contrast between Secularism and Christianity as to this life, which at one time had some justification, has ceased to be a real one, owing to a variety of causes which have given dominance to the conception of Christianity as a religion for actual life, one of these causes undoubtedly being the enforcement by Secularists themselves of the priority of the claims of this life upon our attention. But so far from being inimical to Christianity, this is the genius of Christianity itself, and more and more is it coming to be the actual operation of Christian minds and energies in our midst in various departments of progressive, beneficent activity. For ourselves, we see no necessity for antagonism between Christianity and Secularism on this point. On the contrary, we maintain, with Mr. Girdlestone, that Christianity is here all that Secularism is, and if Secularists reject enriching truths which give a fuller, nobler and more energising conception to the Christian estimate of life, the rejection is their loss, or at least it would be to us a loss. What we heartily endorse in Mr. Girdlestone's plea to Christians is that they should make prominent in their teaching and their lives that Christianity is a religion competent to make our domestic life more pure, our intellectual life more expansive, our social life more wholesome, our municipal and civil life more healthy, just, and righteous, our religious life more real. Failing to do this, it is valueless. But in these directions it has proved itself effective, notwithstanding the misrepresentations by which professors of it have attenuated its practical force and shorn it of strength as a principle of reform.

There are other points in Mr. Girdlestone's book worthy of commendation; but we have confined ourselves to two, and the spirit in which these are treated is indicative of the general tenor of the work. There is much in the volume which we cannot endorse, but we have preferred to select what we agree with rather than point out disagreements. Were Mr. Girdlestone arguing with sceptics themselves we should be compelled to condemn his work as inadequate for the purpose of refuting modern doubt. It falls far short of an effective reply to the objections of non-Christians, and is open to answer on several not unimportant points from thinkers of that class. But as Mr. Girdlestone expressly tells us that it is not those he addresses, but his "fellow-Christians," and "especially his fellow-workers," whose faulty teaching it is, he thinks, that is much to blame for "the disease of faith called doubt," we can honestly and heartily say that his work presents, in a tone of winsome candour, considerations and arguments which deserve their immediate attention, and which should effect a change in their treatment of what to them is unbelief.

S. F. W.

November Magazines.

Longman's Magazine.—There is always special interest connected with the publication of a new magazine, especially when it comes from so great a house as Messrs. Longmans. But first numbers are proverbially disappointing, and are often more hopeful in the promise of good things to come than in present fruition. Longman's Magazine is at least a marvel of cheapness, giving 124 pages of good matter in clear type and excellent paper for sixpence, just one-fifth the price of its predecessor Fraser, which died in the odour of respectability from extreme old age. Literature of the lightest description is well represented by the first instalment of Mr. James Payn's story of London Life, entitled "Thicker than Water," which is lively and attractive, and Mr. F. Anstey's "The Black Poodle," which borders too closely upon broad farce. The American novelist, Mr. Howells, gives a charming description of "Lexington," the pleasant country town in Massachusetts, where the first blood was shed in the war of American Independence; and Mr. E. A. Freeman, who has but lately returned from the States, gives an exceedingly interesting and instructive paper on "Some Points in American Speech and Customs," showing what some of us have long known; that the American twang is a survival of the old Puritanism, and that many pure "Yankeeisms" are also survivals of good old English words and phrases which have gone out of use in England, and which ignorant people therefore mistake for American inventions. On the whole, paradoxical as it seems, Mr. Freeman declares that he found less difference between England and America than he finds between England and Scotland, both in speech and in social customs. The remaining articles are "A Gossip on Romance," by R. L. Stevenson, a very pleasantly written paper; "Departed," a not very powerful poetic tribute to the memory of "W. M. A.," by the author of "John Halifax," and two brief scientific articles, "Atoms, Molecules, and Ether Waves," by Professor Tyndall; and "Our Origin as a Species," by the venerable Professor Owen, both instructive "Fragments of Science," from the pens of two of our foremost writers. We give a cordial greeting to the new comer, and doubt not that it will soon rank high among our monthly favourites.

The Journal of the National Indian Association contains articles on the "Administration of Travancore," by Mr. R. M. Macdonald; the "History of the Vernacular Press in the Western Presidency," by Nusservanji Seriarji Ginwallai; "The Wants and Claims of Education in India;" "Caste among Domestic Servants," by A. S. Beveridge; "Female Education in India"; and a continuation of "The Spoilt Boy," a curious story illustrative of domestic life, by Tekchand Thakur. Under the head of "Bengali Publications," we observe appreciative notices of "A Short Life of Mary Carpenter," by Babu Rajanikanta Gupta, intended for the ladies of Hindu homes, and "Anecdotes from Eminent Lives," a little pamphlet of forty-eight pages presenting the principal incidents in the lives of Theodore Parker and Sister Dora.

The Magazine of Art has a very fine frontispiece, "Maiden Dreams," etched by Laclauze, from an original drawing by G. L. Seymour, in reference to which Mr. W. H. Pollock has contributed a pretty song. "America in Europe" is an interesting account of the development of the new school of American art, especially in Paris, with engraving of some of the striking pictures by American artists in the Salon of 1882. Among other contributions are quaint illustrations of two recent Japanese romances; "Sculpture in Piccadilly," with engravings of ancient crosses and monuments; an illustrated biographical sketch of "Giovanni Costa, Patriot and Painter," by Julia Cartwright, with fine porphyry Sir F. Leighton; "Vellauris and its Allies," by Cosmo Monkhouse; and "The Graphic Arts," by Professor Sidney Colvin, with a remarkably fine study of a head, engraved by W. J. Linton, after a drawing by Titian.

Cassell's Magazine continues the two serial stories entitled "No Proof," and "Was it Wise to Change," and has also the conclusion of another story—rather a poor one—"His Own Shadow." Much more useful and really attractive papers are, "College Clubs," by R. E. Johnston, B.A.; "The Classical Quantocks," an account by the Rev. F. Hastings of the beautiful district in Somersetshire where Coleridge and Wordsworth wrote their earliest poems; "How many Senses have Animals?" by W. Harris, M.A.; and "The Common Deformities of Children," by the Family Doctor. The programme for the next volume is exceedingly attractive.

We have also received from Messrs. Cassell and Co.:—
Our Happy Family, being the Little Folks' Annual for 1883.

Greater London, a narrative of its People and its Places, by Edward Walford, accompanied with a large coloured map of the metropolitan district. This is a pendant to Cassell's Old and New London, and promises to be as generally valuable and interesting a work. "The environs of London are full of historic memories, which are known to but few even among its residents, whilst the many thousand persons who every year visit the various interesting localities around the metropolis lose much real enjoyment from their ignorance of the associations which render them memorable. All the reminiscences, stories, and traditions that form the history of these districts will be narrated in a popular and interesting manner in Greater London, whilst the work will be illustrated throughout with engravings of remarkable monuments, mansions, ancient buildings and picturesque scenery; portraits of noted personages, &c."

The Quiver commences a new volume, and is full of interesting stories, sketches and essays, partly of a religious character.

The World of Wonders, Part I. of a reissue of this highly popular work, with an account of all the wonders brought to light by more recent discoveries.

The Illustrated Universal History, Part XVIII.
The New Testament Commentary for English Readers, edited by Bishop Ellicott, Part XXXII.

The Bible Educator, edited by Dean Plumptre, Part VIII., and Cassell's Almanac for 1883, full of attractive illustrations and useful information as formerly.

We greatly regret to hear of the death of Dr. Burnell, the eminent Sanskrit scholar.

Literary Notes.

In consequence of the unsettled state of Egypt, M. Renan has delayed his visit to Sinai and Palestine till February, 1883. He is hard at work in the meantime on his history of Israel and on the index of his "Origines du Christianisme," which is partly in type.

The Bampton Lectures of Mr. Hatch, on the "Organization of the Early Christian Churches," of which the second edition, with revised notes and a new preface, has recently been issued by Messrs. Rivington, seem to be more fortunate than their predecessors in attracting attention abroad. Lately, on taking up the first number of Signor Borghi's new magazine, we were surprised to find the opening review was devoted to them, and wondered that an Italian audience should be supposed to care for anything so typically English as a Bampton lecture. Now we hear that Mr. Hatch's book is being translated into German. It is the only series of Bampton Lectures which has ever been considered worth reproducing in Germany for the benefit of German theological students.

A TRANSLATION of M. Gabriel Charmes's "Experiences of Egyptian Life" will shortly be published by Messrs. Bentley; and à propos of Egypt a new book by the author of "Eau-de-Nil" is, we understand, in the press, entitled "Azahar; or, Journal of a Residence in Spain."

Dr. McCosh, formerly of Belfast, and now principal of an American college, has issued a programme of a philosophic series. "For the last thirty years," he says, "I have been taking my part in the philosophic discussions of the age. I have a few things yet to say before I willingly leave the arena. These have long occupied my thoughts, and they relate to thrilling topics of the day on which many are anxious to have light thrown. In order to bring my views before the thinking public I start a philosophic series, to consist of small volumes of about sixty pages each, in stout paper, at 50 cent. per volume, and issued quarterly, and each embracing an exposition complete in itself of one theme. I begin with 'The Criteria of Diverse Kinds of Truth as Opposed to Agnosticism, being a Treatise of Applied Logic.' This treatise will be followed by one 'On the Nature of Causation in relation to the lately discovered Doctrine of the Conservation of Energy or the Persistence of Force;' one 'On What Development can Do, and What it cannot Do,' by 'A Criticism of the Philosophy of Kant,' and 'A Criticism of Herbert Spencer's Philosophy as Culminated in his Ethics.'"

The Publishers' Weekly announces that an American publishing firm will issue immediately "Ralph Waldo Emerson: an Estimate of his Life and Character," by Mr. A. Bronson Alcott. Mr. Alcott, the neighbour and lifelong friend of the "Seer of Concord," is now approaching his ninetieth year. The illustrations are from original photographs not before collected. The edition is limited to 200 copies.

The same publishers announce that they have in the press the Hon. William T. Davis's contribution to the history of the early settlement of the Plymouth colonists, to be entitled "Ancient Landmarks of Plymouth." The work will be divided into two parts, the first of which will treat of the methods by which the Pilgrims obtained possession of their lands, including their various patents, and their negotiations with the merchant adventurers of London, and will trace the titles of estates along the streets of Plymouth from the first grantees to their present owners. It will give also a history of the houses at various times built on them, and will include a history of the churches, schools, manufactures, and government of the town, and sketches of different places of interest, with the derivation and meaning of their names. The second part will be devoted to genealogical records of Plymouth families, of which over seven hundred are treated with more or less fulness.

CLIFTON.—The Rev. W. Hargrave, M.A., has resigned the pastorate at Oakfield-road Church, and his resignation is to take effect at Christmas.

SOUTH-PLACE INSTITUTE.—The Lectures Committee of the South-place Religious Society are carrying out a series of meetings on an excellent plan. Every Tuesday evening a paper is read by some gentleman, and this is followed by discussion. The programme includes the names of W. C. Coupland, Esq., M.A., C. R. Drysdale, Esq., M.D., J. M. Rigg Esq., M.A., J. H. Levy, Esq., E. B. Aveling, Esq., D. Sc., &c., and Mr. Conway and B. Fossett Lock, Esq., have already read papers.

MILES PLATING.—The memorial stone of the new church in Oldham-road was laid on Saturday last, the 21st inst., by the Rev. William Gaskell, M.A. The proceedings were of a very interesting character, but we are obliged, on account of the pressure of other articles of intelligence, to defer a full report until next week.

NORWICH.—On Thursday, 19th inst., a social gathering of the members and friends of the Octagon Chapel was held in the girls' school-room, Culvert-street, agreeably to an invitation given by the Chapel Committee; about 170 persons were present. The school-room, which was transformed for the nonce into an elegant reception room, having its walls draped with crimson and white cloth, and plants distributed throughout its length, presented a pleasing effect. The centre of the room was occupied by tables, on which were placed books, engravings, photographs, and graphoscopes—while revolving stereoscopes and the air pump (explained by Mr. J. Wright) afforded additional sources of interest. At the side tables ladies of the congregation had charge of the tea and coffee urns and refreshments of a light character. The musical arrangements of the evening were under the direction of Mr. R. W. Ladell and Mr. C. J. Campling, the chapel organist. Tea and coffee having been partaken of, the chair was taken by Mr. Alfred Mottram, who began his remarks by saying it was thought desirable that members of the congregation should meet and confer with those whom they had deputed to carry on the affairs of the congregation, and take counsel together on matters connected with its future welfare; he expressed the regret which all present felt at the absence of some friends from the meeting that evening, who would have been with them but for unavoidable causes, Mr. Councillor Freeman from illness, and some on account of absence from home. Letters the committee had received and which were read, among others one from Mr. Joseph Woodrow, showed that those friends were heartily with them in everything that related to the well-being of the congregation, and expressed the hope that unity of spirit would prevail, and that they would show an adherence to the principles of their faith. The Chairman then called upon the secretary, Mr. Horace Stevens, who explained what had been done by the committee in securing the services of ministers for the proper conduct of the chapel services, and other business matters. Mr. C. F. Stevens in following spoke of the schools connected with the chapel, and affiliated institutions, and said it was necessary that members of the congregation should show by their presence and support that they felt upon these sources they must depend for strengthening their numbers, and the cause of the Octagon congregation. During the evening a flute solo, accompanied by the piano, was given by Mr. Edwards, and solo pieces and part songs were sung by the ladies and gentlemen of the chapel choir, closing with the part song "Good Night." The thanks of the meeting were cordially voted to Mr. Mottram as the chairman of the evening, and as the representative of a worthily-remembered family, and to the ladies and other friends who had contributed to the pleasure of the evening. The Chairman having briefly responded, the proceedings closed.—A service of song, entitled "The Life of Elijah," was given at this chapel on Wednesday evening, the 18th inst., by the children and teachers of the Sunday-school, assisted by the choir. The service was conducted by Mr. J. D. Wright, one of the superintendents, who had spared no pains in training the children for the occasion, and Mr. C. T. Stevens, the other superintendent, gave the connective readings very effectively. The service was most successful when first given at the school anniversary, but it was even more successful on its repetition, which was by request. A very large congregation attended, and the collection on behalf of the schools was well supported. Those connected with the school are to be congratulated on the result of their efforts.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Influenza, Sore Throat, Quinsy, Mumps, and similar complaints always abound in unsettled weather, and are most safely and effectually subdued by rubbing Holloway's Ointment at least twice a day upon the chest and glands of the throat. The Ointment penetrates the skin, reduces inflammation, and heals ulcerations. This treatment is sufficient for curing the most serious and complicated throat affections, provided Holloway's Pills be taken at the same time. When swallowing gives pain, the Ointment may be relied on till improving symptoms admit of painless deglutition. In asthma, bronchitis, pneumonia, pleurisy, whooping cough, incipient consumption, scarlet fever and measles Holloway's medicines are not less valuable in mitigating the most troublesome features than they are certain in ultimately curing.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1882.

At the close of the evening service yesterday week in Westminster Abbey the Rev. Canon Duckworth unveiled a tablet erected in commemoration of Michael William Balfe, and delivered an address commemorative of the musical composer.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER has published in the American papers his first impressions of America. He says that the books he had read gave him no adequate idea of the immense development of material civilisation he everywhere finds. He thinks that while the form of freedom has been maintained there has been considerable loss of the substance, and that the people are fast becoming a puppet in the hands of wire-pullers. He does not, however, consider free institutions a failure, and thinks that Americans may look forward to a time when "they will have produced a civilisation grander than the world has ever known."

A FRIEND and valued contributor, who for years past has been a diligent reader of the American religious papers, both Unitarian and Orthodox, gives the following impressions of the condition of Unitarianism on the other side of the Atlantic:—"I am greatly surprised that Unitarianism does not make more progress in America. It does not seem to grow there more than it does here. Its present position is utterly disappointing, compared with what was expected of it thirty or forty years ago. I remember that great things were confidently expected of it then. Some even anticipated that it would become the prevailing form of religion in the United States. Boston Unitarianism was to be the haven that should leave the whole lump. All these bright hopes have been disappointed. The cause is certainly declining relatively to the increase of population. With that it fails completely to keep pace. I was astonished to learn that New York had but two Unitarian churches, while there are four hundred and fifty Evangelical Churches. A free country with no State Church, and no ancient conservative traditions, one would suppose to be just the field for Unitarianism to advance in. But clearly it does not. I fear that many of their 'Churches' are not much better off than our country congregations."

We give this somewhat too desponding testimony for what it is worth, and must confess that we fear there is too much truth in it. Some of the lay members of our churches who have visited America of late years have expressed their surprise at finding that except in Boston and the neighbourhood the Unitarian Churches there have just the same kind of difficulties to encounter, and are often in as struggling a condition as some of our decaying congregations in the eastern counties, and the south of England. It can hardly be denied, too, that even in the capital of American Unitarianism, the liberal faith is not the power that it was in the days of Channing and Ware and Greenwood, when it occupied the social position of an Established Church, and comprised among its adherents certainly a majority of the middle and upper classes. But now Unitarian Churches in Boston are far outnumbered by the Orthodox. The Episcopal Church is taking the foremost position socially, and there is a marked tendency there as here on the part of Unitarians of the more aristocratic circles to go over to a Church which impresses cultured minds so much by its esthetic services and its orderly discipline. On the other hand, it should be noticed that if there are but two Churches in New York, those two are remarkably strong ones, and that there are several in Brooklyn and other neighbouring places which are practically suburbs of New York. Still, even allowing for this and the growth of new Churches in the large towns of the West, the condition of Unitarianism in America is not so flourishing as to justify the "tall talk" we used to hear from some of its enthusiastic advocates about its becoming the "national faith" from North to South and East to West.

It is no more likely to become the national faith there than it is here, except in so far as it occupies a prominent if not the foremost place in that great wave of "Liberal tendency" which is gradually modifying the harsher features of the old orthodoxy in all the more enlightened churches, and that doctrines which would once have been stigmatised as heterodox are now advanced by divines and learned professors with considerable amount of popular sympathy in their own denominations. Enthusiasm for a good cause is all right, and is not too common among religious Liberals, but it is well also to be perfectly honest, to avoid "buncombe," and to try to see and represent things as they really are. We must recognise our real weakness and endeavour to ascertain the causes before we can address ourselves with any hope of permanent success to the consideration of the best remedies.

ROBERT COLLYER, in a very interesting memorial discourse on his predecessor in the Church of the Messiah, New York, delivered at Sheffield, Mass., where Dr. Dewey was born and died, relates that he visited his venerable friend (æt. 87) last summer, and found him "still young in his thinking." "Tell me," I said, "how you would preach other than you have done, if you could begin again." He pondered a moment, his voice was broken, but his eyes shone, he lifted his weak hand above his head, and said, "I should try to fill my sermons more and more with faith in the Eternal Love, the Eternal Presence, and the Eternal Providence within the eternal laws."

We learn from the Christian Register that Dr. Carpenter's address at the Saratoga Conference, which we reprinted last week, was phonographically reported for that paper by a lady—Bella B. Barrows.

AN address has been issued by the Liberation Society to the electors of the London School Board, relative to an educational appropriation of the now misused or wasted City parochial charities. It refers to the commendable efforts of the School Board in obtaining information on the subject—efforts which have resulted in bringing out the fact that there are no fewer than 1,330 charities connected with the City of London parishes, of the annual value of £104,102, and a capital value of £2,339,204—and shows that while the City population is diminishing, its charities have vastly increased in value. Thus the charity income and the population of a few parishes are shown to be from £1,653 to £4,682, against population of from only 200 to 670. The charitable endowments for "Church purposes" produce £36,046 a year; and it is proposed that the surplus of these, after meeting just claims, instead of being handed over to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners [whose present income in London alone is £223,290 a year] should be devoted to the same educational and such like purposes, as other available City charitable funds. Instead of enriching an already wealthy body, whose means are devoted to a denominational purpose, says this address to the electors, let all charitable funds available, whether general or ecclesiastical, be appropriated to educational purposes from which the whole community would benefit.

THE reasons assigned by the Medical Faculty of Harvard University for not admitting women as students are as follows:—1. Because the institution is for men. 2. Because the standard will be lowered if women are introduced. In reply to this Dr. Bartol wisely says:—"But the institution is for men in this sense—namely, that the race of man, mankind and womankind, may be healed, as they will be more effectually when they become doctors, who, as nurses, have contributed already quite as much in the world's history as all the physicians to the curing of the sick; and the standard of no profession has been lowered, while examinations without favour are kept up, as they may and should be. Rather the dignity and purity of every art and calling have risen signally whenever and wherever our sisters have taken in it a hand. Where they are competent, shall they not compete?"

THE lecture on tobacco by the Rev. R. L. Carpenter, which he sent to the Unitarian ministers in America as well as in England, was noticed in the Christian Register and in the Unitarian Review, which quoted an extract from the Times, describing the indifference with regard to the comfort of others which is the effect of tobacco. "This," said the reviewer, "is the extreme of ungentlemanliness," and a severe rebuke was administered to smoking clergymen. This aroused a lively controversy, and an American friend states, "there is quite a raid against the weed all round; even our secular papers are taking up the question."

THE following lines appear in Punch this week, suggested by unwonted fraternisation at the recent Congregational Union, on which we have commented in a leading article:—

COMFORT FOR CHURCHMEN.

"Church and Dissent shake hands, zealots affrighting;
But then foes often do so—before fighting!"

REPLYING to a correspondent, the editor of the Christian World maintains that "no proposition could seem more absolutely demonstrated than that the tale of Eden is an inspired allegory." But why inspired, and by whom? Where is the absolute demonstration of the inspiration. He adds:—"Serpents have not the gift of speech. If an actual serpent talked in Eden, some creative power must have given it speech, and we cannot escape something very like blasphemy if we attribute that particular miracle either to God or the devil. This is but one of a hundred difficulties, all insuperable, if you turn a divinely simple and beautiful allegory into an historical fact. We hold that it has been 'demonstrated' that the Bible does not teach science, and we utterly deny that the Christian religion is pledged to the 'substantial accuracy' of the science known to its writers. To speak of the Bible as 'oracular' seems to us a pitiful misapprehension of its spirit and letter, a degradation of the sublimest and best of books to a level with the outpourings of the Sybil or the priestly quackeries of Delphi." This seems surer ground than the suggestion of inspiration.

MR. A. C. SWINBURNE's new book, "Tristram of Lyonesse, and other Poems," contains the following powerful sonnet:—

ON THE RUSSIAN PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

O Son of Man, by lying tongues adored,
By slaughterous hands of slaves with feet red-shod,
In carnage deep as ever Christian trod
Profaned with prayer and sacrifice abhorred
And incense from the trembling tyrant's horde,
Brute worshippers or wielders of the rod,
Most murderous even of all who call thee God,
Most treacherous even that ever called thee Lord;
Face loved of little children long ago,
Head hated of the priests and rulers then,
If thou see this, or hear these hounds of thine
Run ravening as the Gadarean swine,
Say, was not this thy Passion, to foreknow
In death's worst hour the works of Christian men

ON Thursday the statue by Mr. Boehm, which has been erected on the Chelsea Embankment a memorial to Mr. Carlyle, was unveiled by Professor Tyndall, who paid a high tribute to Carlyle's genius, and expressed a hope that somewhere upon the Embankment might be raised a companion memorial to Ralph Waldo Emerson, whom he described as the loftiest, purest, and most penetrating spirit that had ever shone in American literature. The Memorial Committee had issued invitations to the subscribers, and in response there were amongst those present Mr. Lecky, Lord Houghton, Mr. W. Black, the Dowager Lady Stanley of Alderley, Mr. Courtney, M.P., Mr. Browning, Mr. H. Shütz Wilson, the Rev. Dr. Martineau, Mr. Moncreux Conway, the Rev. Llewellyn Davies, Mr. Smalley, and a number of ladies. Professor Tyndall, in the course of his interesting speech, vindicated Carlyle from some prevailing misconceptions: "Taking all that science has done in the past, all that she has achieved in the present, and all that she is likely to compass in the future—will she at length have told us everything, rendering our knowledge of this universe rounded and complete? The answer is clear. After science has completed her mission upon earth, the finite Known will still be embraced by the infinite Unknown. And this 'boundless' contiguity of shade,' by which our knowledge is hemmed in, will always tempt the exercise of belief and imagination. The human mind, in its structural and poetic capacity, can never be prevented from building its castles—on the rock or in the air, as the case may be—in this ultra-scientific region. Certainly the mind of Carlyle could not have been prevented from doing so. Out of pure unintelligence he held that intelligence never could have sprung, and so, at the heart of things, he placed an intelligence—an energy which, to avoid circuitous paraphrases, we call God. I am here repeating his own words to myself. Every reader of his works will have recognised the burning intensity of his conviction that this universe is ruled by veracity and justice, which are sure in the end to scorch and dissipate all falsehood and wrong."

We had credited our contemporary, The Christian World, with a little more robustness than it manifests in one of its articles this week. Speaking in the most eulogistic terms of the demonstration made in London on the return of some of the troops, it says:—"According to all reports, the scene on Sunday was even more exciting. If hundreds turned out on Friday, there were thousands two days after. There is no reason why we should keep silence as to our regret—not that the men should have been so welcomed—but that that particular day for this display should have been chosen. It was all very good, loyal, and spirit-stirring; but, be it Lord Northbrook or Mr. Childers who is responsible, a gratuitous offence was given to people who cannot truly be called 'strait-laced.' Nothing could have been more admirable than the mode in which these two men have done their work, even their enemies being judges; but it is unfortunate that their discreet vigilance was not continued till the end." And all this because it happened that the winds and the waves did not allow the troops to return on either Saturday or Monday. Persons who were offended with the demonstration on this score may not be "strait-laced," but they cannot be credited with superfluity of wisdom.

ONE of the excellent of the earth has passed from amongst us. Mrs. Rathbone, of Greenbank—the widow of William Rathbone, the mother of the member for Carnarvonshire, formerly for Liverpool, and of the two other well-known sons, died at Greenbank on Tuesday night, shortly after eleven o'clock, at the great age of ninety-two. We are obliged to postpone an extended memoir of this excellent woman until next week. We can only say now that Mrs. Rathbone throughout her long life was a warm friend of education, and when Mr. Forster was about to introduce the Education Act she forwarded some suggestion in regard to which Mr. Forster said to Mr. W. Rathbone, "I wish you to know that the suggestions you gave me from your mother were among the most useful and practical I received during the passage of the Act."

A UNITARIAN has been defined as a person who believes in one God, and pays twenty shillings in the pound. We record with pleasure a practical illustration of this apt definition in the following paragraph, which has been going the round of the Press:—"Commercial Integrity.—Considerable excitement was caused on the Bradford Exchange on Tuesday last by an occurrence somewhat rare in commercial annals. Mr. Archibald Winterbottom failed some thirteen years ago, with liabilities amounting to nearly £50,000. The estate paid a composition of ten shillings in the pound. Mr. Winterbottom has just issued a circular, dated Manchester, Oct. 20, intimating his intention of paying the remaining ten shillings to his creditors; and on Tuesday morning a number of Bradford firms received cheques for various accounts on that basis. One of these was a gentleman who was chairman of the creditors' committee, and whose share of the proceeds amounted to over £1,700."

THE Rev. J. Martineau writes:—"My attention has been called to a paragraph in the Athenaeum, intimating that I am collecting or sifting materials for an autobiography. Allow me to say that there is no foundation whatever for such a statement."

Religious Intelligence.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The second Council Meeting for the session 1882-3 was held on Wednesday afternoon, at the Rooms of the Association, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand; DAVID AINSWORTH, Esq., M.P., President, in the chair. There were also present the Revs. Dr. Crosskey, R. Spears, T. L. Marshall, T. W. Freckelton, R. Shaen, S. A. Steintal, C. Howe, W. H. Channing, W. C. Bowie, A. W. Worthington, E. M. Geldart, P. W. Clayden, P. H. Wicksteed, H. Ierson (secretary); Messrs. T. C. Clarke, J. Hoggood, H. Jeffery, S. S. Tayler, J. T. Preston, D. Martineau, S. W. Preston, R. Lewis, J. Spiller, W. Shaen, I. M. Wade, W. C. Burrows, R. Pinnock (Newport, Isle of Wight), R. Harwood and H. Rawson (Manchester), J. Cooke (Guildford), H. Blessley (Portsmouth), J. E. Mace (Tenterden), and Joseph Lupton (Leeds).

The minutes of the last Council Meeting were read and confirmed.

The SECRETARY also read the following report of the executive committee, which, on the motion of Mr. LUPTON, was adopted.

THE REPORT.

The Council will be pleased to hear that the treasurer has received as a bequest from the late Mr. G. H. Ord, of Manchester, £1,000 free of duty.

Of Dr. Clarke's sermon at the annual meeting 15,000 copies were printed, and of these 5,500 were sent with the last annual report. The 3,000 copies remaining will be very welcome and useful for distribution as a tract.

Dr. Clarke having preferred that his service should be altogether a labour of love, the honorarium which he desired to return has been credited to him as a donation with the hearty thanks of the Committee.

With regard to the republication of Dr. Dewey's works, the committee have received a communication from the Secretary of the American Association promising to make inquiries as to the copyrights, &c., and to lay the matter before their committee. The result of these inquiries has not yet been reported.

It was resolved at the meeting of the Council, June 21, "That it is desirable to amend Rules 10 and 19, so as to provide that all nominations for membership of the Council shall be made in time to be laid before the Council at its last meeting," before the annual meeting of the Association at Whitsuntide, and the committee were requested to report on the subject to the present meeting.

The committee accordingly recommend that in the two rules in question the sentence which now reads, "But any member of the Association shall be entitled to nominate one or more members (as vice-presidents or home correspondents (Rule 10), or as members of the committee (Rule 19) by nomination in writing to be sent to the secretary at least ten days before the annual meeting," the last clause be altered to "Nomination in writing to be sent to the secretary before the second Tuesday in April," that being the ordinary day of meeting of the executive committee before the last meeting of the Council.

Should this amendment be adopted, the clause at the end of the two rules, which provides for the due advertisement of the right of individual members to nominate, will require to be altered, and instead of "shall be advertised one month prior to the annual meeting," should read, "shall be advertised with the published notice of the Council Meeting one month before the date of such meeting."

The Committee have been gratified to receive a communication from the Rev. E. Turland, who has just returned from visiting the Liberal friends in Sweden, to whom he presented the letter of kindly sympathy which the Council desired to be placed in his hands.

A short report from Mr. Turland is herewith presented to the Council.

The Council will regret to learn that one of the delegates appointed to represent the Association at the Saratoga Conference, the Rev. A. Chalmers, was unfortunately prevented by illness in his family from paying his intended visit to the United States. Dr. W. B. Carpenter and the Rev. J. P. Hopps received a warm welcome from the Conference. Both these gentlemen have communicated to the Press some impressions of their American visit, and Dr. Carpenter is not expected home till Christmas. But the Council would no doubt be glad to hear something more from the delegates respecting America and the American Conference. Respecting the instruction which was given at the last Council Meeting "to consider the present position of Unitarianism in Scotland with the view of promoting increased missionary action" there, the Committee were of opinion that it would be most desirable to confer directly with our Scottish friends on the subject. They gladly received, therefore, the invitation of the Scottish Unitarian Society, conjointly with the Congregation at St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, to hold the autumnal meeting of the Association in that city, and at the same time to unite with the Scottish Association in the celebration of their anniversary. The meetings were appointed to take place on Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 16 and 17, when the whole subject of Unitarian work in Scotland was to be discussed. The Deputation will be prepared to report in person to the Council respecting this visit to Scotland.

Deputations have been sent also to the Annual Meetings of the Southern Association at Newport, the Northern and Durham Association at Newcastle, and the North Midland Association at Leicester, and the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed will represent the Association at the approaching meetings at Groningen of the Protestantbond of Holland.

The desirableness of appointing a missionary at Deptford was brought before the Council at its last meeting, and the matter was commended to the attention of the Committee. The Rev. H. Wheaton having been stationed there under the direction of the London District Society a grant has been made to that Society in aid of this special work.

By special desire of the Cambridge Unitarian Society the Rev. Henry Ierson has been requested to conduct Sunday evening services in the Public Hall, Jesus-lane, Cambridge, during the present term, commencing Oct. 22.

Grants have been made since the June Meeting for chapel building and improvement funds to Denton, Colne, Holbeck, Saffron Walden, Newcastle-under-Lyne, Stamford-street, London, and Mount Pottinger, Belfast, and in aid of services to the Northumberland and Durham Association; to the London Society for Bethnal-green; to the Rev. J. Evans for Onenawr; to the West Riding for Thorne; also to Cardiff, Southampton, Bournemouth, and Lewes.

Considerable grants have been made of tracts and books since the last Report. About 30,000 tracts have been sent for distribution in various towns in England, Scotland and Ireland, and books to the number of over 500 volumes have been sent to inquirers and ministers to public libraries and for loan and distribution to Australia, to Madras, Cawnpore and Calcutta.

At the meeting of the Council, April 26 of the present year, the following resolution was passed:—"That it be an instruction to the Executive Committee to consider and report on the practicability of an organised effort for giving services in some of the centres of trade, especially in London, and as to the desirability of raising a special fund for the support of such effort."

In pursuance of this object the Executive Committee invited the concurrence of the Committee of the London District Unitarian Society, and meetings were held of delegates from the two Committees, June 30 and July 6, when the following proposals were agreed upon:—

1. That the services should be held on Sunday evenings, and that they should be announced as religious services conducted by Unitarians, and should be emphatically religious and practical, not controversial. Lectures might be given at the same time on week nights explanatory of Unitarian views.

2. That the services might be conducted by one or more speakers, either ministers or laymen, but should not exceed an hour and a quarter.

3. That efficient musical assistance should be provided; this part of the service to consist mainly of hymns, which the congregation would join in singing.

4. That visitors should be appointed to go from house to house with invitations to the services, that tracts should be freely distributed beforehand throughout the neighbourhood, and that in every available way the services should be well advertised.

It was further generally thought desirable that the services in any given district should be regarded as preparatory to the establishment of a congregation there, and that, if possible, the carrying out of the arrangements should be in the hands of the future minister of such congregation, with the assistance in the first instance of preachers who had shown special aptitude for addressing working class audiences.

Proceeding upon the lines thus laid down the united committee were prepared to recommend immediate action, and the following resolution was agreed to:—"That it is desirable to take such steps as will secure a popular and efficient presentation of religion from our point of view; that religious services, lectures, &c., to this end be organised and commenced in the two districts named in October; and that as soon as possible a good minister as can be obtained be located in each district." It was then proposed to take a hall in Bethnal-green and place a minister there. This having been agreed to by the executive committee, a grant was made accordingly.

With reference to a further proposal that a hall be engaged in Bermondsey for four services, allowing the question of the permanent settlement of a minister there to be determined according to the result of such services, no action has been taken, and the matter is now laid before the Council in accordance with its first instruction.

The object proposed in this last suggestion may be regarded as an endeavour to follow up in the metropolis the method of attracting working class audiences which has been so successfully carried out in several large country towns, where the end immediately in view would be accomplished in the simple gathering of large and sympathetic congregations, leaving it to the future to determine what further action may be advisable in each case, according to circumstances.

The success of such movements will mainly depend upon the energy, the warmth of religious feeling, and the skill in simple and popular address of those who manage and conduct them. As to the means required for carrying on this work on a large scale it is the opinion of the committee that there would be no difficulty in raising a special fund for the purpose, when the necessity for it arises. And it might be desirable if the proposed course is agreed upon to nominate a separate committee, the composition of which may be hereafter considered, requesting them to take the work in hand, and offering such support as the Association may be able to give.

An interesting letter was read from the Rev. E. TURLAND, containing a brief report on the liberal religious movement in Sweden. On the motion of Mr. D. MARTINEAU a vote of thanks was passed for the report, and a hope was expressed that Mr. Turland would keep the Association informed of the movement in Sweden.

THE SARATOGA CONFERENCE.

A letter having been read from the Rev. J. P. Hopps respecting his delegation to the American Conference,—

Mr. MARSHALL, seconded by Mr. JEFFERY, proposed, and it was carried unanimously, that the thanks of the Council be presented to Dr. W. B. Carpenter, C.B., F.R.S., and to the Rev. J. Page Hopps for the very efficient manner in which they represented the Association at the recent Saratoga Conference; and that they be requested to place at the disposal of the Association for publication the addresses they severally delivered on that occasion on "Science and Religion," and "Christ's Unfulfilled Idea of Unity."

Mr. GELDART proposed that a meeting to welcome both these gentlemen should be held in London soon after the return of Dr. Carpenter, which is expected to occur shortly before Christmas.

Mr. LUPTON, in seconding the motion, which was carried unanimously, suggested that it would be advisable to hold the meeting on the evening of the next Council meeting, January 17.

SPECIAL SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

Mr. T. CHATFIELD CLARKE then moved

That it be an instruction to the Executive Committee to arrange at as early a date as possible for a series of special services of a devotional character adapted to the working classes, to be delivered in some large hall in the metropolis, and that the detailed arrangements for carrying out such services be referred to a special Committee to be appointed by and to act in concert with the Executive Committee.

Mr. CLARKE thought this proposition a matter of considerable importance, and hoped for the zealous co-operation of the Council. At the Liverpool Conference a strong feeling was expressed that some great effort should be made to gain the interest of the working classes, and to impress upon them the simple religious message we had to offer. We are not doing our part as a religious denomination if we leave them to the Secularists on the one hand or the wild efforts of the Salvation Army on the other. We should set an example to the country of trying a series of special services, considering that we professed to be leaders of religious thought. At times we have feelings of depression in regard to the position of our body as a whole, and if these services were successful they would encourage our ministers and laymen in different parts of the country, and we should be doing as good a work as we possibly could do. He could not sympathise with the feeling that had been expressed when this matter was discussed in the joint committee, that we are not doing much good unless we are establishing permanent congregations. The country towns have already led the way in this matter, while the metropolis ought to lead the country. In conclusion, Mr. Clarke quoted a note from Dr. Crosskey, who had been obliged to leave on account of an engagement in Birmingham, expressing his entire concurrence with this movement.

Mr. D. MARTINEAU seconded the resolution, expressing his entire sympathy with the views expressed by Mr. Clarke.

Mr. W. SHAEN said they were all quite unanimous in the Executive Committee that something should be done, but he thought it particularly desirable that the subject should be looked at on all sides. He, for one, while desiring to reach the working classes religiously, was very anxious that the work should be done in the wisest way, with a view to produce permanent results. If they could only succeed in getting more or less well-attended meetings in districts where there are at present no congregations, and then sent them away without arriving at any permanent results, he should feel that the money and energy would be spent in vain. They should either strengthen existing congregations or establish new ones. The proposed services, however admirable, would be comparatively worthless in the long run unless they resulted in permanent congregations. With these views he proposed as an amendment that the following words be inserted at the beginning of Mr. Clarke's resolution, "With the view of strengthening existing congregations and to establish new ones."

Mr. P. H. WICKSTEED, in seconding the amendment, thought the scheme would be useless unless they made it a brilliant success, which was solely a matter of money, advertising, and organisation.

The Rev. W. H. CHANNING thought it would require several meetings to make it a brilliant success.

Mr. FRECKELTON saw no radical inconsistency between the ideas of Mr. Clarke and Mr. Shaen. The question was whether they should find the right man, and send him to settle in a particular place, or whether they should go where a large population is, and without thinking of building up a church appeal to them, and leave the after question of establishing a church to be settled by the measure of success. Are we only to try to get Unitarian thinking into the minds of the people, or go to them with our message of the love of God, leaving the growth of Unitarianism as what would surely follow afterwards.

Mr. S. W. PRESTON said the question of expense was a very serious one, as the proposed movement would cost several hundred pounds.

Mr. H. JEFFERY thought the great difficulty was not money, but men who could get at the people.

Mr. GELDART said that if we had a message to deliver it was our duty to deliver it, whatever measure of success might be the result.

Mr. J. T. PRESTON said that if we went on the non-sectarian basis the question might be raised whether the movement was one on which the funds of the Association could properly be spent.

Mr. MARSHALL hoped Mr. Clarke would accept Mr. Shaen's amendment, as it would then bring the whole movement within the objects of the Association. He was not at all sanguine of success, considering the peculiar conditions of the metropolis, and was afraid that we had not men who were known among the working classes as the late Mr. F. D. Maurice and Charles Kingsley and others were, who could command their attention because they had lived and worked for their benefit. He was afraid also that very few among the working classes would care for devotional services of the kind they could offer them, as was proved by the extremely small attendance on the Sunday evening services at our mission stations in densely populated neighbourhoods.

Mr. STEINTHAL reminded the Council that our Domestic Missions were established for a different purpose, and entirely differed from the views of the previous speaker.

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. Hopgood, in succession to Mr. Ainsworth] ruled that the amendment was of the nature of a rider. Mr. Clarke's resolution was put first and carried nem. con. The rider proposed by Mr. Shaen was also carried by a majority of eleven to ten.

The proposed amendments of Rules 10 and 19 were then taken into consideration, and it was resolved:—

That the suggestions for the required alterations in rules 10 and 19 be adopted by this Council, and that this Committee be hereby authorised to take the necessary steps for bringing the matter in due form before the next General Meeting of the Association.

Mr. P. H. WICKSTEED, Mr. JEFFERY, Mr. S. S. TAYLER, and Mr. IERSON then gave very favourable and encouraging reports of the recent Provincial Meeting of the Association at Glasgow, and of their Conference with the members of the Scottish Unitarian Association, and a cordial vote of thanks was awarded to the Deputation, on the motion of Mr. WADE, seconded by Mr. BOWIE. Mr. Ierson especially referred to the value of Mr. Wicksteed's services as the preacher at Glasgow, his sermons being of a character especially adapted to interest the mind of Scotland in the direction of Unitarianism.

The Council then separated, after an interesting and suggestive meeting of rather more than two hours.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

PROVINCIAL MEETING IN GLASGOW.

The autumnal meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association were held in St. Vincent-street Church, Glasgow, on Monday, the 16th inst. In the afternoon an open conference was held "On the Best Means of Carrying on Unitarian work in Scotland." The chair was occupied by Mr. S. S. TAYLER, treasurer and vice-president of the Association, and there was a fair attendance. Opening the discussion, the Rev. H. IERSON, London, said that while they did not wish to exaggerate the differences between other religious bodies and themselves, it has nevertheless become desirable that they should make their position clear, and that there should be no compromise, merely for the sake of compromise, in the manner in which they set forth their views. Of course, they did not expect to win the public to their profession with any immediate grand results, but they had been labouring to inculcate with their ideas the mind and thought of the country, and in that they had attained a considerable measure of success. It was, however, against a very strong and united opposition that they had to contend; so that they were not surprised to find themselves still pursuing what might be called mission work. The conclusion at which he believed they would arrive would be that they should not give up the idea of such work, but rather take measures for strengthening it and making it more effective than it was at present. But besides giving help to the existing churches in the manner suggested by the scheme which they were now asked to consider, he would suggest that lectures might be arranged for delivery in their chief towns by some competent, scholarly man familiar not only with Biblical subjects but also with scientific information, one able to command the respect of the acute and well-furnished minds which abounded amongst the orthodox churches in Scotland.

In reply to various questions some explanations were then given by Mr. J. PULLAR, the president of the Scottish Association, of a scheme for the utilisation of the Macallan bequest, a considerable sum left by an Edinburgh gentleman "to be applied for the purposes of the Association." It was proposed to make grants to some congregations to wipe off debt, &c., and to others with the view of augmenting ministers' stipends. The grants to be proportioned to the amounts raised by the congregations, and the position of the ministers so improved as to enable them to continue their work for longer periods and with better prospects of success. The objects of this scheme were generally approved of by the various speakers, especially as it tended to a better union and organisation of the work at present going on in Scotland, and Mr. H. Jeffery and the Chairman promised on the part of the Committee in London that they would carefully consider how far they could effectually co-operate in carrying it out. Mr. Graham and Mr. Grant strongly favoured the suggestion of a lectureship besides the ordinary mission work, as did also the Revs. F. Walters and R. B. Drummond, who thought that it would assist the existing congregations if the lectures were given in their own towns. The Rev. A. Webster agreed, but was of opinion that there should also be lectures of a more popular kind. The churches should be more utilised and made centres of interest to the people. He suggested having a stall for the disposal of Unitarian publications in every church lobby. The Rev. H. Williamson thought that, in addition to this, bookstores should be established especially in the large towns. Much was to be done by spreading Unitarian literature. He believed that every kind of means would prove useful if employed for religious objects in the Christian Spirit. The Rev. Dr. Crosskey, referring to the fact that everything in Scotland was associated in some way with religion, discountenanced the idea that any progress could be made there by mere disproof of certain opinions. We should establish a worshipping body everywhere throughout the country, and help the existing Churches generously till they became strong enough to stand alone. He hoped that the cause at Paisley would be so assisted, and not suffered to die out. The Rev. G. Walters thought that in any case the orthodox should not be dealt with as enemies, but made to feel that we desired to assist them to a better and happier faith.

At night there was a public meeting, which was numerously attended, many of those present being ladies. On the platform were Mr. D. Ainsworth, M.P., president of the Association, who occupied the chair; the Rev. Dr. Crosskey, Birmingham; the Rev. H. Ierson, London; the Rev. R. B. Drummond, Edinburgh; the Rev. F. Walters, Glasgow; the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, London; Mr. S. S. Taylor, London; and Mr. J. Pullar.

Mr. PULLAR, President of the Scottish Unitarian Association, in introducing Mr. Ainsworth to the meeting, said, "I desire on behalf of the Scottish Unitarian Association to give our English friends a hearty welcome—(applause). At the same time, I am sure there is but one sentiment amongst us on that point, namely, that we are delighted to see our visitors from across the border—(applause). We are somewhat isolated as a religious body in Scotland, and are much obliged for the countenance of our English friends in helping us on and encouraging us in our work. There is a saying which many of us here have heard about parsimonious individuals who give their countenance, but not that of Her Majesty, when funds are wanted—(laughter); but our English friends in times past have given us not only a good deal of their countenance, but also a great deal of Her Majesty's—(applause). We are happy to receive the countenance of our English friends, and I trust we shall receive a good deal more countenance in the future from our hidden friends in Scotland than we have in the past, and also as much as we can possibly require of Her Majesty's—(applause)."

The Rev. F. W. WALTERS, in seconding the remarks made by Mr. Pullar, said: As the minister of St. Vincent-street congregation I desire on behalf of the congregation to offer a very hearty welcome to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, who have taken such a long journey to visit us on this occasion—(applause). I am only sorry that we in Glasgow are the only Unitarians who are sharing in the good things that have been brought to us from England; I should be glad if they could do for Dundee and Perth and Aberdeen and Paisley what they have been doing for us yesterday and to-day—(applause). I am extremely glad that our friends in England have seen their way to pay us this most interesting visit. We have all heard by the hearing of the ear of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, but I am afraid some of us have heard it by the hearing of the ear only. To a great many of us the British and Foreign Unitarian Association has been a sort of dignified abstraction, we have scarcely realised its existence as we ought to have done—(applause).—We have read of the important things of the Association; we have received from time to time letters of counsel and encouragement from our friends in London, and sometimes, on certain occasions, the British and Foreign Unitarian Association has been more than a dignified abstraction to us when we have received very generous grants of money to carry on our enterprise in Scotland—(applause). We ought to be very grateful to the Association for the aid they have given to us, for if it had not been for their generous help I do not know where some of our Scotch Churches would be at this hour—(applause). But better than all letters of encouragement and advice, and I was going to say, better than any generous grants of money, better than all it is to see our friends face to face, and to have them with us in this social intercourse—(applause). It is delightful to find that the grave and reverend seigneurs of Norfolk-street are men of like passions with ourselves; it is pleasant to be able to hold a closer intercourse with them than is possible by mere correspondence, and I firmly believe that one happy result of this meeting will be a more confidential and more fraternal relation between the big brother that lives in London and the little brother that has his headquarters in Glasgow; for, indeed, when we come to compare our Association with the British and Foreign Association we do feel rather small; when we compare their world-wide operations with our few mission stations; when we put their great balance sheet by the side of the small amount that we are able to raise, then we have to confess their greatness, and feel our own littleness. But though the British and Foreign Association is very great and the Scottish Association is very small, yet we do flatter ourselves that our work in Scotland is just as much needed as the work that is done in England or any part of the world to which the work of the Association extends. I believe that the work of the Association is specially needed at the present hour—(applause)—and our Association, humble though it is, is the advanced guard in this Northern country of the great army of free religion. I have heard some people talk in a despairing way of the progress of Unitarianism in Scotland; they have talked about its dying because the work is being done so much better within the orthodox churches themselves. I do not believe it—(applause). In the old Roman days the Roman patriots used to say that it was a crime to despair of the republic, and some of us are resolved not to commit the crime of despairing of Unitarianism in Scotland—(applause)—and by the help and sympathy of our generous friends of the British and Foreign Association I hope henceforth we shall have less reason than ever to despair of a glorious cause, a cause that is not merely ours, is not merely a sectarian cause, but is a cause I believe profoundly identified with the best interests of spiritual religion in our land—(great applause).

Mr. AINSWORTH, who was warmly greeted, said: "I am sure it gives me very great pleasure on behalf of those grave and reverend seigneurs alluded to by our friend Mr. Walters, of whom I am the least, to return my hearty thanks for the cordial greeting we have received at your hands. I felt that in coming here to-day it might be a difficult task for me to attempt to occupy the chair on an occasion of this kind, and to explain to you all the methods of work of my good friends and fellow workers of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association in London. But my feelings are entirely changed since I came here, and since we have met with the cordial reception you have given us to-day. I never expected to address a Unitarian body in a Scotch church, for, from my earliest youth, which was spent in Scotland, I was led to believe that Unitarians were the one sect of Nonconformists that Scotch people could not put up with. They were quite ready to tolerate any other Nonconformists, but the very name of a Unitarian was enough to frighten them altogether—(laughter). I remember hearing a story of an old friend of mine, who was an M.P. for many years, which bears on this point. I believe he was contesting some borough in Scotland, and being of the Unitarian persuasion those religious views of his were brought forward, and used against him in the course of his candidature. One of his constituents asked him in the course of his canvass if he was a Unitarian, and not knowing to what religious sect his questioner belonged he fenced the question for some time, but after being severely 'heckled,' and the question repeated, he acknowledged he was. 'Aweel,' said the questioner, 'a think a'll gie ye mi vote, I has been a Unitarian mesell for seventy years'—(peals of laughter). Some of our friends object to the name Unitarian. Well, I fancy that if there is such a very great objection in the name, I for one will be willing to change it, but not our principles—(applause). We, who are quite willing to support free religious movements of every kind and everywhere, are not bound to uniformity of belief, and are willing to have free investigation on every side. I take it for granted that if a thing is true it is well worthy of investigation, and if it is true the further you probe and test it the more certain you are of proving it to be true—(applause). We are never above investigating a subject of any kind, whether it be political, social, or of a scientific nature; we are always certain that inquiry must lead to truth of one kind or another. You know we are told we must not ask questions, because it may lead to the unsettling of persons' opinions. Well, it seems to me that if a person has opinions that will not bear investigation the sooner they are flung aside the better. At the same time, though freedom of inquiry is good for us, still we are of opinion that to beset it must have a Christian spirit and a practical working for the good of mankind. If any belief that I hold does not bear out that sentiment, I am quite willing to change it for a better—(applause). I do not think there is any difference between English and Scotch Unitarians, and if in the people collectively there is, we know that the Scotch are proverbially liberal; they are illiberal only in one thing, and that is that they send very few Conservative members to Parliament. I believe the total number of the Conservative members for Scotland could be contained in a single compartment of a first-class carriage, and I believe they would not be squeezed when there—(laughter). But all this is going to be changed. You have recently had at some meetings held in Glasgow the leader of the Conservative party, who has given a new cry to the Conservatives. I should think the Tory party are glad that they have got a new cry; they are going to turn over a new leaf, and go in for freedom, and I am sure that every one of us will be glad if such is the case. I am very sorry that this cry did not come much sooner, because matters would have been improved not only in political life, but in various other ways. If you look back on the history of the past you will find the condition of this country was very different from what it is now. If those Liberal sentiments now professed by the Tories had been acted on by them rather sooner we should have had taxes on knowledge removed, and Nonconformists freed from religious disabilities rather sooner than they have been—(applause). The year 1882 will be renowned for the alteration of tone of the Conservative party as initiated by their leader in Glasgow not many days ago; but I am not one of those who believe in sudden conversions, whether it be that of a drunkard or a Conservative, or a conversion to any particular religious belief." Mr. Ainsworth, continuing his remarks, said he regretted the continuance of any religious test being applied to Members of Parliament, and that notwithstanding the agitation on the subject during the last two sessions the custom would still be enforced of exacting from members a declaration that they believed in a certain form of opinion either by oath or signature. He said it reminded him of what took place in a certain university (he thought it was Glasgow), where the professors were not so orthodox as they ought to be, and so those interested agreed to have a confession of faith, and got the professors to sign it. One of the students asked a professor if he believed what he had signed. Oh, yes, said the professor, and a great deal more—(laughter). And so in like manner the members of the House of Commons might sign a confession of faith, and say they believed it, and perhaps a great deal more, or, it might be, a great deal less—(laughter). He adverted shortly to the obstruction of public business in the House, and trusted that the work of the Liberal party in the future would as in the past tend to the promotion of intellectual freedom. He did not believe that anything in this world stood still; they must either progress or retrogress. Addressing himself more particularly to the business on which they had met, he hoped that the meeting on this occasion would tend to strengthen the body in Scotland, and he hoped it would also strengthen the body in England. He concluded his address by advising his audience to consistently follow up the religious principles they had ever held, which alone was the basis of all intellectual and moral freedom, and which had for its object the progress and welfare of humanity.

Mr. S. S. TAYLER, treasurer of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, complimented the Scotch people, and the Glasgow people especially, for their business tact and sagacity, and he hoped as they had progressed so much in commercial matters they would also progress in religious matters. A good many of the leading men who came to the front and took the prizes all over the world are Scotchmen, and it was very important that these men should have reasonable views with regard to religion—(applause). The Association which he had the honour to represent had endeavoured to keep up a correspondence with their people in Australia, New Zealand, Canada, America and also with Hungary, Europe, and India, a work which had a large amount of his sympathy. The Society spent a large sum every year in printing and disseminating books which were the means of producing an untold amount of good, an amount which could hardly be conceived of. They had heard of liberal opinion spreading, but he was sure it was the activity and zeal of many of our leading teachers which to a great extent had caused this theological progress in other churches—(applause). The Association had brought together the lectures of ten of their ablest ministers upon some of the affirmative positions of Unitarianism, to which Dr. Martineau affixed a preface. He would like every man to read and study this work for himself. There was one lecture specially worthy of attention "On Man the Image of God," which exhibits man as the child of God and the object of God's affection. If we could keep this view always in remembrance we should treat our fellow creatures in a different way from what we very often do. Such sentiments tend to bind us together in such an Association as this, which aims at spreading such a grand view of God's nature; and in encouraging all that is highest and holiest in humanity—(applause). The question we had to consider was, "what were we put here to do?" He believed that God had put it into the hearts of men to do his work, the best feature of which was that it enabled men more fully to understand the dignity and grandeur of their own nature—(applause). Mr. Tayler concluded his address by expressing the pleasure he felt at being present on the occasion.

The Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED said: It occurred to me this afternoon when we were speaking of various projects for the promotion of Unitarianism in Scotland, that amongst them was mentioned the desirability of getting our beliefs into a more compact and presentable form. That was entirely on the lines which I endeavoured yesterday to lay down. And yet it, on the other hand, occurs to me that a remark I once heard a lady make on this point was singularly appropriate, "Whenever anybody asks me what Unitarians believe I invariably say, 'O, we make no profession; if you want to know what we believe, you must find that out'"—(laughter). There was a very great deal in that remark. You cannot put God, Nature, and Man into half a sheet of note-paper—(applause). You cannot put a method of them dealing with these large questions embracing everything from the highest to the lowest into even a four-page tract. If people want to know what Unitarians believe, there is nothing for it but "finding it out"—(laughter)—and they cannot find out by reading a concise statement or catechism of belief. But to revert to my story. I reported this remark to another lady friend; she said, "Yes, it is perfectly true; but I think we may do something towards helping them to find it out." Well, that is what the British and Foreign Unitarian Association is doing, but it cannot make a personal investigation superfluous. I venture to say, Sir, in the presence of the President, Treasurer, and other officers of the Association, that if a man read every book, tract and leaflet, and report of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, he would not know at the end of it what Unitarians believed unless he became one himself, and worked with them and lived with them, because their belief is their life, and their life is their religion—(great applause). And another thing, I believe that amongst the many items of a good Unitarian creed is this: he takes all facts into his creed. We do sometimes say we have the shortest creed; well, so we have, and the longest too, or ought to have, because to my mind the world is a whole, and thought is a whole; and though there is not only great convenience, but great propriety and truth in the division of subjects of study into sacred and secular, and though there has been a good deal of difference of opinion as to what constitutes a thing sacred or secular, yet there is a profound truth in that saying after all. "All branches of knowledge are so welded together, so linked into one another, so support one another, that revolutions of thought in any branch of investigation must in some way or another affect our conception of the Universe, our conception of our relation to the Universe, and our work in the Universe." And if that does not fit our religion, I do not know what religion is; therefore I say that all facts come in a certain sense within the creed of a good Unitarian. But what seems a fact to-day unfortunately may be an exploded theory to-morrow. I got a book in a gentleman's house in which I had the privilege of staying; it was an interesting book on the subject of "Electricity." I knew the name of the author, and I said it was a valuable book. He said no, it was superseded; not exactly superseded, but not up to the latest information. I turned to the date, and found it was 1879. Now 1879 for a first-class work by a first-class man and not worth reading in 1882, is pretty quick work—(laughter). So if you want to know what Unitarians believe, you must find out, because it is not the same in 1883 as it was in 1879. It is the growing point; everybody that has studied botany knows what is meant by the growing point. It is a very little thing, and very hard to investigate indeed, and very hard to get satisfaction upon, even under a microscope; you cannot find out what it is because it is the growing point. Now if Unitarianism is anything, it is the growing point of religious life—(great applause). And a perfect account of the stem, of the leaf, and the flower, and the fruit, cannot be given by anyone without a special study, without having soaked his mind in scientific investigation; without having lived with the plants, and followed out the structure of the plants; and so conversely you cannot give any idea to a man who has not entered into sympathetic study of the very life and vital processes of the plant. In like manner, whatever has not assumed its definite point cannot be put into a one-page tract and scattered over the world. It can only be comprehended by those who are growing—(applause). Let each one do his very best to help people to find out what we believe, and one result will be to find out what we believe ourselves, which in some instances would be a startling discovery to the believer himself—(great laughter). In order that we may attain to this desirable result we must cut down our own individual belief till we come to the quick, and find out what it is that I really believe; in so doing we may help others to find out what we believe, and we may the better perform our true functions in the world. Amongst other things it seems certain that we must consolidate not by outward pressure or regulation, but by inward development. We must consolidate and strengthen the religious life of our communities. And if you will excuse me returning to a point which I have already treated, I will do so. If you have a nail to drive in, there is nothing like driving it well home. If you are the nails, bear it; if you are the hammer, strike hard and straight. Well, this time you are the nails, and I am the hammer, so you must bear, and I must try to drive this idea home. If you are to try and know what you believe yourself, and help other people to understand, there is one duty we must look after, and that is the religious education of our children and our own house; and I am perfectly convinced that there is an enormous amount of spiritual laziness and haziness tolerated which would be dissipated if every parent would say to himself, "I will never tell my child that he cannot understand the answer to a question he asks until I have tried whether he can understand it or not." There is no question so deep, no thought that goes so straight to the heart of religious life, no conception far-reaching and profound that is not capable of being put into simple and clear words, so that a child may understand at least the beginning of it, may feel his mind expanding by it, ready to grow up to it and feel it ever expanding with its own growing thought. But it is just about the hardest thing a man can do to put his thought into that shape, because when he is talking to his brother man he can be a little bit vague and indefinite; a child wants the thing clear, we can make it clear if we take the trouble, if we are willing to give our best thought to it, then I believe that the intrinsic difficulty of the problem of religious education would vanish into thin air. We may have to spend days pondering over the simple questions of a child before we can answer, because we have to put our own spiritual house into order first, because we have to search for an answer, and then the answer has to be put into the simplest, clearest language conscientiously and truly, and from no trivial standard, but from our own life-experience. In educating our children we should educate ourselves, and we should educate the world. I do not believe that any duty lies nearer to any one of us that has a family, or on the other hand that the discharge of any duty will more directly or more truly strengthen our influence for the work that lies about us all over the world than this one of the religious education of our own children. Well, that is the nail I am hammering at present, and I do not know whether it has got quite home yet; but it is one which is brought home to me by my own personal experience, for I have just come to that stage in my own home where this thing will not be put off. "Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh." Perhaps I cannot do better than speak with all the earnestness I can command of the problems and the solution of the difficulties which are perpetually facing us in our dealings with the world about us. To penetrate the life and whole being of those whom we are put in more especial charge can only be done by the directest personal influence of a religion which shall not narrow, but expand every faculty, which shall stimulate all the best and truest energies of life, which shall not only be in harmony, but in closest alliance with the progressive thoughts and lofty feelings and purposes of to-day. In every Christian Church of activity or research such a work cannot be done for the living except by the living, but each one can at least as a rule strive to do it for one person, and that is for himself; he can very likely help to do it for those more immediately dependent on him and around him, and by so doing he will, I am convinced, in the directest and most potent of all ways, strengthen the cause of Unitarianism; strengthen the cause of true religion in parts of the world even of which he hardly knows the name, in places where his name is unknown and his personal influence unfelt. For the world is one as the thought of each is one, and we cannot raise, purify, consolidate, and expand our own religious life and those of our families without doing so for all the world"—(great applause).

The Rev. Dr. CROSSKEY expressed his great pleasure in the recollection of his former connection with the St. Vincent-street Church. He contrasted the deeply religious character of the Scotch people with the religious indifference too prevalent in England. The position which Unitarianism held in Glasgow thirty years ago was very different from what it holds to-day. Dr. Crosskey gave various illustrations of this, and drew a hopeful picture therefrom for the future of the cause. It was clear that if the history of their Church were blotted out much of the history of free religious thought in the world would be blotted out also. He alluded to Dr. Caird and other distinguished Broad Church thinkers in Scotland, and counselled the encouragement of catholic sympathy with the great work which they were accomplishing in preparing the mind of Scotland for the great religious changes which must speedily come.

Mr. H. JEFFERY said that looking at themselves, according to modern fashion, in an evolutionary point of view, and seeing that as regards numbers they were a very feeble folk compared with the many-peopled churches around them, they had to put in some plea for existence and fitness to survive. He quoted from the Rev. Heber Newton, the popular Episcopalian clergyman of New York, and other American writers, testimony to the immense service rendered to the purification of religious thought in the United States by the eminent Unitarian authors and preachers of that country. In England, too, the influence of the Unitarian divines for the last hundred years, from Priestley to Martineau, had no doubt largely helped to modify the doctrinal presentation of Christianity in the churches called orthodox. The cruel dogmas of the Westminster Confession had not the hold upon the Scottish mind it had thirty or forty years ago. If our body had not existed, or were now to disappear, a valuable element of progress would be missed. We are sometimes told to disband, because other reforming agencies in theology are now so active. He hoped that advice would be rejected. There is another side to the picture. When he saw the transformation, which, through the Tractarian party, had been wrought within our own time in the Church of England by the insinuation of sacerdotalism; when he saw too, in England and Scotland how stealthily and steadily the Romish Church was advancing, how insidiously and increasingly it is operating through social intercourse and the Press, he felt that there was need for all the forces which Liberal Christianity could muster. If on the one side there is progress, on the other there is retrogression. The battle is not yet fought out. Whatever our confidence in evolution towards higher types, we should always remember that there is possibility of degeneration. The loose formation of the Unitarian ranks is doubtless a disadvantage in the contest; but he would undertake to show from nearly a score of formal statements of belief by leading Unitarians, which are widely circulated on both sides of the Atlantic, that there is a much nearer consensus of opinion amongst us on the main points of religious faith than is usually supposed. "Union and Onwards" must still be our motto.

The Rev. H. IERSON offered the hearty thanks of the British and Foreign Association for the cordial reception which had been given to its representatives. It was a happy suggestion which had brought them to Scotland, and they could now feel, with regard to their Scottish friends, that they have become better acquainted. At the same time they were glad that their brethren in Scotland should have seen "what manner of spirit they were of," a kindred spirit with their own, and always ready for every good word and work. For if, as had been suggested, they could not assure themselves or others as to particular opinions which they might hold, about one thing there was universal agreement, that whatsoever things were true, just, pure, honest, and of good report, these constituted the only real Unitarianism.

Mr. GRANT then moved, and Mr. GRAHAM seconded, a hearty vote of thanks to the president and the deputation, and the meeting was closed with the singing of a hymn, and the Benediction pronounced by the Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND, of Edinburgh.

UNITARIANISM IN ABERDEEN.

On Wednesday, October 18, a Congregational Social Meeting was held in the Music Hall Buildings, at which there was a large attendance, nearly two hundred, although but a few days had been given for preparation.

The chair was taken by the minister, the Rev. GEORGE J. WALTERS, who in a brief address, said the distinctive work that Unitarians had to do was to teach a free and rational religion; to proclaim a pure and charitable form of Christianity; and that the best way for Unitarians to do this was by trying to live up to their highest ideal of their religion—(applause). Unitarians studied religion with a reverent and unfettered spirit, and also sought to have what he might call a heart-faith. Their work ought not to be carried on in a spirit of mere empty antagonism to other Churches and people; their mission was to build up a religion and a faith for themselves before they knocked down the faith of anybody else—(applause). He did not mean that they were to make any base compromise whatever, but that they should go about in a kindly friendly way, in which case the gross misrepresentations that were current regarding them, socially and theologically, would diminish, and at last vanish away. He trusted that in Aberdeen they would have continued harmony and thorough unity—(applause).

The Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., next delivered an address. Referring to a walk that he had taken through Aberdeen, he said he thought the hard, cold, stern granite of the buildings might very well be compared to the granite creed of Calvinism. He paid a high tribute to the national sentiment of religious devotion, and said he felt assured that if the hard creed were exchanged for one broader and milder, the religious sentiment would only gain in power and beauty—(applause). There was no single bit of work that men could do that the world was in more crying need of, on which the future of the world and humanity more directly depended, than that of making for themselves and teaching to others a pure spiritual religion that would not only be consistent with the discoveries of science and the results of historical and critical study, but would rest upon them at every point, would make itself one with them, and glorify them by making them one with it—(applause).

The Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, Belfast, spoke of the pleasure it gave him to come to Aberdeen and see for himself how the Unitarian cause was flourishing under the leadership of his friend Mr. Walters. He spoke of the claims of the Sunday-school, and recommended Teachers' Notes, Young Days, and such publications to both children and parents—(applause).

The Rev. ALEXANDER WEBSTER, Glasgow, spoke as a representative of the Scottish Unitarian Association, assuring the Aberdeen Congregation of the sympathy and good wishes of Southern friends in the hard but progressive work in which they and their minister were engaged—(applause). He referred to his having been trained in the granite creed of Calvinism, but said that he found, on self-examination, that he still held all that was good and essential in that creed, while much that was harsh and repulsive had been given up—(applause).

A vote of thanks to the visitors was moved by Mr. ROBERT ROBERTSON, and seconded by Mr. HENRY WORLING, and carried with enthusiasm.

Songs were given during the evening, Mrs. WALTERS presiding at the piano. "Auld Lang Syne" brought to a close a very successful and useful meeting, and the kindness of Mr. WICKSTEED in thus journeying North to give his assistance may be recommended to all our ministers and friends.

ALTRINCHAM: WELCOME TO THE REV. J. EDWIN ODGERS, M.A.

On Friday evening, the 13th inst., a soirée was held in the Literary Institute, Altrincham, to welcome the Rev. J. E. Odgers and Mrs. Odgers, Alderman Heywood, J.P., of Manchester, occupying the chair. There were also present the Rev. P. M. Higginson, M.A., Styal; J. B. Lloyd, Knutsford; James Black, M.A., Todmorden; Dendy Agate, B.A., Gorton; Richard Pilcher, B.A., Warrington; C. T. Poynting, B.A., Platt; James McConnochie, Sale; James Harwood, B.A., Monton; James Harrop, Rial-street, Hulme; B. Walker, Domestic Mission, Willert-street; W. G. Cadman, Miles Platting; T. Lloyd Jones, Hale; John Moore, Swinton; Silas Farrington, Brooke-street, Manchester; and Messrs. Harry Rawson, John Hadfield, Robert Nicholson, Frank Nicholson, Albert Nicholson, Alexander Ireland, G. H. Fryer, Richard Wade, Wm. Shawcross, A. E. Paterson, Cuthbert Grundy, F. W. Holland, John Hall, Alfred Balstone, John Dendy, James Harland, W. B. Brown, James Beard, Jesse Pilcher, &c., and the whole of Mr. Odgers's students at the Home Missionary Board.

The room was tastefully decorated with plants and flowers kindly supplied by Mrs. Balstone, Mrs. Abel Heywood, Mrs. Hall, Miss Valentine, and Miss Naylor, while a large quantity of beautiful and valuable pictures, photo, and books were furnished by Councillor Rowley, G. H. Fryer, Thomas Hodgson, and Thomas Armstrong and Bros., of Deansgate, Manchester.

Alderman HERWOOD said he had to express his regret that a gentleman long connected with the congregation had not been able to take the chair. If he had been well he would have been the only person whom they could ask on such an occasion as that. He referred to Mr. James Worthington—(applause). It was a matter for regret also that failing Mr. Worthington, Mr. Nicholson had not been asked—(applause)—as he had more claims on the congregation than he (Mr. Heywood) had. It might be considered somewhat singular how the congregation had made the arrangement with Mr. Odgers. There seemed to have been a kind of electrical action, by which the congregation had become acquainted with him. Several gentlemen believed Mr. Odgers would be the best man they could possibly get, of whom he (the chairman) was one, and those who knew their new minister intimately gave him a very good character indeed. Their church was surrounded by three or four communities—Dunham, Altrincham, Bowdon, and Hale. There were 10,000 or 12,000 people in Altrincham, and 2,000 or 3,000 in Dunham, and about 2,000 in Bowdon. There was, therefore, scope for a clever man, whose heart was in the work, and was disposed to labour not only for the good of the congregation itself, but for the future congregation. They had never had a tea party since he (Mr. Heywood) came to reside in Bowdon ten years ago. He had always been accustomed to be connected with tea and social parties, and he would ask them, however, whether they had not got that night a most beautiful social party—(applause). He trusted that night would be the beginning of a display of social feeling and kindness towards Mr. Odgers, and the efforts he would make, and that those efforts would be received by the congregation in such a manner as to show their strongest trust in him—(applause).

Mr. GODFREY WORTHINGTON, on behalf of the Sunday-school teachers and scholars, said it was their earnest desire to give to Mr. Odgers as hearty a greeting and as warm a welcome as that of the other members of the congregation, and its sincerity would be shown in the future, as they became better known to each other—(applause). The energy and determination which had helped to make the school what it was, would, with Mr. Odgers's assistance, and under his direction, be able to do still more. It was well-known Mr. Odgers took a deep interest in Sunday-school work, and their school was to be congratulated that in the future it would be conducted under such able supervision—(applause). It was already intended to commence a series of monthly afternoon services specially adapted for children—(applause)—which was good evidence of what Mr. Odgers was willing to do—(applause).

The Rev. T. LLOYD JONES, on behalf of the Hale congregation, in a humorous speech, said he was glad the framers of the programme had remembered the close connection existing between the Altrincham and Hale churches. It was generally thrown into his face that he was fond of reminding the Altrincham people of their origin. Their late minister had said of the ministers of Hale and Altrincham, that one was vicar and the other perpetual curate. He (Mr. Jones) was therefore there in his capacity as vicar of the mother church at Hale to give a hearty welcome to Mr. Odgers. That was probably the last time he (Mr. Jones) should address them as minister of Hale, and he must thank the Altrincham friends for the tender sympathy they had always shown him, and the kindness and generosity with which they had always treated him.

The Rev. J. E. ODGERS, after some preliminary remarks acknowledging the welcome, said: "I come to succeed one who has been an intimate friend of mine ever since I went to college as a very freshman indeed, to be seen through a few preliminary troubles by Mr. Howse as my guardian angel. I am bound to say that he fulfilled the duties imposed upon him in the best possible way, and we have maintained ever since—though we have been far apart in residence—the most cordial relations. In succeeding him I am conscious that in making a change you have made a change indeed. I feel that I cannot present to you that subtlety of thought and precision of expression, that finish of literary style, which are so eminently characteristic of our friend's work—(applause). I feel that I have to ask you to take a good deal in the rough. You know that I am largely engaged in an educational work in Manchester, and it is with very many thanks to you all that I remember the kind words of sympathy with me in that work which came from your committee in replying to my letter accepting your pulpit, and the presence here this evening of Mr. Rawson and other officials, and your kind invitation of my students, is to me a pledge that that side of my work, and the rather onerous duties which it lays upon me, will not pass out of your recollection, and will be kept in mind if at any time I seem to be not fully given up to the legitimate congregational demands which may be made upon me—(applause). I do not say this for a moment as a plea or excuse for idleness, believe me. As to the congregational life of which the Chairman has already spoken, I am extremely pleased to have opportunity of meeting in a friendly and social way those whom I shall be addressing from Sunday to Sunday. Now, if I may say a plain word, it is just this. A minister has usually to begin, strange as it may appear after the kindly words we have been hearing, by, to some extent, asking for what is called "fair play." He comes, and like a new Government, asks not to be too severely criticised before he has made his policy pretty apparent, and he asks not to be allowed to give offence by things which might be readily preventable, if a word were spoken or a hint given. He asks, at all events, to be taken in good part, which, I am sure, I need not ask at present. What is called the pastoral relation is naturally a thing that we cannot create in a moment, either I, by being inducted into the official responsibility, or you, by the utmost willingness to take any help I can give. It seems to me the longer I live, and the more I see of ministerial life, that an immediate confidence is an absolute impossibility, and that only quiet growth along the lines of family and social intercourse can lead to that real friendship which really is the pastoral relation, and compared with which any other is but a sham—(applause). We assume, of course, from the very fact we are belonging to the congregation and that we meet in common worship, we assume some initial points of sympathy. We believe in a free church, in a free pulpit, in free speech, and that in matters of religion the broadest faith in God and holy things is found sufficient basis for Christian feelings and helpful communion—(applause). We have at least so much of a united sympathy, but until there is more, the preacher's preaching is only tentative. He is often as "one that beateth the air,"—one that not only does not know whether he can intelligibly put things this way or that, but does not know what things are of interest to you and sometimes he discovers that there is nothing less helpful, more detrimental to the congregation than to be discussing before it religious difficulties that they do not feel, and intellectual problems which are only in the very remotest degree within their conception—(applause). So it not infrequently happens, a man is trying to get some little indication, some kind of intimation from a hearer here and there, as to what he wants and what he would like. There may be a subject on which he feels that he ought to speak. He wants some landmarks of a common interest to approach it by. It makes all the difference between going together, or the congregation seeing their minister go up in a balloon of his own—(applause). If only you can let your minister know what it is you care about, or what it is that puzzled you, or—but that is matter for far more private and further talk—what it is that tries you, why then you will have done the very best thing in the world to make a good minister and a good preacher of him—(applause). I cannot set you something you are to learn in order to provide the basis or common ground, but what I want to know is just exactly where you are in these things, and I will endeavour to go along your way—(applause). You know what is constantly happening is this. Here is the minister at work in his study, in the first place beating his brains to discover anything that is just coming up to the point of demanding to be said, wanting to find something or other that he feels about, and that he knows about, and that demands to be spoken. He wants to find what he is going to say next Sunday, and he wishes oftentimes when things seem just about even to him, when he has not got an inspiration or a necessity laid on him, that he could tell what there is that these people want or that any one of them cares about, or would like to know about, or is in perplexity about. And on the other hand, there is the hearer at home saying, "Well, now look here, my minister reads these things and I don't, and I see by the papers and by the Fortnightly, or something else, that all I used to be told about is not true, or is exploded, or questionable. I wish he would tell me about that. My children ask me questions I cannot answer, for I know nothing about it. My wife is perfectly happy if she can get a sermon about Ruth once a year—(laughter). Why does not our minister just preach about these things instead of going on with something he cares about and we do not care about?"—(applause). I want these two people to come together, this middle line of partition to be broken down, and then I think both sides will derive the greatest possible good. The ordinary intercourse of a minister with his congregation ought if it is worth anything, to lead to an insight of kindness, and an action of hearty helpfulness, and it goes on to doing some little good turn, which leads to a quiet mutual understanding and confidence, which again oftentimes leads to a quiet readiness with which one puts his shoulder a little bit under the burden which is pressing upon another, and hence come that assured relation of tried friendship and mutual confidence which is, as I have said, the only true pastoral relation worth calling by that name—(applause). With regard to any efforts that your chairman has spoken of, the monthly service for children I sincerely hope may be acceptable to families belonging to the congregation. This is simply an initial thing. I hope, if any way whereby I may get the children of the congregation about me for religious instruction seems to you to be possible or advisable, that you will kindly speak to me on the subject—(applause). There is a tinge of sorrow about this otherwise happy occasion, and our friend Lloyd Jones struck a minor key when he said that this was probably the last occasion, on which you collectively would hear his cheery voice. I very bitterly deplore the fate that takes him away just as I come. And yet I am so recently from Liverpool that I know how patiently and with what striving the Liverpool Domestic Mission Committee, and his noble co-worker, Joseph Anderton, are waiting for him at that post of duty in Beaufort-street. My friends, he is going to one of the noblest tasks that a human being could propose to himself. He is going to stand in the line of noble heroic and devoted men, to do exactly as they did, just his little best, towards diminishing to some degree that mass of ignorance, vice, and indifference, which has engulfed our Liverpool poor. I will not dwell long on this, which to me is a matter of intense and pathetic interest, but one kindly word and one expression of our unanimous kindly farewell, and God-speed to Mr. Lloyd Jones, should go from this meeting"—(applause).

The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Rev. SILAS FARRINGTON, the Rev. JAS. BLACK, who welcomed Mr. Odgers on behalf of the ministers of the district, and the Rev. RICHARD PILCHER, who wished Mr. and Mrs. Odgers a happy sojourn at Altrincham, and such success as he was sure they desired, and he would add deserved—(applause).

The meeting was also addressed by the Rev. J. B. Lloyd, the Rev. Dendy Agate, and the Rev. P. M. Higginson, and the singing of the National Anthem closed the proceedings.

During the evening the audience were entertained with vocal and instrumental music by the chapel choir and others.

DEWSBURY.—The Rev. J. Crowther Hirst, of Cheltenham, has accepted the unanimous and most cordial invitation of the West Riding Mission Committee, and of the congregation, to take the charge of Unity Church, Dewsbury, and his ministry there will commence on the first Sunday in the new year.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The second of a series of lectures was delivered by the Rev. Alfred Hood, in the Workmen's Institute, Winton, on Thursday, the 19th inst., the subject being the Gospel Preached by Jesus Christ. The attendance was very good, considering that there are in Winton only about 1,000 inhabitants. About fifty were present, including a minister of the Established Church. Questions were asked at the close of the lecture by the Rev. W. Field, and members of the Congregational and Baptist Churches. A spirit of inquiry has been aroused in the place, which we hope will help to strengthen the position at Bournemouth. An appeal will shortly be made for aid to help in the building a permanent church.

STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL, LONDON.—Our readers will see from our advertising columns that the Stamford-street Chapel, which has been closed for the past two months, and has undergone extensive alterations and repairs, will be reopened on Sunday, November 5. Professor J. E. Carpenter, M.A., preaches in the morning, and the Rev. W. C. Bowie in the evening. The new schoolroom and lecture-hall on top of chapel, and covering almost the same area, is admirably suited to the purpose for which it is designed, and will accommodate over 200 children. This will be opened by a social tea and public meeting on Wednesday, November 8, presided over by Mr. F. Nettlefold. David Ainsworth, Esq., M.P., Charles H. James, Esq., M.P., Miss Helen Taylor, M.L.S.B., and several others are announced to take part in the proceedings. The greater part of the money required for these improvements has been subscribed, but we understand that nearly £600 is still wanted to make accounts balance.

NORTH CHESHIRE UNITARIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—The annual meeting of the Union was held at the Russell Scott Memorial Schools at Denton, on Saturday, October 21, about 120 teachers and friends being present. The Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., president, occupied the chair, and there were also present Mrs. and the Misses Scott, the Revs. G. H. Vance, B.D., L. Scott, J. K. Smith, N. Green, Messrs. John Hall Brooks, John Jackson, J. O. Kerfoot, T. Barlow and J. Barrow. The following were elected officers of the Union for the ensuing year. The Rev. H. E. Dowson, B.A., president; the Rev. Noah Green, vice president; Mr. John Jackson, treasurer; Edwin B. Broadrick, secretary. Mr. Robert S. Redfern, of Denton, read a paper on "Sunday-school Amusements," which caused a very animated discussion, in which the following took part: the Revs. H. E. Dowson, J. K. Smith, Noah Green, William Mason, and Messrs. T. Cottrell, J. Hall Brooks, John Jackson, J. O. Kerfoot, J. Knowles, M. Wilde, and E. B. Broadrick. Votes of thanks to Mr. Redfern for his paper to our Denton friends for the entertainment, and to Mr. Dowson for presiding, brought to a close one of the most successful meetings ever held in connection with this Union.

The Liberal Pulpit.

THE REV. BROOKE HERFORD.

A large congregation attended Arlington-street Church, Boston, U.S., at the forenoon service on Oct. 1, owing to the interest in the reopening of the edifice after its close for months past during repairs, and especially owing to the desire to hear the initial sermon of the new pastor, the Rev. Brooke Herford. This clergyman's voice has been heard there before, on the occasion of his coming to Boston from Chicago; but this was his first appearance in the capacity of pastor. The church interior presented a tasteful and attractive effect as the result of the thorough repairs which have been made during the summer, the warm and rich tints of the walls and carpeting, and the new arrangement of lighting the pulpit from overhead, being particularly noticeable.

After the appropriate introductory prayer and hymns, Mr. CURTIS GUILD arose, and on behalf of the church and congregation, extended the right hand of fellowship to the new pastor, making brief reference to the line of distinguished pastors—Channing, Gannett, Ware—who had filled this place, and expressing confidence that the incoming pastor would bring to the new service the ardour as a servant of God which the church had recognised in him, and the hope that God would enable him to impart and the congregation worthily to receive what is best for their spiritual welfare.

Mr. HERFORD said,—I thank you for the welcome with which you have received me. I prize these simple words from your own hearts and lips more than any priestly hand that could be laid upon me, and I hope that I may be able to carry out the purposes that are in my heart and the wishes that are in your own. I hope that you will bear in mind that what is to be done cannot be done by me alone. It takes the whole church to preach the whole Gospel. This is an hour for prayers rather than for promises, and my prayers are given to-day that I may be able worthily to fulfil all the duties of the ministry which I now gladly assume.

After giving as a Scripture reading portions of the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians, the pastor took his text from 1 Chronicles xxix. 3, "I have set my affections to the house of my God." It has been one of the customs of warfare for the general on the eve of enterprises to give out some watchword. What Christian watchword could I give better than this, "I have set my affections to the house of my God." It was first spoken as a word of hope, for David wished to make the temple the one great rallying point of the Jewish national life. And, indeed, it is one of the most touching passages in history, the passionate love of the people for this sanctuary. There are many things of the present day which seem to show that the churches are outgrowing their usefulness. Recent census figures show that a large proportion of the people have no part in the church. The Catholics make the best showing, and yet even Catholic writers claim that they do not attend to their church in proportion to the great accessions they have received in this country. If all the churches were abolished, religion would still survive, and in every state of life there would still be heard the cry of the heart seeking for the living God. Yet it would be an awful thing to have thus to make an entirely new start in the way. The popular life has received a sudden twist in the great advance which has been made in scientific and material progress, and the churches themselves have hardly grown as they ought to keep pace. And so I would open this pastorate by a word on behalf of upholding our churches and being faithful to them. The newly-formed Western town before the erection of a church is a busy but shiftless place, but soon there will be found a little group of men and women who think with sad recollection of the Sundays they spent in some old church they knew in the past. The formation of a new church in the town, whatever its doctrines, makes a happy change, and serves as a rallying point for the best elements of the community. If the churches of this city were transformed into stores or left to the sparrows, there is not a piece of real estate that would not suffer in value by the fact. Religion cannot be measured by standards of money. All the great outgrowths of morality have been directly associated with religion, and in the Reformation there was a better state of righteousness as well as a higher faith. There should be one place where the world's highest standards of duty and motive would always be urged. Even if the churches should be only a little ahead of the common world in philanthropy and spirit, what is that but to say that the churches are composed only of common men and women, and not of geniuses? It is granted that the churches have sometimes been the allies of wrong; but we are arguing not for State churches, but for the free churches of the people. It was to the old meeting-houses of New England that the hardy spirit of the people was largely due, and the outgrowth of their self-sacrifice was seen in the anti-slavery agitation and the War of the Rebellion. The clearest words that ring out for human good to-day are spoken in the pulpits, supplying not only an organised expression, but a permanent inspiration. Another great manifestation of the usefulness of the churches is the work and instruction for the young. Think of what has been done by the Sunday-school and the vast body of the mission schools. When Felix Adler went to Chicago, advocating the society for the practical culture of ethics, he asked if there was a single free kindergarten school in the city, and was surprised to learn that they were maintained by the churches. Even the most sceptical will almost always wish to have churches for the sake of their children. True, the churches are not all they might be to young children; but are our schools or even our homes all that they might be for them? It is with no misgiving that I urge you to set your affections to the house of God. Help the churches to grow. Our churches have begun with their windows open to the light. Some regard the chief growth required in our churches as the outgrowing of the basis on which churches have been established in the past, but the Spirit of God does not seem to point that way. It is true we may have kept too strictly to the old methods and times. For my part, I have no ecclesiastical novelty to present. Standing a little on the downward side of life, I am partial to old ways; and I love the memorials of Channing, Gannet, and my old, strong friend, John Ware. Worship must be the real heart of any Church that is to live and grow. The whole spirit of worship should be invigorating alike to old and young. I don't know that I can realise this, but we can grow toward it. I distrust formal liturgies. I am not anxious to discern what may be the Church of the Future, but I am anxious to bring about a realisation of the living Church of the Present. We can use a new spirit, but all the truth is not new; the spirit of human life and solemn thought of God are still to be found in the old gospel of Jesus Christ. Even in art some of the best things to be found are those of the past; and so it is with the realisation of the gospel of Jesus Christ. On this gospel I shall stand, and endeavour to lead to highest spiritual life.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL ASSOCIATION AND THE POST OFFICE.—The Treasurer of the Sunday-school Association recently sent a printed circular, with a halfpenny stamp on it, to all subscribers who had not paid their subscriptions for the present year. In many towns, though by no means in all, a surcharge of a penny was made on this circular, on the ground that the amount of the subscription due was written in by hand, and that therefore the communication was "in the nature of a letter," and should have borne a penny stamp. The treasurer appealed to the General Post Office in London, and the Secretary to the Post Office has now decided that as "the amount of subscriptions inserted in the documents in question would be the same in several cases, they may be regarded as circular letters, and the charge on them will be refunded." It is hoped that this explanation will allay any annoyance caused by the exaction.

LONDON: LITTLE PORTLAND-STREET CHAPEL.—The first of a series of United Devotional Services in connection with our London congregations was held at this chapel on Thursday evening last. Owing to the heavy showers of rain that prevailed during the evening the attendance did not exceed 180. The service commenced with the singing of the hymn "O, worship the king." Dr. Sadler then read part of the ninth chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, and offered up prayer. The hymn "Thou Grace Divine, encircling all" was then sung, and a short and impressive address was given by the Rev. T. W. Freckleton on the purpose of these gatherings, and the good that might be served if they were rightly used. This address was to have been given by Mr. Edwin Ellis, of Guildford, who was, however, prevented from attending, owing to severe domestic affliction. After the address there was "a pause for silent prayer," during which an appropriate voluntary was played on the organ. This was followed by the singing of a hymn, "Source of love, and Light of day," and the Rev. Rowland Hill, of Bedford, then read an appropriate selection from the writings of F. W. Newman, "The Call of God's Service," and offered up prayer. Another hymn, "Descend to thy Jerusalem, O Lord!" was sung, and an address and prayer were given by the Rev. Charles Hargrove, of Leeds. The singing of another hymn, "Now Lord of Hosts, whose guiding hand," and the pronouncing of the benediction by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, brought the service to a close. We may add that the singing was hearty and congregational, and that the music, which was ably led by Mr. Tate, of Hackney, lent an appropriate charm to the devotional character of the service. We understand that the next United Devotional Service will be held about Christmas.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 29.

LONDON.

J. ALLANSON PICTON, Esq., at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., Professor WILLIAM KNIGHT, LL.D., St. Andrew's University, on "The True, the Beautiful, and the Good."

* * Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Barrett's (W. A.) Balfie, his Life and Works, 7/6
Cross's (Rev. J. A.) Introductory Hints on the Old Testament, 7/6
Dead Hand (The) in the Free Churches, sketched by Eminent Nonconformists, 5/
Humphry's (W. G.) New Testament for English Readers, 7/6
Huther's (Dr. J. E.) Epistles of James and John, 10/6
Hawes's (H. K.) American Humourists, 6/
Lockhart's (G. J.) Life of Napoleon Buonaparte, 7/6
Lunemann's (Dr. G.) Epistle to the Hebrews, trans. by Rev. M. J. Evans, 10/6
Martensen's (Dr. H.) Christian Ethics, trans. by S. Taylor, 10/6
Smeaton's (G.) The Doctrine of the Holy Spirit, Ninth Series of the Cunningham Lectures, 9/
Thicknesse's (R.) The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, 7/6
Weiss's (Dr. B.) Biblical Theology of the New Testament, trans. by Rev. D. Eaton, Vol. 1, 10/6
Winks's (W. E.) Lives of Illustrious Shoemakers, 7/6

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

BIRTH.

PARKER—On the 21st inst., at 69, Fellows-road, South Hampstead, the wife of Frank Rowley Parker, of a son.

MARRIAGE.

LEWIN—SMITH—October 17, at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Higher Trannmere, by the Rev. A. Bryce Muir, M.A., Walter Lewin, to Lillias Lee Smith, both of Birkenhead.

DEATHS.

NETTLEFOLD—On the 25th inst., at Frankfort, Jessie, fifth daughter of the late Edward John Nettlefold, of Highgate, aged 15 years.

RATHBONE—On the 24th inst., at Greenbank, near Liverpool, Elizabeth, widow of W. Rathbone, Esq., aged 92.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms. Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE

ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.

ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or 8, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHARING-CROSS LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

DIXON'S IRON CHAPELS, SCHOOLS, &c.

Are tasteful in Design, Economical, Durable, made of the Best Materials, and erected in the most careful manner. Can be taken down, removed, and re-erected at small cost.

Very careful comparison of Specifications, Structural and Architectural details, Materials and Workmanship are invited before placing orders.

IRON CHURCHES, &c., usually on hand or in progress at the Works.

IRON BUILDINGS for all purposes and all Climates. Catalogues, Designs, Estimates, and all information on application.

ISAAC DIXON, Windsor Iron Works, Liverpool.

SEASONABLE DELICACY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

As Blanc-Mange, Custard, Baked Pudding, &c.

WITH

STEWED FRUIT

OF ANY KIND.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY:

FOR NOVEMBER, 1882, Price 2s. 6d.

The Present State of the Army. By Major-General Sir FREDERICK S. ROBERTS, G.B.C.
Irish Revolution and English Liberals. By JOHN MORLEY.
Public Works in London. By the Right Hon. G. SHAW LEFEBVRE, M.P. (With Plans.)
The Jews: a Deferred Rejoinder. By Professor GOLDWIN SMITH.
A Liverpool Address. By MATTHEW ARNOLD.
Railway Labour. By MARGARET E. HARKNESS.
Superstition in Arcady. By the Rev. AUGUSTUS JESSOP, D.D.
The Irish Land Commissioners. By Lord EBRINGTON, M.P.
Modern Miracles. By RICHARD F. CLARKE, S.J.
Notes on School Board Questions. By SYDNEY C. BUXTON.
The Ministry and the Clôture. By the Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS.
England in Egypt. By EDWARD DICEY.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND CO., LONDON.

SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

As a means of bringing to the notice of those who desire to have useful books for teaching and healthy literature for their children, the Sunday School Association will send a copy of each of the following works (their ten newest publications), carriage paid, on receipt of postal order for ten shillings.

Remarkable Women as Examples for Girls. By ANN SWAINE.
Elements of Morality, in Easy Lessons, for Home and School Teaching. By Mrs. CHARLES BRAY.
Stories from the Life of Moses. By R. BARTRAM.
Stories from the Book of Genesis. By R. BARTRAM.
Short Sermons to Children. By Three Cousins.
Sacred Smiles; being Notes for Teachers of Bible Classes and others. By P. E. VIZARD.
The Life of Jesus, in Twenty Lessons for Sunday Schools. By Rev. H. S. SOLLY, M.A.
Outline Lessons in Religion. By Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.
The Story of Religion in England. By Rev. BROOKS HERFORD.
Young Days, the Vol. for 1882 (the seventh), in illustrated boards.

Address, WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS' MANUAL.—A few copies of Vols. III, IV., and V., comprising thirteen quarterly numbers of this excellent serial (originally published by the Manchester District Sunday School Association), neatly bound in One Volume, cloth, lettered; may be had post free for 1s. 9d.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 3s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap Iss. 1s. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

TEXTS AND MARGINS OF THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH. 1s.

A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

A DISCOURSE ON CHRISTIAN UNITARIANISM. By JAMES TAPLIN. Price 3d.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, price 1s. 6d.

TRUE TO HIMSELF. The Story of Savonarola. Written for Young People by FRANCES E. COOKE, Author of "Footprints," "A Boy's Ideal," &c.

SWAN, SONNENSCHN, and Co., Paternoster-row.

Third Edition, pp. 116. One Shilling, or 13 stamps.

SKIN DISEASES TREATED HOMOEOPATHICALLY. By WASHINGTON EPPS, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. Describes and prescribes for fifty varieties of skin diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High-street, Birmingham.

Just published, 8vo. price 1s.

RELIGION AND LIBERTY: An Address delivered at the Opening of the Session 1882-3 of Manchester New College, London. By JAMES DRUMMOND, LL.D., Professor of Theology.

WILLIAMS and NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

HINTS TO BIBLE READERS.

Just published, in crown 8vo. pp. 346, price 7s. 6d. cloth.

INTRODUCTORY HINTS to ENGLISH READERS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By the Rev. JOHN A. CAHOSS, M.A.

London: LONGMANS and Co.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

THE LATE REV. W. A. POPE.

SUPPLEMENTAL LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Amount last advertised ...	1980	14	1
J. Butler, Esq. ...	1	1	0
Mrs. Sullivan, New Jersey ...	1	1	0
"W. R.," per F. Shepherd, Esq. ...	10	0	0
Friends at Unity Church, Islington, per J. T. Preston, Esq. ...	31	16	0
A Friend, per Rev. R. Spears ...	1	0	0
W. G. Harrison (Seehurst) ...	2	2	0
Mrs. Milliken (Bath) ...	5	0	0
Mrs. Anne Harvey (Litchford) ...	5	0	0
Mrs. H. (Heaton) ...	1	1	0
G. W. ...	0	10	0
Mrs. E. Enfield ...	5	0	0
Mrs. Roscoe (Manchester) ...	1	0	0
Misses Todd (in addition to £5 already announced) ...	0	5	0
Rev. Lawrence Scott (Denton) ...	2	2	0

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certificate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by correspondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials. Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

WANTED, by a Widow Lady in Belfast, a YOUNG LADY as GOVERNESS, for her two children, and to have full charge of them and their wardrobe. The children are under the ages of six and four years. Salary £20 per annum.—Applications, with references, may be addressed to A. B. C., care of Rev. J. C. Street, 50, Ulster-avenue, Belfast.

APARTMENTS are offered in a small but thoroughly clean and comfortably furnished house; suitable for a gentleman of quiet and regular habits, engaged out during the day. Convenient for the City or West-end.—Further particulars supplied on application to Mrs. Heywood, 100, Calford-road, De Beauvoir Town, London, N.

STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL, LONDON.

The RE-OPENING SERVICES will take place on Sunday, November 5. Professor J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., will preach in the Morning, the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWEN in the Evening. Services at 11 and 6.30.

Collections in aid of the Building Fund.
The new Schoolroom will be opened on Wednesday, November 8. Full particulars next week.

DOMESTIC-STREET NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL, HOLBECK, LEEDS.

A GRAND BAZAAR in aid of the above, will be held in the New School, on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of Nov. next.

Any contributions, either in money or goods, will be thankfully received by IDEN PAYNE, Minister, 3, Cambrian-terrace, Holbeck, Leeds; JOHN S. MATHERS, Chairman, 73, Albion-street, Leeds; E. F. MORLEY, Treasurer, 4, Gladstone-street, Holbeck, Leeds; Wm. WESTERMAN, Secretary, Cemetery-road, Holbeck, Leeds.

CONIGRE CHAPEL, TROWBRIDGE.

The congregation at Trowbridge are making an effort to provide their Chapel with what has long been sorely needed, viz., a new Organ. About £150 have been already subscribed, but as considerably more will be required, the congregation (mainly a working-class one) trust they may have the pleasure of receiving help from friends at a distance, towards the accomplishment of their object.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Rev. J. FELSTREAD, Conigre Parsonage, Trowbridge; or by Mr. E. DOBSON, 3, Gloucester-road, Trowbridge.

A SOIREE will be held in the MEMORIAL HALL, Manchester, on Tuesday, November 7, when the PORTRAIT of the Rev. G. H. WELLS, M.A., will be presented by the subscribers to the Trustees of the Hall, and an ADDRESS to Mr. Wells.

Tea at 5.30. The chair will be taken at 6.30 by the Rev. Wm. GASKELL, M.A.

A Ticket for the Soirée will be sent to every subscriber. Additional Tickets for friends, price 1s. each, can be had from the Secretary; Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street, and Mr. Jones, the Memorial Hall, Manchester.

CHAS. T. POYNTING, Hon. Sec., Fallowfield, Manchester.
THOS. DIGGLES, Treasurer, 22, Booth-st., Manchester.

SOUTH OF FRANCE, VALLEY OF LA DORDOGNE.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for Twenty-four BOYS from ten to fifteen. Modern and Dead Languages, Mathematical and Natural Sciences, taught according to the New Programme of the Elementary and Grammar Classes in the Lycées. Good German Tutor. A few English pupils would be admitted on moderate terms.

Apply for more information (at Ste. Foy, Gironde) to the Director, M. Gilard, pastor; and for references (44, Boulevard des Gobelins, Paris) to M. Steeg, late pastor at Libourne, member of the French Parliament for Bordeaux; M. Rondier, M.P. for Libourne; MM. Et. Coquerel and Viquié, pastors in Paris, and M. Fontanes, pastor at Havre.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN

STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatten, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady

(daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principale, 63, Boulevard Marquette.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday October 28, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2106.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—
A Case of Arrested Development...	709
Provision for Ministers' Families ...	710
Mrs. Booth's Defence of the Salvation Army	711
Reasonable Religion.—II. ...	712
American Correspondence ...	712
REVIEWS:—
A Short Protestant Commentary on the Books of the New Testament ...	713
Last Words of Thomas Carlyle ...	714
True to Himself; or, the Story of a Great Life... ..	714
Short Notices ...	714
OBITUARY:—
Mrs. Rathbone, of Liverpool ...	715
OCCASIONAL NOTES ...	715
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Ram Mohun Roy ...	717
The South London Free Library ...	717
The Moral Reform Union ...	717
Dr. G. Vance and Canon Cook ...	717
RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—
The Scottish Unitarian Association ...	718
New Church at Miles Platting, Manchester	720
Ministers' Benevolent Society ...	722

A CASE OF ARRESTED DEVELOPMENT.

AMONG the most singular facts in nature are certain instances of arrested development. The progress is suddenly arrested at a particular stage; it reaches a certain limit, beyond which it does not advance. This phenomenon, however, is not confined to the natural world. Some remarkable illustrations of the same fact are to be found in the theological world. Ritualism seems to us an instance of arrested development. The complete development would be Romanism. That we hold to be the logical conclusion of the cherished principles of Ritualism. The late Dr. PUSEY was, in our judgment, a remarkable instance—one of the most remarkable in the sphere of theology—of arrested development. The conclusions of Romanism were latent in his assumptions. The spirit and pretensions of the Roman Church pervaded his theology, yet he did not consistently advance to Rome like others who started on the same journey with him, but contented himself with Romanising the Church of England. Here he took up his stand, and while his friends and associates went beyond him, or retreated, he remained, during forty years or more, stationary in thought and position, a conspicuous specimen of arrested development.

Another case in point is that of the Rev. EDWARD WHITE. This clever speaker and writer is well known by his strenuous opposition to the dreadful dogma of Endless Punishment, and his earnest advocacy of the alternative doctrine of Conditional Immortality. This deviation from the popular creed makes him in no slight degree a heretic. On this very important question, by many considered one of the most vital points of the orthodox faith, he has broken away from the traditional theology and ventured on a thoroughly independent interpretation of the Scriptures. He, too, has started on a journey, but in his case, towards a more merciful and reasonable faith than the popular one. He has not hesitated to reject the teaching of all the great Churches of Christendom on the momentous subject of human destiny. But with this important advance his progress in the direction of a rational theology comes to an end. He has elected to remain in the Congregational Church and strenuously upholds all its doctrines except that of future endless punishments, and he does this in a spirit of conservatism strongly at variance with his radical departure on that simple point. We really believe him to be far more conservative on other questions than many of his ministerial brethren. We like not the spirit in which his conservatism shows itself. It savours too much of arrogance and intolerance. It is altogether lacking in the liberal spirit on which he must count for the popular acceptance of his own pet heresy. Here, then, we have another striking instance of arrested development. The man has gone a little way in the path of heretical teaching, and there he stops, which he is quite welcome to do, but he should not pour indignation and contempt on those who venture a little further. The most contemptible sort of infallibility is that which marks the line of truth at the precise point of one's own advancement. This is just what the Rev. EDWARD WHITE does.

At the recent gathering of the Congregational Union Mr. WHITE was one of the speakers at the people's meeting at Colston Hall. The subject on which he elected to speak was the Bible, and he purposed to say a few words "on some of the principal hostile influences which are at work diminishing the faith of the English people in this their most wonderful possession." To criticise his speech in detail would occupy a great deal more space than it is worth or we can spare. It is vulnerable in almost every sentence. Thus the very first sentence after naming his subject is this—"We cannot hope to raise the English people from a life of secularism and sensuality except by the influence of religious faith; and the religious faith of the English people must be faith in the Bible, or there will be none at all." It is here implied that Secularism and sensuality go together, that they are natural allies, and are invariably to be found in association. The insinuation in this broad sense is unjust. They are not necessarily or always associated. Most Secularists, we hope, are as free from sensuality as any clergyman of the Church or Congregational minister. Then, again, it is not true that without what Mr. WHITE understands by "faith in the Bible" there would be no religion at all. There are numbers who reject that "faith," and yet have religion. The Broad Church party, the Unitarians, and the great majority of modern critics are all in this position; but it cannot be said with the smallest pretence of justice that they have no religion, any more than it can be said of this dogmatic Congregationalist censor.

The greater portion of Mr. WHITE's speech is taken up with the attempt to cast discredit on modern Biblical criticism and the teachings of science. He holds up to ridicule those who assign a later time than that of MOSES to the authorship of the Pentateuch, and those who cannot admit that the Fourth Gospel was the work of the Apostle JOHN. He has great reverence for the critics and scholars of former times, and says, "We owe in England an untold blessing to the labours of the scholars of past ages," but the critics and scholars of modern times he treats with utter contempt—another illustration of his arrested development. "There are critics," he says, "some indeed in England, as well as in other parts of the world, who always remind me of the blessing which JACOB pronounced on one of his sons from his dying bed. 'Issachar,' said the patriarch, 'is a strong ass crouching down between two burdens,' that is to say, carrying two panniers loaded with Greek and Hebrew roots." Of course this precious comparison was greeted with much laughter. The speaker continued, "But if you look this ass straight in the face you will see that he is plodding along, eating thistles without any vision or faculty divine—such as that which Balaam's ass possessed!" The audience laughed at the reference to Issachar, but according to the report listened in silence to the abject credulity which talked of BALAAM'S ass "possessing a vision and faculty divine!" Mr. WHITE ventures the opinion that "Deuteronomy is a book which, if any book in the Bible does, bears upon it the mark of antiquity and authenticity," and he supports his opinion by quoting Mr. BALDWIN BROWN as saying that it "is full from one end to the other of the highest inspiration." We have a high respect for Mr. BALDWIN BROWN, but we never heard that he was distinguished as a Biblical critic. Of this, however, we are perfectly assured, that such random assertions as Mr. WHITE's and Mr. BROWN's will avail nothing against the careful criticism which has convinced so many that Moses was not and could not be the author of the books that bear his name. With regard to the Fourth Gospel, he says, "And it is still worse when we hear a man who has read the Gospel of St. John, year after year, arrive at the conclusion that the most wonderful writing in the world is the production of a forger of the second century. A man who can believe that it is the work of some impostor of a later age is capable of believing almost anything." Now Mr. WHITE knows, or at least ought to know, how fallacious, how disingenuous, it is to use the ugly words "forger" and "impostor" as we understand them now, in a case like this. They are altogether inapplicable to the case, and are used only to cast discredit on a theory which it is easier to assail in this popular platform fashion than by sober criticism or straightforward argument.

The men of science, with their teaching concerning the origin and antiquity of man, come in next for Mr. WHITE's ridicule. He sticks to the Bible, and prefers the legends of Genesis to the speculations of the Evolutionists. Of course he is at perfect liberty to do so. Modern Biblical criticism and modern science rank on the same level, in his estimation. The fact is they have gone beyond him and left him hopelessly behind. Both, however, we have no doubt will hold their ground against the ad captandum attacks of the Rev. EDWARD WHITE. Modern science is quietly revolutionising the thought of our age, and rendering it impossible to go back to that theory of the universe and of the Divine government which is taught in the Bible. The old orthodox theory of the Bible and its inspiration is accordingly being modified to meet the necessities of the case, and nothing can be vainer than the attempt which Mr. WHITE makes to maintain the old ground without modification or concession.

But the most singular part of Mr. WHITE's speech is the latter portion, in which he poses as the advocate of tolerance and liberal thought. He is intolerant of modern criticism and science, so intolerant of them, indeed, that he cannot speak of them except in terms of ridicule and disparagement; yet he deplores the intolerance of Oxford and Rome, and pleads on behalf of mental freedom. "If you wish the English people to be believers you must permit doubt, you must allow questioning, you must allow earnest inquiry, and you must allow some contradiction of the ancient Orthodoxies of the nation. It is one thing to be tolerant of other men's inquiries, it is quite another thing to be disposed for inquiry for yourself." If we understand this latter sentence, it means as part of this remarkable speech, that Mr. WHITE does not care for tolerating other men's inquiries, but is quite disposed to exercise his own right and inquire for himself. And this, as illustrated by the whole drift of his address, is what his toleration comes to. He has yet to learn that every inquiry and every speculation honestly pursued, however it may conflict with our cherished prejudices, is deserving of respectful consideration. He has yet to learn that it is not by laughing at them that the labours of critics, scholars, and men of science can be justly appreciated or the cause of truth advanced. He has yet to learn also that it is but a poor achievement to raise a laugh from such an audience as that collected in Colston Hall, not one in fifty of whom had probably ever studied or even read a book on the subjects they were quite ready to ignorantly laugh at. A man who aspires to set the world right on the great subject of man's future destiny ought to be above puerilities like these.

PROVISION FOR MINISTERS' FAMILIES.

Now that the subscription for the family of the late Rev. W. A. POPE has closed, it seems timely to consider what means of providing for their families are within the reach of those of our ministers who are dependent on their profession. The touching circumstances attending Mr. POPE's death, and the prominent position he held as the valued missionary of a very influential Society, has led to a public appeal which has met with a liberal response; but this cannot be expected or desired in ordinary cases, where, however, the expenses attending a long illness may involve even greater privations.

The obvious rule for those who are dependent on a professional income is—to insure their lives. The "Post Office Guide" contains the Government rates of insurance for £100 and under:—"The life of a man or woman in his or her thirtieth year may be insured for £100 by a single payment of £43 3s. 7d., by an annual payment throughout life of £2 6s. 7d., or, till the age of sixty, of £2 13s. 10d." We may therefore infer that, even if a minister began to insure his life for £2,000 in a solvent society, when he entered on his office, it would involve an annual payment of between £40 and £50. If he thought it nothing but prudent to devote one-tenth of his income to such a provision, the result would be a very inadequate compensation for the cessation of that income; while no provision would be made for himself, in case he outlived his powers of service.

There are two Societies to which many of our ministers belong:—

1. "An Association for the Benefit of Widows and Orphans of Protestant Dissenting Ministers and of Ministers themselves," usually known as "The Widows' Fund." It was "projected in 1762 by the Provincial Meeting at Warrington," and established in 1764. The principle of the Association is to grant aid in proportion to the subscription of the members. Its condition having become precarious, an Auxiliary Fund was raised, chiefly at the instance of the Rev. JOHN YATES of Liverpool, in 1825. In 1860, when its circumstances had improved, there were thirty-nine members, and eleven annuitants who together received £251. The capital was £10,385, and the Auxiliary Fund £1,967. The income had reached about £800—in part derived from a tramroad over the estate. The subscriptions were, and still are, from £2 2s. to £5 5s., and the annuity was then at the rate of £6 for each £1 1s. subscribed, there being an increase after twenty years' subscription. Owing in great measure to the unwearied attention and financial skill of the Rev. G. H. WELLS, M.A., late of Gorton, who became secretary about that time, the property has increased, to such an extent, that it was valued this year at nearly £48,000, exclusive of the tramway and mines; and the Auxiliary Fund at £2,839. Thirteen annuitants received £1,606. Before the last meeting, at Chowbent, there were eighty members, beside annuitants. A subscriber of £5 5s. for twenty years receives an annuity of £80, instead of £30; while, if he subscribe forty years, he has £240 instead of £60, as formerly. A minister who is disabled by age or infirmity is entitled to the annuity; and if his wife die in a member's life-time there is a provision for the children. It may be roughly calculated that such benefits could not be secured from an Insurance Office for a payment of less than £1,500. Originally this Society was open to any of our ministers; a preference was given, however, to those in Lancashire and Cheshire, who could claim admission if they proposed themselves, within four years of their settlement; while others required a majority of two-thirds of the subscribers. In 1819, however, it was confined to ministers in the province: and now even they must have been settled there for three years before they are eligible. While it was a mutual insurance Society it was not weakened by additions to its numbers; but now that the annuities mainly depend on a large accrued capital, it is obvious that they could not be secured if the recipients were indefinitely increased. Those members who have left "The Province" do not however forfeit their rights.

2. The "Ministers' Benevolent Society" was founded about thirty years ago, and owed much to the efforts of the late Dr. RUSSELL, of Birmingham. As its name implies, it is not a Benefit Society, like the Widows' Fund, but its advantages are confined to ministers who are elected members, and who pay an entrance fee of £1 1s.; and the same amount annually, or else £15 15s. in one sum. Members, or their widows and families, receive aid in case of need according to the discretion of the directors; regard being paid to their circumstances. We learn from the last printed report (October, 1881), that the Beneficiary Members numbered 147. Two gentlemen who had left the ministry received back the amount they had paid in, "in accordance with Law VIII." Seventeen widows received grants, varying from £40 to £70. Grants from £15 to £60 were made to twelve infirm or aged ministers; £1,415 being paid to the twenty-nine recipients, leaving a balance of about £147 on the current income. The accrued capital was over £22,500. Among the ministerial members, we find thirty-eight who also belong to the Widows' Fund. Many have joined this Society who may reasonably hope that they shall not be required to seek its aid. As the largest grant was £70, it of course compares unfavourably with the Widows' Fund, and cannot supply the loss of ministerial income. But (as has been said) the Widows' Fund is only open to ministers in Lancashire and Cheshire, who have also the advantage of being eligible during their ministry to grants from the Rawdon Fund, from which their Southern brethren are excluded. We think that this Benevolent Society has great claims on the generosity of the Denomination. Part of its capital is derived from legacies, including £2,000 from J. H. NELSON, Esq., Slough, and £1,000 from R. K. LUMB, Esq., Cheltenham; it has also received liberal donations.

Out of the 363 ministers whose names appear in the last Unitarian Almanac (288 in charge of congregations, and 75 without), less than two hundred belong to the societies we have named. There remain, therefore, a considerable number, whom we respectfully urge to consider their claims. As regards residents in "The Province," it is not necessary to recommend the Widows' Fund; its advantages are so highly appreciated there, that those who are eligible hasten to secure the independence it offers. Those who are excluded from it may not have the same alacrity to join the Benevolent Society, which confers smaller benefits, and as grants—not rights; we have not heard, however, that any reasonable application has been declined; and those who are so prosperous that they expect never to need its help can well afford the small subscription required, for the sake of their brethren. Perhaps those who can best afford it may be least likely to think of paying it; a young man who has no serious thoughts of marrying may hardly feel it a duty to provide for a widow, and when he is in the vigour of youth he has no vivid anticipation of the infirmities of age! But if he has only himself to maintain, he can well afford a guinea a year for so excellent a society; while if he makes a difficulty in paying this small amount, there is certainly a poor prospect for him should his expenses become doubled or quadrupled!

Those who have not felt it a duty to lay by a portion of their incomes as "single men" will find it difficult to make any provision when they are married. We are even told that it is absurd to expect that the bulk of our ministers should do so out of their narrow incomes. We greatly regret this narrowness of circumstances; but poor as many of our valued ministers may be, they know that multitudes, who are poorer still, keep out of debt. Those who feel that to make some provision for the future of those whom they love is a necessity, will generally find that they can dispense with something which is not quite so necessary. Those who resolve on independence, practice a thrift which seems to others incredible. We believe that families reared in such thrift are recompensed for their early privations by their power to meet the difficulties of life. We need scarcely remind our readers of the economies of R. and W. CHAMBERS, Dr. GUTHRIE and THOMAS CARLYLE in their early days. If possible, some other provision should be made than a subscription to the Benevolent Society—but that would be one step gained.

Some responsibility rests, we think, with congregations. We have heard of a Mission Society that insured their minister's life. It would be but a small thing for a congregation to pay the £15 15s., which would make their minister a life member of the Benevolent Society; a still smaller thing to pay the annual subscription, and this might be done by a special effort, in cases where there would be greater difficulty in making an increase to his income.

If, however, there is the addition which we desire to the members of this Society, it is obvious that the small rate of benefit must be still further diminished, unless there is a proportionate addition to its income. We see from the Report that one congregation has especially distinguished itself by its long continued help to the Society. From 1854 to 1881, inclusive (with the exception of 1880), there has been an annual collection on its behalf at Horsham, and the twenty-seven collections have yielded £83. We shall rejoice if larger and wealthier societies are animated by its example, and if the recent appeal to the generosity of our Denomination on behalf of the widow and the fatherless awakens an interest in a Society which mitigates the sufferings of others alike afflicted. We are writing without any communication with those who manage its affairs; but we feel assured that any further information will be imparted, and any donations or subscriptions will be gladly received by the Hon. Secretary, JAMES RUSSELL, Esq., M.D., Calthorpe-road, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

R. L. C.

MRS. BOOTH'S DEFENCE OF THE "SALVATION ARMY."

THERE is so much that is positively repulsive in the sayings and doings of the "Salvation Army" that thoughtful Christian people may feel disinclined to look at the other, the better, side, of this strange movement. If Mr. BOOTH is the "general" we are disposed to think that Mrs. BOOTH is the commander-in-chief of the so-called Army. At all events she has given notable proofs of remarkable ability as a public speaker. Thus in an address delivered at St. James's Hall recently she has defended the movement with unquestionable eloquence, and in a style that is at once forcible, pointed, homely and racy. Indeed, so far as style goes, this address, published and sold for a penny, is almost equal to anything that we have read of Mr. SPURGEON'S. It would appear that the movement which has grown to be so gigantic and notorious had its inception some seventeen years ago, but did not assume its present name and shape until a much more recent period. The address does not say how or with whom the word "Army" first originated; but undoubtedly it has had a great deal to do with giving the movement a fresh start, and with its remarkable success as an organisation. Not only has the term been adopted as an expressive metaphor, but it has been practically worked out in all its military significations. Thus we have not only the terms of rank from general to captain and private, but we have the phrases of active warfare employed, such as "invasion," "siege," "red-hot gospel shot," &c.; and accompanying these the military paraphernalia of flags, banners, drums, trumpets, &c. There is thus an always popular appeal to the combative instincts of mankind, the lower classes especially, accompanied by "the pomp and circumstance of glorious war," happily, however, not followed by its terrible bloodshed and ruin. Whoever, then, whether Mr. or Mrs. BOOTH, first hit upon the term "Army" to designate the movement, and then worked it out in all its details for practical purposes, did so as by a stroke of genius. Whatever may ultimately become of the "Army" its history will remain on record as that of a very notable outbreak of religious feeling or religious fanaticism in an age of unusual mental culture and the wide diffusion of knowledge amongst nearly all classes of the common people.

Mrs. BOOTH'S affirmative positions are mainly these: that the Army is a great living reality; that it has reached masses of the people, hitherto neglected or not touched by any of the existing Church organisations; that it has led to a change of heart and life in "tens of thousands of people;" that these people have become honest, as proved by the payment of their debts; that domestic quarrels have ceased, and those alienated from each other have been reconciled. In fact, she alleges that all the fruits of true religion have followed the preaching and efforts of the Army in thousands of instances. She speaks so positively and so earnestly, and in entire good faith on these points that no one who reads her addresses without prejudice can fail to give her entire credence. Of course the question arises, how far is she herself blinded by her passionate feelings, for she is much more an advocate than a judge. It is, however, when Mrs. BOOTH proceeds to defend the notorious extravagances of the "Army" that she seems to us greatly to fail. She contends that with the class of people who become its converts their natural exuberance of feeling finds vent in their own rude fashion, that is in shouts and exclamations of joy, and in acts that to mere observers wear aspects of irreverence and folly. And as is customary with believers in the infallible authority of the Bible and the inspiration of its leading characters, Mrs. BOOTH quotes their sayings and doings with full approval. Thus the dancing of a converted sailor finds a kind of parallel or illustration in the dancing of DAVID before the ark, and the dancing at the feast on the return of the Prodigal; while the shouts of the converts find a justification in the hosannahs of the multitude who followed CHRIST in procession to Jerusalem, and in his words, "if these were to hold their peace the very stones would cry out." It is hardly needful to say that in this way almost any practice may be justified, as in the case of the Mormons, who find their spiritual wife doctrine, or polygamy, abundantly illustrated by the practice of patriarchs and Jewish kings. It will be fortunate indeed if the "Army" limits its imitation of such to a very harmless exhilarating exercise or recreation; but a converted sailor's semi-hornpipe at a religious gathering does convey the impression, to the outside world at least, of something at once ludicrous and irreverent, and wholly out of keeping with the sacred awe and chastened feeling that true religion ever inspires. She refers with approval, of course, to WESLEY, and the great religious revival connected with his name. But WESLEY and his first associates were not only Christians, but gentlemen and scholars, who while speaking to multitudes of the rough, half-savage men of their time, never uttered an unbecoming word, never used slang of any kind or appealed to them by gross vulgarities of speech and manners. They ever spoke to the "hidden man of the heart" in language as refined as it was simple and homely. It is certainly true that strange manifestations of feeling, outbreaks of hysterics and convulsions did accompany their preaching at times, but they would have been shocked beyond measure by the unredeemed coarseness, the utterly debased speech of some of the chief promoters of the Salvation Army movement, for which Mrs. BOOTH apologises. What, for instance, are we to think of a Salvation Army placard that lately met our eyes headed "Blood and Fire," announcing a tea-meeting, when an "onslaught will be made on the provisions at 4.30," be in time, let your motto be no surrender! At 7.30 there will be "a Tremendous Free and Easy;" or of an announcement of a tea-meeting at the recent "Head quarters of the "Army" at Whitechapel, "After which there will be an exhibition of Saints." Or, worse still, the doggerl hymn, with the following chorus—we ask our readers' forgiveness for printing the words:—

"For he is a jolly good Saviour!
For he is a jolly good Saviour!
For he is a jolly good Saviour!
Which nobody can deny."

Mrs. BOOTH states that one placard was indeed so bad that it was countermanded from head-quarters; but what of the irreverent lines we have just given, and others nearly as bad, sung in full chorus at the meetings of the "Army" in the metropolis and elsewhere?

The letters written to the Little Soldier by children ranging from six and upwards, announcing that they are "saved," are justified, as usual, by Mrs. BOOTH, by a text, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings," &c., and she tells us of one child of five and a half going alone into a room unprompted, and penning one of these unnatural and unchildlike compositions to this other organ of the "Army." Precocious childhood is often regarded as a sign of a diseased brain, or of early death. But if anything could effectually mar the freshness and naivete of children, and turn them into conceited morbid prigs, it is the writing and publishing of such effusions as fill whole columns of the Little Soldier. To us, and we believe to all mature persons possessed of that rather uncommon quality called common sense, these effusions are utterly repulsive, if not disgusting. How Mrs. BOOTH, as a mother, and a really gifted woman, can justify and encourage them, seems to us strange indeed. But abnormal religious excitement readily passes into fanaticism, and fanaticism is scarcely more to be reasoned with than lunacy.

Time is needed fully to test the permanent results of this modern outbreak of much genuine religion mixed with and marred by a large amount of mere animal excitement. If the axiom be true that action and reaction are equal, then we cannot doubt that the latter will sooner or later come. The fire is too fierce to last, even though the fuel be supplied with unsparing zeal. True emotion may be, and mostly is, deep and fervent, though still and silent in its manifestations; witness the Quietists and the Primitive Quakers; but commotion, full of sound and fury, proceeding from external rather than internal excitements, is sure to end in exhaustion. When the artificial heat passes away the chill of disappointment and unbelief must follow, and it will be well indeed if many of the so-called converts do not lapse into a state even worse than their first. Still it is our hope and belief that not a few, touched by the truer spirit that lies concealed in almost every popular religious revival, will remain permanent monuments of its real saving power. C. L. C.

REASONABLE RELIGION.*—II.

LAST week we dwelt on some aspects of the question of Morality and Religion, in which we somewhat differed from Mr. FAURE. In the present article we shall deal with what he considers to be the "most striking phenomenon in the religious world of the present day." He "means, of course, the rapidly rising Agnostic school of thought" to which those persons belong who will neither affirm nor deny. It seems modest on the part of a man to say that he can decide neither one way nor the other, because he has not sufficient knowledge to enable him to come to a conclusion; but the dogmatic temper breaks out in the assumption that what he does not know on things spiritual it is not possible for any one else to know. "I know nothing about GOD and Immortality," said one of these people to us the other day, "but I know just as much as anyone else. These things are simply beyond apprehension." Thus does the Agnostic at once deny the testimony which others give to their recognition of spiritual realities, and notably of the purest and holiest men of every age; and sets himself up as the measure of human capacity. And "then he is so modest all the time!"

The spread of this state of mind Mr. FAURE looks upon "as a healthy reaction against the theological GOD of the popular creed," and "to a certain extent against the presumption of priests and schoolmen, who have ventured to describe, to limit GOD by representing Him as a person, by defining even His substance." Certainly there has been sadly too much of this defining, and men have presumed to be familiar with Him who is great, glorious and wise beyond the realisation of the grandest imagination, and the result has been disastrous. But there is a danger on the other hand that mere vague conceptions may prevail, that trust may slip away from the heart, and the soul's faith have nothing to fix itself firmly upon. A circumference without a centre may afford space for the mind to rove freely about in, but it can hardly be an abode for the affections to settle and act in. Besides, what is meant by a person? If it is used in the sense of a being with a body, who has a limited will, and bounded thought, then, of course, such anthropomorphic notions cannot be accepted by any intelligent man in these days, even though it have the sanction of so revered a name as that of MILTON—for the All-indwelling, All-circumscribing, All-possessing, cannot possibly have form, such, at all events, as human beings can conceive. But does the word person necessarily mean that? If it means a being with a body, if form is essential to it, why do we not term a horse, a dog, or an elephant, a person? But we do not, and for the simple reason that the personality of a personal being is found in the moral, the spiritual nature, in the possession of rational faculty, in consciousness informed by conscience. If the Cause and Sustainer of the Universe, the Father of the spirits of all flesh, and the Creator of animal existence, be self-conscious, intelligent, good and wise, then have we a right to say "He," "Him," in other words speak of Him as a person, and there is the possibility of communing with Him, spirit to spirit and heart to heart. If the power that rules the world be only mechanical, if it acts according to its nature, but without purpose or plan, it can have no moral end in view, and we are, indeed, without GOD, without a Heavenly Father, whose love answers to our love, and the Atheist is right, cheat ourselves with words however we may. And we believe that this will be seen clearly in a short time, and the fashion of Agnosticism will pass away. Indeed, we think that we see a few faint signs of its beginning to fade from men's minds already. It is not because GOD has been spoken of as a person that a reaction against religion has come, but because passions and deeds have been ascribed to Him that the growing intelligence and deepening moral sense of the times have revolted. When the better faith that is slowly emerging in the consciousness of the higher minds of the time becomes more widely known, the heart and soul of men will gladly respond to it. In the meantime it becomes the duty of all those who see this to make clear the fact that religion is the worship of the goodness of GOD, a love of Him because of His love for men, and obedience to His will because in all things it is right, and not a belief in dogmas, on whatever authority asserted.

Mr. FAURE shows this in words of power and earnestness. In his third and fourth discourses he deals with much force with the objections of the Agnostic that the pain and misery of the world prove that either there is no GOD or that He takes no interest in the welfare of mankind. But before he does this he strikes hard at those who have furnished the Agnostic with his objection by their assertion of a special Providence, who sends judgments for certain national or individual sins. The Agnostic is able to show that in the order of nature there are no such judgments, they are purely conventional or imaginary, and then he rushes to the conclusion that no judgment and no Judge exists—or at that at least we cannot know whether they do or not. Nevertheless it is a fact that evil-doing brings penalty; that even acting contrary to nature's laws leads to pain and misfortune; and surely that is the chastisement of a just and wise Ruler. Let us term it what we may, we cannot escape from the fact. In dealing with the Agnostic Mr. FAURE draws largely on THEODORE PARKER for arguments to show that pain is an education to man, and that penalty is a wise ordination in relation to wrong doing, and to the mistakes of ignorance as well. "Pain is indeed a schoolmaster appointed by GOD," he says, "whose teachings we cannot dispense with." Making this clear by illustration, he vindicates the providence of GOD, and he is right in insisting that "so far from suffering disproving the existence of GOD it is a pledge of His interest in man's welfare." W. M.

SWANSEA.—On Sunday the Rev. J. E. Manning, M.A., preached an admirable sermon, which is printed in full in the Herald of Wales, on "The Philosophy of Early Closing."

AMERICAN CORRESPONDENCE.

Boston, Oct. 13, 1882.

The proceedings of the National Conference which were so fully reported in the Christian Register have doubtless been read in the Inquirer, so I need only to speak of a few characteristics of this gathering. It was the largest in numbers that we have yet had, and this shows that the tide of interest is still rising. Then the meetings from the time Governor Long called the Conference to order to the benediction were fully attended. Again, the delegates were in a working mood. True there were more than a score of elaborate addresses devoted to topics many of which bore on the intellectual aspects of faith. Still, the prevailing tone was that of down-right practical earnestness. Indeed, this was so marked that our orthodox critics have changed their cry. Now, instead of being berated for our lukewarmness we are told that the Conference was intensely sectarian. One of the notable sessions was that of Tuesday forenoon. This, according to the programme, was the "Foreign session," that is, it was devoted to hearing from our visitors from abroad. As Professor Kovacs did not arrive in Boston till Monday, he reached Saratoga on Tuesday evening, so his address was necessarily pushed over to Wednesday; hence our English speaking best men had the time to themselves—and they used it well. The Rev. Mr. Hopps's fine paper struck the key note, and he was followed by an able address from Dr. Carpenter. The English delegates received a hearty greeting, and this interchange of visits tends to make the English and American Unitarians better known to each other. This was further shown by Freeman Clarke's brief speech on his visit to you last summer. He brings home with him grateful memories of what he saw. Dr. Carpenter, who listened with fixed attention to all the addresses, said he was profoundly impressed at what he heard and saw. Since the Conference he has been travelling South, and will come to Boston later in the season, where he will give a course of lectures before the Lowell Institute. Mr. Hopps has won our hearts so much that if he does not hurry off to England some one of our vacant parishes will seize hold of him. As he had an engagement to preach at Chicago, and had a great desire to see the West, he could only give a day to the Conference. Ere this reaches you he will probably be on his way to merry England.

The Rev. Joseph Cook, when in London on his tour round the globe, was reported as saying that Unitarianism was dying out in New England, and some of our English Unitarians made anxious inquiries as to the real truth of this story. The wish was father to the thought. For more than thirty years we have had this prophesy of a dying faith. Now if any of our English friends were downhearted at the positive declarations of Mr. Cook, I would give them the assurance of a few facts. In the report of the local New England Conference the Rev. Mr. Heywood stated that the growth in our congregations had been about thirteen per cent. greater than the increase of population, also that for the two years between the meetings of the last and the present National Conference the Unitarians of New England had raised for various denominational and religious objects, including the building of churches, the support of worship, and the endowment of the theological school, six hundred thousand dollars. When you remember the small number of our churches you will see what this means. Our people do not throw their money away on objects for which they do not care. This is a true test of interest. The fact is the Unitarians never had more life, were never more hopeful, were never so profoundly impressed with the conviction that they had a future before them, were never so earnestly girding themselves for their work as now. No one who was present at the Saratoga Conference heard the lamentation over a lost cause. Courage, hope, earnestness and faith inspired the meetings. There was no sign of a death bed. The Rev. Joseph Cook and others, who for more than twenty years have been tracing the progress of the fatal decay, will have to wait somewhat longer for the hoped for funeral. The patient is very obstinate. He will not die even to please his foes. He resolutely persists in living and making himself a power for good. The influence of the National Conference is felt in all our churches.

* Reasonable Religion. By the Rev. D. P. Faure, Minister of the Free Protestant Church, Cape Town.

In this connection I would speak of another encouraging sign of the times. I refer to the formation of the Unitarian Club in Boston. No organisation since the establishment of the local and national conferences has so much of promise as this. Towards the close of the summer of last year it was proposed to form this club, composed of lay members from our churches in and about Boston. The object is to advance the interests of the denomination. At first it was thought not more than fifty at the utmost would care to join; but such was the interest that the membership has jumped to 250, the limit fixed by the Constitution. Many more are eager to join as soon as there is either a vacancy or an enlargement of the constitutional limit of the number of members. The design is to meet once a month from October to May and discuss various topics of practical interest and to help on practical measures. Though only laymen can join, every member has the privilege to invite a guest at every meeting, providing he pays for the supper of his friend. The result is that at every meeting there is a large sprinkling of ministers who are present as invited guests. They are often called on to speak, but have no right to vote or engage in any of the business of the club. During the present winter the club will meet on the second Wednesday of each month at the Hotel Vendome, where, after a social gathering and simple supper, they proceed to discussion. The first meeting of this year was held on Wednesday of this week, and our brethren, Drs. Peabody, Clarke, and Hale, gave the impressions derived from their trip abroad. They all spoke of the pleasure they derived from their English Unitarian brethren, and of the noble spirit with which these were animated. They also bore testimony to the growth of liberal thought in other bodies, but were pained to know that some of those who were thus outspoken still clung to creeds which were totally different from their most vital beliefs. Professor Kovacs made a very interesting speech, and the Rev. Mr. Savage said he never felt so much at home among Unitarians as now. It was curious to note that the only layman who spoke was the Hon. Robert Rantoul.

One feature which is becoming more common every year both here and in England is the large number of foreign visitors at our annual meetings, and the increasing number of our ministers who go abroad. We are coming to know each other more closely, and thus we create a broader fellowship. Here at the club were three of our prominent ministers telling of the men they saw and the spirit which animated our Unitarian brethren of England. And the representative from Hungary also spoke of the Unitarian Church, which had an existence before Wesley was born. Thus our sympathies broaden, and we feel the inspiration which comes from a world-wide communion.

I have spoken somewhat in detail of the club because it is something new. Of course, allowance must be made for the zeal which comes from a fresh organisation. This one is made up of young and middle-aged men. Before the year closes I think it will give reliable evidence of its working power.

The Rev. Brooke Herford has begun his ministry at Arlington-street Church, and the people gave him a cordial welcome. We are glad to have so efficient a minister added to our list, as the work in Boston is so varied and important. Our ministers have returned from their summer outings recruited, and the autumnal local conferences, ordinations, and other special meetings have begun. Last Sunday we had the beginning of the series of Sunday evening services under the direction of the Suffolk Conference. The first one was devoted to the Hungarian cause, and Professor Kovacs presented the claims of the Hungarian Church, and Mr. Hale called on the audience to raise one hundred dollars by a special contribution that evening. Mr. Reynolds is busy at work on plans to utilise the zeal generated at the Saratoga Conference. Besides the special efforts to raise money for the New Orleans Church, Meadville, and the proposed Wade School at Cleveland, it is hoped that the annual contribution to the American Unitarian Association will be increased this year, so as to enable us to engage in still larger missionary efforts.

S. W. B.

Reviews.

A Short Protestant Commentary on the Books of the New Testament, with General and Special Introductions. Vol. I. Translated by Francis Henry Jones, B.A. Williams and Norgate. London. 1882.

Will anything make the English people generally interested in modern Biblical criticism? Will they ever study it, or care to learn about its results with anything like the interest with which the Bible was studied ere criticism arose? Or will the criticism which has proved so effective in destroying the old form of interest be permanently powerless to create a new form? One thing is certain, that every educated minister is compelled to know a good deal about the new views, and often finds them profoundly interesting to himself; so that if the laity steadily refuse to care for these things, there will soon be a great gulf fixed between them and their ministers. We shall be in danger of a division into esoteric and exoteric teaching; at any rate, the same passage will have totally different associations; suggestive allusions will become impossible; there will be no common understanding about main facts. And all the new truth, all the nearer and fuller views of Truth itself, all the newly revealed harmonies in history or in science, whether found in the Bible or in the great world outside, all the discoveries of the development of religion and its essential oneness amidst multifarious diversity, all that has sprung from the observance of Jowett's famous canon, "Interpret the scripture like any other book," and has opened a new world of absorbing inquiry to students, all this will remain a hidden mystery to those who will take no trouble to understand what has been said and done. The minister to whom all this new truth is indeed a revelation and an inspiration cannot go back and shut himself up within the old lines, and unless his congregation will go at any rate some part of the way along with him, there will indeed be this great gulf between the two. He is not very likely to suffer much now as a heretic, but he is in some danger of being regarded as a bore. His people do not want this sort of thing from the pulpit, they will not come to week evening classes, they will not read at home. And yet everywhere parents are asking, What shall we teach our children, how shall we interest them in religion, what (only they don't use this expression) is to be the corpus of our religious education, that which the children can themselves read about and be set to learn, the great body of facts which is to exhibit and illustrate principles and make the existence and nature of the spirit obvious and communicable? Now, we do not want parents and teachers, or young people either, to have to follow the course which modern criticism has actually pursued, with its often wearisome controversies and endless number of problems left doubtful; but we do want them to understand a few of the main conclusions of this criticism, and to try if they do not furnish a basis for giving just the very education they desire, and awakening the interest in religion which in many cases appears so fast on the wane. Some of these conclusions may perhaps be thus expressed. (1) That the Jewish and Christian religions are not to be regarded as exceptional, but rather as the best type of the way in which man seeks after and finds out God, and God communicates Himself to man. (2) That a remarkable development of religion is thus discernible in the Bible, running from its earliest to its latest books, especially in regard to man's conception of God and of his own duty. (3) That inasmuch as the writers were not preserved from making mistakes in regard to the events which they record (often long after these events occurred), it is useful to set aside all their statements which conflict with ascertained facts of science or history; but that, nevertheless, it is possible to ascertain the main facts in all important cases, and that these main facts indicate the method of revelation and the development of religion already referred to.

Coming now closer to the special subject of the New Testament, the results which might be taken as a basis for religious teaching may be summed up thus:—(1) That the Synoptic Gospels contain an account of the life and work of Jesus of Nazareth, trustworthy in its main features, especially when we understand and guard against certain prepossessions of the writers in regard to Messianic ideas, but that they were composed under conditions which forbade strict accuracy in details, particularly in cases where the love of the marvellous and the Jewish belief in "signs" have modified the tradition. (2) That the Fourth Gospel may be used only to supplement, not to contradict, the more historic picture of Jesus we get from the Synoptics, but that its special contribution to our knowledge is of the way in which Jesus Christ was regarded about the middle of the second century. (3) That from the Epistles of St. Paul we get our most trustworthy information about the early Church, and that the Book of Acts is to be used with considerable caution.

These are but specimens of the sort of conclusions to which we refer. If space permitted they might be largely extended, and reference might also be made to the various other sources from which information is drawn respecting the New Testament times, especially the Talmud, Josephus, and, to some extent, the Roman historians. All such sources and conclusions lie at the basis of books like Clodd's "Jesus of Nazareth," and the "Bible for Young People;" but the plan of these works does not admit of much proof or explanation being offered of the statements there made, and the reader would often like to know how it is that the account now reads so very differently from what he used to be taught to find in the New Testament itself, and he gets a general feeling of insecurity and fancies that he has to deal with the individual whims and personal predilection of his author. Nothing is so likely to correct this impression, which is grossly unfair to an author who has simply tried to popularise ascertained truth, as a good short introduction to, and commentary on, the various books of the New Testament. This is what we have got in the volume under review. The difficulty spoken of here has been felt severely in Germany, and "Der Protestanten Bibel" is the attempt made by some of their ablest scholars to meet it. The work rests ultimately on the Protestant principle of free inquiry, and endeavours to make popular the results of this free inquiry. It tells concisely what is to be told, and at the place where most people would look for the information. It will be an admirable book for the Sunday-school teacher who uses the New Testament as a textbook, and is asked more questions than he finds it easy to answer. It is just the thing to be used in homes where the Bible is still read and talked about, and made the chief vehicle to convey religious instruction, the great store-house from which to illustrate spiritual truth. Of course such a work passes much by and leaves much unanswered. Many after reading it may like to go deeper into the questions it raises; but many more, we are convinced, will find here as much as they want, a sufficient body of facts to teach, and a sufficient amount of explanation to enable them to understand the general method of modern criticism, and give them the opportunity of sympathising with its bold yet cautious and painstaking spirit. On any single point the arguments are often too brief to carry conviction, but taking the work as a whole, and remembering the amount of research and learning which lies behind it, it may well find acceptance among those who cannot enter on the larger field; and while many minor matters which it treats are still doubtful, and opinion on them may be modified as time goes on, the main lines on which the book proceeds have been carefully laid down, and are not likely ever to need any great alteration.

The present volume brings us to the end of the Book of Acts; we sincerely hope we shall get the rest of the commentary in a second volume, and that it will be speedily published. The translation, which we have extensively compared with the original, is excellent; we have good readable English, and a careful rendering of the exact meaning of the German. We have also to thank Mr. F. H. Jones for a few additional notes, distinguished by square brackets, which will make the commentary more useful when used with the English Authorised Version. The verification of references seems to have been well attended to, by no means a superfluous task in translating a work of German theology.

H. S. S.

Last Words of Thomas Carlyle. On Trades-Unions, Promoterism, and the Signs of the Times. Paterson, Edinburgh. 1882.

Here is what purports to be another "Latter-Day Pamphlet" of Thomas Carlyle, published in quite an édition de Luxe style. The anonymous editor, "J.C.A.," in a brief preface, says that "it was written at Chelsea, in the seriously obstructed hand-writing of his seventy-eighth year, and bears date the 12th of July, 1872, about which time the original MS. was presented to us by the author." The greater part of the pamphlet is a prolonged wail in Carlylese dialect against "the new-sprung sect of people who are called Promoters," characteristically defined as "gangs of miscellaneous, ill-employed persons whose trade is to devise seductive projects of enterprise calculated (infallibly) to yield a sure and rich return." We know nothing of the editor and publisher, and do not commit ourselves to any opinion as to the authenticity of this production, but the following passage on Trades-Unions is true and vigorous enough, and perhaps some would add, one-sided and prejudiced enough to have come from Carlyle's pen:—

"The trades-unions of our day stand in notable contrast to the old trades-unions (called guilds) of former centuries. Guilds were for quickening the conscience of workmen, teaching every workman that it was not permitted him to think of doing his work ill; that the 'honour of a workman' and of all his brethren, consisted in faithful, skilful, and excellent delivery of work, and in never by any temptation debasing himself to work like a botcher, much less like a thief and knave. Trades-Unions again are avowedly for increase of wages alone; of thievery, knavery, botchery meeting in the work done, no account is had, or, if any, rather a preference shown for these sad qualities! Guilds, therefore, we can define as tending heavenward for all parties (namely, towards discharge more and more perfect of the duties one had undertaken); trades-unions as tending hellward (downward let us say?) for all (that is, towards getting more and more wages for work, however done). Between men and masters, accordingly, never was such scandal of work ill-done, and never such perpetual battle about the ever-increasing wages to be demanded for it. A truly infernal position for both parties (little understood or heeded as such, by either of them—or by anybody else almost but my poor self, yet hourly poisoning the soul of everyone concerned with it); out of which ineffable, if also for a time inevitable position all men might well pray, 'Good Lord, deliver us soon!'

"Two days ago it first struck me articulately that, till somebody (among masters or men) re-acquired and got a few others to re-acquire the old human detestation, shame, and abhorrence of work ill-done, and began to try it with fixed determination to do their little bit of work well (whatever the 'wages' might be), there was no punctum saliens of moral life in the affair at all, and no real improvement could begin. This is deeply and clearly my opinion; though I cannot get it explained, or enforced any more; and must leave it standing for somebody that has still a pen and a right hand."

True to Himself: or, The Story of a Great Life. By Frances E. Cooke. W. Swan Sonnenschein and Co. 1882.

It is fatally easy to some people to write for children; but to write well, with knowledge lightly worn, in a style at once elevated and simple, avoiding goodness, while inspiring veneration for noble ideals, is just about as exacting a task as any man or woman can undertake. So much the more honour to those who thus serve their generation.

Miss Cooke's name is becoming familiar to those who appreciate such work. Awhile ago she told the story of Sir Thomas More's life, under the title of "A Boy's Ideal;" and now, Savonarola, the heroic Prior of San Marco, speaks through her pen to English youths and maidens, four centuries after his soul has gone up in a fiery chariot to heaven. Hardly could history furnish a grander subject—one in which the dramatic interest blends so easily with our moral sympathies. Miss Cooke's little book is a charming introduction to it. It is daintily got up, with good woodcuts, and is sure to be in demand for use in Sunday classes and as a gift-book. Doubtless, the higher aim of the writer will be fulfilled in the case of a thoughtful boy or girl here and there who not only enjoys this well-told tale of saintly heroism, but is fired by her own gracious enthusiasm, and led to explore so fruitful a region more fully. Not only does Villari's "Life of Savonarola" await perusal, but the beautiful city on the banks of the Arno, where Dante sung and Michael Angelo modelled forms of peerless beauty, has been re-created for us by Roscoe, by Mrs. Oliphant, by George Eliot, whose "Romola," even more than the "Life of Lorenzo de Medici," or the "Makers of Florence," has flung over it the glamour of the poet's consecration, the light that shines only from within. There are signs that we are undergoing another and far more subtle Pagan Revival in these days. It will brace up and not enervate our sons and daughters, if they can take the measure of such influences and discover that a true culture roots itself in the soil of an ennobling faith. If they learn their first lessons from such books as "True to Himself" there is little fear of their later studies weaning them from those counsels of perfection which subordinate the flesh to the spirit, the joys of sense to the love that makes humanity divine.

Short Notices.

The Parabolic Teaching of Christ. By A. B. Bruce, D.D. (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1882.) Dr. Bruce is Professor of Apologetics and New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Glasgow, and is favourably known to us by his contributions to The Expositor. A thoroughly systematic and critical study of the parables of our Lord is by no means a superfluous undertaking; for while books of a devotional or homiletic character on some or all of the parables abound, works of a more elaborate and critical character are not numerous in our language. Hitherto the Biblical student has been mainly indebted to Archbishop Trench's admirable "Notes on the Parables," published more than forty years ago. But the weakness of that work is that it is largely based upon the allegorising method pursued by the Fathers, and makes greater use of patristic literature than modern learning. The other principal work on the same subject in our language, Gresswell's "Exposition of the Parables," is open to a very similar objection; while it often advances High Church theories, which have their basis in the learned writer's internal consciousness rather than in the letter or spirit of the parables themselves. Dr. Bruce, on the other hand, has sought help from the moderns more than from the ancients, and especially from the best and most recent commentaries of our own and other countries. His comments and expositions are preceded in every case by a careful and scholarly translation of the parable; and here the writer has taken advantage of the latest labour of scholars, including, of course, the Revised Version, and the valuable edition of the Greek Testament, edited by Drs. Westcott and Hort. The book on the whole is one of the best we have seen, and may be taken as an admirable guide by students who have no access to the best works in other languages. We do not pretend to agree with all the interpretations, but generally they are characterised by a thoroughly common-sense spirit, and a freedom from the allegorising propensity which has so often led both ancient and modern interpreters astray. There is a happy mixture of sound criticism and homiletical instruction, and while the general tone is moderately evangelical, there is an entire freedom from dogmatic orthodoxy, which is rare in books of this kind. But indeed it would be difficult to read Orthodoxy into the simple parables of Jesus, which are so often addressed against Pharisaic intolerance and exclusiveness, and breathe the most comprehensive lessons of the universality and impartiality of Divine Grace and the redeeming power of Charity. The concluding sentences of the chapter on the parables of "The Tares and the Drag-net" will serve to show the tone which pervades the whole work:—"The spirit of the two parables is the same—it is the spirit of Universalism, not in the controversial sense, but in the sense in which we ascribe that attribute to all Christ's teaching. The Kingdom of God as Jesus preached it was a kingdom where blessings were designed for the whole human race. In perfect accord with the whole drift of his teaching is the doctrine contained in these parables. The field is the world; the net is cast into the sea, and the net itself is the largest possible to be employed for the purposes of a gracious economy by men animated by Christ's own catholic spirit."

Launching Away; or Roger Larksway's Strange Mission. Edited by J. R. H. Hawthorn. (Hodder and Stoughton, 1882.) There is not much literary merit in this tale, but it is full of adventure and incident, and contains some graphic sketches of life and scenery in Australia, which are evidently drawn from close personal experience. The binding is ornamented with a pretty sketch appropriate to the subject of the book.

The National Secular Society's Almanack for 1883. Edited by Chas. Bradlaugh and Annie Besant. (London: Freethought Publishing Company.)—There is much interesting matter given in this annual, not the least valuable portion being the calendar of events which stand out prominently in history as landmarks of the great struggle for freedom. The contributors to this issue are Mr. Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, Dr. E. B. Aveling, T. Symes, G. W. Foote, H. G. Atkinson, Hypatia Bradlaugh, G. Standing, W. P. Ball, &c.

The Expositor continues the elaborate but not very conclusive discussion on "The Miracles," by "Almoni Peloni"—probably the editor—who seems to us to evade the real difficulties of the problem, and only succeeds in proving—that we at least have never denied—that miracles are not impossible, especially when regarded as the fulfilment of a higher law. The Rev. W. Milligan follows with a dissertation on "Double Pictures in the Fourth Gospel and the Apocalypse." By "Double Pictures" is meant expressing the same thing, or nearly the same thing, twice over, the second expression being at the same time climatic to the first. The other papers are, "The Sources of St. Paul's Teaching," the fourth article of the series being on "Rabbinical Training," by the Rev. E. C. S. Gibson; "Professor Zahn on Tatia's Diatessaron," by the Rev. Dr. Wace; and "The Temptation of Christ," a not very strong article by a theological layman, Mr. J. J. Murphy, of Dunmurry Forge.

The Sunday Review for October opens with an interesting paper on "The Influence of Art on the Masses," read on behalf of the Sunday Society at the recent Social Science Congress by Mr. Hodgson Pratt. There are also reports of the Sunday Society Conferences at the same Congress, and a suitable tribute by Mr. W. Cave Thomas to the memory of the late Sir Henry Cole, K.C.B., who was one of the Vice-Presidents of the Society. The number also contains the Transactions and Seventh Annual Report of the Society.

Wise Words and Loving Deeds. By E. Conder Gray. (T. F. Unwin, 1882.) We have simply to record the appearance of the third edition of this interesting little "Book of Biography for Girls," of which we spoke highly on its first publication. Among the ten biographies are Mary Somerville, Sarah Martin of Yarmouth, Baroness Bunsen, Mary Carpenter and Catherine Tait.

We have received from Messrs. W. Swan Sonnenschein and Co. several attractive and illustrated books for young people.

Heidi's Early Experiences, a story for children and for those who love children, by Johanna Spyri, a pretty story of the Alps, evidently of German origin.

Literary Notes.

The leading story in Good Words next year will be written by Mr. Walter Besant, author of "The Chaplain of the Fleet," &c. The title is to be "All in a Garden Green."

The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Rev. S. R. Driver, M.A., of New College, Oxford, to the Regius Professorship of Hebrew and to the canonry of Christ Church annexed thereto at Oxford, in succession to the Rev. Dr. Pusey. Mr. Driver is one of the Old Testament Company of Revisers.

The Cobden Club Essay Prize at Owens College, Manchester, has been awarded to Mr. Foster Watson, M.A., of the college. The subject of the essay is "Peasant Proprietorship." The adjudicators were Mr. Chancellor Christie, Professor Adamson, and Mr. W. H. Brewer. The amount of the prize is £60. It is a triennial one, and is similar to that given at the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

A work with the title of "The Pedigree of the Devil" is now in the press, and will shortly be published by Messrs. Trübner and Co. The object of the author is an investigation of the various sources from which the modern idea of the arch-enemy of mankind has been built up, and an analysis of the ramifications of his genealogy. The evolution of evil involved in this examination is full of strange interest, often leading to unexpected results. The work is by Mr. Frederic T. Hall, F.R.A.S., and will be illustrated by a series of elaborate drawings by the author and printed by Autotype Company in their best manner.

THE LIBERAL SOCIAL UNION held its first monthly meeting for the present session on Thursday, Oct. 26, in the Rooms of the Society of British Artists, Suffolk-street, Pall-mall, Mr. S. Searle in the chair. A paper was read by Mr. J. Stanley Little, on "The Dangerous Classes." Its general tone was anti-Democratic, and reflected the spirit of some of Carlyle's "Latter-Day Pamphlets," except that the essayist seemed to have more faith in the capability of regeneration and in remedies, such as compulsory emigration. The essayist spoke of the transformation of the poor into the abandoned, criminal, revolutionary and dangerous classes. We live in a democratic age, and license is the rule everywhere, and the unfortunate sections of society are a real menace to its existence, and what we have to fear is that the working classes, inflamed by demagogues and doctrinaires, will one day rise up and reduce London to smouldering ruins. Such people can hope for nothing from Parliament, or from liberty; they are filled with every hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness, and desire only revenge. Charitable efforts have failed, or do little to cure the evil. The Salvationists and Blue Ribbon Army scarcely touch this class at all. The Church of England and the various denominations are powerless to deal with it. The Poor Law, the workhouse, the School Board, the vapourings of sociology are mere vanity. The counsels of Political Economists no not go to the root of the matter. The only cure is in transporting these unfortunates to fields where, with pure air and better food, they could be ultimately reclaimed. A comprehensive system of Government emigration is wanted to other than our present colonies, to which Mr. H. M. Stanley, the African explorer, has pointed the finger. In the discussion which followed the following took part: Mrs. Sims (mother of the well-known dramatic author), who objected to an allusion in the essay to Mr. G. R. Sims as one of the "dangerous" writers of the day; Mr. Felton, who denied that the criminal classes are increasing; Mr. Reed, who ridiculed the fears expressed of the demagogue class; Miss Sarah Marshall, who drew a graphic picture of the homes of the dangerous classes; Mr. A. Preston, who contended that the really dangerous classes are the ignorant, born and bred in an atmosphere of vice, and combated the anti-Democratic views of the essayist; Mr. Bromhead, who objected to the conservative views on this question; Mr. Lerische, who deprecated the theory of compulsory emigration; the Rev. E. M. Geldart, who thought that the poor and neglected had some reason to complain of the better classes; Mr. Lock, who also differed from the views of the essayist; and Mr. Briggs and the Chairman, who paid a tribute to the value of the paper. Mr. Little, in reply, thought that his paper had anticipated most of the objections.

TAUNTON.—The Rev. John Birks, on the 22nd October, referring to a local controversy, preached on "Our Collar Girls, and our attitude towards them, or the relation of the different classes of society to one another viewed in the light of the religion of Jesus Christ." Great interest was excited, and the chapel was crowded, many having to go away for want of room. The text was from John viij., latter part of 7th verse, and Mark xii., part of the 31st verse. The sermon was printed in full by the local newspapers.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—The infirmities of our nature almost necessitate disease. Impurity of the blood, functional disturbances and loose living constantly give rise to despondency, debility, or distempers. In the above named remedies, the community can do have, at a little cost, the safe and certain means of preventing or checking, and curing both outward ailments and inward maladies. Ample plainly printed and very intelligible directions accompany every package of both Ointment and Pills, which only require attentive study to enable every invalid to be his or her own medical adviser. The earlier these powerful remedies are employed after discovery of the disease, the more rapid will be their action in expelling from the system all noxious matter and restoring health.

Obituary.

MRS. RATHBONE, OF LIVERPOOL.

We announced in our last number the death of this venerable lady, on Tuesday, October 24, in the ninety-second year of her age. We now subjoin the following obituary notice, chiefly taken from the Liverpool Mercury:—

"One of the excellent of the earth has passed from amongst us, Mrs. Rathbone, of Greenbank, the widow of William Rathbone, and mother of the member for Carnarvonshire and of two other well-known sons.

"The elements of her character were the simplest and purest, unmixed with anything that could disturb their action—a mind of great clearness and activity, a heart of the readiest but the calmest sympathies, a Christian faith and disposition which held every power she possessed, personal or material, as given in trust for the service of her fellow-creatures. As far as it is permitted to human nature, these spiritual forces had her altogether to themselves, with nothing to contend against in her constitution or her temper of a modifying or conflicting kind. No one ever saw her under the influence of an unworthy feeling, however short-lived, even so much as momentarily to act or speak from a wounded or resentful mind. Her pure and true moral judgment, which no bias or affection could blind or warp, was never crossed or disturbed by personal irritations.

"Her large-hearted husband always consulted and spoke of her as his better genius—the inspirer of whatever was highest in him, the prompter and sustainer of his conscience, his comforter and strengthener in not permitting him to lose courage or withdraw his hand from any good undertaking, however arduous, because of temporary failures or disappointments. Her care was for the purity of his aims and the faithfulness of his efforts, not in the least, in comparison, for his or her own prosperity or ease; and she was incapable of distrusting the ultimate success of whatever was right. Never had a noble man a truer helpmate in a noble woman.

"Her life was one of constant, careful, conscientious helpfulness, on a scale that can have no record. Her memorial, to-day, is far and wide in grateful hearts, and families lifted out of trouble that bless her name. Though keenly alive to the refinement, the adornment, and the grace of life, she seemed never to value wealth as a means of procuring increased comforts and luxuries. 'Plain living and high thinking,' with the daily service of loving duty, were all that her heart desired. And there was this purely Christian peculiarity in the benevolence which formed the chief pursuit of her available time—that no disappointments in the objects of her care, however repeated, relaxed her efforts, wearied or chilled her interest. If they were naturally helpless and inefficient, as often they were, all the more on that account did she feel their claims upon her as the weaker members of God's family specially committed to those whom He had blessed with helpful strength. If they proved unworthy or ungrateful, as sometimes they seemed to be, all the more on that account did she recognise their need of a more persistent solicitude, and act upon the great and obvious, but too neglected rule, that it is with the morally diseased and sick the spiritual physician, the true benefactor, is required to be. She never abandoned to their fate, or suffered to drift away from her, any of those whom she had tried to help or save.

"Her more public works, always veiled, were never remitted until infirmity withdrew her from active service, in her eighty-sixth year. To our various charities her aid was large, taking no account of the conventional measure; and wherever it was possible she gave the far more valuable help of her personal influence and remarkable practical efficiency. To her, with her husband, Liverpool owes the origination of its now extensive system of cheap baths and washhouses. The latter she commenced in Frederick-street, in the house of a born philanthropist in humble life, Catherine Wilkinson, through and with whom she worked, providing or finding the means until the example spread and became a municipal interest. In the education of the working classes, intellectual, moral, and religious, long before it had become a great national concern, she and Mr. Rathbone had enlisted their best strength and hope, as in the most productive form of beneficence. More than half a century ago they gave their personal attention and assiduous care to every interest of the South Corporation Schools. And when circumstances of the time, now happily for ever passed, required them to remove from that institution, they transferred their powerful help to the Hibernian Schools, Pleasant-street, and by unstinted expenditure of time and means and sympathy raised them from a condition of decay to large and vigorous efficiency. Mrs. Rathbone's devotion in these cases was not of a routine kind. She made herself the friend and the adviser of teachers and of pupils, never lost sight of them, and in many instances, by the helping heart and hand, became the chief human disposer of their lives.

"In 1876 Mrs. Rathbone had an attack—apparently accidental—of disabling sickness. The ever active mind and heart, with so much of their intensest life within the lives of others, have since peacefully rested, no longer capable of their former part, but in perfect tranquillity and repose. And as often as in that long quiet time her spirit awoke, or her thoughts wandered into dreams and visions, the living interest was ever, as before, in some person to be cared for—the picture before the mind of circumstances in which help and rescue could be given.

"Mrs. Rathbone was the daughter of Mr. Samuel Greg, of Manchester, and Quarrybank, near Wilmslow. William Rathbone Greg, the distinguished essayist, lately deceased, was her youngest brother. She survived her husband more than fourteen years. Their golden wedding was on the 9th March, 1862.

"We must not speak of what she was in her more private relations, to her friends, to society, to the large company of guests and strangers from all countries, who will call to mind and heart what she and Mr. Rathbone were in days gone by at Greenbank. Still less can anything be said of here from within the nearer circle of her own. We dare not venture beyond the consecrated words, never more truly applied—'Her children arise up, and call her blessed.' They were as happy, as privileged, in their mother as in their father. It was a life of love and duty in religious faith and hope, without a restraining thought of self.

"She had the rare combination of an active and ardent, an enterprising and unresting goodness, with the patience and dignity of a blameless temper. Deficiencies, of a negative kind, no doubt there were; of positive faults there were none, known to her fellow-creatures."

Two additional circumstances may be mentioned, one belonging to her youth and the other to her old age. She and the late Miss Abigail Hodgson were joint secretaries of the Bible Society when first established in Liverpool, principally by the exertions of the Society of Friends, of which they were then members; and when eighty years old, she, as an old school manager, sent through her son, then member for Liverpool, to Mr. Forster some practical suggestions on the Education Bill. After the Act was passed, Mr. Forster stopped Mr. Rathbone one day and said:—"I wish you to know that the suggestions you gave me from your mother were among the most useful and practical suggestions I received during the passage of the Act."

The remains of the deceased were interred in the Nonconformist portion of the Toxteth Park Cemetery on Saturday morning last. In addition to the family and relatives, a large number of prominent citizens of Liverpool were present among the general public. The funeral service was impressively read by the Rev. Charles Beard, the deceased having been a member of Renshaw-street Chapel.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Rev. Barnard Gisby, late of Derby, has engaged to minister for three months to the general Baptist congregation, St. Thomas-street, Portsmouth.

HASTINGS.—Mr. J. E. Stronge has undertaken the ministry of the Hastings Church for six months, by the unanimous wish of the congregation. Mr. Stronge has passed through the course of study at the Home Missionary Board, Manchester, and is an undergraduate of the Royal University of Ireland.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1882.

BOTH the principal Quarterlies have articles on Professor Seeley's "Natural Religion." The Edinburgh reviewer's estimate and standpoint may be indicated by the quotation of the following remark. Explaining why he has dwelt on what seems to be a personal question, in connection with the book and its author, the reviewer says: "It is because we believe the author to be a type, as well as an individual, and because we believe that the views put forth in the present volume are representative now, as were those put forth in 'Ecce Homo' formerly. They both represent, at least so far as England is concerned, the general views of that new religious world, which has formed, or has tried to form itself, having left the old behind. 'Ecce Homo' represented it in its sanguine youth: 'Natural Religion' represents it in the death throes that are already overtaking it." In the Quarterly, under the heading "The New Religion of Nature," Professor Seeley's book is severely dealt with. The book, in the reviewer's judgment, is "terribly disappointing." "For sixteen years," he says, "we have been waiting for the fulfilment of the promise held out in 'Ecce Homo,' that 'Christ, as the Creator of modern theology and religion, will make the subject of another volume,' and at last we are put off with a farrago of science and culture, a pseudo-religion, from which God and Christ have been ejected to make room for Humanity and Nature. Instead of the bread we hoped for, a stone has been thrown to us; instead of a fish we have been mocked with a serpent. The inference, we fear, is inevitable, that the author's own faith has meanwhile receded." In the Church Quarterly Review, also, there is an article on the same work. The writer thinks that "Natural Religion" is a "book whose prospects of life and influence are but small," and he adds: "The subject, however, of the semi-religious states of mind which surround Christianity in a severed or half-severed condition, and of their relations to the faith, is one of deep interest. Perhaps our author could write something of importance upon it, if he were not led away by the temptation to say things novel and surprising." All the three reviewers recognise the fact of the marked departure, in a sceptical direction, which this volume indicates when compared with "Ecce Homo." We cannot but think that the Edinburgh shows the most insight into the real character of the book when he says that the author's heart is still with the Christianity that he repudiates, and represents him as maintaining "that the words religion and atheism are used popularly in wholly inaccurate ways, and that most who call themselves atheists are not atheists at all, whilst those who call themselves the religious party have no monopoly of religion."

THE want of an adequate biography of the Rájá Rám Mohun Roy, the founder of the Brahmo Somáj, has long been felt by a great variety of persons who from different standpoints are interested in the religious life of India. Our friend Miss S. D. Collet, who has been a warm admirer of the Rájá ever since his visit to England about fifty years ago, and has worked in connection with the Bráhmó Somáj for the last thirteen years, has gradually become acquainted with many Bengálí friends and correspondents among the members of his own Church. From some of these she has received very valuable information concerning him which is scarcely known out of his own country, and (with the entire concurrence of these friends) she has decided upon compiling a biography of him which shall combine the substance of these Indian materials with other original information which she has been so fortunate as to procure from English sources. We hope that from some of our readers Miss Collet will obtain all the information for which she asks in the letter published in our Correspondence columns.

WE have so sincere a respect for Mr. Spurgeon and the great work he is doing that we are delighted to hear that there is a second Spurgeon in the field, and only wish there were a hundred more like him, especially if they would preach not quite so orthodox a doctrine. The following advertisement announces "the coming man:"

CONGREGATIONAL and OTHER CHURCHES.—"ANOTHER SPURGEON."—An experienced and singularly gifted Preacher, whom the people style "Another Spurgeon," is open to SUPPLY any church able to elect and support its own pastor. Glorious services. Outsiders brought in. Flattering testimonials. God shall have the glory.—Address, Preacher, Deacon's Advertising Office, 154, Leadenhall-street, London.

There is only one drawback to our satisfaction. A genuine Spurgeon would not announce himself as "a singularly gifted preacher," or puff his "glorious services," winding up with the cant phrase "God shall have the glory." "Another Spurgeon," unlike his prototype, is in all probability an unmitigated humbug; but sanctimonious humbogs are just the persons who often impose upon the credulity of pious and simple-minded persons.

THE assembly of representatives of the Liberal Churches of France was held last week at Nîmes, and was attended by a very large number of delegates, representing all the churches of that designation. Our venerable friend Pasteur Carénou, of Paris presided; and on Wednesday evening, October 25, a special religious service was held, when M. Fontanès, of Havre, preached a most eloquent and prepared sermon on the nature and functions of the Christian Church. It was impossible, says La Renaissance, to open more worthily the proceedings of a great assembly of representatives of the Liberal Churches. We regret that the subsequent proceedings of the assembly were not open to reporters.

COUNT CAMPELLO, ex-canon of St. Peter's, Rome, who was lately converted to Protestantism, and afterwards to the "Old Catholics," has returned to the Roman Catholic Church. The clerical journals of Rome, which had recently raked up some scandals in his past life, now are with each other in their eulogies. We remember that in noticing an article on Count Campello, in the British Quarterly Review, we not obscurely intimated our opinion that he was a very doubtful convert, judging only from the representations of his apologists.

WE give elsewhere an account of the first of a series of religious services instituted and conducted by the Rev. J. W. Lake, of Warwick, in the Royal Music Hall of the neighbouring town of Leamington. Mr. Lake's address, on "Church Creeds and Modern Thought," was listened to with evident interest, according to the Leamington Courier, a Conservative paper, which gives a long report of the lecture. We learn from the local correspondent that the attendance was about two hundred, comprising a few of the artisan and small tradesman class, but chiefly composed of members of the professional and independent classes. These services, which have been conducted for eight years during the spring and autumn months, have aroused no feeling of antagonism, but seem to have commanded general respect. The time is evidently ripening for the establishment of permanent services here and in other large towns in connection with a free and reasonable form of religious worship.

WE take the following anecdote from a paper on "Plucks," in the Journal of Education:—"Some years ago, there was at Oxford a very popular old Don, who had earned the nickname of 'The Composer.' In viva voce examinations he always began by saying, 'Pray compose yourself, Mr. —, there is no hurry. You must not be nervous.' It was said that he had been much affected by the attempted suicide of a candidate whom he had once 'ploughed,' thereby causing him to lose an appointment which was contingent upon his obtaining his degree; and from that time he had always been most careful to reject no man for his nervousness. One day there came before him for examination in the Thirty-Nine Articles an undergraduate, who was not only very nervous, but had a treacherous memory. 'Is marriage regarded as a sacrament by our Church?' asked The Composer, blandly. 'No,' was the answer. 'Quite right, Mr. Brown; pray compose yourself, and quote me, if you can, the article, or part of it, which refers to this question.' The nervous one hesitated during a moment full of anguish, and then uttered a fragment of Article XXII., which relates to Purgatory:—"It is a fond thing, vainly invented, grounded on no warranty of Scripture, but rather repugnant." The outburst of merriment drowned the remainder of the sentence; but The Composer, who had joined in the laugh, was pleased to reckon the answer as a joke; and tradition reports that he let the nervous one pass."

WE learn that at High Garrett, in Essex, "a large-hearted lady, said to be a Unitarian," has presented the Primitive Methodist Connexion with a neat and commodious mission hall. We are glad to give prominence to this fact, and shall be delighted to give equal prominence to the fact that an orthodox lady or gentleman of any sect has done a similar act of grace—when it occurs.

THE Presbyterians of Sydney, or some of them, have less strict views on the Sabbath than their forefathers had. At a recent meeting of the Presbytery there the Rev. Dr. Beg (not Begg, as in Scotland) said Sunday trains were a necessity. Professor Kenion admitted that he and other ministers and Church members used Sunday trains, which he should certainly not have done twenty years ago, as he should have deemed it wrong, though he did not do so now.

SEVERAL farmers in Scotland, availing themselves of the fine weather on Sunday last, gathered in their crops, which were spoiling in the fields, owing to the almost continuous rains. Some persons may feel inclined to say that their desire for gain got the better of their piety; we are disposed to take a more charitable view, and to commend them for their prudence, which in this case is more holy than their dread of breaking the Sabbath.

WE learn that in the United States they are not content with flowers on children's days in the churches, but introduce canaries also. A short time back a minister lamented that he could not make himself heard, for the louder he spoke the louder the birds sang. Is it heresy to say that probably the song of the birds was a better sermon than that of the minister?

OUR brethren in Victoria have not entertained the same objection to a religious census that has been felt in this country. A voluntary census of this kind has recently been issued, and 862,346 persons have described their ecclesiastical or theological position. Eleven thousand have returned themselves, or been returned, as Pagans, twenty have declared that they have "No Church, at present no creed," five belong to the "Church of Eli Sands," three call themselves "Saved sinners," three believe in "£ s. d.," two are "neutrals," one calls himself a "Theosophist," another is a "believer in parts of the Bible," another is a "Silent Admirer," while a Borrowite, a Millerite, a Colensoite, and a Walkerite, severally describe themselves as such. The Church of England claims 299,542, the Roman Catholics 197,157, while the various shades of Presbyterianism, and the different forms of Methodism, have about the same number of followers, i.e., over 100,000. The other sects do not exceed 20,000, and the Baptists are more in number than the Independents.

THE Evangelical Synod in Basle has passed a resolution, important to the Swiss Churches, by 39 votes to 32, viz., that baptism shall not be necessary for confirmation or the taking of the Sacrament. This will necessitate an alteration in the Catechism.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY IN BIRMINGHAM.—On Sunday last the sum of £4,773 10s. 7½d. was collected at the various churches and chapels. The parish church (St. Martin's) contributed £277 4s. 11d., and the following collections were made at the various Unitarian churches:—Church of the Messiah, £294 2s. 10d.; Old Meeting, £90; Newhall Hill, £58 5s. 6d.; Lawrence-street, £5 19s. 4½d. The Church of the Messiah thus headed the list of contributions from all Birmingham churches.

Correspondence.

RAM MOHUN ROY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Permit me, through you, to inform my Unitarian friends that I am preparing to compile a Biography of the Rájá Rám Mohun Roy; a project in which I am heartily encouraged by my Bráhmó friends in India, some of whom have supplied me with valuable materials for the work which will be quite new to the English public. I have also been so fortunate as to be favoured by the executrix of the late Mr. William Adam (formerly a Unitarian Missionary at Calcutta) with much interesting matter from his private letters and papers, relating to the Rájá; and some other English friends have also given me most valuable assistance. But there are—or, at any rate, there have been—two collections of papers in England which have hitherto baffled all my efforts to discover, and I write this in the hope that some of your readers may be able to assist me.

Rám Mohun Roy was domiciled for nearly two years (1831-33) in the house of Messrs. John and Joseph Hare, of 48, Bedford-square, London, brothers of the well-known educationist, David Hare of Calcutta. The Rev. James Long (formerly of Calcutta) has informed me that he was told, in 1847, by Mr. John Hare that he had then in his possession a quantity of valuable papers which would be of great service to any biographer of the Rájá. About eighteen or nineteen years later, after the three Hare brothers were all dead, the late Miss Carpenter, of Bristol, received a somewhat similar intimation, which she thus described in the appendix to her "Last Days in England of the Rájá Rámmohun Roy" (pp. 254-55), published in 1866:—

"During the preparation of this work, information has been received from one of the family of the late Joseph Hare, Esq., 'of whom the late Rájá was the intimate friend and guest, that she has in her possession letters and documents which are of the utmost importance for such a work.' These have not, however, been entrusted to the editor. A box of papers, labelled 'Rámmohun Roy,' exists also in the keeping of a widow lady, the father of whose late husband was an intimate friend of Rámmohun Roy, who entrusted them to him. It is thus possible that important writings of Rámmohun Roy's may yet be discovered, and given to the world."

I have consulted Miss Carpenter's relatives and friends concerning both these statements, but they are unable to identify either of the parties to whom she referred. Who was the "widow lady," no one can conjecture. As to the Hare papers, I have traced out a solitary surviving member of the family, but she has no knowledge whatever upon the subject, and can give me no clue to the identity of Miss Carpenter's informant. It is now sixteen years since this last assurance was received of the continued existence of these papers, and what has become of them no one can tell. But as all private search has failed, I write this letter in the chance of its meeting the eyes of some person who may be able to throw light on the subject. If either of these collections of papers have been preserved, it must surely have been in the hope of future use. Should their unknown possessors read this letter, I earnestly request them to communicate with me at my address as below. I think I can give sufficient proof that I have been honoured with the confidence of Rám Mohun Roy's real friends in India as well as in England, who will rejoice if I am permitted to look over these precious papers, and take copies of all that may be useful for my work. One document which I especially want is the journal which he kept of his Western voyage and travels, with the express intention of publishing it for the benefit of his countrymen. As nothing has ever been heard of this journal since his death, I can only hope that it has been preserved in one of these missing collections of MSS.

I am also very desirous to procure the English translation of the discourse (not by himself) which was delivered at the opening of the first Bráhmó Somáj in November, 1828. Of this discourse the Rájá presented copies to Captain Froyer, Mr. James Pattie, and Dr. Tuckerman, of Boston, U.S., as is recorded in letters to those gentlemen; but the discourse itself I have not been able to obtain. Yet one would think that some copies must have been sent to friends in England, and one of such copies may yet be found in some old family library.

The same may be said of the Rájá's Bengáli Grammar (in English), which was published in Calcutta in 1826, and of which copies were certainly sent to Mr. W. J. Fox and to Dr. Tuckerman. A copy of this work would be very welcome to me.

Of the Rájá's works published in England I have only the volume of tracts on Brahminical theology, published by Parbury and Allen in 1832, and the "Precepts of Jesus" and Three Appeals. If any of your readers can lend or sell me any of the other following works I shall be greatly obliged:—

1. "Answers to Queries," by the Rev. H. Ware, of Cambridge, U.S., printed in "Correspondence relative to the Prospects of Christianity," &c. London: Charles Fox. 1825.

2. "Essay on the Right of Hindus over Ancestral Property," &c. London: Smith and Elder. 1832.

3. "Exposition of the Practical Operation of the Judicial and Revenue Systems of India," &c. London: Smith. 1832.

4. "Translation of the Creed maintained by the Ancient Brahmins," &c. London: Nichols and Son. 1833.

I need only add that for any personal reminiscences or well-attested facts concerning the Rájá, with which any of your readers will favour me, I shall be extremely grateful.

SOPHIA DOBSON COLLET.

33, Hamilton-road, Highbury, London, N.

October 30, 1852.

THE SOUTH LONDON FREE LIBRARY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—As the Unitarians muster very strongly in our small group of subscribers I trouble you with this short statement. The Fine Art Gallery, the only place of the kind open on Sunday in the whole of London, is about to be closed for want of funds, the immediate cause being the action of the authorities of Lambeth, who, having failed to support by proof their assertion that the Free Library is liable to pay rates, have fallen back on personalities and slander. I have borne two distraints and have supported the expenditure entirely by myself during the last six months, but I feel degraded by the present phase of the struggle, and decline any further to find or ask for any money for the art gallery, which has been attended by 100,000 persons since its opening in 1879.

Unless £150 be voluntarily subscribed before Sunday, November 12, which I do not in the least expect, I propose to formally close the Art Gallery at a public meeting to be held here on that day.

The Free Library and reading room will continue open and be extended by the opening of branch lending libraries in various parts of South London, and there will be two free lectures to men and women every Sunday during the winter, one at four P.M., the other at half-past eight P.M.

W. ROSSITER.

Oct. 31.

THE MORAL REFORM UNION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In the settlement of national affairs statesmen are too apt to forget that the condition of the women of a country exerts a most powerful influence for good or ill on national growth. In the restoring of Egyptian social order, and the reconstruction of the police of the country, English influence should be exerted to secure the appointment of superior officials who will protect the honour of women as well as the safety of men.

The Moral Reform Union, therefore, would call attention to the impolicy and injustice to the weak of placing at the head of the Egyptian police the Englishman whose antecedents disqualify him for the exercise of police supervision for the protection of women.

T. L. BROWNE, Hon. Sec.

Porchester Terrace, Oct. 31.

DR. G. VANCE SMITH AND CANON COOK.

The following correspondence appeared in the Guardian of last week:—

SIR,—If you can afford room for the enclosed letters between myself and Canon Cook I should be much obliged by their insertion in the next number of the Guardian. I make the request chiefly for the reason given at the close of my second letter to Canon Cook.

Perhaps I should explain that the concluding paragraph of his letter to me is here omitted. This is partly for brevity's sake, and also because the omitted words are quite immaterial to the main point, being simply an expression of the writer's goodwill towards myself—to which, I need scarcely add, I would desire to respond in the same spirit in which it is offered.

G. VANCE SMITH.

"Carmarthen, October 12, 1852.

"Sir,—In consequence of a long absence from home I have only recently had the opportunity of seeing your work, 'The Revised Version of the First Three Gospels.' Will you allow me to call your attention to two paragraphs in it affecting myself, which appear to be founded on a misapprehension of my words, and have the effect of misrepresenting my intended meaning? I refer to your remarks (1) at pp. 19, 20, and again (2) at p. 26.

"In the former place you virtually represent me as making a formal allegation, imputing to the Revisers a doctrinal bias in some of the changes which they have made, and you observe that my assertion, 'if not met by an indignant repudiation, and refuted by substantial arguments, is calculated grievously to affect the position of the Revisers.' In reply, may I beg you to read my words again? Surely you will see that what I have said conveys and implies no imputation whatever on the theological impartiality of the Revisers. I have simply observed that the results of the revision do not leave the doctrines of popular theology unaffected, and I have given six separate examples in which this appears to me to be the case. And clearly this may be said without in any degree implying that the Revisers intended to touch popular doctrines. The result that popular doctrines are either weakened or strengthened might or might not be intended by any Reviser; but it is absolutely contrary to the fact that I have said that such an intention existed in the mind of any person whatever.

"In the second place, you observe that I complain 'bitterly' of the inconsistency of rendering the same Greek words sometimes 'Holy Ghost' and sometimes 'Holy Spirit.' That a great inconsistency is shown in thus rendering I have pointed out, and no one has indeed denied or can deny it. It is the more conspicuous, inasmuch as the Revisers profess to be careful, and are usually very careful, even in small matters like 'straightway,' to render the same original by the same English. But where is the bitterness on my part in pointing out this inconsistency? In what does the bitterness consist, in stating in the fewest possible words of the simplest kind that a great inconsistency has been committed? Pray let me beg you, then, if called upon for a new edition of your work, to modify the expressions to which I have referred; and, by giving them a form corresponding more exactly to my words, to refrain from doing me the injustice of representing me as bringing an ungracious charge against the Revision Company—one which I had certainly intended carefully to avoid.—I remain, yours very truly,

"The Rev. Canon Cook." G. VANCE SMITH.

"Exeter, October 13, 1852.

"Dear Sir,—I need not assure you that I am most anxious to avoid any expression which might misrepresent the views or statements of the Revisers, or of those who review their work.

"But on looking at the passage to which you call my attention I cannot see that I have misinterpreted or misunderstood your words.

"You say that the great doctrines of what you designate as popular theology are in the most substantial sense affected by the Revised Version.

"I did not understand you to assert or to imply that such was the intention of the Revisers. Of that no man can judge; but if the effect be what you distinctly assert, it is a matter of most serious importance, both in your estimation and in that of those who hold to those great doctrines as the very foundation of their faith.

"If it is any satisfaction to you, I am quite willing to say formally that Dr. Vance Smith speaks of positive results, not of intentions.

"As to my remarks, p. 26, the word bitterly did not seem to me too strong, considering the weight which you attach to the change of expression and the regret which you express that the Revisers in so remarkable a way neglected their self-imposed rule of uniformity in the rendering of the same word. The reasons which induce you to condemn the Revisers for altering the pronouns so as to indicate personality are stated in a form which implies surprise and indignation, and I should have thought 'bitterness.' But I am quite willing to omit that word and substitute for it 'strongly,' or 'earnestly,' or any equivalent which fairly expresses your opinion.

"I may add, at the risk of repetition, that I never could suppose that you intended to charge your fellow Revisers with unfairness or doctrinal prejudice in the direction opposed to what you call popular theology.

"I have throughout endeavoured, and I trust successfully, to avoid imputation of motives. The results, however, are of vital importance, and were it true that those results affect the fundamental doctrines of revelation, it is a matter that calls for a clear and formal declaration on the part of those Revisers who are ordained ministers in our Church.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
"Rev. G. Vance Smith." "F. C. Cook.

"Carmarthen, October 16.

"Dear Sir,—I thank you very much for your reply to my letter of last week, and I have great pleasure in acknowledging the kindly tone in which you write. The alterations you suggest would quite satisfy me. I admit, as a just description of my own feeling; the word 'strongly,' in reference to the alleged inconsistency of rendering; the word 'bitterly,' in its usual sense, I deprecate, as corresponding neither to my feeling nor to the expression which I used. In regard to the other point, it was certainly my wish to speak (as you suggest) only of 'results,' and not of any person's intentions. If I find time soon enough to copy out the letters, I may ask the editor of the Guardian to give them a place in that paper—although I hold it to be very doubtful whether he will do so. Their publication would, I think, tend to set me right with my co-Revisers, as I should wish to be.—I remain, dear Sir, yours very truly,
"G. VANCE SMITH.

"The Rev. Canon Cook."

BELFAST.—On Sunday evening, the Rev. J. C. Street delivered to a very large congregation an interesting lecture, on "Spoiling the Egyptians," of which a full report appears in the Belfast Morning News.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD held its weekly meeting on Thursday, Oct. 26. Marble busts of the late Sir C. Reed and the late Rev. J. Rodgers, who were for several years chairman and vice-chairman of the School Board for London, were presented to the Board. The busts have been placed on pedestals on each side of the presidential chair. That of Sir C. Reed was the result of subscriptions from present and past members and others, and the bust of the Rev. J. Rodgers was presented by the teachers of the metropolis. The question of higher elementary schools was discussed at much length. The debate was ultimately adjourned.—At last Thursday's meeting a new standing order was agreed to, laying it down that no committee is to bring up a proposal for the appointment of a person to a new office until the Board have first determined to create the office.

THE STRANGER IN LONDON.—That the great City will ere long be hardly recognisable by its former denizens, all the world has heard. The visitor passing up the Thames now finds his eye gratified by the many handsome edifices recently erected. As he reaches the famous Victoria Embankment, there rises over him on the right hand the new Times office, and on the left hand the new tower-crowned works of Messrs. James Erss & Co., both places of Italian architecture. It may be said that these two buildings are types of the far-reaching business energy of the nineteenth century, for it has resulted from such means that these two establishments have brought themselves to the fore, and that the annual isue of each has come to be estimated by millions. During the last year the number of copies of the Times issued is estimated at 16,276,000, while the number of packets of Erss's Cocoa sent off in the same period is computed at 14,749,695. The latter is a large total, when it is borne in mind that in 1830 the consumption of Cocoa throughout the whole kingdom was but 425,382 lbs., there then existing no preparation of it such as this, which by the simple addition of boiling water would yield a palatable drink. Truly time may be said to work many changes.

Religious Intelligence.

THE SCOTTISH UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

Last week we gave a report of the provincial meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association in Glasgow, held on Monday, October 16. We now report the meetings of the local society, the Scottish Unitarian Christian Association.

The annual meeting for the transaction of the business of the Association was held in the afternoon of Tuesday, October 17, Mr. J. PULLAR, President, in the chair. Reports were read from the several churches aided by the Society, and the various officers were appointed for the coming year; but the main interest of the meeting centred upon the question of the best use to be made of the bequest of the late Mr. McAllum, and the discussion of the previous day was continued as to the work requiring to be done for diffusing Unitarianism in Scotland.

In the evening a soirée was given under the auspices of the Association in the St. Vincent-street Church. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers, and the tea was well served by a company of young ladies belonging to the congregation. Mr. JOHN PULLAR presided, and on the platform were the Revs. Dr. H. W. Crosskey, Mr. Crossley, P. H. Wicksteed, Henry Ierson, F. W. Walters, R. B. Drummond, A. Webster, G. T. Walters, H. Williamson; Messrs. S. S. Tayler, D. Ainsworth, M.P., H. Jeffery, W. J. Milligan, secretary, and J. Virtue, treasurer of the Association. After the tea

The CHAIRMAN said: When I had the honour of addressing you in this place on a similar occasion last year I referred to the fact that our association represented only a small, scattered, and uninfluential number of people. You all know that matters are still in very much the same position, for ours is not a sect which advances "by leaps and bounds," or is ever likely to do so. Still we must hope that our simple, free, and liberal organisation, and our rational ideas on the subject of religion, will commend themselves year by year to an increasing number of our countrymen. For my own part, I cannot but think that if there is to be anything of the nature of formal religion in the future, it must be something very like what exists among Unitarians at the present day. "Old things," we see on all sides, old ideas, old forms, old superstitions are passing away, and "all things are becoming new." The outward and visible distinctions between various religious bodies remain, but the underlying, fundamental principles of a broad and Catholic Christianity are more and more asserting themselves, and being recognised as a bond of union, as the heritage of mankind, in fact, of which no sect or party has the monopoly—(applause). No one can read the newspapers, the magazines, the books of the present day, or mix in society, without feeling that the spirit of free thought and free inquiry in matters of religion is everywhere abroad. Of course there are still some rabid people who are inclined to foam at the mouth if you mention the word rational in connection with religion, and especially if you profess any sympathy with or respect for Mr. Bradlaugh. But such people are more rarely met with than formerly. Last year I referred to the advantages of our Congregational system as compared with the Presbyterian and other great ecclesiastical organisations existing around us, and to the prosecutions for heresy which had been so frequent in Scotland of late years. I also attempted to answer the question, What is Unitarianism? With your permission I shall again refer briefly to these points—(applause). I think everybody in Scotland considers it a great relief, and a matter for congratulation, that there has been an almost entire cessation of what is called "heresy-hunting" among us during the last year. It was a cowardly and cruel sport, and had it been continued must inevitably have led to the break-up of the great Presbyterian system, and the assertion of individual and congregational liberty all over the country. Heresy-hunting, as we all know, was a favourite pastime with ecclesiastics, especially the more bigoted and narrow-minded among them, in days gone by—but, with a School Board in every parish and a newspaper in every home, it proved rather dangerous—so much so in fact as to render its continuance impracticable. No doubt fanatics were gratified by such proceedings, and large numbers of people who took little interest in religious questions derived great amusement from the newspaper reports of these exciting "hunts." Among more serious and thoughtful people, however, they caused the utmost indignation. It was felt that while this might be Presbyterianism, it was in the very teeth of what was generally understood as Christianity, or even humanity. It must be admitted that the "hunt" frequently ended in rather a painful and ignominious fashion, but the position of the hunters was certainly far more ignoble than that of their victims fairly brought to bay—placed, according to our old Scotch proverb, "a'tween the deil an' the deep sea"—the deil of recantation behind them, the deep sea of starvation before. It is all very well to say that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church;" but what about the Churchmen who suck the martyrs' blood, who take the martyrs' life—whether by the old-fashioned "short and easy" method of burning, or by the slower and quieter, but not less cruel and certain method of starving?—(applause). One great advantage of our own free and simple organisation is, that such vindictive proceedings are impossible in connection with it. Each minister and each congregation is absolutely free from dictation on the part of any body of ecclesiastics. So long as they understand each other and can go on comfortably together, they do so, but when, from whatever cause, serious differences arise, they necessarily part company—and there the matter ends. The public at large hear nothing of it, and would never dream of troubling themselves as to the opinions of a particular Unitarian minister, any more than about those of any other private individual. Surely this is a far more simple, rational, and common-sense method than the unwieldy, cumbrous, and public procedure of the great ecclesiastical bodies in Scotland, and all of us who prefer it must hope to see it universally adopted ere long. After expressing his sympathy with the objects of the Liberation Society, and his preference for Unitarianism as "a much simpler, higher, and better religion than the elaborate and highly artificial productions of dogmatic theology," Mr. Pullar went on to say:—My impression is, from all I see and hear, that most heterodox opinions are widely prevalent in Scotland. We are not in such a small minority as at first sight we seem to be. Scotchmen, whether in the pulpit or in the pew, are not all Conservatives in religion any more than in politics. It is not of course to be expected, nor is it at all desirable, that people should readily break with old ties and associations in religious matters any more than in others. Young people are always growing up, however, and among the numerous churches we see rising on all sides to accommodate the increasing population it seems a pity that there should not be found room for at least one really "Free Church" in every parish—a church which shall be free, not merely from the thralldom of Parliamentary control in matters spiritual, but equally so from that antiquated dogmas and superstitions, where in this parish and in that, true worshippers, however unpopular and wrong their opinions may be, shall have an opportunity of worshipping the Father in spirit and in truth. Depend upon it, that if such arrangements are well carried out the rising generation of Scotchmen will be drawn to these Free Churches by the "law of gravitation," as it were. If the minister be a really able and earnest man, fired with the true "enthusiasm of humanity," if the service be as varied and interesting and the music as divine as it ought to be, even many orthodox people (or those who think they are so) will find that such a religious service meets their spiritual needs. For, even if they miss some of the old familiar phrases to which they have been accustomed, they will probably find that the essential fundamental ideas of true religion remain. Men who can produce one sermon a week worth listening to are not born every day, and men who can produce two or three such sermons weekly are not born at all. I by no means undervalue good sermons, and I occasionally have the pleasure and advantage of listening to them. The highest and best religious teaching, coming from the lips of cultured, good, and thoughtful men, is of immense value. But what I maintain is this, that if the service otherwise is what it ought to be, it alone will always be sufficient to attract people to church, and to do them good when they get there. It will suffice to "wake the better soul that slumbers," to revive all that is noblest and best, and "the likeliest God within the soul" of each of us; to rekindle our highest hopes, our noblest aspirations; to lighten our sorrows, to enhance our joys, to send us back to "the trivial round, the common task" of every day life and work, with a better, braver, and more hopeful spirit. For my own part, I am sanguine enough to believe that we may live to see churches of the kind I have mentioned, if not in every parish, at least numerous all over the country. I do not mean that new churches should be built, or that new ministers should be imported, except in rare cases. If I am not mistaken, we have in Scotland both the men and the material required to effect this "new Reformation," and depend upon it, if we do effect it, it will be done as thoroughly as the old one was, although probably much more quietly. I don't know when or how the change will come, but I have a firm belief that "come it will for a' that;" and if soon and silently so much the better. I need scarcely say that with every independent and well considered step in the direction I have indicated we as individuals, and this Association as such, offer our most hearty sympathy and such co-operation as it may be in our power to give. I trust this Association will at least be found to serve a useful purpose, as a sort of nucleus and rallying point to which distressed and discontented Scotchmen, ecclesiastically, may resort for aid and comfort—(applause).

Mr. AINSWORTH, M.P., said he had always heard that the very best thing a man can do in this life is to help on the machine of progress. In the situation he happened to hold he sometimes met with people who thought the very best thing to do was to obstruct the machine; but such people were generally regarded as nuisances. On that occasion he was sure there was very little necessity to help them in any way. It seemed to him from the large attendance that they were thoroughly interested in the work they had to do. Referring to the broadening influences at work in other communities of the religious world, he said he had found that persons were often a great deal better than their creed. No doubt Unitarians had their own opinions, but at the same time they were perfectly willing to allow that there was a great deal of good opinions held by other sects besides Unitarians, and there were common platforms on which they could meet and help each other; though he did not for a moment wish them to infer that on that account it was not necessary to hold fixed opinions of their own. The British and Foreign Association had a very great interest in what was being done in Scotland; they all had the well being of mankind at heart, and he hoped those sentiments would be fostered all over the world, and conduce to the forwarding of the cause of truth and righteousness—(applause).

The Rev. G. T. WALTERS (Aberdeen) said:—In the minds of the public there is a good deal of misunderstanding with regard to the position taken by Unitarians. Unitarians dissent from the popular creed because it fails to uplift the soul to a divine height, from which the glory of God and the humanity of man might become visible. There was a living faith in the prophet of Nazareth, but that faith and hope is not living in the churches to-day. Instead of the church giving the people the bread of life they were feeding them on dry husks. If they could have congregations free from tradition, and actuated with a desire for truth, and for the cultivation of religious feeling, then their mission would be fulfilled. They had heard a good deal lately about the "lapsed masses"—people who never went to church. He was inclined to think that one cause of that was the prejudice that prevailed in the minds of people of different denominations, and which transformed our Christianity into something worse than Paganism. They were all acquainted with that beautiful hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Because that hymn happens to have been written by a Unitarian, Mr. Henry Varley put it out of his hymn book, and is followed in this by Mr. Sankey. He ventured to say that the clergy were mainly responsible for the lethargic condition into which the masses had sunk. We want more honesty in these matters, more moral courage, so that men and women will not fail to confess they are Unitarians; for honesty is the best policy, and a lie is none the less bitter because it has been covered over with a false piety and a pretended sanctity. Mr. Walters concluded by asking for a hearty vote of thanks to the friends from London, and expressed a hope that the time would soon come when they would pay another visit to Glasgow.

The Rev. A. WEBSTER (Glasgow), in seconding the motion, said he was much stimulated by the visit from the deputation, and would go back to his work very much refreshed. He wished to acknowledge on the part of his congregation the kind services of Mr. Iesson in preaching for them last Sunday.

Mr. S. S. TAYLER (London), in responding, said that the deputation would also go back strengthened, and they would feel it to be their duty to work harder than ever after the sympathy and encouragement that had been accorded to them in the great city of Glasgow. For his own part, he had seen a great deal which highly impressed him. He knew they had a church in Glasgow, but he was not prepared to see such a splendid building as that in which they were seated. He had listened to the minister of it with a good deal of pleasure, as also to Mr. Webster in another part of the town. It touched his heart very much when he heard Mr. Walters speaking to the young people. He was sure it was a privilege to them to sit and listen to the gentle and interesting words he addressed to them—(applause). He had been in many a Sunday-school and seen how inattentive young people often were, but the young people of that church seemed much interested in what they heard. He complimented the ladies on the taste they had displayed in laying out the flowers on the various tables, and said that flowers in a state of nature were extremely beautiful, and possessed of great delicacy of light and shade, which is the very thing they wanted to feel in their hearts. They wanted the delicacy of the light and shade and beauty of the flower in their religious life, and then they would cherish that brotherly feeling which all ought to entertain. He was aware that a number of friends from other churches often came to help them on occasions of that kind, and he hoped that no word of theirs would be uttered which would grate harshly on their ears—(applause). He trusted that their Association and the Association in London would work together in future with increased energy and effect—(applause).

The Rev. Dr. CROSSKEY (Birmingham) contrasted the respectable position of the Unitarian faith of to-day with the opprobrium and disrespect attached to it thirty years ago, when he was minister to the congregation he was addressing. When he began his ministrations there he counted nothing but the hats of men, the ladies were afraid of Unitarianism; but now the sexes were equally blended, all that was sweet and womanly with all that was brave and independent. One sign of progress to him was that their church embraced in every sense of the word its fair share of women as well as men—(applause). He referred to the prosecutions for heresy with which they were familiar in Scotland, and said they had not had a single trial for heresy for a whole year, which was an unusual circumstance. But he read in the newspapers that they were still at their old controversy, the Sabbath controversy. However, they were growing wiser; even the highly respected worthy divine, Dr. Adams, seemed to plead that he may break one of the Ten Commandments by travelling when it is his duty to preach in the neighbourhood. Referring to the writings of Professor Robertson Smith, he said the stamp of heresy was there, and principles that will ultimately overthrow the very pillars of the church of which he was a minister; but he hoped the day would soon come when trials for heresy would for ever vanish, and when they would all be true to the reason which God had given them. They should not forget how the great change had come to which he had adverted. A Unitarian was now looked upon in Glasgow, at least, as being as honourable and as religious a man as the member of any Orthodox Church. He was bound to say it had come through the faithfulness of those who in former times had belonged to that and kindred churches. Human progress was not a thing they could leave to the four winds of heaven to be turned at will. The world was only moved in the providence of God by the power of noble men. He could not help recalling some names that must be familiar to every one who worshipped there, whose faithfulness had had a silent influence, and had permeated the community in which they lived; men like Mr. Vallance, Mr. Brownlee, and the generous Mr. Teacher, and the thoughtful and devoted Mr. Smith and Mr. Glassford. That church had been served by a race of as honourable and devout men as ever served any church in Christendom; men whose names added an honour and a lustre to the glory of the new and dawning day—(applause). To the young people of the church he would give as their watchword, "Be faithful as your fathers were faithful." Of the many noble works to be done in this world he knew of no nobler work than the building up of a pure and holy temple to the eternal God in which conscience would be aroused and love awakened. He had seen those who had worshipped there for many a year, in the hour of their passing away—resting upon the rod and the staff in the valley of the shadow. And he knew with a thorough personal knowledge that to many a man and woman the preaching of their simple faith within these walls had brought a constant joy, an unbroken peace and an immortal hope—(applause). He would say to the young people that if they were faithful they would find that nothing that money can buy, no success in business, no triumph in social life, no mere intellectual achievement would equal the blessing that would come to them from a simple hearted faith in the principles of their religion—(applause).

The Rev. R. B. DRUMMOND (Edinburgh) proposed a hearty welcome to the representative from the Belfast Society. They were always glad to meet their Belfast friends on an occasion like that. In days of old, Mr. Street was a frequent visitor at these meetings, and he had no doubt it would be a disappointment to many of them who had been on former occasions accustomed to listen to his eloquent tones to find that he was not there, as had been announced that night. However, the Rev. Mr. Wright had come over in his place—(applause)—and he was sure they would give him a very cordial welcome. Mr. Drummond further moved that they should give a most hearty welcome to Mr. Crossley, who he understood had come to Glasgow to succeed Mrs. Soule. All their churches that had the pleasure of listening to Mrs. Soule's addresses highly appreciated them. Mr. Crossley had come over to carry on the work which Mrs. Soule had begun in Scotland for the Universalist body. So far as he understood, they were Unitarians. Whether they were or not, they were working for the good of mankind, and for the spreading of right religious views—(applause).

The Rev. H. WILLIAMSON (Dundee) in seconding the welcome, said, respecting Mr. Crossley, that although he had not come to work exactly on Unitarian lines, he was here to work in parallel lines to their own, and he fancied that often the two lines converged. They had every reason to be glad of the opportunity of welcoming both these friends to their meeting that night. On behalf of Dundee, for which perhaps he might be allowed to speak, they would be glad to see in that town the friends from a distance who were present with them on that occasion. They felt themselves very much isolated there, and lately they had had an irruption, or perhaps he ought to say an invasion of liberal thought in the person of a Glasgow man, the Rev. David McCrae—(applause). He loved David McCrae with all his heart, because he acted very kindly and lovingly to him, and it went against the "grain" to say a single word which might seem against him. But the ministrations of David McCrae had given his (Mr. Williamson's) church the most severe blow they had ever experienced. He would stand against all the Calvinism that could be brought to bear upon them in Dundee. He would glory in the United Presbyterian, the Established, the Free, the Methodist, Independent, and Baptist Churches, preaching their most extreme orthodoxy, and he would flourish. But David had introduced a different element. With great power, tremendous enthusiasm, and a keen knowledge of Scotch human nature, he was giving a position to liberal Christianity in Dundee it never had before. And although he does not take any profession, but that he is a Christian and a believer in humanity, they ought to recognise very distinctly that David McCrae is doing a grand work for liberal Christianity in Scotland, and whenever he came to Glasgow he believed he got a hearing worthy of the work in which he was engaged. That was a matter which ought to encourage them very much. It showed, at least, if they could only make their simple religious belief interesting to the Scotch people it was the very thing that was wanted. The religion of Scotland exists at the present day as it has done for many years, in a sort of contradiction. If you take the theology of Scotland as it may be seen in books it is one thing, but if you look at the paraphrase "O God of Bethel, by whose hand thy people still are fed," or take the religious poetry of Robert Burns, you have the religion of the Scotch people, which is as true, and as real, and as devout as religion can possibly be. And it is this work that they had to do; they had to clear away the old barbarous Calvinism, and to establish the religion which has an existence in the Scotch people in spite of their Calvinism. Mr. McCrae had succeeded to a great extent through his knowledge of the Scotch people in introducing this element into his work in Dundee—(applause).

The Rev. J. J. WRIGHT, in responding to the welcome, said, the first and most important duty he had to perform was to bring to the Scottish Unitarian Christian Association the heartiest wishes and the most ardent assurance of spiritual co-operation he could offer from the Unitarian Society in Ireland—(applause). Their Society cost them, he supposed, about a hundred pounds a year, which was collected mostly by subscriptions. They kept a book-store, where the best books of liberal thought are sold at as near cost price as possible. They also issued a periodical once a month, and distributed a thousand copies of it gratuitously. It is called the "Chronicle and Index." It is an index of the kind of books that come to their counter, and by means of its columns they indicated to their various readers the kind of books they had latest got in, and what kind of books they recommended them to buy and read. Besides, their Association had affiliated with it a Sunday-school Society. It took an interest in the working of the various Sunday-schools throughout the north of Ireland. Mr. Wright added that he gladly seized the opportunity to thank the many friends he had in Glasgow for the kindness they had always shown to him; friends whose friendships were cherished and whose kindness he should never forget.

The Rev. Mr. CROSSLEY, in acknowledging the welcome, said, I am 4,000 miles away from the place that I recognise as my home, but though so far away from it I find kindred feelings to my own expressed here, although cast in a different manner and set forth in a stronger way. But the feeling of home presses itself more strongly on me than I have ever realised before, and it draws my attention to the fact that to-night in America the General Convention of Universalists begins its annual session. I have felt as though I had been lifted up and set down in the midst of the gathering I have attended for over twenty years regularly. I was dreading that I should feel the loss of not attending it this year; but I feel at this meeting that I have been largely compensated for that loss. I have had my own sentiments expressed better than I could express them myself. And this feeling raises the question just for a moment with reference to the relations that may exist, and perhaps ought to exist, between the body that I represent and the body that is represented here of Christian believers. In America we are much stronger taking the two bodies than you are in the British Empire. We have thus two wings of liberal thought quite evenly balanced, and we look upon them there as a strength and support to each other. These two bodies moving in the same direction, although not blended together, are tending to lift the thoughts of the people into a larger and freer domain of communion with God. So if I were working in this land to-day without you moving in a similar direction I should feel very lonely indeed. But I shall not feel lonely in the work in which I am engaged. The field is large, and there are so very many who need these sentiments—this higher knowledge of God and humanity. There is room for us to work together. You emphasise certain features and phases of truth in a way that perhaps we do not. We emphasise other phases of the truth, so that both together constitute a larger strength than the one alone could possibly be—(applause). I must thank you for this very cordial reception. I assure you I appreciate it, and it will encourage me upon the threshold of my visit to Scotland—(applause).

Mr. STEWART (Glasgow) proposed a vote of thanks to the Rev. Mr. Wicksteed for the admirable sermons to which they had listened on the preceding Sunday. Good sermons were the rule in that church; what might be the result if they were called upon to listen to an indifferent sermon by an indifferent minister he did not know, but certainly no such task was imposed on them last Sunday. Every one was delighted. There was one point which was touched upon by Mr. Wicksteed in the morning, and also in his admirable speech last night, which must have gone home to the heart of every Unitarian father and mother, namely, the "true method of education for Unitarian children." That was a subject which was handled by Mr. Wicksteed just in such a fervent and clear manner as they might have expected from the accomplished and learned translator of what he might call that great work of Dutch theology, "The Bible for Young People"—(laughter). One thought occurred to him while listening to Mr. Wicksteed. It was this: If Mr. Matthew Arnold had been amongst them his burning desire for lucidity would have been gratified. Mr. Wicksteed might go home with the feeling that he had said things to them upon the subject of the education of their children which had gone home to their hearts, and which would not be forgotten. It only remained for him to add the hope that these sermons would be given to them and to the world, that they might have a memorial of this happy series of meetings—(applause).

Mr. J. VIRTUE (Glasgow) said, in seconding the proposal, that he entirely concurred in the remarks of Mr. Stewart. Mr. Wicksteed had many gifts, and he ought to be endowed and sent to Scotland as a missionary at large. There were few men, he thought, so well adapted to impress the Scottish people. If the British and Foreign Unitarian Association would pay the half of the required salary he thought the Scottish Society would try to pay the other half.

Mr. WICKSTEED said, in reply, that in coming to Scotland he expected to be amongst strangers, but he would go back to London impressed with the conviction that he was leaving friends in Glasgow. The memory of the earnest faces that appeared before him in that church while preaching there on the preceding Sunday would never pass away. He did not know how it was, but he felt more deeply on that occasion than he ever recollected having felt before of the common nature of their work all over the world. In regard to Mr. Ainsworth's speech he wished to state his dissent from one expression he used. He said that most men are better than their creeds. That depended on the man, and it depended on the creed. Are we better than our creed? If they were half as good as their creed, Scotland, England and the world would soon be evangelised. Jesus Christ was not better than his creed, and he hoped their creed came very near to his. They could not expect to be better than their creed. They ought not even to wish to have a creed whose standard could be attained unto. They all knew what stable and unstable equilibrium meant. Well, the man that is better than his creed is in a state of unstable equilibrium; a little shift and down he falls. The man whose creed is love to God and love to man, and the summary of whose religious inspiration is "be ye perfect," can never be better, nor half as good as his creed. He is in a state of moral and spiritual equilibrium, his creed and his aspiration is far above him. No sorrow, no disturbance or trouble, no intellectual bewilderment, no discouragement, no poverty or barren result, no solitariness of endeavour; nothing can shake him from that firm repose, nothing can throw his moral or religious nature into ruin, because it is suspended on that which is above it, and the tendency of his whole nature is to restore and compensate any momentary disturbance of stable equilibrium. This he thought was their highest privilege—a privilege which above all others they should strive to share with all the world—(applause).

Mr. H. JEFFERY, in proposing the sentiment, "Success to the Scottish Unitarian Christian Association," heartily thanked the friends in Glasgow for the liberal hospitality they had extended to the representatives of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association. He was much interested in what he had seen and heard at these meetings, and he thought that with such men and women as he had met there Unitarianism ought to hold a stronger position than it does in Scotland. They had just come in for a legacy, which was very pleasant; but he hoped it would not weaken their sense of the necessity of an increased subscription list. The balance-sheet of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association was nothing to boast of, but the figures of the Scottish Association seemed a mere petty-cash account, and he hoped they would not be content without largely increasing the account. He was sure that with more religious earnestness there would be more coin. The speaker referred to his public advocacy in Scotland, nearly forty years ago, of what is now called Secularism, and he was glad to have that opportunity, in the presence of several who knew him in those years gone by, of testifying to the joy he had experienced from embracing the reasonable Christianity which he understood the Unitarian name to denote. He would spend the remainder of his days in trying to impart to those who were wandering in dreary doubt or blank denial that faith in God, in human brotherhood, and personal immortality which he felt to be so precious—(applause).

The Rev. H. IERSON, in seconding the sentiment proposed by Mr. JEFFERY, of "Success to the Scottish Association," said: Besides the grateful sense of their kind reception, the English representatives take with them from these meetings the conviction that the work in which we are interested in this part of the kingdom will be henceforth more vigorously and more effectively carried on through this visit to the friends with whom we have had the pleasure to confer on the various matters connected with it. He could not help saying to them, "If you were not occupying the field here we should feel it to be our duty to come. But we are thankful to know that you are here, and that the work will be the more energetically done from the encouragement, we trust, that we may have given you." And thus our visit to this city will not have been in vain. Mr. Ierson concluded with the assurance of the strong interest which they felt in the work of the Scotch Association, and expressed the heartiest good wishes for its renewed prosperity—(applause).

Mr. MILLIGAN returned thanks to the ladies for their services in preparing tea.

Mr. GRANT responded.

Mr. GRAHAM returned the thanks of the meeting to the chairman, which Dr. BARLOW seconded.

The meeting broke up shortly before 11 P.M.; after the singing of a closing hymn, and the benediction, pronounced by the Rev. F. W. WALTERS.

NEW CHURCH AT MILES PLATTING, MANCHESTER.

On Saturday, Oct. 21, the memorial stone of the new Unitarian Church to be erected in the populous neighbourhood of Miles Platting was laid in the presence of a large assemblage, by the Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A., Principal of the Home Missionary Board. Among others present were the Revs. W. G. Cadman, S. A. Steinthal, Adam Rush-ton, Alfred Payne, C. T. Poynting, B.A., William Mitchell, R. Pilcher, Joseph Freeston, C. C. Coe, Silas Farrington, J. Harwood, B.A., Samuel Thompson, W. C. Squier, J. G. Slater, J. McDowell, H. T. Basford, James Harrop, Halliwell Thomas, John Moore, Alexander Farquharson, B. Walker, the students from the Home Missionary Board and Messrs. Benjamin Heap, C. E. Schwann, Harry Rawson, Alderman Bowes, John Dendy, jun., G. W. Rayner Wood, John Chadwick, Henry Whaley, Thomas Cooke, J. H. Brooks, B.A., J. Johnson, Frank Taylor, Ben Brierley, Ben Wolstenholme, Isaac Percival, John Heys, John Mellor, J. H. Mellor, Edward Lawton, Dan. Baxter, J. E. Ashton, Thomas Yates, Thomas Tonge, &c.

The congregation, scholars, and friends assembled at the school in Varley-street at three o'clock, and walked in procession to the site of the new church, headed by the Dob-lane brass band. Notwithstanding the threatening state of the weather during the ceremony there were not far short of one thousand persons, old and young, present.

After the singing of a hymn Mr. JAMES BURGESS, as chairman, said that twenty years ago he watched the laying of the first brick of their present chapel in Varley-street, and he was now taking a similar part, but in a more formal manner, in witnessing the laying of that memorial stone. About thirty-five years ago himself and others on that platform attended the Unitarian services held in the old Mechanics' Institution, owned then by the late Sir B. Heywood. The minister at that time was a very great and respected man, the Rev. John Layhe, and his efforts for the children during one Whit-week contributed no doubt to his early death. They finally erected a chapel in the Rochdale-road, and for a time worshipped there. The old feeling, however, rested among many of the congregation in favour of Miles Platting, and they decided to have another congregation there. They took a room in James-place, on March 29, 1857. For some time they laboured there until they obtained a small room over a stable in Frost-street, on the 28th March, 1858, and he remembered with pride and satisfaction the glorious times they had in that small, but, to them, interesting room. Many still remembered the benefit they derived from that Sunday-school. They had an evening school for three nights a week for the charge of one penny, with an average attendance of sixty to seventy persons. They finally decided to strike out again for new premises, which resulted in their removing to their present building in Varley-street, their friend the Rev. W. Gaskell preaching, and at the gathering the following day Alderman Heywood presided, while among those present were many well known names, the Revs. T. E. Poynting, J. C. Street, G. H. Wells, Dr. Marcus, James Harrop, Mr. Manley, and students from the Home Missionary Board. When they commenced the work in Varley-street the congregation raised £100, and the Manchester District Unitarian Association assisted them, as they were again doing. For about five years they had no minister, but about eleven years ago the Rev. W. G. Cadman was selected, and from that time their success had been gradual and permanent—(applause). He was proud to tell all that, for he saw amongst that large assembly a very large number of old faces who he knew took an interest in their welfare, although not all by any means members of their household of faith—(applause)—but who still sympathised with the movement, as was shown by their presence. After working for the last twenty years in Varley-street, they determined to build another home for themselves, and they saw around them the commencement of their undertaking. To show the earnestness of the congregation, he might say that at the first meeting held with respect to the new premises, the congregation in less than half an hour subscribed the handsome sum of £800—(applause). Since that time they had received from other friends in the neighbourhood other subscriptions, and the Miles Platting congregation had now subscribed £1,200 towards the object in view. He must refer to the handsome manner in which the Unitarian public and the Manchester District Unitarian Association had helped them—(applause). By the grand bazaar held in the Free Trade Hall, and the handsome subscriptions of different gentlemen, over £8,000 had been raised, of which £3,000 had been given to the Miles Platting congregation towards the new church—(applause). On behalf of himself and the congregation he tendered their deepest and most heartfelt thanks. As to their financial position, the land, including the block of buildings on his left, had cost £1,800, the new church would cost £3,000, and an organ which they were determined to have if possible before they opened—(applause)—would cost £500 more, which showed they would require before they opened the new place of worship £1,000 more. If they prospered in the future as they had done in the past it would be a grand success indeed. He trusted that Mr. Gaskell's health would be preserved, and that they should see him within the walls of the completed building—(applause).

Mr. WM. ROBINSON, the secretary of the building fund, then presented Mr. Gaskell with a silver trowel and a mallet, saying that the fact of Mr. Gaskell's presence at his advanced age, and at that late period of the season, proved, if proof was needed, the very deep interest he had ever taken in that congregation, who looked upon him as one of their best and dearest friends—(applause). He had always been ready and willing to assist them, and when their new home was completed they trusted he would not only be present at the opening, but that they might have the pleasure of listening to his addresses in the new chapel—(applause).

After a prayer by the Rev. W. G. CADMAN,

The Rev. WM. GASKELL (who was received with applause) duly laid the memorial stone (which bore an inscription to that effect), and said: I have now done the part assigned to me, and have felt myself honoured in doing it. Most sincerely do I congratulate the Miles Platting Free Church on having brought to a successful issue the good work which I know they have had long and deeply at heart, and for which they have been willing to make not a few sacrifices. Mr. Robinson truly said that I have always taken an interest in this church, from its first humble and somewhat unpromising beginning down to the present time, and it has been a great satisfaction to me to see it gaining in strength and usefulness under the faithful guidance of my friend Mr. Cadman. A charge which has frequently been brought against us as Liberal Christians is, that though our faith may suit those who are well-to-do and prosperous, it is not adapted to attract and meet the wants of the working classes. If those who make the charge were here to-day, they would acknowledge they said it in ignorance—(applause). We might point to many churches in this district which might almost be called working class churches. I trust that you, my friends, will go on giving a more complete and decisive refutation to that charge that even you have yet given. These walls are, so to speak, only the scaffolding for the work which you have to do; and I trust that you will so labour on, that many after you have long gone to your account will be the better for your living; be made wiser, better and happier—have their sorrows alleviated, their burdens lightened, and their best hopes confirmed. I can only pray, which I do most sincerely, that God will prosper the work of your hands, and His blessing be upon you and yours—(applause).

The Rev. S. A. STEINTHAL said he rejoiced to have the opportunity of congratulating them on the great progress they had already made, and the bright promise which lay before them. Years of hard work had been imposed upon them before they could see the promise which greeted their eyes, as they looked round them then. The promise before them was a rich reward for the toil they had devoted in the past to rearing up the church for which they were now building up a new home. Their work was one of great importance in the district. They had to maintain the standard of high, free, religious thought in a truly devout and reverent spirit, and they would see such fruit of their work in a higher moral tone, a wider, kinder sympathy, a truer Christian feeling, spreading around their home. Their work was of a high character, because at the present day there were many men longing and yearning for rest in a truth which they as Unitarians had been privileged to receive, and were bound to impart to others—(applause). They did so in no sectarian spirit of jealousy towards those around, but with the kindest sympathy in the great work in which they recognised others as fellow workers in the universal church of God. Different minds and different hearts required a different expression of thought, and found expression to their feelings in different ways, and unless the voice of their own particular Church was heard the full harmony of the universal church had not got complete utterance. There were many differences of opinion in the church as it was visibly expressed here on earth, but differences need never divide the higher unity that bound them all—the Christian life of dependence on the Universal Father of all. There was an underlying sentiment of religious trust; an underlying feeling of heavenward aspiration, a reverent sense of God's guiding power that united them all, whatsoever their opinions might be, and made them feel they could labour together for the common good. As they had heard there were those present who did not worship with them ordinarily, but were with them that day; he thought it an augury of better times when no longer that internecine warfare of Church against Church should diminish their influence, but when all, united together with one common aim, they should launch their forces against the strongholds of vice, sin, unbelief and indifference, and bring down from above on the world the blessing of God, and the spirit of Christ, in which we all are one—(applause). Though theology might divide, religion should unite all together as brothers—(applause). It was for true religious aims they raised those walls, their Church would work for true religious ends, and thus that blessing which their minister had implored upon them, and that benediction which the venerated lips of Mr. Gaskell had pronounced upon them, would be fulfilled, and in their own hearts they would feel God had answered their prayers, and his blessing rested on them. That richly they might enjoy that blessing was his prayer, and they would ever have his warm sympathy in their excellent work—(applause).

Mr. HARRY RAWSON said that recently they had had a similar gathering at the sister-church their Ardwick friends were erecting at Longsight, and there were several points of comparison between the two which were not a little interesting and suggestive. The ministers of both were educated at the Home Missionary Board—(applause)—of which their venerated friend Mr. Gaskell was the principal, and he (Mr. Rawson) had the honour to be one of the officials. Both congregations were founded for the teaching and exemplification of the great principles of religion which they held in common. They had also both "open trusts," leaving room for light and truth, higher and nobler than any they had yet received to stream into them from the firmament of heaven—(applause). Mr. Gaskell had said that was a working-class congregation. So was Ardwick, and a little further up that road they would find another at Dob Lane—(applause)—and a few miles further still one at Oldham, which he remembered thirty years ago to consist entirely of working men. Again, across that road they would find a congregation of the very poorest and humblest people. At Denton, too, a congregation had sprung up within the last few years, composed exclusively of working people. He therefore hoped they should hear no more of the calumny that the views and principles they preached were unsuited to the labouring classes—(applause). It was in churches founded like that, where those principles only were taught which were consonant alike with reason and faith, that they could find a true religious home; a place where they were neither compelled nor asked to sacrifice any faculty God had given them—(applause). It was a church conducted on the principle of perfect equality, with a constitution entirely democratic, which admitted no possibility of cliquism, where every man, and every woman, too, had an equal right—(applause). He hoped that the work of the congregation might prosper, and that that church might be a blessing to them and their children for many generations, and that the neighbourhood might largely benefit by its operations—(applause).

A vote of thanks to the Rev. William Gaskell was then proposed by Mr. ROBERT FIELDING, seconded by Mr. JOHN COLEMAN, and carried with acclamation, and a few words in reply from Mr. GASKELL terminated the proceedings.

A collection at the gates realised nearly £25.

The new church will occupy a well elevated site fronting Oldham-road. The style of architecture will be Gothic, faced externally with parpoint stone, the ashlar and moulded work being from the Halifax quarries. Large tracery windows will decorate the chancel and main front, which is also to be flanked by a tower, to be used as a staircase and entrance to gallery over vestibule. Sitting accommodation will be provided for 400 people in the body and gallery and chancel. Organ chamber, vestry, and meeting-room are provided, also store cellar, heating chamber, and other offices. The whole of the interior fittings are to be in varnished pitch pine, and the roof, which is to have a clear span, is to be open timbered. The heating is by hot water, and the lighting by means of coronas, lamps, brackets, and standards. The entire cost, including site, organ, &c., will be £5,500. The work is being carried out by Mr. A. W. Smith, architect, 88, Mosley-street, Manchester, and the contractor is Mr. W. W. Harrison, of Manchester.

THE EVENING MEETING.

After tea in the Varley-street school a public meeting was held in the same room, the Rev. W. G. CADMAN presiding.

The SECRETARY having read letters regretting non-attendance from the Rev. F. H. Jones, Oldham; the Rev. Jas. Black, Todmorden; the Rev. Geo. Fox, Wigan; the Rev. Lawrence Scott, Denton; and Messrs. Joseph Broome, Abel Heywood, Junr., and Edmund Mauley,

The CHAIRMAN said: We are not working in opposition to others, and readily admit the motives that actuate our neighbours of other denominations. But our work is different to some extent from theirs. We do not try to save men from a fiery hell to which they have exposed themselves by becoming estranged from orthodox creeds. The hell from which we would save them is the hell of immoral, irreligious, and wasted lives. It is sad to reflect how large a part of our population is beyond all religious influence. To this class we have a special message. To those who have given up as old fictions the doctrines of total depravity, and salvation by imputed righteousness, of a dying God and a fiery hell, we offer a worship devout and yet rational. We say, "Come with us." We ask you not to leave your reason behind you when you come. We ask you not to say you believe in doctrines that contradict heart and conscience. We say: Prove all things, and hold fast the true. We do not make agreement in opinion a qualification for communion; we ask only that you will be sincere, and that while you are anxious to seek the truth you will be above all things anxious to live the truth to which you have attained. We call ourselves Unitarian; the name was not chosen by us. Those who now join us, like Carey Walters and Stopford Brook, often prefer an undogmatic name. We take the name because we have inherited it from a time when men thought more perhaps of their theological distinctions; but having inherited it we are not ashamed of it, for we know that it still expresses to others as no other word does, that wherein ours differs from the popular representation of Christianity. But, Unitarians as we are, we are open to the truth. We will, by no action of ours, seek to prevent or retard the free course of the "Spirit of truth." We will not stereotype for succeeding ages our conception of truth; but rejoicing in the privileges we possess, will leave to others an equal liberty, and firmly trust that freedom reverently exercised can never lead us from Him who is the Everlasting Truth. And so our Church will be dedicated to the worship of God, and to works of education, piety and benevolence. No narrower circle will be drawn in our Trust deed than that described under these heads. And yet we call ourselves a Christian church. When we assemble within the walls of our new temple we shall claim to be regarded as disciples of Christ. Is there, then, a limitation in this? Not so, standing as it does for all that is pure, lovely, and of good report; there is nothing sectarian in the Christian name. It is a matter of continuity and of historical development. Into a Christian atmosphere we were born; in Christian civilisation we have lived. There has been no choice in the matter. Providence placed us here to-day in England, and not in Arabia, or India, or China, or any other land. And we cannot, if we would, remove our obligation to that pure and holy soul, who is not merely the "light of Asia" or of Europe and Asia, but who is or yet shall be "the light of all the earth." The spirit of Jesus is the spirit of universal brotherhood, and the historic Christ stands not between us and the Father to divert our homage from Him to whom we owe it, but to be our Guide and our Light in coming to the Fountain of all goodness and truth. He asks not our prayers, but he teaches us how to pray; he shows us the Father as the pure in heart see Him, and exhorts us to have personal communion with the Divine Spirit. We are free men, and it is Christ who has made us free. We are his disciples, but it is of our own free choice. It is not that we have accepted the authority of book or of creed; but using the reason given us, we have come to see that the spirit which lived in our holy brother and which from him has gone forth far and near, is the spirit of charity, brotherhood and good will; that it knows not any limitation of country, creed or caste, that the more this spirit lives in human hearts the more will God's kingdom come, and the sooner will dawn the day when all tribes will be blest

With fruits from life's glad tree,
And in its shade like brothers rest,
Sons of one family.

What, then, is the important thing for us all to learn? Is it not that we all have brave and holy work to do in building up the kingdom of God, this Jerusalem not made with hands? Only by unselfish lives in the spirit of the Master can we do this. We look forward with hope to the time when our willing feet shall throng the floor of that temple whose memorial stone our revered and beloved friend laid for us to-day. It is well to build shrines for our worship—it is well that such shrines should be as beautiful as the circumstances will allow. But before all things let us seek to build the spiritual temple—to fashion ourselves each a living stone for that temple. We are each set to do a work. To some is assigned a more prominent part than is assigned to others, but none is without his work. Let us do it well, though it be only the smallest piece of carving—yea, though it be the roughest sort of polishing—by-and-by the great architect shall come and put all the fragments together and make his pile complete.

The Rev. SLAS FARRINGTON, who was received with applause, in the course of a very interesting address referred to the necessity of special care in the training of the young people between the ages of fourteen and twenty-one, or even older, to lead pure and upright lives, and to the Guild for this purpose established at Kidderminster by the Rev. W. Carey Walters.

The Rev. C. T. POYNTING said that while they were rejoicing in the foundation of a new church and looking forward with much hope and trust to the future, he would venture to ask them to pause a moment, and remember that in thus founding a church which has "an open trust," one that is dedicated to the "worship of God," and for meetings and assemblies, for the promotion of works of piety, charity and education, they were in so doing only acting in accordance with their fundamental principles—trust in God—the confidence that if we rely on God, and God alone, He will lead us to truth and light—that we need no other support or guidance—that God himself will be our support and our guide, so long as we trust implicitly to what we believe in our hearts and consciences to be the divine guidance—(applause).

The Rev. A. RUSHTON said that after such a glorious event at Miles Platting he hoped before long there would be a great day at Blackley—(applause). He proceeded in a very interesting address to give his personal reminiscences of the congregations of Platt, Blackley, Dob-lane, Swinton, Pendleton, Middleton, Ardwick and Miles Platting, which are all very much indebted to the Manchester District Unitarian Association, by whose means eight or nine congregations have been revived or raised up within the last twenty years, and he hoped it would raise up as many more—(applause).

Addresses were subsequently delivered by Mr. G. W. RAYNER WOOD, the Rev. WM. MITCHELL, the Rev. JOHN McDOWELL, and Mr. J. E. ASHTON. During the evening the choir gave several pieces of music.

The usual vote of thanks to the speakers and chairman terminated the proceedings.

MINISTERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

The thirtieth annual meeting of this society was held at the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham, on Wednesday, October 25; the President, Mr. TIMOTHY KENRICK, in the chair. There were also present the Revs. C. Clarke, D. McGinnis, P. Dean, B. Wright, E. T. Russell, F. T. Reed (Poole), J. Harrison, J. W. Lake, H. McKean; Messrs. J. Arthur Kenrick, G. H. Kenrick, C. W. S. Deakin, Charles Harding, Herbert New, S. Greenway, and Dr. Russell.

Apologies were read from the Revs. Dr. Crosskey, W. Cochrane, M. Gibson, H. E. Dowson, and from Messrs. A. W. Mills, F. S. Bolton and Thomas Gladstone.

The report of the treasurer showed a satisfactory balance in behalf of the society; but that officer drew the attention of the meeting to the fact that the investment of a considerable sum would be falling in at an early period, and that facilities for obtaining satisfactory securities at an equally advantageous rate of interest are not forthcoming.

DIRECTORS' REPORT.

The present annual meeting marks the close of the thirtieth year of the existence of the Ministers' Benevolent Society. Looking back over these thirty years, the directors feel that they have every reason for congratulating the members and friends of the Society on the success which has marked its history; and they are assured that those of its earliest promoters still remaining, who have watched over its course from the beginning, will acknowledge that their warmest wishes in its behalf have been fully answered.

The caution with which its finances were administered in its early years, and the prudence by which its grants have been proportioned to its means, have enabled the directors not only to respond to every application which has been made in conformity with the objects and provisions of the Society, but to raise by degrees the amount granted to each recipient; until the grants have now reached a sum capable of affording solid help to those who receive them.

The Society has thus steadily grown in the confidence of the ministry; and in the confidence which it has inspired has consisted one, and that one not the smallest, of the benefits it has been enabled to confer.

Two hundred and eighteen ministers have enrolled their names as Beneficiary Members of the Society since its commencement. Of these a small number have retired from the Society, in consequence of leaving the ministerial profession. Fifty-three members have been removed by death, and of these the widows or families of thirty-five have remained under the Society's care, so far as it can afford them help by means of its grants.

By a wise provision in the first Code of Laws, the directors are forbidden to commence the making of grants until a certain degree of security had been obtained in respect of the amount of the society's funds. The period prescribed was, however, shortened through the interference of our friend the Rev. Wm. Cochrane, who, by obtaining a handsome donation from a liberal sympathiser with the objects of the society, enabled the directors to commence operations in June, 1855, when a grant of £20 was made to the widow of the Rev. J. G. Brooks. From this time, by a cautious increase in the amount of the grants as occasion justified, the total sum expended in grants up to the present time has amounted to £16,210. To this sum, distributed in the grants made year by year, must be added £1,636, the amount of yearly donations, chiefly from Mr. Hopgood and the late Mr. Samuel Sharpe, and this year from Miss Sharpe, and also from our president, Mr. Timothy Kenrick, designed for immediate distribution as additions to the regular grants made by the directors. This total sum of £17,845 has been distributed among 35 ministers, 25 widows, and one orphan family.

The year now ended has made its full contribution to the prosperous course which the society has hitherto taken. In the early part of the year the treasurer entertained some misgiving lest the expenditure should be in excess of the income, in consequence of increasing demands upon its funds; but this fear has proved unfounded, although the year has brought more than the usual applications for benefit.

Four new recipients have been placed upon the books—three widows, and one minister in an advanced age, who has retired from work after a long life of active and useful service. One minister, whose health has hopelessly broken down, has become a regular recipient, having hitherto received occasional aid whilst hoping to regain his former ability for work. On the other hand, a minister whom the directors have had the pleasure of helping during the last three years, whilst struggling with a serious illness, which at one time threatened permanent incapacitation, now writes to withdraw his name from the list of recipients; his health being so far restored that he finds himself equal to moderate duty, and trusts henceforward to continue his ministerial labour.

A circumstance happened during the past year which especially excited the sympathy of the directors, whilst at the same time it pointed clearly to the advantage arising from the existence of a society like their own. Whilst they had the satisfaction of making a liberal grant to the widows of two most valuable missionaries, who had died in the midst of active and very successful service, each leaving families unprovided for, their aid was invoked in behalf of the widow and young family of a third missionary, suddenly removed under peculiarly painful circumstances. The minister was about to enter the Ministers' Benevolent Society, but, unfortunately, had not carried his intention into effect, and the directors were compelled to refuse assistance. The family has been provided for through the generosity of the late minister's friends; and in each of the other cases similar liberal help was rendered from without. But in all such cases, even under the most favourable circumstances, the aid which this society is capable of affording makes much of the difference, where there is a large family, between narrow and comparatively easy circumstances.

The grants during the year have been again augmented by a donation of £100 from Mr. Hopgood for immediate distribution. Since the last annual meeting the Society has lost its generous friend Mr. Samuel Sharpe, who, like Mr. Hopgood, had made these annual gifts; but his place has been taken by Miss Sharpe, who this year sent the usual donation of £100. The President, Mr. Timothy Kenrick, has also presented a like sum, under the same conditions with the preceding.

A legacy of £100 has been received from the executors of the late Mr. John Langley, of Wolverhampton; and a congregational collection of £2 2s. from Stamford-street, London.

The total amount of grants made this year has been £1,215, to which is to be added the £300 donations given, as already explained.

The recipients have numbered twenty-eight, including nine ministers and nineteen widows.

Two recipients have died during the year, viz., Mrs. Birks and Mrs. Thomas Cooper. Eight beneficiary members have been elected, and three are awaiting election at the next quarterly meeting of directors; two have been removed by death. The present number of beneficiary members is 154.

The directors cannot conclude their report more appropriately than by quoting from a letter received from an aged minister well known to many of them:—"I write from a bed of protracted intense suffering, wishing to express to the members of the Ministers' Benevolent Society and to yourself my wife's and my own most grateful thanks for your exceeding kindness. Such a blessing has the society proved!" Or by repeating the expressions of one who writes to announce the decease of his mother—"She will no longer need the help of your Society, given with such delicacy and thoughtfulness; but another case will be added to the many already received, testifying to the almost unspeakable value of the Ministers' Benevolent Society."

After the reading of the Directors' Report an important discussion took place relative to the advisability of obtaining from congregations an occasional collection in favour of the society, a practice which seems to have fallen into disuse, excepting in the case of Stamford-street, London, and of Horsham. It was especially urged that the value of such collections lies to a less degree in the actual sum added to the funds than in the opportunity they afford of calling attention to the existence of the society, and to the work in which it is engaged.

After considerable conversation the subject was referred to the directors, in the hope that they would make it a subject of consideration at their next meeting in December, with a view to issuing an early appeal to the officers of congregations.

The present officers were re-elected, and the usual votes of thanks were passed.

It may be well to remind our readers that the present address of the treasurer is J. Arthur Kenrick, Esq., Berrow-court, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

KIDDERMINSTER.—The annual meeting of the members of the New Meeting Congregation was held on Thursday evening last, and was attended by a very large number of the subscribers and friends. The chair was occupied by the treasurer, Mr. John Stooke. The minister of the congregation commenced the proceedings by announcing that having had before him for some time the probability of a call from the congregation of the Church of the Divine Unity, Newcastle-on-Tyne, which call was unanimously voted on Sunday morning last at a very large congregational meeting, he had very carefully considered the matter, and in deference to the strongly expressed feeling of his present congregation he had determined to decline the invitation and remain with them. This announcement was received with loud and repeated applause. Mr. Walters expressed a hope that this decision would bind them still more closely together, so that he might never in the future have to regret the step which he had taken. In reviewing the past year's work he felt that they had great cause for thankfulness. Their subscribers had increased—their income was larger than it had ever been—the schools were too full, and only waited more teachers and increased accommodation. The services for the people, to be resumed at the end of November, had been singularly successful. With especial pleasure he referred to the good work done by the Guild and the largely increased attendance at the Communion Services. An evening service of Communion had been instituted once a quarter to meet the needs of some who could not attend the monthly morning service. He would venture to appeal for a more regular attendance at public worship and still increased personal work. Looking outside the bounds of their own congregation, the brightest ray on the horizon of their Churches was the rallying of their best men round the Standard of Christ as their spiritual leader and head and the increased feeling of the need of devotion and personal consecration. Liberal views were making rapid progress in other churches, and men were willing to recognise them more and more as fellow Christians and to understand their true position. Canon Curteis, the theological tutor of the diocese of Lichfield, had defined their position at the Church Congress as "a claim within the lines of the heart's loyalty to Christ, to enjoy an unrestricted freedom of the intellect;" that definition he for one accepted. More and more the churches were beginning to recognise the necessity of variety of view and difference of vision. As this became more fully acknowledged brotherly intercourse would become more frequent, and so-called "religious" bitterness less rancorous. They must hold the truth, but must hold it in charity. They must remember the vision which came to St. Ambrose of the water of life still unchanged, which filled the vases into which it was poured, and took in each case the figure of the vase. So they must not pray that others might leave their folds and come to them, unless, indeed, they found that the pasture there should feed them best, but rather that those who were "out on the mountains wild and bare" should enter in and find pasture, so that, though in many folds, there might be "one flock, one Shepherd." The Treasurer's statement showed receipts £555 6s. 9½d., and expenditure £559 10s. 6d. The slight balance against the Treasurer was at once changed into a balance in hand by a generous donation from Mr. Albert Cowell. About £170 had been raised for various congregational objects, which had not passed directly through the chapel warden's hands, making the total income about £725. The officers for the ensuing year were appointed, and resolutions expressive of joy at their minister's decision, and pledging the congregation to enlarge the schools, and otherwise improve the chapel premises during the year, were unanimously passed. Votes of thanks to the past officers, and to the choir and organist, brought the proceedings to a close.

YORK.—Mr. John Burton, of Poppleton, near York, who died last Thursday, has left his fine art gallery, which is of very considerable value, to the Yorkshire Fine Art Institution at York. Mr. Burton has also left £2,000 to the Salvation Army.

The Committee appointed for the purpose at the last yearly meeting of the Society of Friends is now engaged in revising the Book of Discipline of the Society. The Committee began its work on Monday last.

THE SCHOOL BOARD ELECTION.

The following is a complete list of candidates for election as members of the London School Board:—

CITY.—Mr. H. Spicer, Miss Devonport Hill, Mr. W. S. Gover (sitting members), Sir John Bennett, Sir Reginald Hanson, Mr. H. C. Richard.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGH, COLDS, COLD, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE, and the word CHLORODYNE coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness, and as being the same thing. Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD, STATED PUBLICLY in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a LIQUID MEDICINE which ASSUAGES PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the NERVOUS SYSTEM when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

The GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "TWO DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC.

PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

COUGH, COLD, &c.

From W. VESALIUS PETTIGREW, M.D., formerly Lecturer at St. George's Hospital, LONDON.

"I have no hesitation in stating that I have never met with any medicine so efficacious as an Anti-Spasmic and Sedative. I have used it in Consumption, Asthma, Diarrhœa, and other diseases, and am perfectly satisfied with the results."

From W. C. WILKINSON, Esq. F.R.C.S., Spalding.

"I consider it invaluable in Phthisis and Spasmodic Cough; the benefit is very marked indeed."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

From Dr. B. J. BOULTON and Co., Horncastle.

"We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct Sedative and Anti-Spasmic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other Sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after effects."

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS.

N.B.—EVERY BOTTLE OF GENUINE CHLORODYNE BEARS on the GOVERNMENT STAMP the NAME of the INVENTOR.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

SOLD IN BOTTLES, rs. 1½d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., by all Chemists.

SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 5.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.
Stamford-street Chapel, Re-opening Services, the Rev. J. E. CARPENTER, Morning; the Rev. W. C. BOWIE, Evening.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham place, at 4 P.M., E. B. AVELING, Esq., D.Sc. Lond., on "The Borderland between Living and Non-Living Things."

WEDNESDAY.

Public Meeting at 7 P.M., F. NETTLEFOLD, Esq., in the chair.

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Alcott's (L. M.) An Old-fashioned Thanksgiving, 3/6
Alcott's (L. M.) Proverb Stories, 3/6
Buckland's (A. J.) Life of Hannah More, 3/
Fragments from the History of the Christian Church, from Clement of Rome to Clement of Alexandria, 3/6
O'Donovan's (E.) The Merry Oasis, 2 Vols. 36/
Religion in the Light of Philosophy, 2/6
Spinoza, Four Essays, edited by Professor Knipe, 5/
Stoughton's (J.) William Penn, the Founder of Pennsylvania, 7/6

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

SEASONABLE DELICACY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

As Blanc-Mange, Custard, Baked Pudding, &c.

WITH

STEWED FRUIT OF ANY KIND.

CHELSEA.—Dr. Gladstone, Mr. R. Freeman, Mrs. Webster (sitting members), Mr. C. Darby Reade, Rev. G. P. Pilcher.

FINSBURY.—The Rev. Mark Wilks, Mr. B. Lucraft, Mr. Thomas Lee Roberts, the Rev. Dr. Wainwright (sitting members), the Rev. W. T. Thornhill Webster, Mr. W. Roston Bourke, Mr. Thomas Campbell.

GREENWICH.—Mr. H. S. Gover, Mr. J. E. Saunders, Mr. G. B. Richardson, the Rev. T. D. O. Morse (sitting members), Mr. E. Hughes, Mr. J. Runciman.

HACKNEY.—Mr. B. S. Olding, Mrs. Fenwick Miller, Rev. H. D. Pearson, Mr. E. Jones (sitting members), Mr. H. T. Tidderman, Mr. John Lowles, Mr. W. H. Sands, Mr. John Lobb, Dr. McAuslane.

LAMBETH.—The Rev. G. M. Murphy, Mr. T. E. Heller, Miss Muller, Mr. C. R. White (sitting members), Miss Eva Muller, Mr. Whiteley, Mr. Stockbridge, Mr. Wiseman.

MARYLEBONE.—The Hon. Lyulph Stanley, M.P., Mrs. Westlake, the Rev. J. R. Diggle, the Rev. J. J. Coxhead, Mr. E. Rond (sitting members), Mr. G. B. Bruce, C.E., Dr. W. W. Herneman.

SOUTHWARK.—Mr. A. Hawkins, Miss Richardson, Miss Helen Taylor, Mr. Corry (sitting members), Mr. D. McCarthy, Mr. J. Humphreys, Rev. C. D. Lawrence.

TOWER HAMLETS.—Mr. E. N. Buxton, Mr. W. Pearce, Lieutenant-Colonel L. Prendergast (sitting members), Sir Edmund Currie, Mr. A. E. Hoare, Mr. W. R. Cremer.

WESTMINSTER.—Mr. Sydney C. Buxton, Mr. George Potter, the Rev. B. Belcher, Mr. J. Rose (sitting members), Mr. W. H. Kelland, Mr. Burdett-Coutts, Mr. Albert Rutson, Mr. W. Wren, Dr. E. B. Aveling.

The 7th of November is the last day for the nomination of candidates.

BIRTH.

RYLETT.—On the 29th ult., at the Manse, Moneyrea, Belfast, the wife of the Rev. Harold Rylett, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

HUNTER-WICKSTEED.—On the 31st ult., at the Parish Church, Halkyn, Flintshire, by the Rev. Walter Evans, William W. Hunter, of Ossett, near Wakefield, to Eliza Lucy, youngest daughter of the late Thomas Wicksteed, of London, Mem. Inst. C.E.

TATE-BURTON.—On the 26th October, at St. Leonard's Church, Streatham, by the Rev. Wodehouse Raven, M.A., Vicar of Christ Church, Streatham, Henry Tate, Jun., of Liverpool, fifth son of Henry Tate, Esq., Park Hill, Streatham, to Grace, youngest daughter of John Burton, Esq., Tower House, Leigham Court-road, Streatham, London.

DEATH.

MATHER.—On the 25th ult., at 7, Dombey-street, aged 58 years, Ann, wife of T. A. Mather. Interred on Saturday at the Ancient Chapel, Toxteth, Liverpool.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 3s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap Iss. 12s. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

TEXTS AND MARGINS OF THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH, 1s.

A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Fourth issue, price 1s., post free.

MEMOIR of the REV. WILLIAM BIRKS. By the Rev. JOHN BIRKS.

"The simple memorial by his son of a good and faithful man, whose character and work adorned the village ministry in the Peak of Derbyshire."—INQUIRER.

Also, price 4d., post free.

THE DEITY OF CHRIST AND THE ATHANASIAN CREED. A Discourse by the Rev. JOHN BIRKS.

"This Discourse discusses a trite subject in a calm and charitable spirit, and even the abettors of the obnoxious creed might peruse it without offence."—INQUIRER.

Price 1d., post free, 1½d.

IS AN UNBAPTISED PERSON CONSEQUENTLY NOT A CHRISTIAN? A Discourse by the Rev. JOHN BIRKS. Apropos of the letter of the Rev. F. J. Smith, M.A., Vicar of St. John's, to the Mayor of Taunton. [Published by request.]

Price 1d., post free, 1½d.

OUR COLLAR GIRLS, and our attitude towards them; or the relation of the different classes of society to one another, viewed in the light of the Religion of Jesus Christ. A Discourse by the Rev. JOHN BIRKS. Having reference to charges made against the young women employed in the collar manufactories at Taunton. [Published by request.]

May be had of A. HAMMETT, Bookseller, Taunton; or Rev. JOHN BIRKS, Taunton.

WILLIAMS AND NORGATE'S PUBLICATIONS.

PROFESSOR KUENEN'S HIBBERT LECTURES, 1882, on NATIONAL RELIGIONS AND UNIVERSAL RELIGIONS. Delivered in Oxford and London, in April and May, 1882. By A. KUENEN, LL.D., D.D., Professor of Theology at Leyden. 8vo., cloth, price 10s. 6d.

PROFESSOR KUENEN'S GREAT WORK.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL TO THE FALL OF THE JEWISH STATE. By Dr. A. KUENEN, Professor of Theology at the University, Leyden. Translated from the Dutch by A. H. MAY. 3 vols., 8vo., cloth, price 31s. 6d.

SAMUEL SHARPE'S HISTORY OF THE HEBREW NATION AND ITS LITERATURE. With an Appendix on the Hebrew Chronology. By SAMUEL SHARPE, Author of the "History of Egypt." Fourth Edition, 487 pp., 8vo., cloth, price 7s. 6d.

SHARPE'S NEW TESTAMENT.

THE NEW TESTAMENT. Translated from Griesbach's Text by S. SHARPE, Author of the "History of Egypt." 14th Thousand. Cloth, price 1s. 6d.

MISS FRANCES POWER COBBE'S NEW BOOK.

THE PEAK IN DARIEN and other inquiries touching Concerns of the Soul and the Body. By FRANCES POWER COBBE. Crown 8vo., cloth, price 7s. 6d.

RELIGION IN THE LIGHT OF PHILOSOPHY. Seven Discourses. Crown 8vo., cloth, price 2s. 6d.

WILLIAMS and NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Enlarged Edition, pp. 360, bound, 1s., or 14 stamps.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By Drs. RICHARD and WASHINGTON EPPS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT of the NATIONAL CONFERENCE of UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, Manchester; JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High street, Birmingham.

Just Published, price 1s. 6d.

TRUE TO HIMSELF. The Story of Savonarola. Written for Young People by FRANCES E. COOKE, Author of "Footprints," "A Boy's Ideal," &c.

SWAN, SONNENSCHEIN, and Co., Paternoster-row.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN DARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Burnby, The Vines, Yorkford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

WANTED, by a Widow Lady in Belfast, a YOUNG LADY as GOVERNESS, for her two children, and to have full charge of them and their wardrobe. The children are under the ages of six and four years. Salary £20 per annum.—Applications, with references, may be addressed to A. B. C., care of Rev. J. C. Street, 50, Ulster-avenue, Belfast.

WANTED, in December, a certificated Teacher for the Girls' Day School, New Gravel Pit Unitarian Church, Hackney.—For particulars, apply to the Secretary, Mrs. CLENNELL, 87, Downs-road, Clapton, E.

APARTMENTS are offered in a small but thoroughly clean and comfortably furnished house; suitable for a gentleman of quiet and regular habits, engaged out during the day. Convenient for the City or West-end.—Further particulars supplied on application to Mrs. Heywood, 100, Culford-road, De Beauvoir Town, London, N.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL, LONDON.

The RE-OPENING SERVICES will take place on Sunday, November 5. Rev. Prof. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., will preach in the Morning, the Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE in the Evening. Services at 11.0 and 6.30.

Collections in aid of the Building Fund.

The new Schoolroom will be opened by a Public Meeting on Wednesday, November 8. Tea from 6.0 to 7.0.

Tickets at the various Unitarian Chapels, and also at 37, Norfolk-street, Strand.

FREDERICK NETTLEFOLD, Esq., will take the Chair at 7.30 precisely. David Ainsworth, Esq., M.P.; Chas. H. James, Esq., M.P.; Miss Helen Taylor, M.T.S.B.; Henry Tate, Esq.; David Martineau, Esq.; S. S. Tayler, Esq.; Revs. Henry Ierson, M.A., R. Spears, T. L. Marshall, T. W. Frockelton, and others, will take part in the proceedings.

DOMESTIC-STREET NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH AND SUNDAY-SCHOOL, HOLBECK, LEEDS.

A GRAND BAZAAR in aid of the above, will be held in the New School, on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of Nov. next.

Any contributions, either in money or goods, will be thankfully received by DEN PAYNE Minister, 3, Cambrian-terrace, Holbeck, Leeds; JOHN S. MATHERS, Chairman, 73, Albion-street, Leeds; E. F. MORLEY, Treasurer, 4, Gladstone-street, Holbeck, Leeds; WM. WESTERMAN, Secretary, Cemetery-road, Holbeck, Leeds.

CONIGRE CHAPEL, TROWBRIDGE.

The congregation at Trowbridge are making an effort to provide their Chapel with what has long been sorely needed, viz. a new Organ. About £150 have been already subscribed, but as considerably more will be required, the congregation (mainly a working-class one) trust they may have the pleasure of receiving help from friends at a distance, towards the accomplishment of their object.

Subscriptions will be gratefully received by the Rev. J. FELSTRAP, Conigre Parsonage, Trowbridge; or by Mr. E. DOBSON, 3, Gloucester-road, Trowbridge.

A SOIREE will be held in the MEMORIAL HALL, Manchester, on Tuesday, November 7, when the PORTRAIT of the Rev. G. H. WELLS, M.A., will be presented by the subscribers to the Trustees of the Hall, and an ADDRESS to Mr. Wells.

Tea at 5.30. The chair will be taken at 6.30 by the Rev. WM. GASKELL, M.A.

A Ticket for the Soirée will be sent to every subscriber. Additional Tickets for friends, price 1s. each, can be had from the Secretary; Messrs. Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market street, and Mr. Jones, the Memorial Hall, Manchester.

CHAS. T. POYNTING, Hon. Sec.,

Fallowfield, Manchester.

THOS. DIGGLES, Treasurer,

22, Booth-st., Manchester.

SOUTH OF FRANCE, VALLEY OF LA DORDOGNE.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for Twenty-four BOYS from ten to fifteen. Modern and Dead Languages, Mathematical and Natural Sciences, taught according to the New Programme of the Elementary and Grammar Classes in the Lycées. Good German Tutor. A few English pupils would be admitted on moderate terms.

Apply for more information (at Ste. Foy, Gironde) to the Director, M. Gilard, pastor; and for references (44, Boulevard des Gobelins, Paris) to M. Steeg, late pastor at Libourne, member of the French Parliament for Bordeaux; M. Roudier, M.P. for Libourne; M. Et. Coquerel and Vigné, pastors in Paris, and M. Fontanes, pastor at Havre.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gattton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Miss Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano, voice, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Hiding, &c. Experienced English nurse. Home situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 14 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Marquette.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday November 4, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2107.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

A Remarkable Confession of Faith	725
Temperance Reform...	726
Reasonable Religion.—III.	727
"The Theistic Church"	727
The Teaching and Poetry of Falling Leaves	728
Our Manchester Letter	728

OUR CONTEMPORARIES

The Moral Reform Union	731
------------------------	-----

THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—

Five Old Truths	731
-----------------	-----

OCCASIONAL NOTES

REVIEWS:—

Genesis; its Authorship and Authenticity	733
The "Nineteenth Century"	733
The "Contemporary Review"	733
The Magazines	735

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

Presentation to the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A.	735
Stamford-street Chapel	736
Church of the People, Berlin	738

A REMARKABLE CONFESSION OF FAITH.

THE theological position of the Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER has been a matter of considerable doubt for a long time. For years now he has hovered somewhere on the border land of Orthodoxy, but where precisely no one but himself could tell. Nothing more definite than this has it been possible to say. Some of his sermons have been such as, with the alteration of a word or two here and there, might be preached with acceptance to any ordinary Unitarian Congregation—so free have they been from the distinctive teaching of Orthodoxy, and every sermon of his that we have seen has contained more or less of liberal thought, acceptable only to those who have advanced beyond the popular theology. That there are many ministers less eminent among the Congregationalists both in England and America, who are in accord with him more or less, and therefore in the same dubious position as himself, admits, we suppose, of no doubt. And this fact will show how loosely and lightly the profession of Orthodoxy is held by many whose recognised position is within the Congregational Church.

After due consideration Mr. BEECHER has severed his connection with the New York and Brooklyn Congregational Association. A meeting of the Association was held on the 10th ult., at which he made a statement of his belief, and announced his resignation at the close of his address. His confession of faith is the most remarkable mixture of Orthodoxy and heresy that we remember to have read for some time. On the side of Orthodoxy we find him professing his belief in a personal, not a pantheistical God, in the Trinity of persons in God, in the Divinity of CHRIST, in the Holy Spirit as one of the Godhead, in the efficacy of prayer, in miracles, in the miraculous conception, and the resurrection of CHRIST.

On the side of heresy we find him rejecting the doctrines of the Fall, the total depravity of man, the popular theory of the Atonement, and the dogma of Eternal Punishment. On some other points also his views are strongly tinged with heterodoxy. He holds that Providence rules through natural laws, that reason is to be used in the interpretation of the Bible, that the blood of CHRIST is but a symbol which means more to the Jew than to us, that conduct and character affected life here and hereafter, and that men would not start alike on the other side of the grave, irrespective of what their characters had been in this life. The Orthodoxy and the heresy, direct and indirect, seem to be about equally balanced. Indeed, on those doctrines which he holds in common with the Orthodox his belief, as we shall see by examination, is qualified more or less by admissions and concessions. Thus, on the Trinity, he said, "There were difficulties in this doctrine, but so there were in all others. He did not hold to all of the Nicene or Athanasian Creeds, but he believed there could be three in one; it could not be demonstrated, but it was in analogy with the facts of nature." How the doctrine of the Trinity is in analogy with the facts of nature Mr. BEECHER does not in the address before us attempt to show. The divinity of CHRIST he accepts without reserve, but immediately adds—"CHRIST, he believed, was limited by time and space, and the flesh; it was possible for God to manifest himself under limitations." If he means that God manifested himself under limitations in CHRIST as he did in the prophets, and apostles, and the saints of every Church we are quite in accord with him so far. On the subject of prayer Mr. BEECHER makes a strange statement—"He could not pray to the Father; he prayed to CHRIST. The Father was vague, and Mr. BEECHER's thought was all of CHRIST," so completely does CHRIST take the place of God, according to his own confession, in Mr. BEECHER's theology. With regard to the Holy Spirit, while he speaks of it as one of the Godhead, he calls it "the sunshine of God's soul shining upon the souls of men"—a figurative expression to which the Unitarian would not object.

"I hold," continued Mr. BEECHER, "that Providence rules through natural laws to change the drift of circumstances." Every intelligent man used natural laws in such a way as to change the current of events, and he believed God could do the same. So do we. There is nothing unreasonable in that view of Providence, but it does not represent adequately the popular belief. It is true Mr. BEECHER supplements it by his belief in prayer. "Prayer," he believed, "was efficient, and was answered both in its reaction upon the human soul and by the direct intervention of God." "He believed in miracles, and that they are possible now as in the Apostolic days." Possible! but are they actual? Does he believe in any modern miracles like those recorded in the Bible? His address gives no answer on this point. He accepts the theory of evolution, and holds that it is not incompatible with belief in the supernatural. On this point many will differ from him.

Man, although imperfect and sinful, Mr. BEECHER said, was not to be held totally depraved. Man needed to be regenerated and lifted out of animalism by being born again. The Bible, he held, was the record of God's movements in the education of the race. Moral intuition, he contended, must be used to illuminate the Bible, and all human faculties should be brought to bear upon it. Reason was not to be substituted for the Bible, but was to be used with it. In regard to the Atonement, he believed that CHRIST was the central power for the saving of men, and was anxious to save every one who would trust him. The theory of the Atonement as an effect to the fall of man he totally rejected. That man was created perfect and had fallen he did not believe. All history, all human experience, all analogy tended to show that the race, like the individual, was born at zero, and was gradually developed in the direction of higher and better things. The history of man was one of evolution. In the final analysis it would be found that the central power in the universe was the soul of God in love; but nobody obtained any spiritual gift in this world except by suffering. It was not necessary that CHRIST should die for men, but he did it of his own accord through regal beneficence to lift men out of animalism. In a general way Mr. BEECHER's idea of the Atonement was the moral influence theory.

With respect to future suffering, Mr. BEECHER did not believe it would be everlasting. All pain and suffering were remedial in their nature and object, and he believed that as soon as all benefit from suffering should cease the pain would end. He could not conceive of a beneficent Being who would create men to damn them to eternal torture from which no good was to arise. In conclusion, Mr. BEECHER assured the brethren that these views were not lightly or suddenly taken up; they were part of his life and growth. He did not love novelty; he did not desire to sever himself from other men, but he had the courage of his convictions. He kept back nothing in his preaching, and his one object was to glorify God by lifting up men. He had alienated many by his course. Many felt that they could not bear the responsibility of his views. "I do not want others to defend me," he said, "and, therefore, here and now, in the fullest love and sympathy, I lay down my membership with you. I will work with you, and I do not go out into any other sect; but I take the responsibility from you, and take it upon myself. With thanks for very much kindness, I am no longer a member of the Congregational Association of New York and Brooklyn, but I remain a member of the body of CHRIST, in full fellowship with you in the love of GOD."

Mr. BEECHER'S announcement, we are told, excited much astonishment, and he was eagerly questioned by the members. The Rev. WM. LLOYD moved a resolution requesting Mr. BEECHER to reconsider his resignation, which was referred to a committee of three, whose report was subsequently read and warmly discussed for over three hours. The Rev. Dr. EDWARD BEECHER spoke at some length, defending his brother's orthodoxy. Ultimately a resolution was adopted, commending Mr. BEECHER very highly, and expressing the hope that he would see his way clear to reconsider and withdraw his resignation.

It will be seen from the above statement that Mr. BEECHER has cast aside the most repulsive doctrines of the popular creed. He has eliminated the Calvinistic element and retained as much of orthodoxy as he can without it. It does not seem to us, however, that he has succeeded in thinking out for himself a consistent and coherent faith. It aims at blending together incongruous elements, the natural and the supernatural, the rational and the irrational. The orthodox portion of his creed is certainly weakened by the loss of the doctrines of the Fall, natural depravity, and the substitutionary theory of the Atonement. The popular traditional theology has always seemed to us a coherent system. Its various parts hold well together, and the doctrine of the Fall which brought sin and death into the world is the foundation of the whole, and necessitated the special interposition of the Deity, the Incarnation, the death of CHRIST, the Atonement—indeed all that followed. And the doctrine of the endless punishment of the lost forms a fitting conclusion to the whole scheme. Mr. BEECHER rejects certain portions and retains others, putting upon them his own interpretation, and the result is a belief which we think is not likely to be highly appreciated by any. For some it will reject too much of the orthodox system; for others, like ourselves, it does not throw aside enough. As the earnest effort of an independent mind it is entitled to respectful consideration. But it seems to us to mark only a transition stage of religious thought. It is not a logical conclusion, not a secure resting-place. The thoroughly rational mind will not be content to stay where Mr. BEECHER is at present satisfied to remain. The doctrine of the miraculous conception, for instance, is nothing better than a superstition, founded on a Bible legend. The doctrine of the Trinity was the creation of the Pagan converts of the early Church, and is based on ingenious inferences from a number of scattered texts of Scripture. The worship of CHRIST is directly contrary to his precept and example. We marvel that any man who takes the New Testament for his guide can adopt the practice. On these and other points Mr. BEECHER'S present faith is largely alloyed with ancient superstition.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

THERE can be little doubt that the Temperance question is forcing its way to the front in more ways than one. It is not only the fact that there has been a special spurt lately in connection with the Salvation and Blue Ribbon Armies, which leads us to this conclusion. The admission by the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER in his last Budget speech, that the yield from spirits fell short of what was expected, tells us in the plainest language that the drinking habits of this country are not so widespread as they were. The evidence, too, of our own eyes convinces us, that, while the drink-shops of the country hold their own there has grown up a number of establishments for the supply of bodily refreshment to hungry and thirsty souls where non-intoxicants can be readily obtained, and these establishments are far more numerous than they were some twenty years ago. In society, too, it is daily becoming more and more evident that there is far less wine drunk than there used to be, and what there is is far lighter in quality and less injurious in effect. That this should be so cannot fail to be a matter of gratification to all who wish well to their fellow men. No one who has the good of society at heart can desire to see it given up to intemperance, or can do otherwise than rejoice at the spread of habits of sobriety.

But while we share in this delight, and are prepared to sacrifice a good deal in order to secure the blessings of Temperance for the people, we cannot close our eyes to the fact that the advocates of Temperance, or rather, we should say, of total abstinence, are often led away in their zeal to say and do things that are neither just nor fair. In the eyes of many of these people, all places where intoxicating drinks can be obtained are put in one category, wholly irrespective of their special character. A moderate drinker is regarded with as much abhorrence as the habitual drunkard; all who are engaged in the trade are denounced with as much vigour as if they were criminals of the deepest dye; while total abstainers are credited with virtues as citizens, and with an immunity from wrong doing, which they, and they only, can attain. Of course, all this wild declamation sensible persons know to be gross exaggeration, but it is none the less mischievous on that account. By all means let the real evil be pointed out, and if possible, crushed out. But in doing this let us seek to avoid unfairness to those who are innocent of all wrong doing and wrong intent.

Nor can we take our stand with those who seem to think that the evil is to be eradicated by some of the legislative measures which find so much favour in the eyes of Sir WILFRID LAWSON and his friends. Local Option and Sunday Closing Bills, and especially the latter, do not seem to us by any means desirable modes of procedure. With regard to the Bills that have been before Parliament upon this subject of Sunday closing they seem to us to have been based upon a wrong principle, and supported by a wholly irrational set of arguments. To say that all the public-houses shall be wholly closed on one day of the week, on one side of the road, while all those on the other are free to keep open, appears to us entirely without reason. If it be said that all those who desire them to be closed live on that side, while those who want them open, live on the other, what is the good effected by the former? or what need was there on their part to ask the legislature to assist them in carrying out their own desire? If, on the other hand, they have sought the aid of Parliament to prevent a minority exercising what is their lawful right, then there is still less justification for their conduct. When the Welsh Sunday Closing Bill was before the House of Commons it was always represented that the people of Wales were almost to a man in favour of the measure; indeed, it was that very fact that weighed with some who voted for it, and induced them to set aside other, and, as we consider, no less important, considerations. But if there was such practical unanimity one would have thought that the question of the Sunday opening of public-houses would have solved itself. What has subsequently transpired leads us to doubt whether this unanimity was so real as was represented.

Personally, we should be glad if the importance of Sunday closing were not only generally recognised, but generally possible. Still, where this is not the case, we do not believe that much permanent good is going to be effected by laws that obviously press harder upon the poor than upon the rich or well-to-do. We can readily understand those who regard strong drink as so much deadly poison, and all places where it is sold as an utter abomination, being anxious to close these places, not only on Sunday, but on every day of the week. There is a certain logic about their position which makes it strong, but there is no such strength in the position of those who simply ask that on one day in the week the poor man shall be deprived of a pleasure, or necessity, call it what you will, which his better-off neighbour is at full liberty to indulge. Those who denounce public-houses and the people who thrive by them, seem to imagine that every man who visits one of these places leaves it morally worse than when he entered it. Now, every sober-minded man knows, or ought to know, that this is not really the case. Of those who frequent the public-house, by which we mean those who, as a rule, obtain their drink over the counter, and do not lay in a small supply at home, by far the larger proportion are honest, sober citizens, who never drink to excess. Convenience and good fellowship mainly induce these men to go there, and why they should be prevented from availing themselves of facilities which men in a better position can easily acquire, because a minority cannot draw the line between use and abuse, we fail to see. Of course, to many of us, the sort of good fellowship that prevails among the habitués of the public-house is very far from being pleasant or congenial. But it is scarcely fair to judge them by our higher standard of taste. Our idea of companionship, no doubt, is considerably more refined, but it may not be morally better than theirs.

In our opinion, the true remedy for much of the evil which unquestionably does exist in connection with the drink traffic, lies not in the compulsory closing of public-houses, either on one day or on seven, but in making these houses better fitted to the wants of the people. As at present constituted most of these are simply shops for the supply of strong drink, the proprietors of which are rarely free men. They are, as a rule, under the thumb of some brewer or distiller, and are, in fact, his servants. The brewer wants to sell his beer, and the distiller his spirits. The publican rarely has much capital, but he finds a ready lender in the brewer, who, however, takes good care not only to secure the repayment of his advance, but to secure the exclusive sale of his beer. To get clear of his liability the publican has to direct all his efforts towards making the sale of the beer the principal object of his business. There may be as much, or even more, profit on other articles of consumption, but to push their sale he must needs sacrifice the beer, and this he cannot under existing circumstances afford to do. Now, in a house, nominally opened for the convenience of the public, opportunities for obtaining food or non-intoxicating liquors ought to be as ample as they are for getting beer or spirits. If our Temperance reformers would address much of their well meant zeal towards this end they would be doing far more good than by drawing the bow too tight, and paving the way to a reaction fully as mischievous as the evil they now complain of.

REASONABLE RELIGION.—III.

WE return once more to the interesting volume of discourses under this title, by the Rev. F. D. FAURE, minister of the Free Protestant Church of Cape Town.

In his fifth discourse the writer turns to another side of his great theme. He says that it seems an overwhelming thought that the Lord of the many worlds of space, who pervades infinity, who is ever present with all things at the same moment, should "watch this small mite of a world of ours, and shape the fate of the still smaller and more insignificant mites called human beings." But he contends that an omnipotent being takes no cognisance of size, for size is only relative to finite beings. This position he fortifies by an able extract from Mr. VOYSEY, who furnishes him with a number of scientific illustrations in a compact form. Again, we find on turning to nature that not the smallest particle of matter, or the minutest germ of a living organism, shows any less signs of strict attention than the greatest. The smallest shell on the sea shore is as nicely ordered in its formation as the largest whale that swims in mid-ocean. The butterfly is no less skilfully organised than the eagle that sweeps in its mighty flight through the upper fields of space. But Mr. FAURE might also have urged that there is a difference in quality between moral beings and material ones. The vastest bulk that rolls in its sphere, unconscious that it is obeying a law, is of infinitely less importance than the smallest mite which has the privilege of electing whether it will serve GOD or no. Man's intelligent understanding of the laws of the universe and the modes of their operation raise him far above physical nature, and leads to the inevitable conclusion that GOD cares more for His child than even for any other creature over which His providence watches so carefully and constantly.

The sixth and seventh discourses deal directly with the religious nature of man, and the dignity of life which it bestows upon him. Easily does the writer show how natural religion is to man, and how infinitely superior it raises him above the level at which Agnosticism places him. In the very spirit and temper of THEODORE PARKER he shows what ghastly and fearful doctrines have been associated with it, and yet it has survived the ordeal. "Belief in GOD," he says, "is of so indestructible a vitality that it has survived the severest possible ordeal, namely, priest-made creeds, and the most monstrous dogmas." He calls, therefore, for reform rather than destruction; for reform is applied with benefit to every other department of human life. "Clear away the rubbish, but leave the gem untouched," he cries out. The effect produced by these two discourses when delivered must have been great; for they breathe an ardent spirit of piety, and throughout take no flight which reason would not willingly follow.

The two concluding discourses are under the heading, "Our Hope of Immortality." Whether Mr. FAURE will succeed in winning candid attention of the Agnostics of South Africa, and lead to opening of mind towards his positive arguments by the first discourse of the two, in which he demolishes the arguments usually relied upon, or whether they will accept his help by the way and pass on, we can hardly judge; but certainly our author formulates a powerful indictment against the positions he assails. He first attacks the "Spiritists," as he calls them, and insists that they furnish no evidence that the friends they have lost survive in another sphere. The physical resurrection of JESUS he holds to be no proof of the future life of man, even though it were a fact, which he disbelieves it to be. And whatever the view of the reader may be on this matter, what Mr. FAURE has to say on it is worth considering. He takes this negative position, he says, because he finds that many who have been taught to rely on that proof when they find it fail them fling away the doctrine alone with their belief in it. His own hope is bright, and his faith is strong that after this world has passed away we shall still be living lives of progress in truth, and growth in knowledge and all the higher virtues. His arguments are based mostly on the moral constitution of man. He ends by calling upon his hearers to think upon the woful meaning of the fact, that in coming ages, when the physical conditions of our earth have made it impossible for life to exist upon it, and mankind as a race is extinguished, if immortality be not the portion of moral beings, the law of progress will have been in vain—the struggle upwards, the infinite yearnings after perfection, the sufferings which growth itself has been the cause; the moral attainments, the spiritual gains of the ages, the mental achievements of men, will have all ended in—nought. When we try to realise this as he pictures it we own that a blank amazement seizes our mind that any reasonable man can permit himself to reach such a deplorable conclusion. Love, intellect, morals, spiritual vitality, all to end in nothing; while the atoms of matter still continue to exist! This hardly seems like the survival of the fittest, whatever else it may be.

But we must draw to a conclusion. We have been glad to find that in our South African colony there is the stir of higher thought abroad; for though we have differed to some extent on certain points with Mr. FAURE, yet the tone of the whole—its straightforward honesty and its deep religious life—has raised the hope in our mind that the best qualities of our English religious life will be propagated to the future through the new and growing communities which are destined in the future to take leading places in the world. Nor are we less pleased to find that after the reason has reached to the bottom of the facts in human nature faith in GOD remains—tossing aside in disdain the dross that remains after the fires of thought has fused its elements; for while man has faith in GOD, and in the love of Him in purity of life, and honour, and truth, and a clear hope in the immortal life as the gift of GOD in his very constitution, we have the essential principles of the gospel preached and exemplified by JESUS CHRIST.

W. M.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—Mrs. Nathaniel Montefiore has presented £2,600 to this charity to be invested for the permanent endowment of a bed to be named the "Francis Henry Goldsmid Bed," and of a cot to be named the "Leonard Montefiore Cot," in memory of her late brother and son respectively. We are informed that there are still fifteen cots unendowed, and that collecting cards for use by children and others, to be used in soliciting contributions in aid of the "Children's Cot Endowment Fund," can be obtained of the secretary.

"THE THEISTIC CHURCH."

There lies before us a copy of the sermon recently preached by the Rev. Charles Voysey, on the occasion of the eleventh anniversary of the commencement of the work begun by him in October, 1871. We learn from this, that "during all this time the expectation of building a church has been gradually weakened." This is not due to the fact that either Mr. Voysey, or his most enthusiastic supporters have come to think that such a church is not desirable, but that having arrived at the conclusion that a central, and not a suburban position is essential to its success, the amount required—£30,000—is quite beyond their means, "and only obtainable at all through the exceptional bounty and enthusiasm of some very wealthy Theist." Mr. Voysey feels that these facts as to the cost of a church ought to be known, as they "account for the partial paralysis of energy in augmenting the building fund, which at present stands at a little over £2,000." We believe that it has stood at this figure for a long time, and it is certainly a long way off the desired £30,000. Mr. Voysey regards this as the principal external drawback to their success; but he also considers that there have been internal difficulties quite as great, if not greater. Some of these he enumerates, though we think he exaggerates their importance. "We were acting like Nonconformists to begin with," he says. This scarcely accurately describes the situation: Mr. Voysey differs essentially from a Nonconformist. The latter voluntarily cuts himself off from the Church, the former was cut off by the Church. Mr. Voysey was no doubt a martyr to his convictions, but while he suffered the penalties of martyrdom he reaped some of the advantages, which in these modern days attaches to the position of notorious heresy. Mr. Voysey, as vicar of Healaugh, was only a small country parson of limited influence; Mr. Voysey, as the expelled clergyman, became the centre of attraction to numerous admirers. No doubt he has found out, as many others like him have discovered, that the people who are attracted by abnormal considerations of that kind to attend places of public worship are not greatly to be relied on. At the same time his nonconforming, or quasi nonconforming attitude has not done him much harm; indeed, he would find that there are many Dissenting chapels far better filled than some churches of the Establishment.

No, it is not this kind of difficulty that greatly affects the congregation at Langham Hall, nor the supposition, if it really exist, that they are "in league with the many cliques of Atheists, Secularists, Positivists and would-be revolutionists, who are as much the aversion as they are the dread of all good citizens and lovers of social order." Who these terrible people are we are at a loss to understand; Nihilism has not yet reached these shores, so far as we know, and no one has surely compared Mr. Voysey to O'Donovan Rossa. The main difficulty has been one of his own raising, and as it seems to us wholly unnecessary. It has been the strong anti-Christian attitude taken by Mr. Voysey that is at the bottom of it all. He is not content with attacking the old orthodox doctrines, which are losing their hold more and more, and which by some people are regarded as in themselves constituting Christianity, he must go out of his way to attack the character of Christ, and to denounce all reverential esteem for him as so much idolatry. For the sake of argument let it be granted that Jesus made mistakes, that he held opinions current at the time which we can no longer regard as correct; did no revelation of God come through him? We believe that God reveals Himself in many ways even now; we hold that He has done so, not only largely, but mainly, through the teaching, life, and example of Jesus. And for these revelations no true Theist ought to be otherwise than thankful. Unless, therefore, Mr. Voysey is prepared to say that no revelation of God has been obtained through Jesus Christ, a statement which is contradicted by the history of the last eighteen centuries, there seems no reason to single out this man for special attack. Many of those who do not regard Jesus as God, who think that he was in error on some points, are no less honest than Mr. Voysey when they maintain their right to be called followers of Jesus, and to bear the name of Christian, although with some persons it stands for something else than mere discipleship.

Mr. Voysey says that "first and foremost our object is the maintenance and promotion of real religion. The worship and love of God, and the love and service of man." Was not that essentially the mission of Jesus? Was not that the kingdom of God which he sought to establish? Do not the Gospels over and over again state this? Has not that been, among innumerable diversities of thought and method, the purpose of the Christian Church? Is not that the Spirit which animates nearly all good men of every creed? When Mr. Voysey claims for The Theistic Church that, having the object just named, it exists "as a unique religious body," it seems to us that he overlooks the plain answers to these questions. In that respect he stands shoulder to shoulder with many of the Christian sects that he so much despises.

It is a misfortune for any man to imagine that he alone has a right object in view, as it begets spiritual pride and tends to warp the judgment in speaking of the conduct of others. Evidence of both these failings is not wanting in the sermon before us. "It has," says Mr. Voysey, "devolved upon us Theists to complete what the Unitarians have begun; and also to protest against the insidious backsliding of many Unitarian congregations and ministers, which will prove a fatal stumbling-block to the awakened orthodox world, when they see the quondam heretics dressing themselves up in the worn-out garments of Orthodoxy. With the exception of a very few Unitarian congregations and a few Theistic ones I may say we are the only Church in this country who have taken a decided stand against any remnants of idolatry towards the Bible and Christ." The condescending arrogance shown in these sentences would be amusing if it were not sad. It is just like the kind of language we are accustomed to hear from a certain class of Agnostics, when they speak of religious people who have a faith that is denied to their critics. The same mistaken judgment appears, too, when Mr. Voysey speaks of the defection of some of his followers, "who have gone elsewhere, not only to follow the lawful attraction of a really gifted and brilliant preacher, but to enjoy the pleasure, the privilege, or the advantages of a recognition of Christ in their worship, and of praying their prayers 'through Jesus Christ our Lord'." It is scarcely worthy of Mr. Voysey to impute motives of this kind to those who have this preference, or to suggest that "from a worldly point of view" their position is better than is that of the habitual attendants at Langham Hall.

We have much sympathy with Mr. Voysey and his work, but we have always felt that in isolating himself from the Unitarians, with whom he has much in common, he has lost far more than he has gained. We are not Bibliolaters, nor have we any idolatrous reverence for Christ; on the other hand, we are not Bibliophobists nor Christophobists. Neither position appears to us to be a rational one. In ranging himself with the latter Mr. Voysey does the object he has at heart no real service, and lays himself open to the charge of being guilty of the same literalism he would condemn in others. R. B.

THE TEACHINGS AND POETRY OF FALLING LEAVES.

All the moods and aspects of nature speak to the heart of man when he has once awakened to the greatness and spiritual richness of his own belief. Silence has its charm and solitude its poetry, when the music of the inner world of thought and feeling has dawned upon the spirit. There are teachings, too, in the clouds and the clear blue sky, teachings in the murmuring brook and the foam-crested wave, teachings in the opening buds of spring and in the sear and yellow leaf of autumn. Nature, indeed, has a counterpart for the thousand chords of feeling which vibrate in a living soul; the gentlest whisper of peace and the loudest note of inward triumph alike find a responsive echo in the outer world. For as the sight of flowers and fair forms awakens in us the sense of grace and beauty, so does the calm of even-tide call us as an Angelus to repose of soul, to the attitude of rest and prayer, while the sight and apprehension of cosmic vastness uplift us to a consciousness of eternal things with the triumphant life-issues this implies. Nature and the heart of man thus act and re-act upon each other, because they both reach down into the same mysterious underlying divine essence. Hence the more we know of nature the more we make ourselves the interpreter, not merely of her scientific relations, but of her spiritual significance, and the more affinity we feel for that something which is evidenced in the beauty of the sunset and the gorgeous tints of the autumn woods, the fuller and richer our life will become. For nature not only charms us with her wondrous beauties and her exquisite harmonies, but she points to the opening sky of an eternal order of things, when setting suns and revolving years with their time and space relations are alike unknown. To the uplifted, open soul, she says, "I am woven with the phenomenal threads of finite form; still, even these bespeak an eternal substance to which belongs no before or after, but an everlasting now."

Turning in thought to the golden woods of autumn, what are the reflections which take possession of the mind as we seem to see gust after gust of wind send trooping down whole clouds of leaves to the ground? This depends upon our knowledge, our habits of mind, our experience, our temperaments. Still, though the impression will vary from such causes as these, it seems to us that the autumn woods have a lesson for all men, whether they will stop to learn it or not. Yes, and they are instinct with the richest poetry, a poetry that thrills and vibrates through the entire soul. Each falling leaf virtually says to man, "I had a task, and this I have accomplished. It was intended that I should assist in building up the tree; it was ordained that I should help to nourish it with the invisible elements that support its life and remove those of a deleterious kind. And this I have done, done it as the Great Ordainer intended I should. I have made the tree a little larger and a little stronger; without me it would not have been just what it is. So you see I have not lived in vain." But if each of the myriad leaves which rustle in the autumn breeze could speak thus of its purpose and its small accomplishments man ought to feel, even in the hours of lengthening shadows, that his life has a purpose too. For, surely, it was intended that we should all do our part in fashioning and purifying the wondrous tree of humanity. Each man, woman, and child is a leaf of that strange tree whose roots sink down and whose branches rise into an all-encompassing eternity. And if, when the time of the sear and yellow leaf shall come, we can only say that as parts of the great human organism we have done our work and have not lived in vain, it will assuredly be a source of peace and blessedness.

To the man of a proud and haughty character the falling leaf has another lesson. It bids him cast aside his haughtiness and pocket his pride, telling him that however much he may laud it over his fellows he will soon have to yield his prosperity and power to others. In short, when man is puffed up with a sense of importance, nature in her fading robes counsels humility and points to his transient insignificance. She bids him copy her modest bearing; for when she has done her work she speaks not with the voice of vulgar victory but in gentle tones of joy and satisfaction. When the summer is gone and the harvest is past what gentle peace, what consoling tranquillity pervades the white stubble fields and the changing woods! On every fading leaf and withered stalk there is written a true and beautiful epitaph with an expressed assurance of a joyful resurrection to life and beauty, in new forms, when the days of spring shall have come again.

As we journey along life's chequered way, and see each returning leaf fall, we learn that there is a music, a harmony in the world, the strains of which enchant us, though we can neither see nor understand the combinations upon which they are founded. Beauty and mystery are the avenues by which it chiefly reaches us; these are the radiant points, as an astronomer would say, from which it is borne in upon us from the spiritual sphere by which life is surrounded. And to our thinking this music is very distinctly and very sweetly heard when the chilly blasts of approaching winter scatter the fallen leaves at our feet. For what can be more fitted to awaken the soul's mysterious but enrapturing harmony than the beautiful and changeable tints of the autumn woods? And as the mind wakes up at the call of feeling, it is seen that spring is bound to autumn by an indissoluble chain; that the falling leaf and the opening bud are but two sides of the same fact, the persistent energy of nature. Here with the lengthening shadows of the autumn sun the forms of nature are many of them perishing; but even now there is a spring-tide in existence on the other side of the globe. Ours is the time of the fading falling leaf, theirs the period of the opening bud and the singing of birds in the joy of newly given life. Thus God gives us not only hope, but evidence of his perpetual care. And though the music of the autumn woods may sound as a dirge in many souls, it must not be forgotten that "Whatever melody sounds sweetest here,

And draws the spirit most into itself" always awakens some slight feeling of melancholy. Man peers for a moment through the little chink or cranny thus made in the boundary wall of sense, and is saddened that he cannot gaze longer at what thus delights him. But whether the leaf is bursting into life or falling dead and withered to the ground, the great thing is that it should lead us to our better selves—to God the essence of our being. Thus may we bind the unfolding thought of the Universe to the love of our hearts and find in it a source of serenity and spiritual peace. J. M.

OUR MANCHESTER LETTER.

WEDNESDAY, November 8.

We are just in the throes of a School Board election, and our city is alive with feeling. The education of the young seems to be a matter concerning the citizens alone, but certain corporations calling themselves severally the "Episcopal" Church, the "Catholic" Church, and the "Land League," have thought fit to interpose claims, to which from the nature of things they can have no right. Very good work has been done during the last twelve years by the Board, and a great improvement, both in the intelligence, the manners, and the morals of the rising generation has been wrought by the means they have brought to bear. But this does not suit the people who dignify themselves with the term "Catholic," whether Romish or Anglican. Though they have their own schools, and the attendance in them has been greatly increased by the action of the Board, they are not satisfied, because their dogmas are not enforced in those belonging to the ratepayers. But notions of infallibility have always a damaging effect on the temper of men, and these people presume to dictate to every one the course they should take, and grow angry when they are not obeyed. The (Romish) Bishop of Salford began the warfare a few weeks ago by denouncing in strong terms and coarse language the School Board and its doings, and insisting on having a larger number of "Catholic" members on the Board. I imagine that the bishop will find out on Monday next that he has made a mistake in rousing the attention of the ratepayers to his claims—perhaps has done so already, for whereas there were four representatives on the late Board, only three candidates belonging to the "Catholic" party are going to the poll. The "Church" party, under the lead of that amiable tempered gentleman, Mr. Houldsworth, are urging their claims to a larger number of members, and insist that the duty of the Board is to foster and help denominational schools, and to have Board schools only where denominational schools do not exist. Of course, theologians, at least of a certain school, are not noted for their modesty; and reasonable men are hoping that when the poll is declared next Monday these men will be found at the bottom. To show how feeling has been roused on these matters, a political meeting, in no wise relating to the School Board election, was held last Friday night in the Reform Club. One of the speakers, in the course of his remarks, struck upon the election, and at once let loose the torrent of his wrath upon "priests" of both "churches," and in vigorous terms denounced the Athanasian and Nicene Creeds, and "all the rest of the bosh they were in the habit of instilling into the human mind for the last fourteen centuries." This was resented by a few persons in the meeting as in-roducing theology where it had no business, though it was vigorously cheered by the majority. The speaker, when interrupted, insisted on his right as a Liberal to perfect freedom of speech. This seemed to me at the time somewhat irrelevant. Surely the rightful answer would have been that so long as the "Church" was established these creeds were State documents, and had a right to be dealt with as such, as much so as documents relating to the opium or any other business sanctioned and supported by Government. I say nothing as to the expediency of so doing, but as long as there is a theological department of the State, politicians have a right to deal with documents relating to it—the Book of Common Prayer in England, and the Confession of Faith in Scotland—at public meetings. However, the incident shows how electrical the state of feeling is in Manchester on this question of the School Board. Great issues depend upon what course the electors take next Saturday. For my own part, I believe if the non-sectarian party had put up seven instead of six men they would be able to carry them easily.

The news of the release from Lancaster Gaol of the Rev. S. F. Green, which would have been a leading topic of interest, comes at a time when the public mind is otherwise engaged. Still a good deal of talk has arisen in consequence of the event. No one outside the extreme Ritualists of Miles Platting can see anything of the martyr in Mr. Green. He is at perfect liberty to preach and practise all his extremest ideas and methods of worship, provided he will do it on his own account, and at the expense of those who think with him; but as an officer of the theological department of the State he must, of course, be subject to his superior the Bishop, and to the laws made and provided for that purpose. The interference of the "Church" party in the School Board election, for the purpose of thrusting its dogmas on the community through the public schools, and this imbroglia in relation to Mr. Green, are convincing many that it is time that it was raised to the level of the Free Churches by being released from bondage to the State; it would abate its presumption, and so improve its temper, and leave it at liberty to manage its own affairs without the interference of the constable and the gaoler.

Our own particular group of churches are at present in full activity. Of course, theological matters being involved in the School Board election, it has formed one of the topics upon which some of our ministers have sought to instruct their congregations. One of our churches as a consequence is having a course of Sunday evening lectures on the three creeds; while at another a few Sunday evenings are being devoted to the story of an old Parish Church, meaning the history of what is now the Cathedral of Manchester. At others there are courses on Great Men who have recently passed away; on the Lives of the Poets, and other "live" matters, as our American brethren would say. Of course, the week-evening institutions in connection with our churches are in full activity, and meetings for devotion, for entertainment, and for instruction are of nightly occurrence. Indeed, good work is being done in this way in our various churches and Sunday-schools. In passing, I may just say that I have heard but one opinion in respect to your united devotional service in London, and that is more than decided approval, and the hope is expressed that such services may become common throughout the country in our body. I may add on my own account that they can hardly be so successful with us as among the orthodox; not that our people are less devout, but that they are engaged more in educational, social, and political work than others in proportion to their numbers. Over and over again in my own experience have I found that projects immediately concerning some church work have been crippled because the persons necessary to its complete success were engaged in doing good work in connection with some useful institution of which they were the life and soul.

With regard to our two new churches now in the course of erection, I need not say anything about their stone laying as you have given your readers reports relating thereto. Unitarians are nothing if not critical, however, and it seems that some persons dissented very vigorously from the idea of processions headed by bands of music. Indeed, at Miles Platting the Rev. Mr.

McDowell gave voice to this discontent, and in opening his speech at the evening meeting compared the proceedings to those of the Salvation Army. I for one felt somewhat amused at the comparison because just at the time he spoke the fife and drum of a detachment of the Army were heard in the street, and it seemed like a comment on the disparaging remarks of the speaker. But I believe it is a matter of history that there were processions and bands of music before the Salvationists came into existence, and therefore they have no right to a monopoly of these things. And, surely, on the occasion on such an important event as the preparing to leave a place adopted for temporary use, and laying the foundation-stone for a permanent place of worship, once in a generation it may be, the feelings of joy must be expressed in some way. The fact is that Unitarians, owing partly to their history for one reason, are almost too diffident in revealing their existence to the public—indeed, their shyness in some cases has become morbid—and it is time they showed themselves more openly before the world, and even became positively aggressive. Of course, they will be preserved from falling into "loud" and vulgar ways by their intelligence and general refinement. I may say that the Miles Platting church is slowly rising from the ground, and in the course of a few months will be ready for opening, while the Longsight one now stands ready for the roof, and presents a very handsome appearance to the eye. The ancient church at Blackley, too, has begun to work for a new building, the old one being not only insufficient for its purpose, but also I am told that it has become unsafe as a structure. It has served the congregation for generations, being built in 1697; it has associations connected with it which will never gather round a new one; but at the same time, however regretfully, it will have to be pulled down, and give place to a new one. Besides, however heroic the history of our old church buildings from the very nature of the case, it is also somewhat sombre, and however proud we may be of certain passages in it, yet we need brighter surroundings for our young people. And the new will stand on the site of the old, and the memories of the past will cluster around the fresh and fairer structure, and blend the grandeur of that past with the beauty of the present. Thus it has been at Failsworth, and thus will it be at Blackley, I have no doubt. I trust our Blackley friends will receive the help they need from those who are able to give it.

Yesterday week I was present at a gathering of the Cross-street Congregation in the Memorial Hall, when R. D. Darbyshire, Esq., occupied the chair. In one of the most graceful speeches I ever had the pleasure of listening to he opened the proceedings; it was indeed appropriate to the occasion and the surroundings. The room was handsomely decorated for the occasion, and there were before him an assemblage of ladies and gentlemen that would be difficult to match in any city of the world. Indeed, some of our over-sensitive and retiring friends might have been excused if they had felt just a little proud for once on looking around, and giving way to their exultant feelings in a vigorous outburst of cheering or song as the case might be. On one side of the Chairman sat our long-proved and venerable Bishop, Mr. Gaskell, and on the other our energetic junior Bishop, Mr. Steintal, both looking as happy as the occasion warranted. Speech, song and music made the evening a delightful one; and several intervals for conversation were taken advantage of to the full. Old acquaintances that had lapsed were renewed, and fresh acquaintances were made, while constant friends felt the glow that comes from intercourse that has suffered no break. The ever-smiling secretary of the church, G. W. Rayner Wood, Esq., who is never so pleased as when giving pleasure to others, moved among it in a state of perfect delight. It was a delightful evening altogether; and I was sorry that I had to leave before the conclusion of the proceedings, as I had to take my share of duty at another meeting in a different part of the city.

On Monday night another meeting was held in the same hall. The occasion was a singularly interesting one, and a large gathering testified to the importance attached to it. When a man has given forty-eight years of his life to preaching and pastoral duties, forty-four of them in one place, and the fruits of his labours have shown themselves in the development of the church from very small proportions to large and influential ones; and when in addition he has laboured without ceasing to add to the welfare of his ministerial brethren—and laboured with singular success, when he becomes old and feeble he deserves honouring as the Rev. Henry Wells, M.A., late of Gorton, was honoured last night. For forty-four years he has been pastor of a church that has grown with the years till it has become one of our most influential ones; and the Widows' Fund, of which he has been the secretary for many years, through his business aptitudes has become a wealthy corporation compared to what it was when he first entered on his duties. Of course the speeches were mostly given up to reminiscences. Mr. Gaskell was in the chair, and though he gave evidence of physical weakness, he was full of mental life. There was seriousness, but no sadness, for when men have lived as Mr. Wells has lived there is no cause for sadness, but rather of a serious thoughtful joy that so much of what has been attempted has been accomplished. Mr. Gaskell recalled the fact that seventy years ago Mr. Wells and he were small boys together in Warrington, and as he had worked with him for over forty years in a high and a holy calling he knew no one that better deserved to be hung than his good friend, whose portrait would hang in the same room as his own and Dr. Beard's. The Rev. Mr. Poynting in the name of the subscribers presented the portrait of Mr. Wells to the Trustees of the Memorial Hall, and in doing so dwelt on the different ways he had endeared himself to the members of the Liberal Churches in the district, and the habit he had had of conferring benefits on all he had come in contact with. The Rev. C. Beard, as one of the oldest friends of Mr. Wells, and the President of the Widows' Fund, presented an address to the honoured guest of the evening. His speech was eloquent, and contained passages of great beauty. He was largely reminiscent, and recalled times and occasions of past days in which he and Mr. Wells had acted together in unbroken harmony. "He was my father's friend, and he has always been mine," said Mr. Beard, "and I honour and reverence him because he has ever been true and constant to duty—that he has won his position, accomplished his success by unremitting toil and unflagging industry. This fact I commend to the younger portion of my ministerial brethren." At the close of this interesting speech an interval was allowed for the audience to view the portrait which Mr. Poynting had unveiled. The artist has been very successful, as everyone acquainted with the original would at once declare; but with portrait and original in the same room everyone had ocular demonstration of the fact. The same artist, Mr. Percy, of Manchester, who painted Mr. Gaskell's portrait has been the painter of this present one, and it is on the same scale as Mr. Gaskell's. Mr. Wells's reply was full of feeling, which, added to his physical feebleness, made it tremulous and affecting. There was devout thankfulness in it that God had allowed and helped him to work so long, and with some degree of success, and his remaining days would be given to doing what else he had power to do in the same good cause he had worked in all his life. Alderman Grundy, in a few well chosen words, as the Chairman of the trustees of the Memorial Hall, accepted the portrait presented to them to hang along with the two others in the lecture room. Mr. Morrison added his testimony to that of others, and where many would have supposed the view to have been worked out, showed that there were parts of Mr. Wells's good works that had not yet been dwelt upon. For he had been the guardian of orphans, the adviser of men and women in difficulty, the friend of the embarrassed, and of all who needed help in his neighbourhood. Well will it be with all who come to the end of their days with so good a record. The proceedings came to a close at an early period of the evening.

You will agree with me, Mr. Editor, that we are not altogether idle or inactive in the Manchester district. W. M.

NOTTINGHAM.—The Rev. V. D. Davis, B.A., has resigned the pulpit of Christ Church, Nottingham, and will close his ministry there with the present year.

Our Contemporaries.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

The Manchester Examiner in a leading article on the Manchester Degree Day, to which we have referred in one of our "Occasional Notes," refers to the bestowal of Bachelors' degrees upon several Associates of Owens College as a feature in the proceedings which was of special and unique interest:—

These were 'not honorary degrees, and they can in no sense be looked upon as gifts lavishly bestowed and conferring undeserved glory upon the recipients. Far otherwise indeed; the University itself was the chief gainer by the transaction. It was a recognition of the fact that the new University is a development from Owens College, and that the Associates of that College have passed a test which is a warrant of attainment at least equal to a University Degree. The Associates themselves desired that the degree should be just sufficient to bring them into communion with the new order of things, and no more, and those who wondered why Masters' Degrees were not conferred will find a sufficient explanation in the self-denying ordinance which the Associates passed. We repeat that the transaction, for so we must term it, was one alike honourable and fortunate to the University, and Professor Ward, who is a master in the art of graceful rhetoric, stated the case admirably when he presented to the Vice-Chancellor the senior Associate, a distinguished barrister. He said: "The Associates of Owens College, whom it is my privilege to present to you to-day, are spontaneously linking their names and reputations with the name and fame of our University, and it seems a twice-blessed relationship which on both sides is founded on goodwill. Many of those whom I am about to lead to you are men distinguished in letters and in science, and in the several learned professions and other occupations to which their lives are devoted. Some are members of the governing and teaching bodies of our own University. A great number hold the degrees of other universities—of those older universities from which our own has received so many signs of kindly and ready sympathy, or of that great examining university without which much of the educational progress of the last half century—without which such progress as was made within the walls of Owens College, would itself have lacked its trustworthiest tests. But to-day they all come to testify to their willingness to be with us, and of us."

THE FALL OF EDEN.

The Christian World writes in reference to the Rev. Edward White's bibliolatriy:—

It is little short of madness, in an advocate of revelation in the present day, to stake his belief in Christianity upon the historical nature of what we again call the inspired allegory of Eden. Had it occurred in any book except the Bible, it would have been acknowledged as allegorical at a glance, for talking animals belong, in all languages, to such literature. We may be asked why we call it inspired. Our answer is that, in the literature of moral allegory, it holds an exalted or perhaps a supreme place; that it is perennially true to human nature as announcing its inability to be perfectly true to the higher life, to be absolutely obedient to the Divine command; and that it is appropriate and impressive as one of the most ancient fragments of religious literature in existence, and as worked into the vestibule of that ever-to-be-honoured temple of the old Hebrew faith, over which, under God's blue sky, and not more narrow than it, arose the Christian Church. We have only to add that the allegorical theory is neither new nor startling. All the essentials of St. Paul's reasoning on man's imperfection, and on redemption by Christ, may be maintained, and maintained much more intelligently, on the theory of allegory than on the theory of fact.

HIGH ANGLICANS AND THE RITUALISTS.

The Times, in an article on Mr. Green's resignation, writes:—

The difference between the High Anglican party of fifty years ago, the men of the Oxford movement, and the modern Ritualists, is well deserving of remark. The older generation were confident in themselves, and they had some reasons for their confidence. Religion to them was a philosophy as well as a cult. They had a system of thought right or wrong, but applicable to all subjects, and they could not bear to be without it. If they were not very learned they were as learned as any one was expected to be, more learned than most of their neighbours. The modern Ritualist could hardly be thus described. During the past fifty years the world has been growing, and the Ritualists have not been growing. It is fatal to any party to be thus passed in the race. The school which once consents to abandon all claims to learning and large scholarship can expect only to go from bad to worse, from one depth of unintelligence to another and a deeper. This has been the fate of the Ritualists. They are no more like their predecessors of fifty years ago than a dwarf is like a giant. They will do very wrong if they suppose that the success they have gained by the defects of the law and its apparatus can be of any real value to them. Do what they will they have no chance whatever of exercising a permanent grasp over the nation or the Church. Their office is with the outside of things; and as long as they confine themselves to these, their sphere of influence is very narrowly circumscribed. When they cease to do this they cease to be Ritualists.

PROGRESSIVE JEWS AND THEISTS.

The Spectator, in an article on "Progressive Judaism," suggested by Mr. Montefiore's and Miss Cobbe's papers in successive numbers of the Contemporary Review, on the capacity of Judaism for becoming a universal religion, remarks how profoundly even those who wish to see Judaism become as universal as Christianity, without becoming Christianity, feel the difficulty involved in its hitherto tenacious and triumphant tribalism. Moreover:—

The religions which insist on periodical acts of public worship have almost always derived their authority from real or supposed commands of God to that effect, and these acts of public worship have always combined specific reference to the great eras of revelation, and to the divine acts in which, as the worshippers believe, their national faith has originated. All this does not suit Theists. Even Mr. Claude Montefiore intends, it appears, to retain five Jewish feasts, and to hold fast to the great initiatory Jewish rite, at least for Jews. How can Theists unite in worship with the holders of a creed so antique, and, as they would think, so obsolete, as this? But there is a further reason why, as we think, Theists, if they ever become an important factor in the religious life of the day—which, as yet, has never happened—would probably be the last to feel any warm sympathy with "Progressive Judaism." Theists, as distinguished from believers in any historical religion, almost always take up the belief in natural law, in the absolute immutability and continuity of the creative energy during all ages, with a certain fervour of belief; and reject what is called "miracle," as wholly opposed to the genius of our modern science. This sort of religion was profoundly marked, for instance, in Carlyle, who was a Theist of the most fervent type. But in him Theism was a sort of natural Calvinism—a belief in the unchangeability of God's decrees, as illustrated from Nature. Nor do we see any distinctive sphere for Theism, unless it accepts the laws of Nature as perhaps the best modern mirror of the character of the Creator. If, however, this should be, as we think it will be, the distinctive character of modern Theism, as distinguished from the much more spiritual faith of the Christian, it is hardly conceivable that Theists should accept even "Progressive Judaism" as their religious guide. Judaism can never wholly sever itself from its history, and its history embodies its deep belief that the so-called laws of Nature do not declare God, and cannot declare God, as He declares Himself to the human spirit. And Judaism embodies that belief in language far too emphatic to admit of any amalgamation with Naturalistic Theism of any type whatever.

EVANGELICALISM AT CAMBRIDGE.

The Jewish Chronicle refers to a recent incident as a mark of the times and a signpost of the progress since the days when conversionist sermons were still preached at the centres of English intellect. The following extract from the will of the late Rev. N. M. P. Lushington Pilson reads somewhat antiquated at the present day:—

I desire that the sum of one thousand pounds, free of duty, be offered to the University of Oxford for the proper authorities of that ancient university to apply, if the offer be accepted, to the payment of a sum yearly to preachers to be selected by them—being of strictly Evangelical or Low Church views and Masters of Arts of at least ten years' standing—who shall preach in the university pulpit two sermons at least annually upon the past history and religion of the Jewish nation, and upon the prophecies in Holy Writ relating to the return of that nation to Judea and the restoration to it of its former glory; and this request to be called "The Lushington Pilson bequest"; and one of these sermons at least is to be published afterwards. If the University of Oxford be unable to accept, then the same offer shall be made to the University of Cambridge.

Both universities have refused to accept the bequest on these conditions, and the executors of Mr. Pilson must find some other application for the £1,000. One aspect of the refusal, however, is rather opposed to Jewish pretensions. Though, undoubtedly, intended to be used for conversionist purposes, the Jewish Chronicle adds, the bequest might have been accepted if there remained any widespread belief in literal prophecy at the centres where the leaders of the English Church are chiefly educated. The whole of Jewish thought and feeling is so intimately bound up with the prophetic hopes that we cannot view without interest this decided change of religious thought in England within the short space of a generation.

MR. W. H. BEECHER'S CONFESSION OF FAITH.

The Christian World, in an article in reference to Mr. Beecher's recent Confession of Faith before the New York and Brooklyn Congregational Association, writes:—

What strikes us as the most important fact established by Mr. Beecher's narrative is this, that a vast deal of what has been considered essential and indispensable to orthodox Christianity, by a large number of persons, can be discarded, not only without laying axe to the root of the tree which Christ planted for the healing of the nations, but without touching any of those main branches or fruit-clusters on which depends its healing and saving power. No one would ever suggest that, in relation to practical morality, Mr. Beecher's deviations from the old theological track impair his teaching. And this we take to be a supremely important point, for, if the Master's discourses are models of preaching, the inculcation of sound and simple morals, not merely as a matter of course or of theological inference, but as the staple of sermons, has Divine authority. Even when we come to the chief positions of catholic theology, as taken over by the Reformed Church at the great severance in the sixteenth century, we find that he stands firm by the old landmarks. He believes in what he has done is substantially what tens of thousands of sincere and fervent Christians have been doing within the last twenty-five years. He has been disengaging his religion from the theories and the theological assumptions which had seemed to other generations to be its supports, but which, in an age of science and of absolute freedom of thought, turn out to be the reverse of supports. He does not make religion a mere birth of reason, a mere development of suggestions derived from conscience and conditioned by circumstance; but he feels, as with the certainty of an authoritative instinct, that religion in our day must do no offence to reason or to conscience, and must be able to appeal without faltering to man's respect for goodness, to man's sense of duty, to man's perception of justice, to man's love of truth.

A REMARKABLE sect has been founded in Finland its principal dogma being the supreme authority of woman in the family. The husband takes an oath of absolute submission to his wife.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

Correspondence.

"MORAL REFORM UNION."

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Will you allow me to suggest an extension of the title of the above society, as it does not sufficiently describe the self-righteous character of the Union, judging, as I can only judge, by the letter of the Hon. Sec., T. L. Browne, in the Inquirer of the 4th November? It seems to me it should run thus: The Moral Reform Union; a "Holier-than-thou," and, "Cast-the-first-stone Society."

The letter of T. L. Browne is directed against "The Englishman whose antecedents," &c.

The Englishman referred to, everybody knows, has, for his one mistake, lost everything that men value; friends, country, and character, and the Moral Reform Union, and other good people who have not been found out would hunt him down, and give no place for repentance though he sought it with tears.

Christianity with its wide charity is better for poor humanity than Moral Reform Unions which are without mercy.

Croydon.

JESSE FAGG.

[We object to any further correspondence on this subject.—ED. of Inq.]

PORTSMOUTH.—At a farewell party this week to Mrs. Timmins, who is about to join the Rev. T. Timmins in America, at the school-room, High-street, Portsmouth, a purse of £20 was presented to Mrs. Timmins in acknowledgment of her services in the Sunday-school, and an illuminated address, framed in oak, entrusted to her for Mr. Timmins.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD held its weekly meeting on Thursday.—The Rev. G. M. Murphy resumed the debate on the question of higher elementary education, a decision respecting which has been frequently postponed. The propositions before the Board were the adoption of a recommendation of the School Management Committee to establish higher elementary schools, to be attended by boys and girls who have passed Standard 5 or are able to pass an examination equivalent thereto; and an amendment, "The previous question," moved by Mr. Roberts. The recommendation of the Committee met with Mr. Murphy's approval. On the motion of Colonel Prendergast, the debate was once more adjourned, without any progress having been made.—The half yearly report of the Bye-Laws Committee was presented by Mr. Sydney Buxton, and after a short discussion was agreed to and the Board adjourned.

PRESENTATION TO MR. T. A. REED.—A striking and pleasing proof of the esteem with which a professional man is regarded by his brethren, when he has laboured not only for his own advancement, but to promote the interests of those who are similarly engaged, was afforded on Thursday evening by the presentation to Mr. T. A. Reed, the eminent shorthand writer of Cursitor-street, of a volume containing an address, signed by the most distinguished professors of phonography throughout the world, in which admiration of his great abilities and gratitude for the many services rendered by him to the profession were suitably expressed. The presentation took place, amidst "troops of friends," at the rooms of the Phonetic Shorthand Writers' Association, Moufflet's Hotel, Newgate-street. After an admirable lecture by Mr. Reed on "Phraseography," or the art of representing several words by a combination of forms, Mr. T. Woods, the President of the Westminster Association of Shorthand Writers, who had been asked to present the volume, referred in a graceful and much applauded speech to the great reputation which Mr. Reed had won for himself, to his successful efforts to raise the character of the profession, and to his readiness at all times to aid those who were entering upon it. In responding, Mr. Reed, after expressing his appreciation of the kind terms in which the presentation had been made, remarked, amidst cheers, that although he had been nearly forty years in the profession, having practised phonography when a boy of fourteen or fifteen, he still felt fully equal to his work, and that he loved it. A cordial vote of thanks was subsequently accorded to Mr. Reed for his lecture. The principal reports of this paper, especially of our Whitsuntide meetings, have been done by Mr. Reed for nearly twenty years past.

The Liberal Pulpit.

FIVE OLD TRUTHS.

BY THE REV. S. F. WILLIAMS.

Granting that we owe to Unitarianism, in conjunction with other liberal influences, the possession of entire mental freedom, the inquiry may be put—indeed it has been put—whether we have any new truths to proclaim to the people? I answer, none. God's truth is not new, but old as His creation. We have only walked upon its shore, and found some gems our brethren have buried under the accumulated sand of old traditions: and of these we have disintombed a few of priceless value. Here are five of them:—

1. The first is the immanence of God in nature, in history, in the souls of all men—the presence in every atom of matter, and in every throb of spirit, of that all-encompassing Soul who fills the heavens with glory and the earth with bounty, who also, in gracious guidance, in kindling aspiration, in high command, and gentle leading, and healing rebuke of conscience, dwells in the human soul. It is the truth immortalised by Wordsworth, when he felt, as he says—

A presence that disturbs me with joy
Of elevated thoughts: a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean, and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man.

2. The second is that communion with God is possible to every individual soul. The deadness of much of the Christianity of the present day arises from the fact that it looks on inspiration as altogether a thing of the past; it treats revelation as only a historic fact which occurred nearly nineteen hundred years ago, and of which we can study but the record. It says that God spoke to men of old, but speaks not to us—we to-day hear only the far-off echoes of his voice, and must be content to receive second-hand through them the word thus given. But Unitarianism has assisted in bringing again to life and light the truth that the roll of God's prophets was not closed when the walls of Jerusalem were levelled to the ground, but that God's spirit informs human hearts in the living present, inspiration not being confined to any one age or race. Thus it gives reality to the teaching of ancient prophets, and links them in vital relations with the present; and it animates us to reproduce the life of Jesus by opening up to us the reality for every receptive soul of Christ-like communion with God.

3. The third is that human nature is ever made capable of the life of God. Unitarianism has affirmed that human nature is imperfect, but not inherently evil; that it has been wisely appointed to man to arise out of low conditions, and find his way to the light above him, and not that we are the degenerate offspring of pure and spotless creatures in some remote past, by whose transgression we have been rendered incapable of doing any good and inevitably compelled to do all evil, and for whose transgression we are held guilty and are doomed to eternal death—not that because a man and a woman gave way at the first temptation, every infant at its mother's breast has within it a heart utterly vile, and impending over it a curse and a fate compared with which

The weariest and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury and imprisonment
Can lay on nature, is a Paradise.

No; Unitarianism has affirmed that all purity and moral courage, all wisdom and sanctity, all virtue and strength are in the inherent possibilities of humanity. It has also affirmed that the true aim of life is not to escape a future condemnation, nor to insure a future salvation, but to subdue the passions, to cultivate pure affections, to strengthen the moral will, to give to the noble powers of intellect with which we are endowed fitting culture and expansion, to work out our own salvation and enter into eternal life—which consists more in quality than in duration—here and now, even amid the cares and struggles of the present; and to attain this aim it has found its richest and strongest inspiration in the teaching and guidance of Jesus. Sitting at his feet and touched by his spirit, it has affirmed that we are not under the curse and wrath of God, but that the Infinite Heart is ever turned towards us in love and benediction; that the Divine Spirit is ever striving with the sons of men to lift them up and bring them more and more into accord with the Supreme Will. It believes that humanity, as a whole, is stronger, wiser, purer, nobler to-day than ever before since it had existence here; and that because it bears within it the breath of divine life, it is destined to go on and on, casting off ignorance, overcoming evil passions, retrieving mistakes, correcting errors of opinion, and achieving ever grander victories in the world of matter and of mind.

4. The fourth is that religion is not a substitute for right living, but the highest form of right living. While some have affirmed that there is a shorter and easier way to God's favour than by obeying His law, Unitarianism has affirmed that God's benediction is to be won only by the homage of the heart to perfect goodness, and the effort of the life to reach it. While some have affirmed that Christ has provided a perfect righteousness as a substitute for ours, that we can have it any moment if we will, for it is all ready, and we have only to accept it. Unitarianism has affirmed that he only is righteous who doth righteousness; and, as to the work of Christ, that he lifts men into goodness, instead of saving them from the necessity of goodness; that in him is declared the Divine forgiveness, but always with the added message, go and sin no more; that it did not come bringing a signed and sealed pardon or title deed; that his work was to plant the Kingdom of God within men; to kindle in them his own spirit; to touch them with a longing for goodness, a sincere love for men, a consciousness of their Father-God that would make them blossom and bear fruit in all the sweetness and glory of life; that the whole New Testament may almost be said to be a sublime expansion of this idea, the growth of the soul into likeness, and at last into absolute oneness with Christ. Compared with this, how unspeakably poor and degrading is the view that we come into the benefit of his life and death by some mechanical transfer outside of his own character!

5. The fifth is the persistent and immutable love of God to every soul, whether it be on earth, in heaven, or in hell; and His readiness to save it whenever it shall arise and go to Him with a yearning desire for reconciliation, whether in this state or the next. It is that, instead of sin and misery and woe obtaining an everlasting dominion over millions of God's children, instead of the Infinite One Himself having his throne disputed by the everlasting perpetuity of rebellious evil, the Infinite Goodness will pursue the wandering, the lost, the friendless, the forlorn, and, at last, through whatever ordeal of shame and sorrow and remorse they may have to pass, to whatever "powers that tend the soul to vex and plague it," they may be subjected, will win them to a loving and beautiful obedience; so that by his healing chastisement God will banish sin and misery from the heart of all his creatures, and from every region of His universe, that He may be all-in-all.

The one, far-off, divine event

To which the whole creation moves.

What new truth has Unitarianism brought to the people? It is unveiling being the eyes of men the height and depth and length and breadth of these old truths. How is it possible for any one of us to do more than repeat the eternal realities? The spring comes back to us every year, and yet it comes with the charm of a perpetual novelty; and so it is through all the range of human thought. The truths Unitarianism has used its power to revivify are as old as religion.

THE REV. AUGUSTUS CLISSOLD, M.A., a clergyman of the Church of England, who was well-known as one of the foremost advocates of Swendenborgianism in the country, died on the 30th of October, at his house on Broadwater Down, Tunbridge Wells.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—For the cure of debility, bile, liver, and stomach complaints this inappreciable medicine is so well-known in every part of the world, and the cures performed by its use are so wonderful, that it now stands pre-eminent above all other remedies, more particularly for the cure of bilious and liver complaints, disorders of the stomach, dropsy, and debilitated constitution. A course of these digestive Pills painlessly but surely regulates the organs of digestion and acts most beneficially on the secretory and excretory organs generally. They expel from the secretory organs and the circulation those effete and morbid matters which produce inflammation, pain, fever, debility, and physical decay—thus annihilating, by their purifying properties, the virulence of the most painful and devastating diseases.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11, 1882.

At the recent meeting of the Scottish Unitarian Association Mr. D. Ainsworth, M.P., told the following good story:—"In America it did not matter very much if one killed a man, as there were plenty of them, but to steal a mule was a heinous offence. Well, a man there who stole a mule was lynched for it. One of the lynchers related the facts to a gentleman, who asked: 'How many of you helped to hang the man?' 'Well, I guess,' he answered, 'there would be about three hundred pulling at the end of the rope.' The gentleman said, 'What is the good of so many people hanging the man? I suppose three men would have been sufficient for the purpose.' 'Well,' retorted the other, 'that is so, but it showed they were all interested.'" Mr. Ainsworth added that he did not mean that they should hang any of their respected ministers, but he wished them all to take hold of the rope and show their interest in the work.

It is only fair to Mr. Booth to say that since our article in last week's Inquirer he has publicly and totally denied that the wretched doggerel quoted by us and otherwise widely circulated by the Press ever appeared in the War Cry, as publicly alleged by Canon Girdlestone, and that he has repeatedly called upon the Canon, but in vain, to admit his error. It is utterly beyond belief that this greatly respected Church dignitary would invent and maliciously circulate the extremely offensive words. The truth is that not a few of Mr. Booth's people throughout the country carry out his appeals to the lowest class in their own familiar vernacular to its utmost limits. Hence such phrases as "Tremendous Free and Easy" and "Hallelujah Go," to be found in their publications. And what is worse still, street boys and Sunday scholars catch up and burlesque such phrases till all reverence for things sacred seems to disappear. It is in this way, perhaps, that Canon Girdlestone first heard the odious words we quoted, and in common with our contemporaries utterly condemned. It is only right to say further that "The Salvation Soldiers' Song Book," in chief use by the Salvation Army, is quite free from anything of this kind.

In the meantime, however, Canon Girdlestone denies that he has received any communication whatever from Mr. Booth. Further, the Canon states that he had destroyed the number of the War Cry alleged to have contained the objectionable words, and that he had quoted them from memory, which he admits "was not a safe proceeding." He admits that he may have misquoted a word or two, as, for instance, "jolly good," but he is quite certain that the verses were highly irreverent, and that they were formed "on the model of a post prandium song, with the well-known chorus, 'Which nobody can deny.'" Canon Girdlestone contends that "the misquotation is of very small importance as regards the irreverence of the production," and challenges Mr. Booth to produce the hymn and let the public judge. This is certainly the obvious and only satisfactory way of settling the dispute.

UNDER the heading "A Modern Samaritan," a correspondent of the Christian World records an incident which happened a few years ago in connection with the lamented Professor Palmer, who met with such a shocking death among the Bedouins. An old man laid senseless on the side of one of our outskirt roads, evidently poor and starving. Who passed but Father Ignatius, and seeing him went up and offered a prayer above his head. As he was in the act, Professor Palmer came up, lifted the poor creature, took his arm, got a trap, and took him to lodgings, as he was homeless. He fed him, warmed him, and paid the expenses. Now what I want to impress is that the explorer had a warm heart in his breast, and acted the good Samaritan.

WE are glad to see in the list of Liberal Mayors the names of the following gentlemen well-known to our readers as advocates of Liberal Religion:—William Holland, Bridge-water; Alderman Duckworth, Bury; Sir Thomas Frost, Chester; W. Crosskey, Lewes; Samuel Ogden, Oldham; and Michael Hunter, jun., Sheffield, re-elected.

ON Wednesday, November 1, the ceremony of conferring degrees of the new Victoria University was witnessed by a very large audience in the Manchester Town Hall. The scene was a remarkably brilliant one, and is stated to have more than rivalled the similar scene every May in connection with the London University at Burlington House. The Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Manchester both graced the procession with their presence, arrayed in the brilliant robes of Doctors of Convocation, and a large number of members of the Council and other distinguished persons were present. After an admirable address by Principal Greenwood (Vice-Chancellor), detailing the history of the new University, the Archbishop of York presented the Cobden prize to Mr. Forbes Watson. The degree of M.A. was conferred upon Mr. J. H. Nicholson, for many years the highly respected Registrar of Owens College. The degree of B.A. was conferred upon the old Associates of Owens College among whom were the Rev. Jeffery Worthington, of Brixton; John Kentish Wright, B.A., son of the Rev. John Wright, B.A.; the Rev. Charles T. Poynting, B.A., John William Thompson, B.A., Charles Gaskell Higginson, M.A., son of the late Rev. Edward Higginson; Henry Harwood, M.A., Arthur H. Worthington, B.A., and the Rev. J. A. Picton, M.A. The degree of B.Sc. was conferred upon Professor John Henry Poynting, M.A., W. B. Worthington, B.Sc. (Lond.), Alfred Ernest Steintal; M.A., son of the Rev. S. A. Steintal, Frederick Tertius Swanwick, M.A., and Edgar Worthington.

At the recent monthly meeting of the Unitarian Club of Boston, U.S., we learn from one of our American exchanges that the Revs. Dr. Peabody, James Freeman Clarke, Edward Everett Hale, and Professor Kovacs, of Hungary, all gave the experience and judgment of trained observers concerning the religious condition of England and the Continent. Dr. Peabody said that he rejoiced more than he could tell in the evidence of religious progress in Great Britain. "The whole kingdom of England and Scotland is fast becoming liberalised. The Scotch Established Church is fast coming to the ground on which we stand. Large numbers of the English Church are on the same ground; but there is with this the sad consideration—to me unspeakably sad—that there is a falsity, I trust an unconscious falsity, in the position of all these good men who are assenting formally to creeds in which they have no more belief than I have. I heard in Edinburgh, and in the Cathedral of Glasgow, sermons which would be almost ultra-liberal in any of our pulpits—sermons which would be a joy to hear, were it not for the fact that the men who preach them are bound by creeds which they contradict in those sermons."

Or the state of our own congregations in this country Dr. Peabody—who, it may be remembered, preached at Kentish-town and Kidderminster last midsummer—gives a most cheering account. They seemed, he said, to be not only in admirable condition, but in a condition from which our American brethren might take an example for their churches. "They are hard-working churches; and the members, though they work hard enough, do not by any means do all the work. They have well-organised Sunday-schools and systems of district visiting and parochial work. Their Churches are faithfully attended for morning and evening service; and they do their own singing, and sing as though they put their whole hearts into it. Where choirs are used, they simply lead the congregation; while every man, woman, and child that has a voice lends that voice to worship."

THE REV. DR. HALE was almost equally fervent in his eulogies. But recently returned from the Peninsula, he said that he considered Spain to be five hundred years behind the world, and London, taking the world at large, to be five hundred years in advance of the rest of the world. Where, then, we may ask, would the Doctor place New York, or his own Boston, the "hub of the universe?" He added that he wished to emphasise what Dr. Peabody had said about the admirable working order of the Unitarian churches in England. There is no such thing in England as a church closed for a single week. The condition of Christianity in England seemed to him hopeful to the highest degree. "I do not say," he added, "that there have not got to be martyrdoms. Men are going through those martyrdoms now. Men are finding out the impossibility of a church having one creed for its ministers and another for its people. The Protestant Episcopal Church in America is handicapped by that to-day. That is the reason why it does not adapt itself to the democratic condition of things in this country, why it never has led this country and never will, because it has one creed for its ministers and another for its people. They are beginning to find, this out in England. They are beginning to be aware of the danger of a lack of candour in the pulpit." James Freeman Clarke agreed with Drs. Peabody and Hale in what had been said of the splendid, manly, earnest, energetic, working character of the young Unitarian ministers in England. He saw that spirit not only in the Unitarian body, but in the other religious bodies, especially among English Broad Churchmen. There is something very grand and noble in the efforts they are making, in the perfect manliness in which they carry forward the best work. Their position is an embarrassing one, perhaps it is a false one. He had said to Stopford Brooke, "We feel a great deal of admiration for the courage with which you have sacrificed your position in leaving the Church of England." Mr. Brook answered: "I have made no sacrifices. I am far happier than I was in all my life before. I feel now perfectly free. The only trouble I had was that my father and mother felt sorry." Mr. Clarke gave it as his opinion that all the Churches are becoming broader, both on this side of the water and on the other.

THE Christian Register of Boston is responsible for the following:—In an interview with the Rev. James Freeman Clarke while he was abroad, the Rev. Stopford Brooke told of a conversation he had had with Dean Stanley, who thought he ought to stay in the Church and broaden it. Mr. Brooke said:—"Will the Church in my time or yours ever be broad enough to make James Martineau Archbishop of Canterbury?" "No," said the Dean. "Then," said Mr. Brooke, "I don't think it will ever be broad enough for me."

IN answer to a remark of the Christian Register that, if Dr. Prime, of the New York Observer, had been present at Saratoga he would have found that Unitarians denied little, but affirmed a good deal, the Observer says, "The doctor did attend the Conference, and for the first time in his life heard a man deny point blank the words of the Holy Ghost, and one thousand Unitarians applauded the denial. So they did find something else to deny, as we thought they would." The denial which is instanced is the statement of the Rev. John Page Hopps—"There are other names under heaven besides the name of Jesus, wherein men may be saved." We cannot admit that this is a denial: it is an affirmation of a great truth. It is the Observer that furnishes the denial, and it is as much the duty of Unitarians to preach the affirmative side of truths which our orthodox brethren neglect as it is to deny the errors they proclaim.

MISS FRANCES POWER COBBE, in her fine article in the Contemporary Review, entitled "Progressive Judaism," which we have noticed elsewhere, has the following curious note: "It is said that quite recently at least twenty Unitarian women have married Jews in Manchester, and, having adopted Judaism, have taken a zealous part in the affairs of the Synagogue." We very much doubt the truth of this report, and we should like to know if our Manchester friends can throw any light upon the origin of the rumour. Not that we object to such marriages. O dear, no; that is all a matter of taste. And probably the "Unitarian women" would carry into the Synagogue something of the influence of what we regard as "Reasonable Christianity."

Reviews.

Genesis: Its Authorship and Authenticity. By Charles Bradlaugh. Third Edition. London: Freethought Publishing Company. 1882.

This volume of 340 pages is one of the series published under the name of the "International Library of Science and Freethought," of which it is the fourth issue. It is an able and scholarly treatise on the subject with which it deals; and keeps well within the province of fair and legitimate criticism. There is nothing new in the statements made or the arguments advanced; but novelty is not to be expected on a question which has been so abundantly discussed by previous writers. The book is evidently the result of considerable reading and research; and its chief merit consists in the accumulated weight of evidence, gathered from all quarters, which it brings to bear in illustration and confirmation of the position it seeks to establish. That position is thus concisely stated in the preface.

"The object of the work is to show that the book of Genesis is unhistoric, that it is not the work of any one writer, but is made up of several documents, belonging to different ages, pieced together after the lapse of many centuries, often clumsily, and sometimes without regard to relevancy.

"2. That the narrative is sometimes self-contradictory, and that it is often contradicted by other books of the Bible.

"3. That its chronological statements are, on the face of them, absurdly inaccurate, and that they are overwhelmingly contradicted by history and modern discovery.

"4. That the Genesiac teachings on ethnology, geology, astronomy, zoology and botany are flatly in opposition to the best knowledge in each of these sciences.

"5. That such teachings of the book as relate to morality would be destructive of human happiness, if generally adopted."

This is a heavy indictment, and no point tending to establish it is omitted by the author. But we have one remark to make—all this may be true, and yet a certain religious value will remain with the book in its assertion of a divine origin for the life and order of the universe, of a divine rule above the rule of man, of man's dependence upon the Deity for life and breath and all things, of man's delegated rule over the world and his responsibility in the exercise of that rule; of man's intimate relation to the Deity in virtue of the higher faculties of his nature, and of a divine retribution following on human conduct. All these, which are essentially religious ideas, are either distinctly taught or clearly implied in the book of Genesis. So much can be said, notwithstanding the fullest admission of the various points contained in Mr. Bradlaugh's indictment. The religious ideas of the book are independent of the question of authorship, or composition, or chronology. What the volume before us completely disproves is the popular conception—the prevailing belief in regard to the book of Genesis, that it was the work of Moses, that it is historical, that it is written under the guidance of divine inspiration, and that its teachings in every particular are infallibly true. There was a time—not so long ago—when Biblical scholars, men of high attainments and position, believed all this, or professed to believe it, as the quotations in Mr. Bradlaugh's work abundantly shows; but with very rare exception indeed, that is now a past faith—we mean with scholars and candid inquirers; the ignorant, credulous multitude of church and chapel goers, and the ordinary run of clergymen and dissenting ministers may believe it still.

The volume before us carries the examination of Genesis to the close of the eleventh chapter; it is to be followed by another, in which the author hopes to bring the work to a close. This portion has been in great part re-written, the rest has been carefully revised. "I have done my best," he says, "to make it a reliable text book for those who have neither the leisure nor the means to collect the items for themselves." And in a postscript Mr. Bradlaugh adds, "If, despite the great care of my co-workers (Mrs. Besant and 'D'), any errors in the text have been passed, perhaps I may be permitted to plead in mitigation of censure the somewhat stormy hours of my life while these pages have been in the course of passing through the Press." We feel assured that the consideration thus pleaded for will be readily allowed by every candid reader.

And now for the work itself. First we have an introduction of near thirty pages discussing several leading points, as the authorship and composition of Genesis, the dates assigned to it, theories of Inspiration, Biblical infallibility, the Hebrew language, &c. On all these points the opinions are given of leading authorities belonging to different schools of thought. Then the first eleven chapters of Genesis are taken in order, and a careful commentary is given on each, with additional notes for some chapters. Hebrew names and particular words are given in the Hebrew character, and their meanings are added. A full list of authors quoted forms a suitable appendix. It will thus be seen that the author aims to put before his readers a work that shall be of a standard character on the subject it discusses, and no merely superficial treatise hastily extemporised. We may add that the book is well printed, and got up in an attractive style.

Mr. Bradlaugh attaches considerable importance to this portion of his work, on the ground that an "examination of the early chapters of Genesis is, in fact, a radical inquiry into the foundations of the Christian religion." And he supports his opinion by the authority of Sir William Jones, who is quoted as saying:—"Either the first eleven chapters of Genesis—all due allowances being made for a figurative eastern style—are true, or the whole fabric of our national religion is false." And in his notes on chapter iii. our author says, "This chapter contains the very basis of Christianity. It is impossible to reject it and yet to accept Jesus Christ. It must either be taken to be literal truth, or else the entire scheme of redemption must be abandoned. If this narrative of the Fall is legend, myth, allegory, then the whole foundation for the atonement falls away." There seems to us a waist of care and discrimination in this sweeping statement. We fail utterly to see that we cannot accept Jesus Christ without accepting also the "literal truth" of the third chapter of Genesis. The teaching, life, character, and death of Jesus remain the same whatever we may think of that chapter, or for that matter, of the whole book of Genesis. It may be that he shared the prevalent belief of his countrymen respecting the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, but that does not invalidate his claim to be a great religious teacher, the type of noblest manhood, the ideal of the religious character and life. It is a mistake also to say that the Christian religion stands or falls with the third chapter of Genesis. It does not, any more than it stands or falls with the Nicene Creed or the dogma of Papal Infallibility. As it is independent of these later corruptions, so, too, it is independent of old Jewish fables. To be held in its integrity, the accretions, which from various sources have gathered round it, must be put aside, and the teaching of Christ, and him only, be accepted in its simplicity. Church history tells us how those accretions grew, and enables us to draw the line between them and the pure faith they corrupted. We protest earnestly against narrowing the basis of Christianity to a single chapter of Genesis. That is a short and easy method of dealing with it truly, but it betrays a want of the true spirit of criticism which is ever discriminating. What really stands or falls with the narrative of the fall of man is the traditional scheme of orthodox theology manufactured by theologians since the time of Jesus, and embodied in creeds, catechisms, and articles of faith. Of this scheme the doctrine of the Fall is the foundation, it is the first link in the chain, the primary cause of all that follows. The fall of man brought sin and death into the world, the lost condition of man through the Fall made an atonement necessary, and the atonement to be effectual necessitated the Incarnation. If the account of the Fall be unhistorical the whole scheme, so ingeniously pieced together, collapses. But there the ruin ends. Christ's teaching and his self-sacrificing life remain precisely as they were before. Were the whole Bible lost except the Gospels Christianity would be still intact. We have dwelt on this point because it is important. What is more needful than anything else for a just and fair criticism of the Bible and of Christianity is a spirit of discrimination—a discriminating judgment to separate the chaff from the wheat and garner carefully the treasure that remains.

Mr. Bradlaugh and his school seem to us lacking in this high faculty. They dwell on the mistakes, fancies, puerilities and absurd stories of the Bible as if these comprised all its teaching; they are but the alloy with which the pure gold of moral and religious truth is adulterated. It is true that the alloy is abundant, and is blended more or less with the whole, but it is the alloy still and not the pure ore itself. The indiscriminating censure which condemns the whole is on a level with the extravagant superstition which venerates the whole as the pure and perfect word of God. The important quality of a just discrimination is equally wanting in both.

There is no attempt in this volume to estimate the book of Genesis in any higher respect than in an historical sense—as a literal narrative of actual fact. And it breaks down completely when submitted to the test of historical criticism. The value of the work consists in showing how untenable is the traditional belief, how full of absurdities and inconsistencies, and incredible statements the early chapters of Genesis are. To this negative destructive criticism the author limits his attempt. And it is an easy task he thus sets himself to accomplish, for no part of the Bible is more vulnerable to attack. A still higher task remains when all the negative and destructive work is done—that of constructive criticism—the endeavour to apprehend the aim and purpose, the moral and religious significance of the narratives given, and the interest and value of Genesis as a contribution to the sacred literature of the old world. There is much to be said on these points, for the stories of Genesis with all their defects are not without their merits. This is a task, however, which Mr. Bradlaugh leaves to other hands. He is an iconoclast; his congenial work is breaking down the images of popular superstition. That is a needful work, no doubt, but it is only a preparatory one after all. The workman of higher gifts has to follow in order to satisfy a need which mere iconoclasm is powerless to meet.

C. F. B.

The Nineteenth Century. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co.

The Contemporary Review. Strahan and Co.

Neither of the Reviews this month is very strong in Theology or Philosophy, but their contents are extremely interesting and varied. The Army, the Egyptian Question, the London School Board and Ireland, are of course prominent subjects, and although there is little new to be said it is instructive to compare the views of writers who are authorities on these topics.

In the Nineteenth Century Professor Goldwin Smith has an article on "The Jews," which is styled "a deferred rejoinder." Dr. Adler certainly has the best of the controversy, and Mr. Goldwin Smith's article seems to us singularly prejudiced and ungenerous in view of the long ages of oppression which the Jews have endured at the hands of Christian Churches. The Professor seems anxious to banish the Jews from Europe, and advocates his favourite nostrum, the restoration of Palestine to Israel. But he himself reminds us of the reply of the Hebrew millionaire, "pas si bête." Why should they go? In his delightfully written article "Superstition in Arcady," the Rev. Dr. Jessop gives another of his invaluable sketches of life and customs of the peasantry in Norfolk. It is a strange story to town bred readers of the survival of the grossest and oldest superstitions in rural districts, especially in the Eastern counties. But there is a good lesson for the country clergy in the following sensible passage:—

"Of all the mistakes that country clergymen make—and we are none of us infallible,—not even the youngest—the greatest appears to me to be the mistake of obstinately refusing to know anything about the inner life and religious practices of the sectaries at their own doors. I do not believe there is one clergyman in a thousand who has ever attended a camp meeting or been present at a 'conventicle' in his life. Sure I am that the immense majority of my clerical brethren know no more about the teaching and practice which they denounce than they do about the rites of Cybele.

And yet I am most firmly persuaded that it is impossible for us to understand the agricultural labourers, unless we set ourselves humbly and earnestly to study the phenomena of their religious life and worship—theirs, I say, for unhappily it is not ours.”

And there is also fine charity in the following passage, which shows that the writer, unlike too many of his fraternity, strives to see things as they are:—

“Explain it how we will, and draw our inferences as we choose, there is no denying it that in hundreds of parishes in England the stuffy little chapel by the wayside has been the only place where for many a long day the very existence of religious emotion has been recognised, the only place in which the yearnings of the soul and its strong cryings and tears have been allowed to express themselves in the language of the moment unfettered by rigid forms; the only place where the agonised conscience has been encouraged or invited to rid itself of its sore burden by confession, and comforted by at least the semblance of sympathy, the only place where the peasantry have enjoyed the free expression of their opinions, and where, under an organisation elaborated with extraordinary sagacity, they have kept up a school of music, literature and politics, self-supporting and unaided by dole or subsidy—above all, a school of eloquence, in which the lowliest has become familiarised with the ordinary rules of debate, and has been trained to express himself with directness, vigour, and fluency. What the society of Jesus was among the more cultured classes in the sixteenth century, what the Friars were to the masses in the towns during the thirteenth, that the Primitive Methodists are in a fair way of becoming among the labouring classes in East Anglia in our own time; what they may develop into in the sequel is another question with which I am not immediately concerned.”

The article on “Modern Miracles” is a curious defence of the marvels of Lourdes, from the pen of the Rev. R. F. Clarke, S.J. We are quite willing for our own part to concede to Romanists one of their strong arguments that there is quite as strong evidence—nay, stronger—for the modern miracles as for any of the wonders of the Old Testament, and many of those of the New, especially those recorded in the Acts of the Apostles.

In the Contemporary Review there are two articles bearing upon religion. One is entitled “Progressive Judaism,” and is from the pen of Frances Power Cobbe. It is a fine commentary on Mr. Claude Montefiore’s article in the September number of the same Review on the new Reform movement among the Jews. Miss Cobbe, after briefly restating Mr. Montefiore’s position from her own point of view, traces some of the consequences which may be expected to follow to Christendom should we actually behold in our time Judaism emancipated from its tribal limitations, and a portion of the Jewish race, with all its marvellous gifts and influences, coming forth as an organised Theistic Church, possessing that which the Theisms which have sprung out of Christianity have always surely lacked, a root firmly planted in the deepest soil of history. The problem is, can Judaism further develop itself along its own lines? Or is it (as is generally believed) destined to permanent immobility, with no possible future before it, save gradual dismemberment and decay? In discussing this problem Miss Cobbe gives an instructive account of the three parties among the modern Jews, the Orthodox, the Reformed, and the New Reform or Broad Church Jews; this last party, of which Mr. Montefiore is a representative, is regarded with marked distrust by the two others. From all that we gather from the Jewish journals we fear that the article overestimates the importance of this new Reform movement among the Jews, and that in some of her hopes and inferences “the wish is father to the thought.” But if it does amount to a real movement we agree with Miss Cobbe that many Christian churches may draw valuable lessons from the presence amongst them of a truly reformed Judaism, and could behold at least with respect “a simple and noble worship, at once historical and philosophic, without priestly claims, and utterly at war with every form of monasticism and superstition.” Miss Cobbe adverts, at the close of her article, to the possible bearings of a great Jewish Reformation on that not inconsiderable number of persons who all over Europe are hanging loosely upon, or dropping silently away from the Christian Churches, and have abandoned what Dr. Martineau has called the “Messianic Mythology.” She remarks, while at the beginning and middle of this century, not a few quitted their old folds, and under the names of “Unitarians,” “Free Christians” and “Theists,” and have thenceforth stood confessedly apart, of late years the disposition to make any external schism has apparently died away, and is making way to new phases of development, of which the Salvation Army affords a sample. Among cultivated people, she says, subtle discrimination of difference and partisanship as regards questions of taste are indefinitely stronger than that desired for a common worship. For our own part we never feel this more strongly than when hearing some of our many revised liturgies, all of which, with one or two exceptions—and the remarkably frigid book of “Ten Services,” is not one of the exceptions—seem to us to realise so little of the spirit of “common worship,” and to suggest only “subtle discrimination of differences and questions of taste,” and we fear there is far more truth than we like to acknowledge in the following passage:—

“Englishmen generally still cling to public worship, but it is chiefly where an ancient liturgy supplies by old and holy words a dreamy music of devotion, into which each feels at liberty to weave his own thoughts. Where the demand is made for prayers which shall definitely express the faith and aspirations of the modern minded worshipper there the subtleties and the fastidiousness come into play, and instead of being drawn together, men sorrowfully discover that they are made conscious by common worship of a hundred discrepancies of opinion, a thousand disharmonies of taste and feeling. In all things we men and women of the modern Athens are not ‘too superstitious,’ but too critical; and in religion, which necessarily touches us most vitally, our critical spirit threatens to paralyse us with shyness.”

Mis Cobbe fervently adds:—

“Let reformed Judaism relight the old golden candlestick, and set it aloft, and it will give light unto all which are in the house—not only the house of Israel, but in the House of Humanity.”

For our own part we hold that it is a reformed Christianity not a reformed Judaism which is destined to be the light and life of the world; and we look for the historical basis of our religion in the whole providential development of Christendom from the earliest promulgation of the Gospel, and not in “the grand old foundations laid by Moses.” “Sing no more the song of Moses, lift on high the song of the Lamb.”

There are two other exceedingly interesting articles in the Contemporary bearing on religious subjects. One is a delightful sketch of “Dean Stanley as a Preacher,” by so competent a judge as Canon Farrar. The article adds little to what we already know, but it shows quite clearly how little he was really appreciated in the Church which he loved so much, and of whose future he latterly was so desponding. We gladly record the emphatic words in which Canon Farrar notices “the ignorant and bigoted stupidity which wrote and preached about his ‘soul-destroying doctrines’”—a bigotry much more prevalent than is commonly imagined:—

“All who cared for truth knew that when a profoundly irreligious and immoral religionism talked of him as ‘a septic, and even as an infidel,’ it did but speak lies according to its wont, and if even his friends sometimes desired in him the more frequent, definite, and formal statement of the great Christian Verities, they knew that, so far as this was absent, the absence was due partly to the horror of the religiosity which makes light of the elementary graces, while it gives exclusive prominence to a verbal and conventional orthodoxy; partly to the deep sense that our knowledge of God and of Christ cannot be adequately expressed by abstract technicalities and scholastic formulæ; partly to the feeling that on many even of those points of doctrine which are deemed essential men of profound holiness and most saintly purity had taken very different views; partly to the unalterable conviction that the weightiest matters of the law were justice, mercy, and truth, and that the way to inherit eternal life was ‘to keep the Commandments,’ the way to come before the high God was to love mercy and to do justly, and to walk humbly with Him.”

Yet the “verbal and conventional Orthodoxy” was after all right in its instinct. Dean Stanley did reject nearly all that it regards as sacred, and in the whole constitution of his mind was essentially rationalistic, while profoundly reverential in regard to all that is really worthy of reverence. The other article to which we referred is that by the Dean of Shanghai (thé Rev. C. H. Butcher), entitled “Seventeen Years After.” The Dean left England for China in 1864; he returned home in 1881. In a very interesting sketch he notes some of the chief contrasts which he found between the Church which he left and the Church which he found. In 1864 the storm occasioned by the publication of “Essays and Reviews” was just dying out. Bishop Colenso’s book on the Pentateuch was frightening the timid. The danger most dreaded was from Latitudinarianism within the pale. “It was feared that the Church would suffer from a strong determination of reason to the head.” It is not a disorder to which Churches are subject, and time has shown that this fear at least was groundless. Then the Broad Church party was for the moment the disturbing element. Now it is the turn of the High Church party, and the victory for the present is “won by the party most violently opposed to that which favours freedom of thought.” Nevertheless, “while Edward Bouverie Pusey was the prophet of the priesthood, Arthur Penrhyn Stanley was the prophet of the people.” A large portion of the English laity are Broad Churchmen. “At present hundreds of men who seventeen years ago were thankful that the Church was enlarging its sheltering charity to them, are turning away disheartened. Some attend services from old habit in a mechanical way; others are slipping into Agnosticism.” Still the Dean comes to the consolatory and we think the just conclusion, that both the Pulpit and the Parish are in a more satisfactory condition now than they were seventeen years ago, both as regards the quality of the discourses delivered—thanks to the influence of Robertson and Maurice—and the unwearied activity of the clergy in their parochial work, to which we also are always glad to pay our tribute of respect.

We have spent so much time on these interesting articles that we can only briefly state the subjects of the remaining articles in the Contemporary. They are a Cambridge lecture by Professor Max Müller on “The Truthful Character of the Hindus,” in which we venture to think the case is a little overstated, the Oriental character not being generally conspicuous for this virtue; “Public Education in France,” in which M. Jules Simon vigorously combats what he regards as the intolerant policy of the Liberals towards the Roman Catholics and their schools; “An Alsatian Manchester,” an instructive account of Mulhouse and its benevolent institutions for the benefit of the working classes, by A. L. Walker; “The French in Tonking,” a narrative by R. S. Gundry of unscrupulous intervention in that tributary of China; “Spoiling the Egyptians,” a conclusive rejoinder by J. Seymour Keay to the feeble article by Professor Sheldon Amos, which has already been demolished by our own contributor, “P. H. W.,” and finally, “Progress and Poverty,” a criticism by the eminent Belgian economist, E. de Laveleye, of Mr. George’s popular work on the Land Question.

Returning to the Nineteenth Century the most interesting among the remaining nine papers is Mr. Matthew Arnold’s “Liverpool Address,” of which we gave some account at the time of its delivery. It will be remembered that the keynote is the sentence, “If I had to fix upon the great want at this moment of the three principal nations of Europe, I should say that the great want of the French was morality, that the great want of the Germans was civil courage, and that our own great want was lucidity.” The passage is unjust to the French, who are probably quite as moral as the Germans or English. If “seriousness” be substituted for morality there would be more truth in it, and there is some justice in the French impression that our seriousness, invaluable as it is, loses much of its value because it is accompanied by so many false ideas and so much prejudice. The remaining articles are “The Present State of the Army,” by Major-General Sir F. S. Roberts, who advocates the long-service system in opposition to Sir Garnet Wolseley, and other authorities; "Irish Revolution and English Liberals," by John Morley—a grave indictment of the oppressive Landlordism and our official misgovernment; "Public Works in London," an interesting statement by Mr. G. Shaw-Lefevre, M.P., of the proposed improvements and new Government offices, with plans, at the West-end; "Railway Labour," by Margaret E. Harkness, a much-needed plea for our over-worked railway servants; "The Irish Land Commissioners," by Lord Ebrington, M.P., who defends the Commissioners from partisan charges; "Notes on School Board Questions," by Sydney C. Buxton, a clear statement and vindication of the policy of the Board; "The Ministry and the Clôture," by the Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, who shows that it is not the Ministry but Parliament which is on its trial; and finally, "England in Egypt," in which Mr. Edward Dicey, advocates with great ability his well-known theory of an English Protectorate, while acknowledging that it does not yet come within the range of practical politics, and recommends what has since been carried out—the despatch to Egypt of a special envoy.

Both the Reviews this month, it will be seen, are characterised by the unusual interest and variety of their contents.

More Magazines.

Good Words continues the two serial stories, "Kept in the Dark," by Anthony Trollope, and "The Golden Shaft," by Charles Gibbon. Among the other articles are a practical homily, by R. W. Dale, M.A., entitled "The Grace of Christ a Law of Conduct"; a very interesting account of "John Hunter of Craigcrook" and the literary society of Edinburgh he gathered around him, by Dr. W. C. Smith; "Rambles with the Romans," by Irving Montague, with four characteristic illustrations; a continuation of Dr. Fleming Stevenson's valuable papers on "Bible Truths and Eastern Ways"; an account of "A Quaint Old Town in the Tyrol," by Charlotte J. Weeks, the said town being Sterzing, of which several excellent illustrations are given; the third part of Dr. B. W. Richardson's exhaustive treatise on "Tricycling in Relation to Health"; a sermonette by the Bishop of Rochester on "Training"; one of the Rev. J. G. Wood's popular science sketches on "Bee Life"; the third part of the Rev. M. Kaufmann's sketches of "Christian Socialists"; and finally, a graphic description of "Walworth Fair on Sunday Morning," by E. H. Bramley.

The Sunday Magazine, like all the others, has its two serial stories, "Weighed and Found Wanting," by George Macdonald, and "What's in a Name?" by Sarah Doudney. Mrs. L. T. Meade also continues her popular story for the young, "King Roy." Dr. A. M. Symington gives an appreciative biographical sketch of the late "Alexander Raleigh, D.D.," and "Legends connected with Tourists' Cathedrals," by E. Neville Johns, a very attractive paper, with a capital illustration of Mont St. Michel. "From Darkness to Light" is an interesting narrative by Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming of the American Mission in Hawaii; and finally we have to notice the "Sunday Evenings for Children," by S. G. Prout, hardly so striking as preceding papers in the same series.

Our Little Ones. London: Griffith and Farran.—This is the first issue of a new volume, the price of which has been reduced by one half. So beautiful a magazine at so low a price as that for which it is now sold has not before, we believe, been offered to the little people of England. It is orthodox in its tone, but the illustrations and general get-up are very excellent.

We have received from Messrs. Isbister and Co. Good Cheer, the Christmas number of Good Words, containing two capital stories, "The Two Heroines of Plumplington," by Anthony Trollope, and "Hagar," by Miss Linskill; and Little Snow Flakes, the prettily illustrated Christmas number of the Sunday Magazine, containing several dainty children's stories, in which we are glad to observe the imaginative element is prominent.

ESSEX-STREET CHAPEL, STRAND, was on Wednesday opened for a short devotional service at half-past one P.M., to be continued weekly. About seven or eight persons only were present.

Religious Intelligence.

PRESENTATION TO THE REV. G. H. WELLS, M.A.

SOIREE IN THE MEMORIAL HALL, MANCHESTER.
A soiree was held in the Memorial Hall, Manchester, on Tuesday, the 7th inst., when the portrait of the Rev. G. H. Wells, M.A., was presented by the subscribers to the trustees of the hall, and an address to the Rev. G. H. Wells. The chair was occupied by the Rev. WILLIAM GASKELL, M.A., and among those present were the Revs. Charles Beard, B.A., Liverpool; P. M. Higginson, M.A., Styal; John Cropper, M.A., Eccles; Dendy Agate, B.A., Gorton; James Harwood, B.A., Monton; James Black, M.A., Todmorden; John Moore, Swinton; C. C. Coe, F.R.G.S., Bolton; W. C. Squier, Stand; J. T. Marriott, Strangeways; C. T. Poynting, B.A., Platt; S. A. Steinthal, Cross-street; W. G. Cadman, Miles Platting; Wm. Mitchell, Ardwick; T. Lloyd Jones, Hale; J. C. Odgers, M.A., Altrincham; Adam Rushton, Macclesfield; John Russell, Macclesfield; J. K. Smith, Flowery Field; Douglas Walmsley, B.A., Bury; Halliwell Thomas, Dob Lane; J. B. Lloyd, Knutsford; Henry Fogg, Ormskirk; Geo. Ride, Chorley; Joseph Freeston, Stalybridge; R. Pilcher, B.A., Warrington; F. H. Jones, B.A., Oldham; J. McDowell, Pendleton; B. Walker, Rochdale-road; G. H. Vance, B.D., Dukinfield; W. Harrison, Glossop; J. Bevan, Bolton; Messrs. Alderman Grundy, John Hadfield, Archibald Winterbottom, Harry Rawson, G. W. Rayner Wood, John Dendy, junr., Jas. Howard Brooks, B.A., Thos. Diggles, Henry Leigh, James Bennett, Smith, Golland, John Brooks, Edwin Winsor, Stansfield Grimshaw, G. H. Grimshaw, H. J. Leppock, John Mellor, Wm. Marshall, W. H. Herford, B.A., Edward Lawton, W. H. Mellor, Edward Taylor, and Thos. Tonge.

The Rev. WM. GASKELL said: Ladies and Gentlemen,—I have peculiar pleasure in taking the chair—I can hardly say in filling it—(laughter)—on this interesting occasion. On one ground at least I am entitled to occupy it; that is my having known the friend to whom we are come to pay a tribute of respect much longer than any one else here present. Going back in memory nearly seventy years, I find myself seated in the gallery of Cairo-street Chapel, Warrington, and looking down upon a seat close to the pulpit, amongst other children I see there a boy, smaller than myself, whose name I chance to know is George Wells. Little did we either of us dream then how closely we should come to be associated in high and holy work. I need not say how faithfully and well he has done his part of the work. By your presence here you show that you acknowledge it. Much of it has been of the quiet unostentatious kind which wins no notice from the outside world, but which is known by its results. Remembering as I do well the condition of the Gorton congregation when Mr. Wells took charge of it, and considering the position which it now occupies, I can testify in the strongest manner to the obligation under which it lies to him. Well may he be proud, that during his ministry the beautiful Brookfield Church has been erected—(applause)—and when people there speak of him they may appropriately say, Simoniumentum quæris circumspice—(applause). As secretary of the Widow's Fund—(applause)—by his untiring attention to its interests during a long series of years, many of you are aware how much it owes to him—(applause)—and especially the ministers of the Provincial Assembly. We cannot but feel sad to think that we are to part with him owing to failing health, but I trust he will often come amongst us—(applause). I feel glad that we shall have something here in the portrait which is to be presented to-night to remind us of him. I remember a good many years ago at one of those Christmas dinners which we used to have in the cellar under the Greengate chapel, or, as Dr. Shepherd called it, the "crypt"—(laughter)—the chairman having to take his brother's place at the dinner, in giving his health, said, "My brother deserves to be drunk as much as any man"—(laughter). If I may be allowed to parody that I would say there is no man that deserves better to be hung than my friend on my right—(laughter and applause)—and I am sure that if the representatives on the walls of Dr. Beard and myself were able to speak on this occasion they would say how gladly they received into their company the likeness of my friend, Mr. Wells—(applause).

The Rev. C. T. POYNTING having read letters regretting inability to be present from the Revs. Dr. Martineau, Alexander Gordon, Dr. Drummond, and others, said that, when something over eighteen months ago, they heard that Mr. Wells felt obliged from his failing health to sever a connection of nearly forty-five years standing with his own congregation, every one in the neighbourhood who had the honour of knowing him, not perhaps like the Chairman, but as a friend, a councillor, and a co-worker who was ever ready to give his best services, his most tender sympathy, and his wisest counsel—everyone felt they were about to suffer great personal loss. His congregation felt, and rightly, that they would like to take their farewell of him in private, and it was not until the farewell was over and Mr. Wells had made his preparations for leaving England that his friends suddenly found they had no opportunity of saying to him good-bye. Mr. Wells had to leave England for a more genial climate to enjoy a period of well-earned rest, and they felt it would be more agreeable to his wishes if they welcomed him home again, and said how glad they were to see him back in their midst. They could not think of offering Mr. Wells any ordinary testimonial, for they knew he did not care for such marks. They felt they could give him a greater pleasure; and in order to add one more link to his long chain of services, they asked him to sit for his portrait in order that they might preserve for their children and their children's children the features so well loved. Mr. Wells had done so, and Mr. Percy, the well-known Manchester artist, had done him full justice, the result being the picture they had that evening to offer to the Trustees of the Hall. There was only one building suitable for such a portrait, and that was the Memorial Hall—(applause). The Hall represented the great ideas they were proud of, and they looked upon it as their proper home where they and their children and their children's children would meet—(applause). Another reason was that the Hall already contained the portraits of two men whose names would ever be honoured in their churches—(applause)—two men who were held most dear by Mr. Wells—those men were typical—Dr. Beard, the earnest, faithful minister of the word, a theologian, and Mr. Gaskell, a man of letters, who had been their bishop—and now they were going to have the portrait of Mr. Wells typical as the faithful pastor and earnest and zealous preacher, who had worked at home and had been devoted to the Sunday-school. Mr. Poynting then unveiled and formally presented the portrait to the Trustees.

The Rev. CHAS. BEARD then read the beautifully illuminated address, which was as follows:

To the Rev. George Henry Wells, M.A.

Dear Mr. Wells,—We have to-day the pleasure of presenting your portrait to the Trustees of the Memorial Hall, to hang beside those of friends and colleagues whom none hold in a more affectionate esteem than yourself.

And we desire to take this opportunity of expressing to you the respect with which your character is regarded, and the sympathy which attends the close of your ministry throughout the district, and the religious body with which you have been so long connected.

To have been able to serve the cause of truth and goodness for forty-eight years with unfailing powers, and, until lately, with unbroken health, is a great gift of God, for which we humbly thank Him on your behalf, as well as our own. But it has been your special happiness, not only to have laboured in the field, but to have witnessed the ingathering of the harvest.

The beautiful church which has been built at Gorton, and the large and united congregation which worships in it, are a proof of your ministry, which renders all external witness superfluous. Yet we may be permitted to record here the fraternal sympathy with which those of us who have known you longest have followed your manly and self-consistent course, the admiration of your younger brethren for a courage that has never faltered and a zeal that has never flagged, the debt we all, ministers and laymen, owe to your constant courtesy and your freely given help. If Brookfield Church will be your monument upon the scene of your personal ministry, the brilliant prosperity of the Widows' Fund, so largely due to your practical ability, will keep your memory green among many generations of ministers—your contemporaries and successors, who will owe to you some immunity from the graver cares of life, and a lighter heart in regard to the lot of those whom they leave behind them. It only remains that we should express our cordial hope that some quiet years of happy converse with your friends may still be before you. We know that if they are given they will be spent by you so far as your strength permits in the same service as that to which your life has been devoted.—We are, dear Mr. Wells, faithfully and affectionately yours,

WM. GASKELL, Chairman.

HARRY RAWSON, Vice-Chairman.

THOS. DIGGLES, Treasurer.

CHAS. T. POYNTING, Secretary.

and nearly 200 other signatures.

Mr. BEARD said if he had any lingering doubt as to his right to a place among the younger ministers (and they knew such prepossessions faded away very slowly from men's minds) the doubt would be entirely removed by the unhappy fact that he stood before them in virtue of his seniority, being the next to Mr. Wells on the roll of the ministers of the Provincial Assembly. He could not forget the fact that his thirty-two years of service covered exactly two-thirds of Mr. Wells's forty-eight years, and, as a large part of the time was spent by him in Mr. Wells's immediate neighbourhood, and as during the whole of the time there had been a close friendship between them, he (Mr. Beard) was perhaps as well qualified as any one else (except their venerable chairman) to speak of what Mr. Wells had been. He must even confess that he knew Gorton and the Gorton congregation before Mr. Wells became its minister. For one of his earliest recollections went back nearly fifty years, before he, Mr. Wells, was yet at Gorton. When he (Mr. Beard) went to Gee Cross in 1850 he expected a cordial and fraternal greeting from Mr. Wells, and received it, and from that time their friendship had never flagged; but on both sides had grown deeper and more affectionate with the lapse of time. He recollected the old Gorton Chapel very well, and had none but pleasing recollections of it. He was afraid that his heart was rather with the old Presbyterian chapel in the valley than with the new church upon the hill. He had never preached in the new church, and he dared say he never should, but he had aired his youthful eloquence pretty often in the old one. He could assure them it was a peaceful dispensation at which one looked out at from the pulpit on the green fields and waving trees, especially on Sunday afternoons, when the prospect was almost as peaceful within—(laughter). At the same time good and solid work was being done there to a large extent among the generation who had now passed away, and the splendours of the new church would have been impossible but for the long years of steady devotion to duty, unaccompanied by any outward reverberation of fame, which Mr. Wells had passed in what was then a somewhat obscure village pastorate. Gorton had now become part of Manchester, and Mr. Wells had become part of the Unitarian life of the district around Manchester—(applause). Neither had changed perhaps except for the riper and the better, and they all rejoiced in the prosperity of the Brookfield Church, which was a remarkable instance of what might be done by steady daily devotion to work. Mr. Wells would be the first to smile at him if he assumed that Mr. Wells had done his work by the force of very brilliant talents or profound learning, or anything of the kind. He had his abilities, as they all knew, and his well furnished mind; but the strength of his career and the secret of his success had lain in the steady industry and constant usefulness which entitled him to his place in their honour and esteem—(applause). Again, as to the Widows' Fund, of which he (Mr. Beard) occupied the position of president, a position in which he had been preceded by a succession of the best men whom he had known in the ministry. He hoped, however, they would not imagine for a moment he was more than a titular king, or that he wore anything but a paper crown—(laughter). He was like the Merovingian king, who had a mayor of the palace always at his elbow, who did the real work of ruling and governing, and left his monarch the empty show and title of royalty. His (Mr. Beard's) mayor of the palace was most obedient, and not only so, but treated his titular royalty with the deepest and gravest respect—(laughter)—and would make him believe, if he (Mr. Beard) did not know a great deal better, it was he (Mr. Beard) and not Mr. Wells who was ruling and managing affairs—(cheers). He was proud of the fact that he had something to do with placing Mr. Wells in the position of secretary, and no members of the Widows' Fund had ever for one single moment regretted his election—(applause). Twenty-two years ago, when Mr. Wells became secretary, the capital of the fund was £12,000, now it was £50,000—(applause)—and it was growing at the rate of about £3,000 a year, and might possibly grow faster in time to come. He did not mean to say that that was not owing to a considerable extent to the natural capacity for expansion possessed by the property of the fund. If it had not had that capacity Mr. Wells could not have accomplished the great financial results he had, but it was due to his zeal and ability that the Widows' Fund had made no mistakes, but on the contrary had grown in prosperity from that day to the present. To the poor ministers it was an institution of the very greatest value, indeed; for all, but for men who could only afford a comparatively small sum for life assurance it was a great thing that the resources of the Fund were such as to enable them to look forward with confidence to a proper provision being made for their wives and families in case of their death. The Widows' Fund has also done much to draw ministers of the district together at the annual meetings for its management, and in promoting that fraternal feeling Mr. Wells had had no little to do. Mr. Wells was his (Mr. Beard's) father's friend, and he was also his friend. It was to him a source of considerable grief that Mr. Wells should find it necessary for his health's sake to abandon the active service of the ministry. He felt that one of his few seniors was passing away, and though one got hardened to work and responsibility it was, after all, a serious thing to think that the burden of the great battle they had to fight, and which needed fighting with so much courage, lay year by year more heavily upon one's own shoulders, because those who had borne the brunt in former years were retiring from the field. He believed, however, that as long as Mr. Wells had health and life given him he would not draw back his hand from any work he was able to do—(applause). He then presented the address to Mr. Wells.

The Rev. G. H. WELLS (who was received with applause) said: I deeply appreciate the feeling which associates me in future years with the two reverend leaders with whom so many of my past years have been spent. The ties which bound me to Dr. Beard are sacred now to me. They are among those which unite me to the heavenly world. With Mr. Gaskell and my oldest associate and friend, I rejoice to feel that I am still permitted to see the increasing strength and widening influence of those principles of religious truth for which we both have worked side by side in never failing fraternal concord—(applause). I thank you for placing these loving remembrances in this Memorial Hall; I thank you that by your kindly thought we three shall be as united in the memory of those who follow us as we have always been in common labours and common aspirations. I gratefully acknowledge the good gift of God, which has permitted me to work, as you assure me with some measure of success, in the Lord's vineyard. If by God's blessing I have not been allowed to spend my strength in vain, and as your assurance bids me believe that I have not altogether laboured in vain, the thought cannot but help to cheer me in my present time of failing strength. I may say that the condition of my beloved church at Gorton, with its many signs of hopeful promise, is oftentimes a source of real joy to me. The best years of my life, the most earnest prayers which I could offer, and I may say the most honest work which I could give, have been gladly devoted to my ministry, and I am grateful to you for the kindly words which you have spoken of the fruit of my exertions. I thank you all. It will be an encouragement to my brother ministers to see that friends in the laity are so willing to give credit to one of them for his endeavours faithfully to serve in the work of the Christian ministry. And to my brethren, whose names are attached to this address, what shall I say? If I thought the time which I have given to the interest of the Widows' Fund have borne the fruit you say, no one who knows how deep an affection I feel for those whose trials and difficulties I have shared will doubt that I am grateful that our Heavenly Father has guided our counsels to success. I cannot forget that I have been privileged while acting for the Fund with men like the late Franklin Baker, of Bolton, and with some I am glad to think of as still among us, and with them to form intimate friendships which have been and are the pride and joy of my life. I am conscious that my words do not do justice to what I feel, but I shall treasure this address while I am spared on earth, and I am sure that those who are nearest and dearest to me will value when I am gone the assurance which it gives of your love and sympathy. I can only thank you for your goodness to me, and pray that God may richly bless you in your lives, and in those sacred duties which have been so long a bond of union between us—(applause).

Alderman GRUNDY, as chairman of the Memorial Hall Trustees, in accepting the picture on their behalf, said they did so most willingly and cordially. It completed a trio of ministers who had worked together during a long life. It was therefore exceedingly fitting that their portraits should hang together. The trustees would take good care of the new portrait, and would see that those who had worked together in life in death should not be divided—(applause).

Mr. STANFIELD GRIMSHAW moved, and Mr. THOS. DIGGLES seconded, the usual vote of thanks to the chairman, in putting which Mr. HARRY RAWSON said that Mr. Wells's judgment, combined with his habits of punctuality and order, and his business aptitude had made him the adviser of a great number of persons to whom he had been that friend in need who was a friend indeed. In the neighbourhood of Gorton many who had left young children with few or no relatives had been satisfied that Mr. Wells would look after them, and that consciousness had taken away one of the pangs of death. In apprenticing youths, in advising with parents, in doing everything in that neighbourhood that he could be called upon to do, he had been a very "Man of Ross," of whom it was said, and the distinction seemed to apply with great propriety to their friend,

"Him, portioned maids apprenticed orphans blest
The young who labour, and the old who rest."

The resolution was then put to the meeting and carried with acclamation, the singing of the National Anthem terminating the proceedings.

The room and entrance hall were tastefully decorated with plants and flowers kindly supplied by Mr. Joseph Broome, of Didsbury.

During the evening selections of appropriate sacred music were given, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Rawson, who presided at the piano-forte.

STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL.

OPENING OF NEW SCHOOL-ROOM.

On Sunday Stamford-street Chapel was re-opened for public worship, after having been closed for several weeks for repairs and alterations. These have been very effectively carried out under the superintendence of Mr. H. Brace, architect, and the chapel is now transformed from one of the coldest and dreariest into one of the brightest and pleasantest interiors of any place of the kind in the metropolis.

Professor J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A., preached an eloquent sermon in the morning vindicating the position and usefulness of a free church, and dedicating the building anew to the worship of God and the service of man. Rev. W. COPELAND BOWIE preached in the evening, dwelling on the work and aims of the church in reference to the wants of the people who lived around it. The congregations on both occasions were very large.

On Wednesday evening the new school-room, which has been erected by the same architect on the top of the chapel, and is a very elegant and commodious room, was re-opened at a public meeting, which was attended by more than four hundred persons, comprising ministers and members of several other congregations in the metropolis. After tea a recital was given on the organ—which has been reconstructed, added to and enlarged by Mr. F. W. Noakes, a former member of the congregation, now organist of Unity Church, Islington, and hon. organist to the London Auxiliary Sunday School Association. At half-past seven the chair was taken in the new school-room by FREDERICK NETTLEFOLD, Esq., a munificent donor to the chapel and school, who was supported on the platform by the Revs. W. C. Bowie, R. Spears, H. Ierson, T. L. Marshall, T. W. Freckelton, Miss Helen Taylor, member of the London School Board, and Messrs. S. S. Tayler, N. M. Tayler, and H. N. Lee, the officers of the congregation and school. In other parts of the room we observed the Revs. P. H. Wicksteed, J. E. Stead, W. Wheaton, W. K. Rowe (Baptist); C. H. Waid, F. Summers; G. Carter, the Misses Sharpe, Mrs. Hall, Dr. Plimpton, Messrs. Hugon Tayler, B.A., E. S. Anthony, M.A., J. T. Preston, E. Plimpton, D. Martineau, H. Y. Brace, H. Brace, the architect, W. Plimpton, N. Waterall, R. Bartram, J. Green, W. Cox, A. McKewen, H. Jeffery, G. Warren, I. M. Wade, W. C. Barrow, W. Grisbrook, E. Tagart, &c.

The steps of the platform in the school-room and of the new dais in the chapel were decorated with a very choice display of flowers; and at intervals during the evening glees were sung in admirable style by the chapel choir, under the direction of Mr. George Callow, Mr. F. Robinson presiding at the piano.

Mr. NETTLEFOLD, in opening the proceedings, referred to the help given some years ago by the Stamford-street friends and their then minister, Mr. Spears, to the Carter-lane schools, in which he and others were so deeply interested, while at the same time they were doing so much good work in their own neighbourhood. This congregation had always paid the greatest attention to the work of religious education in the neighbourhood, and they found it ever growing in their hands. They had hitherto conducted the work in the gallery of the chapel, and in the Board Schools in the neighbourhood. They had long felt the want of such a commodious room of their own as that they had now built; and he fully expected that in a few years they would be assembled together to inaugurate a separate building. The freer and more liberal policy in regard to secular education will make the religious education of the young more and more important. The work of the Board School and of the Sunday-school is now essentially different, and is to be pursued by different methods. The Sunday-school is no longer an imitation of the Board School, and there need be no competition in teaching the elements of knowledge. He could do away with the words Sunday-school and call it Children's Church—(loud applause)—and would make it as bright and attractive a place as possible, so that both teachers and children might take a pleasure in coming to it. The Sunday-school was only a portion of the work to be carried on in the new room, but lectures, classes, and various institutions would be centred there. Mr. Bowie was striving to influence a large number of people unconnected with any religious denomination, and this was a work in which they could all wish him all success—(applause). The special cause of the meeting that evening was to inaugurate this handsome and capacious room, and now he had great pleasure in declaring it open—(loud applause)—and he hoped this building would enable them to gain an ever widening influence in that crowded neighbourhood—(applause).

The Rev. W. C. BOWIE, who was received with enthusiasm, stated that he had received letters expressing regret at not being able to be present from Mr. Rathbone, M.P., Sir J. A. Lawrence, Bart., M.P., Alderman W. Lawrence, M.P., Mr. C. H. James, M.P., and Mr. David Ainsworth, M.P., Mr. Cohen, M.P. for Southwark, had accepted an invitation, and he hoped to see him there in the course of the evening. They had also invited the members of the School Board for Southwark, and were glad to have Miss Taylor with them—(loud applause). He had also received a letter from the Rev. G. M. Murphy (Independent), member of the School Board, who would have been present but for a service of his own. Professors J. E. Carpenter and J. Drummond expressed great regret at not being able to be present. Mr. Bowie thanked the chairman for his presence and encouraging speech, and stated that he had given £200 to wards the new room. They still wanted about £690. He paid a well-deserved tribute to the architect for the manner in which he had done the work and the care he had exercised throughout the proceedings—(applause).

The Rev. T. L. MARSHALL said he had been asked by an orthodox minister present if Stamford-street Chapel were the cathedral of the Unitarians. A cathedral was the model church of the diocese, and Stamford-street might well be considered as the model Unitarian church in London, considering the amount of work done there. He heartily congratulated them on this new evidence of their prosperity, remembering the congregation as he did in its day of small things. He had always been impressed with a sentence in that delightful book, "Friends in Council," to the effect that the constituents of an ideal church were a simple creed, allowing the greatest intellectual latitude, a devoted ministry, and a stately ceremonial. They all knew that he was strongly in favour of the last; they had a simple creed embodied in the prayers they offered and the hymns they sang, and they wanted no more definite form—(applause)—and they had a devoted ministry in the person of Mr. Bowie. But he wondered that Sir Arthur Helps had omitted the fourth and most important constituent of the ideal church, and that was a devoted congregation, without which minister and ceremonial could do but little. That congregation had proved their devotedness to a good cause in the old days of adversity and depression, and now they were reaping their reward in the great success of recent years, to which his friend Mr. Spears was the first to lead the way—(applause).

Mr. S. S. TAYLER as secretary of the Sunday-school spoke on behalf of the teachers, and referred to the hope they had for many years entertained of having a fitting school-room for the work, which had long outgrown the old accommodation. They all felt deeply grateful to the friends who had come that night to show their sympathy and co-operation. He referred to the coming of Mr. Spears, and more than twenty years ago as having inspired them with new zeal and activity and established a school which had so greatly prospered.

The Rev. R. SPEARS, who was warmly received, spoke of the example set to him by this congregation and the strength they had given him in the work he was doing at Stepney. In the course of a very interesting and practical speech he detailed several instances of the humble efforts of Sunday-school teachers which had led to permanently good results.

MISS HELEN TAYLER, M.L.S.B., referred to the pleasure she felt at coming out of the hard contests and sectional jealousies of the rough warfare in which she was engaged into that peaceful haven where all is calm and harmony and kindness. All this was due to the consciousness of brotherly effort in good work for those who need their help. She had always been an advocate of Sunday-schools, but the time has passed when it would do the great and good work it once did, the teaching of the simple elements of knowledge to those who had no other time or opportunity for instructions. Those who did that work were pioneers of education, and did a nobler and more difficult task than any one connected with School Boards can now boast of doing. The outside secular schools have the task of teaching the elements of instruction which Sunday-schools are to teach them how to use. The great question is what will be made of Christian knowledge. It is for the Sunday-school to take care that it shall be a blessing to the scholar and to others. It is a grand thing to see this voluntary work carried out so swiftly, so well and so earnestly. She had always been an admirer of voluntary schools, and would never lift a finger to injure them, because she believed in voluntary work and the great principles of vitality and variety in character and methods of action. The children are the mere rough material out of which they were to form a complete and perfect character. It was a thing to be extremely desired that those who were fortunate in this world's goods should come among the children of the poor and set them an example of simplicity of speech and warmth of sympathy, which were the foundations of the moral character, and in that assembly she could safely add that this moral life is the foundation of the religious life—(applause). She was glad to hear that this room was to be used for a great variety of good purposes, and they would have the satisfaction of knowing that many young people would get their first impressions of self-sacrifice and high and noble service in this building, and could look back with joy to the recollections of their childhood, while they themselves would have that sweetest of all rewards, the gratitude of the poor—(loud and prolonged applause).

We regret that on account of the exigencies of our space we can do but little more than give a brief reference to the excellent speeches that followed.

The Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON delivered an earnest and eminently practical address on the duties of parents and teachers and the spirit in which they should set about their work.

The Rev. W. K. ROWE, of Streatham, followed with some appropriate remarks on the importance of the work of educating the children of the poor, and as a minister in another household of the faith wished the congregation and their ministers all success in their work.

The Rev. H. IERSON also offered his congratulations, and reminded them that they had to keep pace with the Board Schools and go side by side with them, as well as the principle on which they are constructed will allow. He congratulated the architect and advocated making the school attractive and ornamental with pictures, and sculpture and flowers.

Mr. BRACE on being called for suitably acknowledged the compliment, and gave some satisfactory statements respecting the strength of the new room.

Mr. D. MARTINEAU spoke of the past history of the Stamford-street Church, of which his grandfather had been one of the trustees, and congratulated them very heartily on the work they had done.

The Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED in very graceful terms proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, which was seconded by Mr. E. PLIMPTON and carried with great acclamation.

Mr. N. M. TAYLER announced that Mr. Nettlefold had given an additional donation of £50 towards paying off the debt.

A brief acknowledgment from the CHAIRMAN brought to a close the proceedings of an unusually interesting and enthusiastic meeting.

The following is a full account of the new building, and the alterations in the chapel:—The pulpit, which now forms a part of the details of the chapel, has been set back and placed upon a raised platform, at the back of which is the stand for the organ front, the organ being now placed between the two columns, coved in shape and forming a sounding board for the pulpit. The vestry has been enlarged, and is now reached by passing under the pulpit. In the body of the chapel the seats are rearranged and placed upon a raised floor, round which hot-water pipes for heating run. Lead light windows of various tints, and designed to harmonise with the building, replace those of old, while for artificial lighting a sun burner has been fixed to do the greater amount of lighting, while to relieve the recess behind the columns and on either side of the organ pendants are suspended. There are now two entrances, giving access to a lobby which takes up the whole of the space under the gallery, and which is divided from the chapel by a screen. At either end of this lobby is a staircase leading to the school, while the central portion can be enclosed to form a large room separating each entrance.

The school, which is over the chapel, has a landing at either side, one for each staircase, enclosed from the school by a partition; between these is placed the platform, having a skylight over, which, with the rest of the surroundings, is brought more prominently to notice in its details. The room is some fifty feet long, by forty-six feet wide in front, and thirty feet at back, giving accommodation for some 350 children. The ceilings and walls, except a cement dado running round the room, are of wood, while the principals are partly to view of the roof; these, with the mouldings round windows and walls, are painted in various colours. It is lighted by four large and six small windows, and heated by the same hot water apparatus as the chapel. Ventilation both to chapel and school has received due care, while all the windows have fixed lights. As to the question of strength of the old walls to do the extra work now required of them and also the strength of the school floor, it may be satisfactory to state that both these questions have received very careful consideration, that each of the floor girders when placed in position were tested with a sufficient weight separately, giving very satisfactory results, while the opinion of an experienced engineer has been taken, and his approval given.

CHURCH OF THE PEOPLE, BERLIN.

On the 23rd and 24th of September the first meeting of the Society of the Church of the People was held in Berlin. Those who are aware of the indefiniteness of the religious views and the divisions among the liberal thinkers of the Church will understand the difficulty of gathering them under one banner at these meetings. That 1,500 persons answered the call proves that the sense of duty to assist in reforming the Church is not extinguished among the members of our Church. But the spirit of the meeting proved this even more than the number.

On the 23rd of September the Committee placed a programme before a select body of 200 gentlemen, hitherto almost strangers to each other. It was very satisfactory to notice that the only point of discussion was the name under which the Society should be known. It was decided to be called "Society of the Church of the People," instead of, as formerly, "Liberal-thinking Church Party."

The new Society holds that religion being deeply rooted in human nature is a power most needful to the development of national life, in the spirit of freedom and tolerance towards all denominations, according to the original principles of the Reformation. For the reform of the Church the Society urges especially these points.

1. Reform of the Sunday service by the omission of the Apostles' Creed if desired by the congregation, and the use of expressions in accordance with the religious and literary progress of the age.

2. The reform of the present Ordination oath by simply binding the minister to preach the Christian religion in the spirit of its Founder. Abolishing those regulations which bind the clergy to the letter of Creeds, and prevent their free scientific development.

3. Greater independence of the congregations of the Synods and Clerical Courts; especially in the management of their finances, and the use of their Church for suitable objects. The exemption of members of the Church from those ceremonies which are not in accordance with their religious views, and their right of voting in Church matters without having complied with such ceremonies.

Officers of the Church not to be appointed without the consent of the congregation.

4. Abolition of Clerical privileges in the religious bodies: Freedom of speech and voting in the Synods.

5. Free election of the minister by the congregation.

6. Until these requirements are fully granted, Church taxes shall be paid in proportion as the rights of the congregation are enlarged.

Respecting the position of the Church towards civil life the Society requires:—

7. Abolition of the denominational character of the National Schools; giving a religious instruction in accordance with scientific and moral principles, leaving the denominational instruction to the parents and guardians of each child.

Reform of the Catechism. Cemeteries to be open to members of all denominations.

8. The acknowledgment of the right of the Government to regulate the civil conditions of the religious bodies, but to leave to the latter the free development of their spiritual life.

9. Abolition of the religious oath in civil administration.

10. Support of all movements for the benefit of mankind without giving predominance to special denominations.

The public meeting took place on the 24th of September, in the grand salon of the hotel; it was opened at 9.30 with a sermon by Pasteur Bion of Zürich. The Committee's request for the use of a church had been refused, and those who until now looked on a sermon as synonymous with monotony stated afterwards that if such sermons were usual they would be the first to go to church. The text was from Nehemiah, chapter iv. 17-18: "Our daily task to fight and to build." The sermon will appear in full in the report of the proceedings, which will be published shortly.

After the ladies had left, the hall, which had been completely filled, was soon again occupied.

At half-past eleven the CHAIRMAN, Town Councillor Grabe, welcomed the Assembly, and introduced Mr. Meenkel, Advocate and M.P., whose attendance, in spite of his many parliamentary duties, showed that he fully appreciated the importance of the formation of a Society of the Church of the People.

Mr. MEENKEL frankly protested against the reproach of irreligion and unbelief. Our opponents, he said, confuse religion and the Church, the outward ceremonies with the spirit of worship. What, then, becomes of religion and Christian tolerance? The Anti-Semitic Congress at Dresden is a lively illustration of how the Gospel of love is at present understood. The true spirit of Christianity is Love to God and mankind. These two commandments contain the entire law. If we keep to these we shall regain a religion of love and freedom with which also those will agree who now are no longer able to believe what the Churches of to-day preach. Our adversaries on the other side say, "Luther would turn in his grave if he could witness the proceedings of the Liberal Church Party." But they forget that 300 years have since past, and that Luther would have advanced with us. What has Orthodoxy done with Protestant liberty? It is not right to turn aside in anger or indifference to let Orthodoxy rule. It is our duty to step forward and protest against this caricature of the true religion of to-day. This will be the task of the New Party. They hope to assemble a progressive congregation, to whom the word of God shall be declared pure and clear. They preach love to their fellow men with emphasis without becoming Socialists. They wish to expel the spirit of intolerance which now reigns in the churches. They wish congregations to choose their ministers, and congregations and pastors to be in harmony. They observe all national and civil laws, but wish Government and Church to be independent of each other. They therefore ask for the abolition of the religious oath; against falsehood it is no remedy, and if any person utters a falsehood, he ought not to be forced to take the name of God in vain. They hope with these principles to reform the Church, so that the many thousands who are now different may join them. The speech was received with loud applause.

The Rev. Dr. KALTHOFF likewise explained the chief points of the programme. The Church of the country and of the Government must become a popular church, where the doctrines shall not be dictated by the government, and theological disputes shall not stifle all other discussions.

Dr. WENDT (Hamburg) then delivered his greetings, and Pasteur BION (Zürich) stated that in his own country the present programme was already in full working.

Some resolutions were then adopted. Mr. WALDOW moved that the Society of the Church of the People affirms that those who refused the use of a church for the service of to-day lower the Church of Prussia to a sect and break the spiritual tie which ought to unite all those who stand on the same ground of evangelical Christianity. Secondly, Mr. DONNER recommended the establishment of branch societies in all the provinces; and thirdly, Mr. MAX SCHULTZ declared the consent of the assembly to the programme, and to the Korrespondenzblatt für Kirchliche Reform Central Organ der Kirchlichen Volkspartei, edited by Prediger Dr. Kalthoff, Steglitz, near Berlin, as their organ.

The CHAIRMAN addressed some words of thanks to those present and closed the meeting.

MANCHESTER.—On Wednesday afternoon the annual meeting of the National Society for Women's Suffrage was held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, the Mayor (Mr. Alderman Baker) presiding. The annual report, read by Miss Becker, stated that within the past year women had for the first time been admitted as graduates of the University of London. It also stated that Mr. Hugh Mason had given notice that he would bring forward his motion in the House of Commons in favour of extending the Parliamentary franchise to women who possessed the qualification which entitled them to vote at the very earliest available day next session. A resolution expressing satisfaction at the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, was adopted.

KINGSWOOD, NEAR BIRMINGHAM.—The annual congregational meeting was held on Sunday week, after the morning service, for receiving the report of the state of the church and its various institutions. William Corah, Esq., the president, occupied the chair. The Committee's report stated that since the last annual meeting the field adjoining the burial ground had been purchased at the cost of £100, thus securing, by the kind help of friends, a valuable piece of land. Among the recent losses by death was their revered friend Mr. Edwin Lea, of Solihull Lodge, a trustee and a member of the committee, whose advice in council was always sound and good, and whose support was prompt and generous. Mr. Alfred Thornton, in reading the collector's report, stated that though they had lost some excellent subscribers by death their places had been supplied by new subscribers, increasing the number of last year, and in amount of subscriptions exceeding the past by £6 2s. 6d. Both reports of the Sunday-school and library having been read, equally favourable, the President, in moving the adoption of the reports, said it gave him great pleasure to witness the success of the congregation that had been connected with Kingswood nearly thirty years, more than twenty acting as its treasurer, but he never knew it to reach its present high stand-point of success, which was due to the activity and talents of their much esteemed minister. After appointing the different officers for the year—president of meetings, treasurer, warden, secretary, and ten members of committee—the meeting broke up, much gratified with the year's results.

EXETER.—At George's Chapel the Rev. T. W. Chigwell has recently delivered three special Sunday evening lectures. The first was entitled "Knowledge Not Confined to Physical Things." In it the lecturer endeavoured to refute the statement in a recent essay in the Nineteenth Century, that we have no certain and positive knowledge but what the senses give us, namely, the knowledge of material and physical things. The subject of the second lecture was "The Mind of Man Confined to Nature and her Laws." It had especial reference to the assault on Professor Seeley's new book by Mr. Voysey and his assertion that belief in God is belief in "a being plus nature, and numerically distinct from nature." The lecturer endeavoured to show that we can only know God through Nature, that reveals Him. The innumerable solar systems, and the mind of Christ were taken as the supreme types of Nature's inmost essence and meaning. The third lecture was entitled "Pessimism False: Everything Beautiful in its Time."

TROWBRIDGE.—The friends at the Conigre Chapel, a place of worship which was founded as far back as 1660, and rebuilt in its present beautiful form through the strenuous exertions of the late highly-respected pastor (the Rev. Samuel Martin) in the year 1857, celebrated their two hundred and twenty-second anniversary on Tuesday week, and, as usual, the proceedings were of a very cheering and encouraging nature. Despite the unpropitious weather, about three hundred persons sat down to tea. The room was decorated in a very suitable and tasteful manner. Subsequently, with numbers augmented, the party adjourned to the chapel for the public meeting. Here the chancel had been embellished with a choice collection of floral gems and plants. The esteemed pastor, the Rev. J. Felstead, ably fulfilled the duties of chairman, and the other speakers included the Revs. A. N. Blatchford, B.A. (Bristol), J. C. Odgers, B.A. (Clifton), R. Smyth (Shepton Mallett), Mr. W. Butcher (Bristol) and Mr. Jecks (Clevedon).

HUDDERSFIELD.—On Wednesday, the 1st inst., after part of the opening concert of the season given by the Philharmonic Society in the Victoria Hall, a presentation was made to the highly-gifted and esteemed conductor, the Rev. J. Thomas, M.A., minister of the Unitarian church, Fitzwilliam-street. The presentation was made by Alderman Woodhead, who, after a suitable address, on behalf of a considerable number of subscribers who felt the debt they and the town generally owed to Mr. Thomas, presented him with a handsome silver purse, on which was inscribed:—"This purse was presented to the Rev. J. Thomas, M.A., with the sum of £90, by a number of his musical friends, in recognition of the eminent services rendered by him in the cause of musical culture during his residence in Huddersfield, November 1st, 1882."

ISWICH.—The annual meeting of the congregation was held on October 23, in the new school-room. There was a good attendance, and the proceedings passed off very pleasantly. The present officers were re-elected, with the addition of the name of Mr. F. W. Canham, and the reports and financial statements of the various institutions of the church were presented and adopted. Considerable discussion took place as to the best manner of carrying out the improvements now required in the organ, and a sub-committee was finally appointed to consider the question and present a report. The chair was taken by the Rev. T. B. Broadrick, and the proceedings were pleasantly varied by songs and recitations by members of the choir and others. The meeting was made the opportunity of heartily welcoming Mr. Broadrick back to his ministerial duties, and to congratulate him upon his happy recovery from a serious illness.

JANOS ARANY.

WITH STEWED FRUIT

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 3s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap Iss. 12. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

TEXTS AND MARGINS of the REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH, 1s.

A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, 8vo., cloth, price 10s. 6d.

A PROTESTANT COMMENTARY on the Books of the NEW TESTAMENT; with general and special Introductions. Edited by Professors P. W. Schmidt and F. von Holzendorff. Translated from the Third German Edition, by the Rev. F. H. JONES, B.A. (in 3 vols.) Vol. I, Matthew to Acts.

Also, 8vo., cloth, price 10s. 6d.

PROFESSOR EWALD'S JOB. Commentary on the Book of Job, with Translation by the late Professor H. EWALD. Translated from the German by the Rev. J. FREDERICK SMITH. Complete in One Volume.

Subscribers to the THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION FUND LIBRARY receive these Volumes at 7s. Prospectus with Contents of the Series post free on application.

Just Published, 8vo., cloth, price 5s.

SPINOZA. FOUR ESSAYS, by PROFESSORS J. LAND, KONO FISCHER, and VAN VLOTEN, and ERNEST RENAN, edited with an Introduction by Professor W. KNIGHT, of St. Andrews.

MISS FRANCES POWER COBBE'S NEW BOOK.

Just Published, crown 8vo., cloth, price 7s. 6d.

THE PEAK IN DARIEN and other inquiries touching Concerns of the Soul and the Body. By FRANCES POWER COBBE.

WILLIAMS and NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT of the NATIONAL CONFERENCE of UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High-street, Birmingham.

Now Ready, price 1s. 6d.

YOUNG DAYS
FOR 1882.—VOL. VII.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

Third Edition, pp. 116. One Shilling, or 13 stamps.

SKIN DISEASES TREATED HOMEO-PATHICALLY. By WASHINGTON EPPS, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. Describes and prescribes for fifty varieties of skin diseases. London—James Epps & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVYSEIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

WANTED, for a small Convalescent Home for Children, a WORKING MATRON, not under thirty years of age, to take entire charge. Must be thoroughly conscientious and trustworthy. A Unitarian Christian and one who has been nurse in a gentleman's family preferred.—Apply, by letter in the first instance, to Miss F., care of Luff, Stationers, Slough.

WANTED, by a Widow Lady in Belfast, a YOUNG LADY as GOVERNESS, for her two children, and to have full charge of them and their wardrobe. The children are under the ages of six and four years. Salary £20 per annum.—Applications, with references, may be addressed to A. B. C., care of Rev. J. C. Street, 50, Ulster-village-avenue, Belfast.

WANTED, in December, a certificated Teacher for the Girls' Day School, New Gravel Pit Unitarian Church, Hackney.—For particulars, apply to the Secretary, Mrs. CLENNELL, 87, Downs-road, Clapton, E.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," Inquirer Office.

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certificate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by correspondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials.—Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.

ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.

ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,
THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING

AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or 8, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHARING-CROSS LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

LEEDS NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS, DOMESTIC-STREET, LEEDS.

Cost of buildings, land, &c.	£4500	0	0
Subscriptions paid and promised by Mill-hill friends	£2100	0	0
Subscriptions paid and promised by the Holbeck congregation and Sunday-school Grant from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association	1000	0	0
Amount to be raised at the Bazaar and by other efforts	100	0	0
	1300	0	0

The GRAND BAZAAR in aid of the above undertaking will be opened by JOHN BARRAN, Esq., M.P. for Leeds, on TUESDAY, November 28, 1882, at 2 o'clock, and continued on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, November 29 and 30.

A great variety of useful and fancy articles will be offered at reasonable prices. A series of entertainments will be given. The Mill-hill String Band will play selections of music.

Refreshments at moderate charges.

Prices of admission:—First day, up to 4 o'clock, 2s.; after, 1s. Second day, up to 6 o'clock, 1s.; after, 6d. Third day, 6d.

IDEN PAYNE, Minister, 3, Cambrian-terrace, Holbeck, Leeds; JOHN S. MATHERS, Chairman, 73, Albion-street, Leeds; E. F. MORLEY, Treasurer, 4, Gladstone-street, Holbeck, Leeds; WM. WESTERMAN, Secretary, Cemetery-road, Holbeck, Leeds.

CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

The MONTHLY MEETING of PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS of WARWICKSHIRE and the NEIGHBOURING COUNTIES, Established 1782, will celebrate its Centenary by a Series of Meetings to be held in BIRMINGHAM, on Wednesday, December 13.

1.—The Members and Friends will meet in the Lecture Room of the Church of the Messiah, when the Secretary will read a Sketch of the History of the Society, supplemented by members' remarks.

2.—To be followed by a Luncheon-Dinner at 1.30 for 2 o'clock punctually, at the Grand Hotel, Dr. Russel, J.P., presiding. After dinner there will be a Conference, in which several Laymen and Ministers will take part.

3.—In the Evening, at 7 o'clock, there will be Public Worship in the Church of the Messiah, when the Rev. Professor ESTLIN CARPENTER will preach.

Tickets for the Dinner, Three Shillings each; can be had from the Hon. Secretary before December 4.

D. MAGINNIS, Hon. Sec.

Old Parsonage, Sourbridge, Nor. 8, 1882.

SOUTH OF FRANCE, VALLEY OF LA DORDOGNE.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for Twenty-four BOYS from ten to fifteen. Modern and Dead Languages, Mathematical and Natural Sciences, taught according to the New Programme of the Elementary and Grammar Classes in the Lycées. Good German Tutor. A few English pupils would be admitted on moderate terms.

Apply for more information (at Ste. Foy, Gironde) to the Director, M. Gilard, pastor; and for references (44, Boulevard des Gobelins, Paris) to M. Steeg, late pastor at Libourne, member of the French Parliament for Bordeaux; M. Roudier, M.P. for Libourne; MM. Et. Coquerel and Viquié, pastors in Paris, and M. Fontaines, pastor at Havre.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN

STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dacey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady

(daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Marquette.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday November 11, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2108.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—
To Our Readers	741
The London School Board Election	741
"Society of the Church of the People"	742
The Sunday Paper	743
Liberal Protestantism in Belgium	744
OPEN COUNCIL:—
Temperance Reform	745
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Unitarian District Organisation	746
"The Theistic Church"	746
A Plea from Oxford	746
Ignorant Bigotry	747
London Domestic Mission Society	747
The Bethnal Green Mission	747
UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE	747
OCCASIONAL NOTES	748
REVIEWS:—
A Study of Spinoza	749
Short Notices	750
Literary Notes	751
THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—
Christ our Master—not Theology	753
RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—
Midland Christian Union Sunday School Association	753

TO OUR READERS.

WE have much pleasure in making the announcement that after the close of the present year, with the view of securing for this paper a larger circulation, and consequently a wider influence, its price will be reduced to two-pence weekly. For fuller details our readers are referred to the notice at the end of the paper, just before the advertisements.

We do not conceal from ourselves the fact that this is a step practically irrevocable, and not wholly free from serious risk; but we are not without hope that in our efforts to bring the paper within the reach of a larger circle we shall be seconded not only by those who have hitherto been our supporters, but by many others who, while sympathising with the principles upon which the paper has been conducted, have felt the price at which it has been published a hindrance in the way of active support. It is but right, however, to say that the present circulation of the paper will have to be more than trebled if it is to maintain its position. We have therefore to urge our friends to do their best to help us by getting more subscribers, and in every way in their power increasing the circulation of the paper.

The reduction of price will not be accompanied by any lowering of the general tone and literary character of the paper, and it will be our constant endeavour to maintain, and as far as possible to improve, the position which, in these respects, it has hitherto occupied. For rather more than forty years the Inquirer has been identified with the interests of those Churches which under various names—Unitarian, Free Christian, Presbyterian, and Non-subscribing—have sought to teach a reverent and rational theology, and to advocate the cause of religion unfettered by any formal creed or dogmatic statement of belief. To this traditional freedom of our Churches we intend still to be faithful, while upholding those fundamental religious principles which enable us to welcome truth in every department of knowledge, as essentially in harmony with Divine Laws.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD ELECTION.

ON Friday next the ratepayers of the Metropolis will be called upon to return for their respective divisions the members of the School Board who for the next three years will have the shaping of the policy which is to guide our educational system in London. The results of this may be a blessing or a curse to thousands, according as it is allowed full and fair play, or as it is hampered and hindered by mischievous or niggardly obstruction. It is one of the weak parts of the Act of 1870 that under it all the members of the Board should have to work for three years, and then to seek the suffrages of their constituents. It is obvious that such a plan breaks the continuity of the work of the Board. It is quite possible that, at some triennial election, not a single member of the old Board may be returned, and the work would pass into completely new and untried hands, and though it is not likely, at the forthcoming election it might happen that a large majority will have had no experience of the work, in which case much valuable time will be lost. No doubt there is a saving of cost to the ratepayers in not having an election every year, but it may be doubted if this saving is not at the cost of efficiency. This, however, is not a "burning question" at present; we have to accept facts as they are, and among these is the fact that for good or ill the choice of members has now to be made. It is not of lack of candidates that the ratepayers will have to complain. There are eighty-eight candidates for fifty-three seats, thirty-five of these being old members of the existing Board. Most of the new candidates are comparatively speaking unknown men, some, indeed, not even having a local reputation. In the selection of fitting members it may well be that the ratepayers will find a difficulty. Apparently there is between some of them so little to choose, that it is clear that some sound principles of selection are required. What these are we proceed to consider.

Some persons may have imagined that the work of the Board is confined to an attendance at its weekly meetings, with an occasional attendance at some of the committees, which have to carry out the detail operations of the Board. Such persons have a very inadequate notion of the labour which a conscientious member has to perform. To these we commend the following extract from a pamphlet issued by the "Committee for Promoting the Return of Members, who are in favour of a Loyal and Liberal Administration of the Education Acts," of which Lord ABERDARE is the Chairman.

"In March last there were 310 schools belonging to the Board; fresh ones are being frequently opened. On the roll of these 310 schools there were 260,428 children. This number, if placed three abreast at the distance of soldiers on the march, would form a column reaching almost from London to Brighton. A brief summary then of the Board's work includes finding the sites for the schools, purchasing them, choosing the designs and plans, building, warming, lighting and cleaning them; engaging the teachers, now numbering 3,658; selecting the books and apparatus, from physiological models down to pins and needles, purchasing them, keeping up the stock, preventing waste as far as possible (essential in a work of such magnitude, and only to be achieved by the diligent attendance of the members on their different Committee); the calculation of the amount of money required both from rates and loans; the taking the necessary steps to procure it; keeping and checking the accounts and paying the bills—all these multifarious and responsible tasks require initiation and supervision by the members of the Board. Further, there is the entire management of the three Industrial Schools belonging to the Board, and the consideration of and decision on the cases of children needing to be sent to such schools, in number about 700 per annum. Again, there is the visiting of the elementary schools, conferring with the managers and investigating matters suddenly arising in schools in all parts of the Metropolis; attendance at what are called 'Notice B' meetings, when the members perform in each division a quasi-judicial function, preliminary to the summoning of parents before a magistrate for breach of bye-laws; considering and assessing reports; reading, and deciding on the books to be placed on the Board's list for use in the school—books which arrive from the publishers, sometimes in perfect avalanches, destroying not the leisure hours but the leisure minutes of those unfortunate members who sit on the 'Books and Stores' Committee. Lastly, are the perpetual letters, which arrive at all hours of the day, not only at the office, but at the private residences of the members, frequently requiring immediate acknowledgment. . . . Besides these multifarious occupations, which may be called the details of the work, there are the debates on general principles, such as the framing and discussing the rules for the government of the Board itself and its large staff of officers, amounting at the present time to nearly 600; and for the government of the schools, subject to constant change, as experience points out improvement."

In the selection of members the first principle that may safely be laid down is that those members of the existing Board who seek re-election, and who have by their attendance at the various meetings referred to above acquired a knowledge not only of the principles, but of the detail work of the Board, deserve to be sent back to carry on the good work they have begun. We published a list last week which, for this purpose, will be found very useful as well as very instructive. This showed the number of attendances made by the members of the Board now seeking election. A careful study will show that most of those members who have of late acquired a certain amount of public notice are just those who have rendered the least possible assistance in the really laborious work of the Board. These can very well be spared to further indulge in the leisure they have given themselves. Their places must be filled by men and women who are not mere theorists, but practical educationalists, capable of managing schools, and devising the best methods of instruction.

With regard to the new and untried candidates it may be laid down as a broad principle that those who ask to be returned in order to secure economy, or in other words "to save the rates," are just the very persons to be avoided. It will be a false economy which starves the education of the young to save a farthing in the pound in the rates. There yet remains much to be done in the way of outlay before the Board can begin to think of curtailing the expenditure to any appreciable degree. The school accommodation is still far short of what is necessary in order to realise the ideal that the Board has set before it, namely, "A place for every child, and every child in its place." When that is realised it will be time enough to take steps for reducing the expenditure. Not that we are at all anxious to see the work carried on in a wasteful and extravagant manner, but it is because we value efficiency before economy that we deprecate for the present the narrow view that looks more closely at the school rate than at the good effects that have been secured by the efforts of the Board. When we find East-end clergymen saying that they hardly know their own parishes, so great has been the change for the better, and that the convictions for juvenile crime are now only half what they were in 1870, we may well consider that economy purchased at a less beneficial result than this would have been a terrible disaster. But we believe that the charge of extravagance applied generally cannot be successfully maintained. There may have been—indeed in so extensive an undertaking there cannot fail to have been—some waste in a few details here and there, but general, widespread extravagance does not seem to us to have existed, and indeed the school rate is less now than it was three years ago.

The large issues which were before the Board soon after it commenced its work are no longer disturbing influences. So far as the Board is concerned the compromise made between the Religious and the Secularist parties has worked fairly well, though we reserve our opinion as to the real benefit bestowed on the children from a religious point of view by the mode in which the Bible is used. That question, however, is not before the ratepayers. Nor is the question of compulsory attendance one that presses for solution. In the present state of school accommodation the more vigorous enforcement of school attendance is not feasible. The question of Free Schools will have to be dealt with first, and the time is scarcely ripe for this, though we look forward to the time when all our schools shall be free, a result that will be largely helped when many of the educational endowments in the City are returned to the channel from which they have long been diverted.

Seeing, then, that the great questions which at starting, disturbed the work of the Board are either settled or in abeyance, the matters for consideration in the choice of members are narrowed down practically to this, Are those who seek our votes prepared to carry on the work loyally and liberally, or are they determined to take a narrow view of their duties and to oppose and obstruct the due carrying out of the Education Acts for the benefit of the children? Talkers can well be spared, workers are wanted. Men who regard the position as a stepping stone to another arena, women's rights orators, and above all rowdies, ought to have no support from any who wish well to the future of their country. Unfortunately it is only too clear that the rowdy element has found its way into the School Board; it is for the ratepayers to say that they want no more of it. Much of the good work has been done by lady members, who have, as a rule, been content to do, and not to talk. On the other hand, we do not forget that some of the unpleasant scenes which from time to time have got into the papers were due to the want of control exercised by some of the talking ladies over their organs of speech. We must not be thought to deprecate all opposition or criticism; but no good comes of ungentelemanly or unladylike behaviour. What may be the result of the forthcoming election we cannot predict; but should it be, as we trust it may not, that the new Board will reverse much that its predecessors have done, we feel certain that it will really not reflect the wishes or desires of the majority of thoughtful people in London. It would indicate a strange lack of capacity to appreciate good service if among those seeking re-election such excellent members as—place aux dames—Miss DAVENPORT HILL, Miss RICHARDSON, and Mrs. WESTLAKE, and Messrs. HENRY SPICER, ROBERT FREEMAN, Dr. GLADSTONE, B. LUCRAFT, MARK WILKS, B. S. OLDING, LYULPH STANLEY, E. N. and S. C. BUXTON were not returned. Among the new candidates, too, Sir ARTHUR HOBHOUSE, Sir E. H. CURRIE, Mr. RUTSON, Mr. WHITELEY, and the Rev. THORNHILL WEBBER ought to find good places at the poll. It would be little short of a national misfortune were the broad and enlightened policy of the Board to be supplanted by a narrow, parochial, and niggardly view. To prevent this, it is the duty of every ratepayer who values his responsibilities aright to vote for those candidates who are prepared to support and maintain the former, and thus to keep going the good work initiated just twelve years ago.

"SOCIETY OF THE CHURCH OF THE PEOPLE."

OUR readers will doubtless have perused with considerable interest the brief account given in our last issue of the new religious movement in Berlin—"The Society of the Church of the People." We have seldom read a list of rules and regulations with which we were so completely in accord. At a first meeting of the Society the large number of 1,500 "who answered the call" was a great success, and we rejoice to learn that the spirit of the meeting proved this even more than the number. The unanimity, too, was remarkable, for the only point of discussion was the name under which the Society should be known.

The foundation on which it rests is in our judgment the true one—that religion is deeply rooted in human nature, and is therefore a power most needful to the development of national life, but that that development must be in the spirit of freedom and tolerance towards all denominations, according to the original principles of the Reformation. The great object aimed at is to bring about a reform of the Church on Broad and Liberal principles. The programme agreed to by a select body of 200 gentlemen contains many admirable points. A large measure of liberty is accorded to the congregation. With them rests the use or omission of the Apostles' Creed in the Sunday service. Officers of the Church are not to be appointed without the consent of the congregation; and the fifth rule is the "free election of the minister by the congregation." Another reform of the Sunday service demanded is the use of expressions in accordance with the religious and literary progress of the age. This is an important point. Many expressions formerly in use among religious people have become obsolete with the changed circumstances of our time, and as used now they have a certain unreality and savour somewhat of insincerity. The time for their honest use is gone. Religion should employ the language of to-day. In that language the pulpit should speak and prayer be offered. There is no need to go back to antiquated forms of expression either for preaching or for devotion. Simplicity is the one great thing to aim at, and that is quite compatible with the ordinary language in present use.

Another great reform pleaded for is that of the present ordination oath, by simply binding the minister to preach the Christian religion in the spirit of its Founder, at the same time abolishing all those regulations which bind the clergy to the letter of creeds. We need not say how thoroughly we approve of this principle. In our view it is the one condition of sincerity in teaching and of free advancement in the attainment of religious truth. All creeds and confessions of faith are a temptation to insincerity, to mental reservation, to rest contented in a stationary condition of thought. They are directly opposed to that mental freedom which is indispensable to the mind, honestly bent on the acquisition of truth and knowledge. They assume that the perfect truth is already known—an assumption inconsistent with all the facts of our experience.

The demand for more liberty on the part of the congregations occupies a prominent place in the programme. They ask that the congregations may be more independent of the Synods and Clerical Courts, especially in the management of their finances, and the use of the church for suitable objects. They plead for the exemption of members of the church from those ceremonies which are not in accordance with their religious views, and they demand the right of voting in church matters without having complied with such ceremonies. In fact, they desire in congregational affairs to be free from the rigid control hitherto imposed by the Synods and Church Courts. They also press the claim for more liberty in the Synods and Courts themselves—and so ask for the abolition of clerical privileges in the religious bodies, and freedom of speech and voting in the Synods.

A portion of the demands set forth in the programme relates to the position of the Church towards civil life and national education. On this head the society asks for the abolition of the denominational character of the national schools, that such religious instruction as should be given in them may be of the broadest kind, as unsectarian as possible, the denominational instruction being left to the parents or guardians of each child. Further, in relation to civil life, they require that the cemeteries may be open to members of all denominations, also, that the religious oath in civil administration may be abolished.

Here, then, we have another demand in regard to the pernicious practise of oath taking. They ask for the abolition of the religious oath on the ground that against falsehood and hypocrisy, against unscrupulous profession it is no remedy; and whoever utters a falsehood, or is prepared to utter a falsehood, ought not to be forced to endorse it with an oath. They see clearly as others do that for the man of honour the oath is unnecessary, and that at the same time it fails to keep out of the witness-box, the pulpit, the professor's chair, or any other position, the man who has no qualms of conscience—who is, in fact, unscrupulous.

Finally the Society acknowledge the right of the Government to regulate the civil conditions of the religious bodies, but ask to be left perfectly free to develop their own spiritual life. And in the highest interests of all, they ask from the Government the support of all movements for the benefit of mankind, without giving predominance or preference to special denominations.

Such are the claims put forth by the Society of the Church of the People. There seems to us nothing in them which is not dictated by the soundest principles of civil and religious freedom. They are on the true line of progress—the line along which the States of Europe, and our own country especially, have been steadily advancing. We have already spoken of the unanimity which marked the proceedings. The text chosen by Pasteur BION was very appropriate—"Our daily task to fight and to build"—to oppose error, to fight against tyranny and wrong, and to build up in fair and symmetrical proportions a free church, within which free minds can assemble for communion and worship. The address of Mr. MEENKEL was an admirable exposition of the aims and principles of the Society. "The true spirit of Christianity is love to GOD and mankind. These two commandments contain the entire law. If we keep to these we shall regain a religion of love and freedom with which also those will agree who now are no longer able to believe what the Churches of the day preach. It is our duty to step forward and protest against the Orthodox caricature of the true religion of to day. We hope to assemble a progressive congregation, to whom the word of GOD shall be declared pure and clear. We preach love to our fellow men with emphasis without becoming Socialists. We wish to expel the spirit of intolerance which now reigns in the Churches. We wish congregations to choose their ministers, and congregations and pastors to be in harmony. We ask for the abolition of the religious oath. We hope, with these principles, to reform the Church so that the many thousands who are now indifferent may join us. We desire to observe all national and civil laws, but wish Government and Church to be independent of each other." The other speakers who followed spoke in the same strain, and the spirit of the meeting seems to have been hopeful and enthusiastic.

If it is an advantage, as we certainly believe it is, to have clear aims and a definite policy, that advantage is enjoyed by the Church of the People. There is nothing hazy or uncertain about its programme. Each resolution passed goes straight to the mark. The programme set forth is valuable, because it is of a representative character. It expresses the common aspirations of Liberal thinkers everywhere. It indicates the true basis of civil and religious liberty, and points out the reforms which, however long they may be delayed, must be conceded ultimately. All the higher tendencies of the age are in the same direction, and guarantee the final triumph of liberal principles. We cordially wish the new movement all success.

THE SUNDAY PAPER.

It is a matter of serious complaint with many good and well-meaning people that so few of the working classes are to be found at places of worship on Sunday, and the question is often asked, What do they do with themselves on that day? It is not always fitting weather for a walk; the museums and art galleries are rigorously closed; the public reading-rooms, which, to the shame and disgrace of our metropolitan vestries, are few and far indeed between, have the doors locked; and the public-houses, where it is mistakenly believed by some persons that the British workman who does not go to church or chapel spends all his spare time, are only open for a few hours on Sunday. How, then, does the church absentee spend his time? We, who regard ourselves as respectable people, who go to our places of worship regularly once every Sunday, and sometimes oftener, know very well the sort of thing that helps to pass away the day of rest with us. We get up a little later, to compensate for which we go to bed a little earlier; we read, possibly a sermon, or some book, which, having done its duty for that day, is piously relegated to the book-case till Sunday comes round again; we indulge in a little music, which, whether it be called sacred or secular, is, we feel, out of harmony with the day if it be in the slightest degree lively. And some of us are given to meditation, especially that kind of meditation which we feel can be best indulged in with closed eyes. Some few daring revolutionaries, taking what they believe to be more rational views of the day and its opportunities, spend it more profitably to themselves and to others; some even think that a Noah's Ark is not the only suitable game for children on that day, and that to read a work of fiction is not likely to lead to murder and other natural results of "breaking the Sabbath," and that the old refrain,

You mustn't sing on Sunday 'cause it is a sin,

You may sing on other days till Sunday come agin, does not embody a divine command. But the knowledge of all this does not lead us any nearer to the solution of the problem. How do the working classes who are not chapel-goers avail themselves of their Sunday rest?

The present writer has no special means of himself solving the problem. He has no pretension to that intimate knowledge of the working classes which would induce him to make any positive assertions, one way or the other. Nor is he disposed to hazard any rough "guesses at truth." But there is one fact which is within his ken, and that is that there is an institution peculiar to the Sunday, which, in our large towns at least, largely helps those persons, whose habits are a mystery to many of us, to pass away the time, and that institution is "the Sunday paper." Many of us, no doubt, on our way to public worship, passing through some of the bye streets, have seen both boys and men going along with a bundle of papers under their arms, shouting out "Lloyd's" and "Ref'ree," and here and there a hand will be put out of a door, revealing part of a figure in deshabille, which quickly withdraws, having secured of the itinerant vendor one of the Sunday papers. It may be assumed, then, that some part of the day is devoted to the perusal of these papers, possibly while some of us are engaged in prayer and praise, or in listening to the well-worn platitudes of the pulpit.

What, then, are these papers? Is there any characteristic attaching to them that makes them peculiarly suitable to the requirements of their readers? The best answer to these questions is to be found in a perusal of the papers themselves, or, at any rate, such of them as have a considerable circulation. Most of these have two editions, the Saturday and the Sunday edition, the latter containing the latest news, but in other respects being similar to the earlier issue. The papers which are in the largest demand, taking them in the order of the priority due to seniority, are the Weekly Dispatch, the Sunday Times, the News of the World, Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper, the Weekly Times, Rey- nolds's Newspaper, and the Referee. Each of these papers is sold for one penny, but there was a time when the price was far beyond that, at any rate for all that were in existence before 1861, when the repeal of the paper duty made the penny paper possible. Politically, the only one of these papers that is not Liberal is the Sunday Times, though, by calling itself Liberal-Conservative, it tries to get all the advantage attaching to the former designation, while it steadily endorses the policy which finds favour with the Tories. The Referee can scarcely be said to be political in the ordinary sense of the word, as will be seen hereafter, when particular reference is made to its contents. There is a paper which is seeking to make its way among the working classes on a distinctly Conservative and Fair Trade platform, called The People. It has only been in existence a year, and can hardly yet claim to occupy the position belonging to its older rivals.

The Weekly Dispatch is entitled to the honours of age. It was established in 1801, and lived through the period when newspapers and writers for the press were far less favoured than they are now, unless Government prosecutions can be called favours. The original proprietor of the paper was Mr. Bell, and it first went by the name of Bell's Weekly Dispatch. It was in this paper that some of the best and most trenchant political writings of the late W. J. Fox appeared. The author of "Popular Progress in England" says of it, that at the time when it was a six-penny paper it was purchased weekly by little bodies of perhaps four or six workmen, who read it in turn, or perhaps in company, and appropriated the old copies in rotation or at some stated time, and he adds: "In its most flourishing days the fact of taking and reading or altogether disowning the Dispatch was in many parts of England the mark of an extreme Tory or an extreme Radical." In Mitchell's Press Directory it is described as follows:—"Its politics are essentially patriotic and Liberal. It is noticeable for the vigour and independence of its original articles, and there is no want of talent displayed in any department." It may be doubted, however, whether it has a singularity in any of these respects. Besides, the time for vigorous political leader writing has, to some extent, gone by. The abuses that were once the favourite topics for newspaper writers have nearly all disappeared, and those that remain excite, comparatively speaking, but little interest. A restricted franchise, the taxes on food, the taxes on knowledge, Church-rates, flogging in the army, the Irish Church, are all matters of history. The demand for complete religious equality, and questions affecting the tenure of land, have not yet laid hold of the working classes to any extent; these are matters which do not seem to affect them, at any rate in the large towns, and where they are not directly affected they, like other people, can take but a languid interest.

The Sunday Times is twenty-one years younger than the Dispatch, having been established in 1822. Until the present year the price of the Sunday Times was twopence, but the almost universal penny now purchases a copy. The same authority already quoted speaks of it as "essentially a literary, musical, dramatic, and sporting paper . . . with more variety in its contents than class papers usually present." It also makes itself the organ of Freemasonry and Buffaloes, the mysteries of which are as Greek to the uninitiated. Possibly a gentleman well known to many of the readers of the Inquirer could supply some information, for one of the lodges, meeting at the Bear and Ragged Staff, near the Blackfriars-road, bears the name of the senior member for Lambeth.

These two papers are the survivors of the pre-Victorian age. The next two on the list, Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper and the News of the World, are nearly of the same age, the former making its first appearance in Nov., 1842, and the first number of the latter having been issued in Sept., 1843. Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper is a great favourite with the working-class readers. Like the Daily Chronicle, it belongs to Mr. Lloyd, who not only makes his own paper at the well-known mills bearing his name, but has a farm for growing the grass specially adapted for the manufacture of that paper. Its contents are more newsy than are those of the other papers, and it has less original matter, though what there is of this is good. The News of the World, we are told, "aims at giving as much intelligence as possible of a general as well as of a political and literary character; and effects these objects in a satisfactory manner." Alone of the papers already mentioned, it contains a serial story, the character of which may almost be gathered from the title of that now appearing in its columns—"Pursued by her Sin."

The Weekly Times first appeared in January, 1847. It "advocates all measures of political and social progress, and an abolition of all distinctive privileges in the Universities, Church, &c." Among other distinctive characteristics it has a weekly letter, signed "Littlejohn," by a writer not unknown to the readers of this paper, usually dealing with political matters. Short character sketches, too, appear from the pen of a well-known writer, Mr. G. M. Fenn.

Reynolds's Newspaper "advocates the widest possible measures of reform. It contains much strong nervous writing, thickly spiced with abuse of the privileged orders, which causes it to be read by a certain class." So says the authority previously quoted. "The strong nervous writing" is not so apparent as the thickly-spiced abuse. The Royal Family are specially butts for these attacks: and all soldiers above the rank of a non-commissioned officer are deemed far less fitted for the task of commanding an army than the ordinary rank and file. Its prevailing tone is less of discontent than of malcontent, destructive rather than constructive, superficial rather than radical.

One of the most popular of the Sunday papers is the Referee. It is essentially a sporting and dramatic paper. It has only one leading article, but most of the news of the day is conveyed in a gossipy, slangy way, after the style of the society journals. I suppose it may be called literature, but it is a degenerated specimen of it. The personal character of many of the paragraphs, no doubt, has attractions to "a certain class," and its sporting information gives it a charm to another class, somewhat akin.

Such is briefly a description of the respective characteristics of the Sunday papers. It remains only to deal with a few points that arise in considering what it is constitutes their special interest to the class of readers that patronises them. Firstly, they give in a condensed shape a record of what is being said and done in the world. The facts of life are presented: then the comments on those facts are stated in a terse, telling fashion. The articles are rarely longer than two or three columns of this paper; they frequently would not occupy a single column. Again, they are essentially secular in their tendency. We do not mean that they advocate what are commonly known as Secularist doctrines, but they never rise above the present world and its concerns. Religion is outside their sphere of action; philosophy is wholly above their region of thought; even science is left pretty much out in the cold. The habitual readers of these papers rarely, if ever, get a glimpse of a higher world of thought and life. When religion is considered, it is rather in the form presented by religious organisations, the desirability of which may be open to question: theological controversy, however, does not manifest itself. It is clear that for some reason or other all this is gratifying to the patrons of the Sunday papers: it is equally clear that this ought not to be gratifying to those who would wish to see a higher tone of thought prevail. I do not profess to do more than call attention to the facts—the remedy must be left to others. It may be, though, that there is a lesson for some of us, and that we may well ask ourselves the questions: Is not religion too often presented as something wholly apart from this life? Are not our methods capable of some reform? Is there not some ground for thinking that some of the plans adopted by the editors of these papers are capable of being effectively adapted to religious purposes? Is there no opposition between short articles and long sermons, terse, pithy writings and flabby platitudes? Let those who will answer these questions.

ALIQUIS.

LIBERAL PROTESTANTISM IN BELGIUM.

Belgium is generally looked upon as so entirely Catholic and priest-ridden that few people think it worth while to inquire into the state of Protestantism in this country, and fewer still are even aware of the existence amongst us of such a thing as Liberal Protestantism or Free Christianity. The former, it is true, is comparatively feeble, and the latter only just in its infancy; both, however, deserve attention and interest, for they may before long rapidly increase in power and importance, various symptoms seeming to indicate a gradual change coming over the religious mind of the people.

The atrocious persecutions which in the sixteenth century dishonoured the reigns of Charles V. and Philip II. did not, in spite of all their fury, succeed in completely stamping out Protestantism in Belgium. Some families still clung secretly to the hunted and proscribed belief, and handed it down faithfully from generation to generation. The centres of this latent Protestantism were Maria-Hoorbeke, near Ghent; Rongy, near Tournai; Dour, near Mons; and Hodimont, near Verviers. After more than two centuries, more favourable circumstances, created by Joseph the Second's edict of tolerance, and by the French revolution, allowed these humble but persevering Protestants to emerge from obscurity and profess their faith publicly. Under the reign of the Dutch and Protestant King William I. they were organised into three churches under the care of regular pastors. Four other Protestant congregations, entirely composed of foreigners, sprung up in the towns of Brussels, Antwerp, Verviers and Liège. In 1839 these seven Churches formed themselves into an association, receiving State pay, and placed under the ecclesiastical direction of an annual Synod. This association, which is commonly known by the name of the Evangelical Synodal Church, or the National Church, numbers at present twenty-five churches or stations, under the charge of as many ministers or evangelists.

In the meantime, another organisation, founded in 1837, had arisen under the name of the Belgian Evangelical Society, for the purpose of spreading the Gospel, chiefly among the Catholics, without any sectarian aim. But gradually, through various circumstances, it took a decidedly ecclesiastical character, and in 1849 it constituted itself into a Church on Nonconformist principles, adding to its first title that of Belgian Christian Missionary Church. It numbers at present twenty-five churches and stations, with twenty-one ministers and evangelists. Its members are for the most part converts from Catholicism.

Both the previous Churches are Orthodox, the Christian Missionary Church exceedingly so; its founders having had the strange notion of reviving and adopting the Belgian Confession of the sixteenth century with its out and out Calvinism. The Evangelical Synodal Church has a much shorter and milder dogmatical standard, but it still exacts from its ministers the belief in the binding authority of the Scriptures, in the Trinity, and in salvation by faith in Christ alone.

Besides these two religious associations to complete our survey of Belgian Orthodox Protestantism, we may mention the Church of the Boulevard de l'Observatoire, in Brussels, where preaching takes place in the French language, under the direction of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, to which the building was presented by its legal proprietor in 1874; and finally, omitting a few scattered Darbyists and Irvingites, there exist congregations of the Church of England in the principal towns, an English Presbyterian congregation at Courtrai, and English and American Sailors' Home and Institute at Antwerp, and a Swedish Church in the same town.

We will now give a rapid sketch of what has been done in the cause of liberal Protestantism.

The first attempt to introduce it into Belgium was made in 1853, under the influence of Mr. Edgar Quinet, who, during his exile, was for some years a resident in Brussels. This celebrated writer published an edition of the French works of Marnix de Sante-Aldegonde, the Belgian Reformer of the sixteenth century, and the friend of William the Silent. In the preface Quinet vehemently attacked Catholicism in its religious and political aspects, and recommended the adoption of a liberal form of Protestantism as the only means of shattering the baneful power of Rome, while offering at the same time a higher satisfaction to the religious sentiments of the nation. Some gentlemen, among whom we may mention Mr. Tiberghien, the Professor of Philosophy in the University of Brussels, who the year before had published some remarkable Studies on Religion, met repeatedly in Brussels to consider how they could best carry out Mr. Quinet's views; but nothing practical issued from their deliberations; chiefly through the want of a suitable preacher to initiate the movement. Liberal Protestantism was destined to gain its first footing in another part of the kingdom.

In 1858 the National Church of Verviers addressed a call to Mr. Théophile Bost, who at that time belonged to the semi-orthodox school. During his pastorate at Verviers his theological opinions became decidedly heterodox, and in 1865 he published a small volume entitled "Liberal Protestantism," which has been considered as one of the most important manifestoes of the theological left. Mr. Bost was, therefore, the first to take a decided and public stand in Belgium in favour of a free Christianity. Of late years he has been disabled by disease, but his place is occupied at Verviers by a young minister professing similar views.

For some time Mr. Bost was alone, and the religious question was allowed by the Liberal party to slumber. Catholicism, however, was not asleep. Encouraged by Pius the Ninth's famous Encyclical and Syllabus of 1864, the Belgian clergy became daily more audacious in their claims to govern the nation according to what they termed the laws of Christian society. To further their purposes, they exercised a tremendous pressure on the political electors, and their efforts resulted in the return of the Catholics to power in 1870 for a period of eight years. This long lease of Catholic government awoke the Liberals to a fresh consciousness of the strength of Catholicism, and of the impossibility of conquering it simply on political grounds, without undermining its religious influence. Three events helped to draw the public attention to the subject.

The first was an article in the Revue de Belgique for January, 1875, by the eminent economist Mr. Laveleye on "Protestantism and Catholicism in their Relation to the Liberty and Prosperity of Nations." This article created an immense sensation; it was immediately republished in France, where thirty thousand copies were circulated, and translated in English, and several other languages. A year later Mr. de Laveleye wrote a new article on a kindred subject, "The Religious Future of Protestant Nations."

The second fact which attracted notice was the following:—Four families, occupying a high social position, and converted from Catholicism to liberal Protestantism through the ministry of Mr. Théophile Bost, sought admittance into the Protestant Synodal Church of the town of Liège, where they habitually resided. On the 3rd of May, 1875, an official recognition was granted them by the pastor of Liège, Mr. Pradez, who, though orthodox himself, is sufficiently large hearted to extend the hand of fellowship to persons separated from him by important doctrinal differences. Shortly after, a similar step was taken at Ghent, also by several influential gentlemen and their families; the principal members of this group of liberal Protestants being Mr. Albert Callier, the present rector of the University of Ghent; his brother, Hippolyte Callier, directeur of the Flandre Libérale, elected lately member of the House of Representatives; Mr. Coevoet, councillor at the Court of Appeal, and Mr. Léon Frédéricq, professor at the University.

The third fact took place in the winter of the same year. The inhabitants of a place called Sart Dame-Avelines having quarrelled with the Catholic authorities about a young and popular vicar who had been removed against their will, appealed to the Belgian Christian Missionary Church, which sent a minister to preach to them every Sunday. So great was the concourse of hearers that the building of a chapel became necessary, and in August, 1876,

M. de Laveleye opened a subscription for this object in the columns of the Flandre Libérale. Several prominent Liberals responded to his call, and the subscription soon amounted to 16,000 francs, or £460. This Protestant movement at Sart Dame-Avelines brought the Liberal party a gain of forty votes in the arrondissement of Nivelles at the elections of the 13th of June, 1876, a clear proof of the connection between a more enlightened religion and more liberal politics.

Through an article of the Revue de Belgique in July, 1876, under the title of "How to Raise Altar Against Altar," Count Goblet d'Alviella related the above facts, and pointed out the important lessons they gave as to the best means of successfully coping with Catholicism. But the objection was raised: "How is it possible for us to go over to Protestantism? We do not believe in miracles, in the divinity of Christ, in the authority of the Bible?" In a second article (July, 1877), entitled "Liberal Protestantism," Count Goblet reminded his readers that among the great variety of Protestant sects there are churches which harmonised better with modern thought and the progress of science, and in which men who desired a reasonable religion might find a satisfaction for their spiritual wants. The consequence of these events and publications was the formation of a group of thirty families, which, in November, 1877, addressed a letter to the consistory of the Evangelical Synodal Church, asking for admittance into the Church without any doctrinal conditions, and requesting the appointment of a second pastor, the need for whom was greatly felt, the said pastor to be chosen on the Liberal side. The Consistory refused the nomination of the second pastor, and the movement received a new check.

However, it was not completely fruitless. Some persons who had been connected with it became attendants at the Wesleyan Methodist Church of the Boulevard de l'Observatoire. The present writer had been, since the beginning of 1875, minister of that church, and his theological creed being unsettled, he confined himself chiefly to practical subjects and so happened just to meet the requirements of these new hearers.

In 1880 his opinions took a more definite form, and became of such a nature as to oblige him to abandon his pulpit and retire from the Wesleyan body. After a year's rest and reflection he determined to commence a new work in accordance with his altered theological position; and being encouraged by the friends who had formed the liberal portion of his old congregation, he rented a hall, and on the 27th of November and the 4th of December, 1881, he gave two lectures, in which he developed his principles, beliefs and aims. Several gentlemen and their families immediately offered their support; a committee, composed of Mr. Anspach, vice-governor of the National Bank, Mr. Williams, professor at the University, and other gentlemen, was appointed, and funds subscribed to the amount of £180. Part of the Liberal Press granted its aid, especially the Flandre Libérale, and the Revue de Belgique, of which Count Goblet d'Alviella is the director. As our first meeting-place was objectionable on several accounts, and chiefly because it was over an estaminet, or drinking-room, we obtained from the burgomaster of the city, Mr. Buis, the gratuitous use of a fine hall in the Stock Exchange, in the very centre of the town, and it is there that for the present we hold our Sunday worship and lecture. The attendance varies from fifty or sixty hearers to 120 or 130, but it is still rather difficult for us to estimate the exact number of persons who have decidedly adhered to our undertaking. A general meeting of members will before long enlighten us on this point. A class for the religious instruction of the young has been opened on Thursdays, and numbers twenty pupils. Thus we have made a modest beginning in Brussels, but we believe it to be a serious and decisive one. In a few days, we will be commencing the second year of our existence, and we have every reason to hope that it will be marked by fresh progress in the work we are carrying on, to the best of our ability, in the service of God and of mankind. We shall be very happy if English Unitarians or Free Christians passing through Brussels will look us up on Sunday mornings, and give us by their presence a token of friendly interest and brotherly recognition.

J. HOCART.

Brussels, Nov. 6.

P.S.—I must beg that allowance should be kindly made for my imperfect English, as French is the language in which I usually think, write and speak.

Open Council.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

SIR,—When I began to read the article headed "Temperance Reform," in your last number, I was in hopes that it would contain some words which would encourage and strengthen those who were working for the cause of temperance. I found coldness where I expected warmth, ignorance where I expected knowledge, attack where I expected defence, and anger where I expected approval. The article is not on Temperance Reform; except so far as it objects to total abstinence as a means to that end. It accuses abstainers of certain follies which they do not commit, and it holds up to disapproval such efforts to stem the drinking of England as Local Option and the Sunday Closing Acts. And the tone of the article is a half angry tone—the tone of a moderate drinker disturbed in the exercise of "a pleasure or a necessity" by the inconvenient zeal of the total abstainers.

To show that he does well to be angry, he accuses those who advocate total abstinence of four things, "which he says are neither just nor fair."

First. "In the eyes of many of these people all places where intoxicating drinks can be obtained are put into one category, wholly irrespective of their special character." If this means to say that total abstainers assert that a West-end club, and a wine merchant's office, and a public-house in Ratcliffe Highway are all equally the resorts and the sources of immorality and crime, it is untrue. No total abstainer's intelligence is so obscured by water drinking as to make that assertion. But if it means to say that all these places sell a poison, the effects of which are first harmful, and then deadly to the human frame, and none of the effects of which are either useful or necessary to life, and that it would be the better for the physical and moral health of England that all this sale of poison should be done away with—it is an assertion which total abstainers make. But it is not an exaggerated or absurd assertion. It is one which the strictest scientific investigation supports, which cannot be controverted, which has been made by all the leading medical men before Royal Commissions, and to which every day's work upon the subject adds force and veracity. That assertion is scientifically "just," and, being capable of demonstration, is "fair." Secondly, the writer says:—"A moderate drinker is regarded with as much abhorrence as the habitual drunkard." This is a statement which is entirely untrue. I have never seen in any of the books accredited by any of the societies for total abstinence any words which even approached this statement. Nor, indeed, is the habitual drunkard regarded with abhorrence, but with infinite pity, and with such a desire to help him out of his dreadful state that no personal sacrifices are considered too great to give him that help.

What we do say to the moderate drinker is that he is not convinced of the harm he may do by his example, and that he is himself in physical danger. The harm his example does is that it encourages others to drink, who, unlike himself, cannot stop short of the moderate dose, and these are either made ill for life by the daily poison they take, or hurried into ruin of body and soul. No moderate drinker can tell the evil he may do by an example which no one calls immoral, or looks at with abhorrence, but which permits men, and especially his children, to play with fire without a protest, without a warning.

As to all moderate drinkers we regard them as in physical danger. They ask for no more than what has been called the "dietetic dose of alcohol," and with that they are content. That dose is from half a pint to a pint of French wine, or three glasses of sherry or port, or one wine-glassful of spirits. This is the mild stimulation they ask for, and they allow that if they took more, or science obliges them now to allow it, the results would be unhealthy. The effect of the moderate dose has been thoroughly investigated. It is to reduce the power of the minute blood vessels so that they fill with blood. The face gets flushed, the brain also, the lungs also; the breathing is quicker, the heart beats faster, and the mind is excited. That is the first stage. If a man takes more than this moderate dose he passes into another stage, when he begins to lose absolute command over his thoughts and muscles, and is liable to speak fast, to be over excited, to have headaches, however slight in the morning, and in the evening to be sleepy if he is alone, to be elevated if he is in company. If a man passes continually into that stage, and it is a very common experience, he is not a moderate drinker any more. The next stage is confusion of mind, of act, of speech, loss of power over the muscles, with depression and bodily cold. The last stage is absolute prostration. The man is dead drunk.

That is the journey. The moderate drinker begins it, and says he need never go further than the first stage, and many never do go further. But the question is, seeing that the journey is so deadly a one, ought a man to begin it at all? If he begin, he is in danger of going on, and there is not one inch of the way which is safe; for alcohol has this peculiar property, that it always lures onwards, that one glass asks for another. The moderate drinker is obliged almost daily to resist that allurements, and he is in continued peril of failures to resist; and, indeed, it is a wonder he is not more afraid, for the whole mass of those who have been killed by alcoholic diseases, who have been made criminals and brutes by alcohol, whom alcohol has driven mad, and who have sown in their children the seeds which afterwards quickened weakness of constitution, on which any disease seizes, into idiocy or mania or early death, began in the same way, went the first stage with the moderate drinker, but could not resist the invitation for more which the first stage invariably makes. It is because all this is so terribly true that we say, and with justice and fairness, that the moderate drinker is in danger, and that the example he sets does more harm than he is aware of. As to his own health. He gets no good of even his moderate dose. "If he is in first-rate condition, if he can freely throw off causes of oppression and depression, if he is actively engaged in the open air, if he has nothing to do which requires great exactitude and precision of work, if he is not subjected to any worry or mental strain, if he sleeps well and is properly clothed, and exposed to no extremes of heat or cold, if his appetite is good and he can get plenty of wholesome food"—if he has all these advantages, he may indulge without much risk in a moderate dose." But if one of these advantages should fail him, then even his moderate dose is doing him harm. It will double the disadvantage under which he suffers, and then step by step deprive him one by one of the advantages he has left, or of part of their power to make life easy.

This is the danger the healthy man incurs from moderate drinking. Let him become unhealthy, and the danger is doubled. Then the moderate dose weakens and batters down day by day the powers he has to resist the attacks which the daily wear and tear of life make on his physical health and on his mental energy.

And this is not only the testimony of science, but the testimony of statistics. No insurance society will insure the moderate drinker at the same figure as the total abstainer. They know—and the death rate, on comparison, proves it—that the life of the moderate drinker is, save in a few rare cases, more subject to disease and shorter than that of the total abstainer.

It is in this way that the total abstainer looks at the position of the moderate drinker, and not with any abhorrence whatever. He appeals to the moderate drinker to give up his dose because he is in physical peril, because he is lessening all his powers, and because the example he sets brings others into mortal danger, however sober his own life may be. And this appeal is not made by any "overweening zeal." It is based on the answer given to the question—Is moderate drinking safe?—by the long and patient investigation of science, and on the moral call which the dreadful peril and ruin of multitudes make upon his conscience and his heart. It is an appeal which is, therefore, neither unjust nor unfair.

* See Dr. Richardson's "Drink and Strong Drink," a little first-class book in which the whole subject is accurately and moderately treated.

The third assertion made by your writer is "That all who are engaged in the trade are denounced (by total abstinists) with as much vigour as if they were criminals of the deepest dye."

This also is untrue. No one ranks anyone in the trade among criminals, or denounces them as if they were criminals. Total abstinists impute no moral blame to these men, unless in cases where all the world would join in the blame, as when publicans are proved to encourage drunkenness on their premises. What total abstinists do is to state facts and leave the application of these facts to the conscience of the traders themselves.

They say that alcohol is a poison, dangerous to those who take it moderately, deadly to those who take it immoderately, never of any use or necessity as food, and the most fruitful cause of violent deaths, of crime, of disease, and of insanity that exists in this country. They say that this is proved, and it is proved. The great brewers and distillers make this poison, and the merchants and publicans distribute it far and wide into every corner of the country. Total abstinists do not say that these traders are the origin of the evil which follows on this making and selling of poison. The origin is in the public craving. But they are the means by which this craving is satisfied, or rather not satisfied, for it never is satisfied, but awakened and developed; and the work of their lives is unfortunately bound up with the destruction of the bodies, and brains, and souls of men. That is simple fact. There is no denouncing in the matter. There is no moral blame imputed. If a man likes to carry on that trade, well and good. To his own conscience he stands or falls. But if it strikes him unpleasantly, and if his conscience is haunted, let him give it up at any loss, and tell the public why he has done so. One thing is certain, he will do no harm by having nothing to do with it. It would be for the good, for the incalculable good of England, if every drop of alcohol in any shape were spilt into the sea.

The fourth accusation made by your writer is this—"That total abstinists are credited with virtues as citizens, and with an immunity from wrong doing which they, and only they, can attain." So far as this accusation imputes a certain self-conceit to the total abstainer greater than that which ordinarily belongs to any special class, it is an error. Total abstinists do not plume themselves on being better men than others. Nor do they ever say that the moderate drinkers are less worthy citizens than they are. What they do say is fact, not fancy bred of self-conceit; is not exaggeration but simple truth. They say that crime diminishes in proportion as drinking diminishes; that poverty diminishes as drinking diminishes, that disease does the same; and that the work of the country is better done, and the homes of the country are more happy, and the culture of the men and women of the working classes increases, where drinking is lessened or wholly put an end to. They say that in villages or in towns where there is no drinking at all there is no need of police or workhouses, scarcely any need of mad-houses, and only half the need other places have of hospitals. And where these advantages exist, it is plain that the State profits, and that those who thus bring the profit are better citizens than those who build up by their drinking the prison, the workhouse, the madhouse and more than half of the sickbeds of the country. It is just to state this, for it is true, and since it is true, it is fair to dwell upon it. These are the four accusations your writer has made. He next enters into his objections to the Social Option Bill and the Sunday Closing Acts, and where it is not that this letter is already too long, I would gladly meet him on those objections. I am quite ready to do so at a future time, if you, Sir, think it well. And he concludes with his remedy for "much of the evil which unquestionably does exist in connection with the drink traffic!" It is in "making these houses better fitted to the wants of the people. Opportunities for obtaining food or non-intoxicating liquor ought to be as ample" in the public-houses "as they are for getting wine and spirits." This is the effort to which the Temperance Reformers should address their energies. At present he allows it is not practicable. But the ignorance which professes it is almost sublime. And it is only on account of this ignorance of the whole subject and of its awful issues that the whole spirit of the article which cries down or lightly treats the zeal of those who are contending against the worst evil that ever has afflicted the human race can be at all excused.

STOPFORD A. BROOKE.

1, Manchester-square, W., Nov. 13.

Correspondence.

UNITARIAN DISTRICT ORGANISATION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—As one residing in a suburban district of the metropolis and regretfully isolated from any religious communion with co-thinkers, I feel that the remarks of Mr. William Shaen in the discussion which took place at a recent meeting of the Council of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to be of the utmost practical value. Admitting the desirability of reaching the working classes, he nevertheless drew attention to the great desideratum that existing congregations should be strengthened and new ones established. May I point out for the attention of the Council the ample field for any such effort as that of establishing a new congregation which exists in Upper Norwood, including Lower and South Norwood and the adjacent parishes? It so happens that the Sunday trains run most inconveniently for those who might wish to attend either the London chapels or those chapels which lie further South and West, which in some cases do not permit passengers to return to their homes until an early hour in the afternoon. Moreover, there is a fair sprinkling of persons of Liberal views in religious matters residing in this district, some of whom have expressed their great regret that there is no place of worship in which they with consistency could meet for communion. I think, therefore, an effort might be made in Upper Norwood with decided advantage and prospects of success. The local newspaper gives every week a full column of notices of the Sunday religious services in this immense district, and they amount to many score. I regret, however, to say that it does not in its enumeration and in the whole of this vast area include the name of one single Unitarian or Free Christian Church.

May I venture a suggestion for the consideration of the Council when it next discusses the subject of establishing new congregations? I think it would be to the advantage of the cause of our liberal theology, as we understand it, if the Council would appoint an organising secretary, whose duty it should be to "prospect" the localities all around which now lie fallow, and to interview persons of known liberal tendencies residing in the district, and then to report the result of his investigations to the Council. The area of his work would be largely commensurate with the localities from which subscriptions are sent to the Association. The present value of such a system of organisation is well proved by the network of educational centres which now prevail in the North in connection with the Yorkshire Union of Mechanic and Literary Institutions, and is entirely owing to the labour of an organising secretary. The same result may be seen in the numerous political associations which interlock each other in the Parliamentary county divisions and cement union of thought and action. As one not unfamiliar with the important results attained by such means, I venture respectfully to offer my suggestion (quantum valeat) for the consideration of the Council, feeling sure that if the right description of person could be found—a gentleman possessing local knowledge, conversational power, genial temperament, a faculty of observation, to which must be added a genuine love of human progress in its religious, moral, and intellectual phases of development—his services would be found to be of eminent practical utility. Anyhow, I do trust that the novelty of the suggestion will not preclude its receiving the attention of the Council of the British and Foreign Association, whose duty it obviously is to take the initiative. I am a subscribing member to the Association.

VIGILANS.

Nov. 14.

THE THEISTIC CHURCH.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The friendly initials "R. B.," at the end of your article on "The Theistic Church" in this week's Inquirer, are in themselves a guarantee that not hing ill-natured is intended by anything written over them.

But one who knows little or nothing of my teaching about Jesus of Nazareth would draw from that article a most erroneous and unfair impression. "R. B." says that I go out of my way "to attack the character of Christ and to denounce all reverential esteem for him as so much idolatry."

Now I can fearlessly challenge anyone, Orthodox or Unitarian, to point out a single passage in which I have "attacked" any good word attributed to Jesus, or any good deed reported to have been done by him. I have not vilified anything good whatever. I have only attacked that which is reported of him in the Gospels which is really evil or blameworthy. The Unitarians have a way of their own of endorsing my criticisms. They simply drop out of the narratives just those points in the character or conduct of Jesus to which they morally object. How can they consistently blame me for finding the same fault with the Gospel portrait, as they find themselves?

And pray, why should they blame me for saying openly what they secretly think? As to my "denouncing all reverential esteem for Christ as so much idolatry," allow me to quote from a quite recent sermon, preached September 10, which, however, was written and preached in March, 1873:—"It can hardly be doubted that the core and kernel of all sincere religious opposition to our views is superstitious reverence for Christ. I say superstitious reverence, because some reverence, nay, great reverence, is the only attitude in which reasonable and wide-hearted men ought to stand in regard to Jesus of Nazareth. It may be taken for granted that his name should be enrolled in the list of the world's noblest men, and that nothing like an attack upon his character, or even a fine criticism of his faults, would ever have been made or deemed necessary, had not his name been removed from that list and placed in a category by itself. It is, therefore, not the proper reverence, but the superstitious reverence for Christ which we assail—that most absurd and groundless superstition which places him in a superhuman rank, &c."

I have no wish to repeat observations on the Unitarian body which are resented as aspersions, but when they wind up their prayers "through Moses our Lord," or for the sake of thine apostle Paul, our mediator and advocate," I shall begin to believe that they no longer put Jesus in a category by himself.

As to "R. B.'s" insinuation of conceit, that I must bear, as all men have to bear it who have the audacity to differ from the majority, or to run headlong against a popular sentiment.

CHARLES VOYSEY.

A PLEA FROM OXFORD.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—It was with some disappointment that I discovered when I took up residence here a few weeks ago that there were no visible attempts being made to further the cause of Unitarian Christianity in this city. Surely we, as a religious body, ought at least to be fairly represented here, in one of the largest universities in the world; and I, for one, should greatly rejoice at any steps being taken to bring the members of our own body together once a week for religious worship.

The absence of a place of worship which we younger members might attend without running the risk of hearing our most cherished convictions assailed is necessarily a great hindrance to the cultivation of spiritual and truly religious habits of thought. Some of us scarcely like to attend a Church of England service, and to be compelled to listen to dogmas which are at variance with our best feelings as men, and contradictory to the eternal goodness and fatherly kindness of God. But if we altogether give up attending any place of worship there is the opposite danger of religious indifference.

The only remedy which I can see for this state of affairs is that members of our body, with such friends as might choose to join us, should meet together on Sunday for religious worship. This would not only give an impetus to the apparently stagnant Unitarianism of Oxford, but would afford a splendid training to our younger members, such as myself, who are preparing for our ministry, and who might conduct the services in rotation. I presume that in the whole university there might be found some twenty or thirty earnest thinkers who would be ready and willing to assist in promoting our cause.

I am fully aware that Oxford is the hotbed of a certain phase of orthodoxy, and that we should probably receive some strong opposition in carrying out the idea which I suggest; but that ought rather to stimulate us to more vigorous efforts on behalf of the faith which is so dear to us. I have no doubt that if we could once make a start here the project would be eagerly taken up by present and future members of the University, and might some day be the means of fulfilling that long-cherished hope of building a Unitarian church in Oxford.

I should feel great obliged to those of your readers who may approve of this project for any practical suggestions, and also for assistance in giving me the names of any students who would be likely to sympathise with the movement.

R. F. NICHOLSON.

University College, Oxford.

IGNORANT BIGOTRY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—My sister, Miss Squier, has been interesting herself in an attempt to improve the neighbourhood of the Unitarian Chapel, Moreton Hampstead, by buying, for the purpose of pulling down, some ruinous cottages that stand by. She took some trouble to find out, at Exeter, the owner of the cottages, and followed her from Exeter to some other town, to which she had gone on a visit. The interview between the two ladies was pleasant and satisfactory; and it seemed likely that the sale of the cottages would be at once effected. A letter, however, has been since received, a copy of which I subjoin, omitting the signature for obvious reasons:—

[COPY.]

"7, Mount Pleasant, Newton Abbot.

"Miss Squier,—Madam, I am writing to you at once before I return to Exeter, as I wish to tell you without delay that I cannot sell you the cottages you want for the purpose you require. I am sorry I did not think of it while you were here, but after you left I saw I could not, as a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, sell you those cottages with the object of improving that which denies Him. I am sorry you had so much trouble in finding me.

"I remain, Faithfully Yours ——"

"Nov. 11, 1882."

Comment on such ignorance and bigotry is unnecessary. WILLIAM CROKE SQUIER.
Stand, Nov. 15.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Your readers may like to know that the new Mission station at 4, Rhyl-street, Weedington-road, Kentish-town, will be opened on Sunday next, November 19. Will you allow me to appeal to them for the supply of some of our wants?

The committee are anxious to make the rooms as bright and pretty as possible, and therefore ask their friends for any cheerful prints or coloured pictures (framed or not) which they may be able to spare to adorn the bare walls. Strips of American cloth bearing floral decorations painted on them would also be most acceptable.

A library is being at once formed for the Sunday-school, and also for general purposes. The reading-room will be open two nights a week free. Contributions of books, newspapers (plain or illustrated), or money for this object will be very helpful.

All gifts should be sent to the missionary, the Rev. Joseph Pollard, Domestic Mission, 4, Rhyl-street, Weedington-road, Kentish-town, N.W.

J. ESTLIN CARPENTER.

Hon. Sec. London Domestic Mission Society.
Nov. 15.

BETHNAL GREEN MISSION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—We shall commence religious services at Bethnal Green, East London, in a week or two. May I ask, through the Inquirer, those congregations which have ceased to use Dr. Martineau's "Hymns for the Christian Church and Home" to be so good as to make us a gift of their discontinued books? This will help us much, as the congregation we hope to gather will consist of really poor people.

W. C. BARROW,

for the London District Unitarian Association.
The books may be sent to Miss Philpott, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

University Intelligence.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

The following are the Lists of the Candidates who have passed the recent examinations:—

B.Sc. EXAMINATION.

PASS LIST.

First Division.

Bayliss, W. M.—University College.
Goodman, R. N.—St. John's College, Cambridge.
Kipping, F. S.—Owens College.
Lever, F.—Guy's Hospital.
Phillips, F. B. W.—Guy's Hospital.
Ransom, W. B.—Trinity College, Cambridge.
Riley, J. T.—Mason Science College, Birmingham.
Ryan, J.—King's College, Cambridge.
Scott, Charlotte A.—Girton College, Cambridge.
Stroud, W.—Balliol College, Oxford, and Owens College.
Waddell, J.—Dalhousie College, Nova Scotia.
Williams, W. C.—Mason Science College, Birmingham.

Second Division.

Allen, H.—Private study.
Andrews, E. C.—St. John's College, Cambridge.
Barrodale, S.—Mason Science College, Birmingham.
Beare, T. H.—University College.
Frost, R.—Owens College.
Halstead, G. E., B.A.—Guy's Hospital.
Heap, H.—Private study.
Marshall, Sophie E.—Bedford and Firth Colleges.
Morgan, T. M.—Private study.
Salisbury, C., B.A.—Private study.
Small, E. W.—Christ's College, Cambridge.
Voelcker, J. A., B.A.—University College and Private study.
Walmsley, R. M.—Private study.
Wilson, H.—St. John's College, Cambridge.
Woodcock, F. W., B.A.—Private study.

B.A. EXAMINATION.

PASS LIST.

First Division.

Alden, Kate.—Bedford College, London.
Ashton, A. J.—Private study.
Ayles, H. B.—Private study and St. John's College, Cambridge.
Barber, W. T. A.—New Kingswood School.
Barnes, J., B.Sc.—Owens College and Private study.
Bennett, T.—University College and Private study.
Bertenshaw, T. H.—University and Boro'-road Colleges and Private reading.
Bewlay, E. M.—University College.
Bostock, Selina D.—Ladies' College, Cheltenham.
Bruton, F. A.—Private study.
Butler, J. E. A.—St. Gregory's College, Downshire.
Caldecott, F.—Private study and tuition.
Chambers, J.—Private study.
Chipper, P.—Private study.
Clay, Henrietta E.—Ladies' College, Cheltenham, and Private tuition.
Collin, Mary.—Notting-hill High School and Bedford College.
Coupe, C. M. M.—Stonyhurst College.
Cowe, A.—Cheshunt College.
Crampton, J.—Private study.
Dawson, A. W.—Private study.
Dymond, Olivia.—Ladies' College, Cheltenham.
Elligott, E. M.—St. Mark's College, Chelsea, and Private study.
Gallatly, W.—Private study.

Germaine, R. A.—Private study.
Grantham, C. F.—Private study.
Heppel, Mary L.—Private tuition.
Herman, R. A.—Trinity College, Cambridge.
Hodgson, W. H.—Private study.
Jones, E. G.—New College.
Jones, R. W.—Private study.
Kellett, F. W.—Kingswood School and Sidney College, Cambridge.

Kenner, J. B.—Private study.
Lea, F. B.—Owens College and Private study.
Lemprière, P. A.—Private study.
Little, E.—Owens College.
Macrosty, H. W.—Private study.
Meakin, H. J.—Cheltenham Training College and Private tuition.
Miall, Hilda C.—University and Queen's Colleges.
Morris, A. L.—University College.
Naylor, F. J.—Private study.
Nesbitt, A. P.—Owens College.
Page, Annie.—Ladies' College, Cheltenham.
Paton, H. T.—Private study.
Petrie, Mary L. G.—University College.
Pickard, H. B.—University of Edinburgh.
Quinn, M. T.—St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw.
Reed, B.—Private study.
Reilly, A. C.—Private study.
Richards, J. G.—Private study.
Sanderson, A. D.—Kingswood School and Queen's College, Cambridge.
Selby, W. J.—Private study.
Shipham, F. P.—Wesley College, Sheffield.
Smith, G. A.—University College.
Smith, J. R.—Private study.
Stephenson, A. R.—Kingswood School and New College, Eastbourne.
Stock, A.—Regent's Park College.
Sturge, Elizabeth H.—Ladies' College, Cheltenham.
Swann, F.—Yorkshire College and Private tuition.
Thompson, Edith M.—Queen's and University Colleges.
Thomson, Edith M.—Bedford College, London.
Topham, Margaret R.—Queen's and University Colleges.
Townsend, Annie.—Bedford College, London.
Tracey, F.—Exeter College, Oxford.
Tyson, J.—Private study.
Wallace, J. T. N.—Private study and Owens College.
Ward, T.—Sally College and Private study.
Watkinson, J.—University College.
Watts, A.—St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw.
Williams, Edith R.—University College.
Williams, S.—University College.
Wilson, G. B.—Private tuition.
Wood, F. S.—Wesley College, Sheffield.
Wyatt, A. J.—Regent's Park College and Private study.

Second Division.

Abrahams, M.—Jews' College.
Anderson, W. S.—University College.
Bettesworth, W. A.—Private study.
Brown, H.—Private study and tuition.
Butler, R. P.—Wesleyan College, Westminster, and Private study.
Cannell, T. B.—Private study.
Cannell, W. M.—Wesleyan College, Richmond.
Charleton, R. A.—University College.
Collar, G.—St. John's College, Battersea, and Private study.
Davies, J. M.—University College of Wales.
Defries, W.—Private study.
Dewdney, H.—Chepstow Grammar School.
Evans, J. B.—New College.
Faulkner, H. J. H.—Private study.
Foley, P.—St. Patrick's College, Carlow.
Goode, W. T.—Private study.
Hyamson, M.—Jews' College.
Johnson, Mary L.—Private tuition.
Kemphorne, C. H.—Private study.
Lamburn, E. J. S.—Owens College and Private study.
Lean, C. A.—Mason Science College, Birmingham.
Martin, A.—Private study and University College, Bristol.
Mayer, S.—University College.
Norman, A. W.—Private tuition.
O'Brien, P. A.—St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw.
Pollen, J. H.—Stonyhurst College.
Rundell, M. A.—Private study.
Sampson, W. H.—University College and Private study.
Sutton, C. T.—Private study.
Van Praagh, J.—Jews' Free School.
Wertheimer, J.—University College, Liverpool.
White, H. R.—Private study.
Williams, J. L.—New College.

CAMBRIDGE.—The Rev. H. Ierson, M.A., continues his Sunday evening services at Cambridge with great acceptance. The Rev. P. H. Wickstead, M.A., has formed a class there for the critical study of the Old Testament, which he will meet once a week for the present. The series of the class are to be continued during this term.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 1882.

WE have all learned from the daily papers that Mr. Tennyson's new play, The Promise of May, produced at the Globe Theatre, was a decided failure, notwithstanding the uniform excellence of the acting. It must inevitably have been so from the nature of the subject, and the author's singular want of the dramatic faculty. The Promise of May is a tragic story of seduction and abandonment, which is quaintly shadowed forth in the pretty song of the opening scene:—

"The town lay still in the low sunlight,
The hen cluck late by the white farm gate,
The maid to her dairy came in from the cow,
The stock-dove coo'd at the fall of night,
The blossom had open'd on every bough.
O joy for the promise of May, of May,
O joy for the promise of May.

But a red fire woke in the heart of the town,
And a fox from the glen ran away with the hen,
And a cat to the cream, and a rat to the cheese,
And the stock-dove coo'd till a kite dropped down,
And a salt wind burnt the blossoming trees.
O grief for the promise of May, of May,
O grief for the promise of May."

The plot of the drama seems to us quite a mistake, and is almost as repulsive without being so powerful as Mr. Tennyson's recent lurid poem "Despair." It is designed to show the influence of Agnosticism and Socialistic views upon human action. The hero is a forbidding person, who reads and philosophises aloud upon the essay of a free thinker, whose opinions are his own. His train of thought leads him to regard man as a creature who lives for sensation alone. Marriage he holds to be a "senseless institution," the doctrine of elective affinity combined with the maintenance of children by the State being the cardinal principle of the great and desirable democratic revolution he sees ahead. The author's evident purpose is to represent this precious individual's villainy as the natural and inevitable result of his opinions, and while it is not our part to vindicate views with which we have no sympathy whatever, we need hardly point out that Mr. Tennyson has done great injustice to both the Agnostic and the Socialist, who would entirely disclaim the immoral tendencies attributed to them. This is a dangerous game to play at, for with quite as much reason might an Agnostic dramatist produce on the stage a modern Tartuffe and Mawworm and represent them as the natural result of Orthodox teaching.

A CURIOUS scene occurred during the performance of the drama on Tuesday evening. The Marquis of Queensberry, a well-known Agnostic, who was seated in the stalls, rose and protested against the Laureate's representation of the principles of freethought, of which the marquis professed himself an adherent. The marquis might surely have been content with the marked failure of the drama, or have uttered his protest through the columns of the Press.

PROF. CHUNDER MOZOOMDAR'S book on the "Faith and Progress of the Brahmo Somaj" is just out. The first part consists of speculative and doctrinal subjects, such as the development of the Brahmo Somaj, Difference between Deism and the Brahmo Somaj, the Essential Religion of the Brahmo Somaj, Hindu and Christian Influence in the Brahmo Somaj, and a Summary of the chief beliefs of the Brahmo Somaj. The second part consists of Devotional and Practical subjects, such as the great Bhakti Revival, Missionary Agencies, Social Reforms, Practical Activities, &c. The third part contains a number of chapters on the New Dispensation explaining its principal doctrines. The book contains 430 pages, and is neatly printed and bound by the Calcutta Central Press Company.

THE census returns of Ulster, just issued, state that the population numbered in the last census 1,743,075 persons. Of these 833,566 were Roman Catholics, 470,629 Presbyterians, 379,402 Episcopalians, 34,825 Methodists, 43,332 of other denominations, and 321 who refused information; 930,390 can read and write, 306,118 can read only, and 515,846 are illiterate. The figures, compared with those of 1871, show a considerable advance in education.

PRINCIPAL CAIRD, in formally opening the winter session of Glasgow University, delivered an address on "Bishop Butler." He spoke of the "Analogy" as an example of the survival of a book in an age that had long passed away from the standpoint on which it was based. The true reason for this was to be found in the fact that while Butler was, in one point of view, a thorough representative of the religious attitude of his time, and whilst the argument of his great work was in some respects fallacious and untenable, there was nevertheless in the spirit of his teaching much that was in advance of his time, and that was of essential and permanent value.

In another column Mr. Voysey objects to one of the statements made in our article on "The Theistic Church" last week. But Mr. Voysey himself affords a justification for our statement in the quotation he makes from a recent sermon. We said he attacked the character of Christ, and in the extract given he says "that nothing like an attack upon his (Jesus) character, or even a fine criticism of his faults, would ever have been made or deemed necessary had not, &c." We judge from this, therefore, that an attack had been made, and his faults finely criticised. Mr. Voysey says it is only superstitious reverence for Christ which he assails, but then he charges the Unitarian body with this superstitious reverence because some of them wind up their prayers with the words, "through Jesus Christ our Lord." We confess that these words have to us little meaning, and we are better pleased at their omission than retention. At the same time the question is not of very vast importance, and if there are those among us who have a great affection for the words, there is no reason why we should class them as superstitious. Jesus in one sense does stand "in a category by himself;" not by reason of his being superhuman, but because his character and place in history are unique. Mr. Voysey finds a portrait in which he detects blemishes. We find four sketches, not wholly consistent; we seek to find the reason of the inconsistency, and believe that we find it not in the man, but in the mistaken conception of the writers. And we find more than this, for we find that from this life there has flowed an influence that has affected the history of the world. We think this is a more rational mode of regarding the life and character of Jesus than Mr. Voysey's pointing at blemishes, the real existence of which may fairly be doubted.—R.B.

At an influential meeting held on Thursday at Lord Salisbury's residence it was decided to take steps to raise £50,000 for the purpose of a memorial of Dr. Pusey. It was resolved that the money should be devoted first to the purchase of Dr. Pusey's library, and the provision of suitable books for it, and next to an endowment for two or more clergymen to act as librarians, and promote the interests of theological study and religious life within the university. This is the most sensible movement of the kind we have recorded for a long time. The memorial is at once respectful to the memory of Dr. Pusey, and from the point of view of the promoters, will conduce to the permanent religious advantage of the university.

DR. ANGUS, Principal of the Baptist College in Regent's Park, in a recent address, had some excellent remarks on children's piety, and in deprecation of the sensational element which, as he said, could have no abiding influence. The religion of a child should be natural and joyous, and thoughtful sermons need not be sad. An over-quickened sense of the future life, combined with fear of the terrors of hell, was often painfully inculcated, and the child was oppressed with terror in consequence of such indiscreet teaching.—All this is quite true, but when Orthodox divines talk in this way it clearly shows that they are beginning to doubt the doctrines which they solemnly profess to believe. Dr. Angus is understood to be a staunch believer in the doctrine of eternal punishment, and if hell is a reality little children cannot too early be taught to flee from the wrath to come, and have no business to be "joyous" when all creation is overshadowed with gloom. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of such a God as Dr. Angus's Calvinistic theology depicts, and how can the service of such a Being be "natural and joyous," either for children or grown-up people?

WE are so deeply interested in the improvement of the devotional services of the Church that we are glad to notice a growing movement in this direction. Scotch preaching is probably the worst in the world, and Scotch worship the dreariest and least inspiring. Some years ago there was a growing desire for a richer service in the Established Church of Scotland, resulting in the formation of "The Church Service Society," which has done much to develop a taste for liturgical forms of worship, and to fill up the wide gulf separating the Presbyterian from the Anglican ritual. The Free Church students have now formed a "Public Worship Association," and in a short time the United Presbyterians will have a "Devotional Service Association." At a recent conference papers were read on "The Worship of the Scottish Church in Early Reformation Times," "The Defects of the Present System," and "The Aims of the Proposed Association." These last were stated not to be "to effect any radical change in their system of worship, to deprecate the importance of the ordinance of preaching, nor to thrust new usages of worship upon their congregation," but "to seek the glory of God Almighty in connection with the public worship of His people, to promote the devout and orderly expression of the devotions of the Church, to point out defects and blemishes in their modes of worship, and to discuss proposals in the direction of improvement." Complaint was made of the lack of reverence both in the pulpit and the pew, of the want of variety, refinement, and æsthetic beauty in the ordinary services, and of the absence of proper forms for marriages, baptisms and funerals. Several of the most influential ministers in the Church have indicated sympathy with the proposed association, the formation of which has been postponed till the meeting of Synod in May next. We hope that our own Churches generally are becoming fully alive to the importance of a dignified and impressive service of worship.

In our last number but one we published a letter from the Secretary of the "Moral Reform Union," which had been forwarded to us through one of our oldest contributors. It almost challenged controversy, and in the next number came the inevitable reply and protest, to which we added a note deprecating further correspondence. Our valued contributor now writes complaining that our correspondent of last week by calling the Moral Reform Union the "Cast-the-first-stone-Society," implies that the members of that Union are guilty of the vice which they condemn! We need hardly express our conviction that such a thought never entered into our correspondent's mind, and we should certainly never have admitted his letter if we had believed it capable of such an interpretation. Our correspondent, we know, is incapable of defending the offence in question, or of casting any imputation upon ladies of the highest character who are striving to raise the moral tone of society, however widely we may differ from some of their methods. What these methods are our readers may judge for themselves by referring to an advertisement of the "Moral Reform Union" on our last page.

It is often said by the opponents of the London School Board that it is guilty of much extravagance and waste. A few items, showing the vast quantity of books and apparatus to be dealt with, will demonstrate the dire necessity for the prevention of this. More than half a million of books have been issued to the different schools during the year 1881. Reckoning each at a quarter of an inch in thickness, they would if arranged side by side, cover a length of more than two miles. 123,604 slates, 1,927,000 slate pencils, calico enough to stretch 39 miles, and nearly 800,000 needles have been also supplied during the same period. These large figures seem calculated to support the charge of extravagance, but if analysed, they will be found to speak well for the order and thrift cultivated in the schools; one slate pencil, it appears, lasts the average Board scholar about six weeks, and one needle for almost two months.

Reviews.

A Study of Spinoza. By James Martineau, LL.D., D.D. Principal of Manchester New College, London. London: Macmillan and Co. 1882.

Spinoza Essays. Edited by Professor Knight, St. Andrews. London: Williams and Norgate. 1882.

The second of these volumes on Spinoza is very interesting, and the first is very important as well as profoundly interesting. It is not necessary to do much more than draw attention to the volume of essays, for the publication of which we are indebted to the laudable philosophical zeal of Professor Knight. They are all republications, although none of them has appeared before in an English dress, except M. Renan's, which was published in the Contemporary Review some years ago. The volume of Essays comprises the following:—1st. A short introductory note by the Editor. 2nd. A Lecture "In Memory of Spinoza," delivered on the occasion of the Bicentenary of Spinoza to the class of Philosophy at Leyden, February 24, 1871, by J. Land, Professor of Philosophy at Leyden—translated by the Rev. Allan Menzies. 3rd. The Life and Character of Baruch Spinoza, a Lecture by Kuno Fischer, Professor of Philosophy at Berlin—translated by Frida Schmidt. 4th. Spinoza, the (glad) herald to Mankind of the good news of its majority, an oration delivered on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue at the Hague, September 18, 1880, by Dr. J. Van Vloten—translated by the Rev. Allan Menzies. 5th. Spinoza, 1677 and 1877, an address delivered at the unveiling of the monument at the Hague, February 21, 1877, by Ernest Renan. Of these Dr. Land's lecture is the best attempt to criticise Spinoza, and generally to account for him and give an account of his philosophy. He has added to it also, in the English translation, a number of learned notes. Kuno Fischer's life and character of Spinoza is altogether as full, accurate, and reverential a portrait of the man as we could desire to have given to us. Dr. Van Vloten's oration is an eloquent burst of hero worship, rather indiscriminating, as might be expected from the title.

Renan's address is already well known, and is, of course, marked by his charming graces of style and comprehensive thought. We may add that the translators have rendered their Dutch and German originals into clear and readable English, and both they and Professor Knight have done good service to the cause of philosophical study.

Dr. Martineau's "Study of Spinoza" has been long promised and looked for. It was at first undertaken in connection with the series of Philosophical Classics which is edited by Professor Knight. Dr. Martineau found, however, that he could not compress his materials into the short space which Professor Knight allowed. In that series, therefore, Spinoza will be dealt with by Dr. Caird. On the whole, we are glad of the change, for we shall have the advantage of a study of Spinoza from another point of view. English readers will then have able interpreters like Mr. F. Pollock, Dr. Martineau, and Dr. Caird to introduce them to the company of decidedly the greatest Jew of the last eighteen hundred years. We are glad also that Dr. Martineau's essay does not appear in the Philosophical Classics for another reason. We are gainers both in quantity and quality, and he has been able to expound at large and to criticise as much as he desired. The result is that we have an admirable book. We are not going to offer our readers an exhaustive study of Spinoza ourselves. For that we refer them to Dr. Martineau's book. We shall content ourselves with an outline of its contents, and shall add some remarks of our own, slightly exculpatory of Spinoza in at least one respect, where we think that Dr. Martineau has been more severe than he need have been.

According to Spinoza there is one being which we call Nature, Substance, or God. The name he uses most frequently is Substance, but he also uses the other two, and evidently means the same by them all. The one Substance has infinite attributes, and the attributes are all themselves infinite. But we only know two of these attributes, viz., thought and extension. As Spinoza understands infinitude quantitatively all finite thought is a mode of the divine thought, and all finite extension is a mode of the divine extension. Strictly speaking, then, there is, and there can be, nothing outside or other than Substance, Nature or God, in the infinite attributes or infinite modes of them. The One is also the All. Critics object that this doctrine gives up Theism in two ways. They say that on one side it topples over into Pantheism, and on the other side it topples over into Atheism. Either way they say it drops the personal God, and though in words it keeps the personality of man, it takes away the sole ground on which human personality can rest, inasmuch as it reduces the consciousness of freedom into a delusion of the imagination. But we submit that these critics too often ignore Spinoza's statement that there are an infinite number of attributes, of course also with an infinite number of modes. In these attributes and modes there may therefore be room both for the personal God and the personal man, although we have not attained to the knowledge of either, and indeed, according to him it seems impossible that we ever should attain to the knowledge. This is as much as we need at present say, apart from the criticisms made by Dr. Martineau, and our own passing estimate of real force that belongs to them.

Dr. Martineau deals first with the life and then with the philosophy of Spinoza. The story of the life is full and beautifully told, and particularly fine in the way in which it narrates Spinoza's metaphysical and scientific development and the light thrown by his correspondence on the growth and true meaning of his system as a whole. The author's main strength is, however, shown in the second part, where he deals exhaustively with the philosophy of Spinoza. Here he expounds and discusses in succession the logical theory, the metaphysical system, the ethical doctrine, the political doctrine, religion and Biblical theology. The exposition is remarkably clear and the discussion extremely searching. He leaves out the statement of no essential point, and admiring students of Spinoza will all readily grant that the doctrine of the master has justice, and even generosity done to it in Dr. Martineau's presentation. Perhaps they will hardly be ready to grant the same with respect to the critical discussion which accompanies the exposition of the doctrine. We think, however, that Dr. Martineau has got very near perfection in both. In the exposition there is no lack, and where the discussion fails to completely satisfy us it is not because we dissent from Dr. Martineau's philosophical principles. On the contrary, we are substantially at one with them, but it is because we think that he does not allow as much as he fairly might for the necessary inconsistencies into which Spinoza fell, and the different interpretations, more akin to Dr. Martineau's own fundamental views which it is quite possible to read into or even to draw from some of Spinoza's statements. In one sense the criticisms are quite legitimate, and the contradictions thrust home on Spinoza are really there, and professing as he does to demonstrate everything they have no business to be there. On Spinoza's part to fail in demonstration is to knock the bottom out of his system as a reasoned totality and explanation of the Universe. And he often does fail. Still our conviction remains that though Spinoza does not succeed in his chief aim, there is a rich religious suggestiveness in him, and a fluctuating perception of the truth of things which Dr. Martineau does not at all times recognise. He sternly holds his author to the consequences of his logic when his author has practically gone off on another tack, and yet imagines all the while that he is where he was.

Spinoza's theological position has been very variously defined, and it must be confessed that his language often readily lends itself to opposite interpretations. He has been called Atheist, Akosmist, Pantheist, and some few of his more indulgent critics have been generous enough to ascribe to him an indefinable and mystical kind of Theism. Mr. Bradlaugh, for instance, makes Spinoza the champion of Atheism, and deduces the necessity of an Atheism akin to his own from Spinoza's axioms and definition. But even if Spinozism did logically end in Atheism, which we are not prepared to admit, there is a difference like that between light and darkness, between the genuinely religious spirit of Spinoza and the spirit of antagonism to religion in every shape which characterises Mr. Bradlaugh. Whatever outward similarities there may be, there still remains a subtle something which essentially differentiates the author of the "Ethics" from the Editor of the National Reformer. Dr. Martineau also classes Spinoza among Atheists. His reason for doing so is this. He quotes Kant, who says:—"The conception of God is generally understood to involve not merely a blindly operating nature as the eternal root of things, but a Supreme Being that shall be the author of all things by free and understanding action, and it is this conception which alone has any interest for us. And he who has it is properly called a Theist in virtue of his belief in a living God." "By this rule," adds Dr. Martineau, "Spinoza's philosophy does not fulfil the conditions of Theism"; and he would be right if we were to be bound by Kant's definition, and if Spinoza were always self-consistent. But Spinoza is not always self-consistent, and although personally we accept Kant's definition, yet we shrink from baptising as Atheists those who define God in another way. It is needless to add that Dr. Martineau only insists on the right use of terms, and means no odium theologorum. On the other hand, Dr. Martineau tells us that "Trendelenburg, Busolt, and Sigwart, critics from whose judgment it is always dangerous to depart, 'think that Spinoza's 'res-cogitans' describes a self-conscious being, an infinite Ego.'" There seems to us to be room for both opinions, and we hesitate to decide positively in a matter where such eminent critics differ. It is true that Spinoza says, and illustrates in many ways, that if we choose to assign to God such predicates as intellect and will, these terms will be as wide of their proper meaning as the word "dog" when applied to Sirius instead of to the barking quadruped. At the same time it is also true that Spinoza does often imply intellect and will in God. The question is how are we to explain this manifest inconsistency? Are we to put it down to the necessity of human thought and language, which compelled Spinoza to express himself in opposition to himself? to a failure in logic? to different conceptions which really influenced him in different ways at different times? or to a spirit of accommodation to popular ideas? Least of all, should we put it down to the last. And the former suppositions all leave Theism, of an indeterminate sort we admit, still a possible theory.

That Spinoza fails in logic whenever he adopts apparently Theistic language, as Kant, Dr. Martineau, Professor Newman and ourselves understand Theism must be admitted; still we decline to call him Atheist when he would not give himself the name. We prefer to call him Pantheist. We may be told that Pantheism practically amounts to Atheism. But we are not prepared to admit that. All human language concerning God involves inconsistencies, if not contradictions, and it would fare badly with the Theism of all Theists, including even Kant, if we were always to hold them strictly to the logical consequences of all their words. St. Paul and Wordsworth both talk Pantheistically at times, yet both somehow were Theists. Hear St. Paul: "Out of Him (God), through Him, and to Him are all things." Is not that plain Pantheism? Hear Wordsworth:—

"I have felt

A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts, a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns
And the round ocean, and the living air,
And the blue sky, and in the mind of man
A motion and a spirit that impels

All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things."

Is not that plain Pantheism? Hear also Coleridge:—

"But what if all of animated nature
Be but organic harps diversely framed,

That tremble into thought as o'er them sweeps
Plastic and vast one intellectual breeze,
At once the soul of each and God of all?"

Is not that plain Pantheism? These authors, Paul, Wordsworth and Coleridge, do all certainly ascribe intellect and will to God, and never deny their presence in Him. Spinoza, however, both ascribes and denies. He denies openly, and he ascribes by implication, to say the least. We conclude, therefore, that the necessity of human thought and language compelled him to express himself in opposition to himself. No consistent theological system can be got out of the "Ethics." Pantheism lies on the surface. Atheism, as Dr. Martineau understands Atheism, may perhaps be logically proved against him, but a mystical Theism is not entirely excluded. Are there not Spinozistic passages in the fourth Gospel? What is this? "That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."

But, nevertheless, Spinoza's possible Theism, if it be there at all, exists in an infinitesimal quantity, and finds utterance, or implication, rather by accident or necessity than anything else. Theism, in Kant's definite sense, is never designedly expressed by him that we can see. On the contrary, he takes every opportunity of repudiating it. Still we must remember Matthew Arnold's often quoted saying from Goethe, "Man never knows how anthropomorphic he is." Spinoza is often anthropomorphic in his own despite, and to deal fairly with him all round we ought to allow him some credit for his occasional and unconscious or unintended outbursts of emotional anthropomorphism. They go even beyond Pantheism, and contain the germs of Theism.

Spinoza's doctrines of necessity and freedom and good and evil are beset by the insuperable difficulty that they cannot possibly be harmonised with the testimony of consciousness. This, however, did not trouble him, though it is an important consideration for us. In the realm of pure ideas, where he saw, or fancied he saw, the realities of things, it seemed to him that nothing could be different from what it is, that freedom only means acting according to the necessity of one's nature, and that choice between this course and that course, when ascribed either to God or man, is a mere chimera begotten by the imagination working in obscurity, and with confused and inadequate conceptions; and disappears when we rise above the senses, and contemplate phenomena in their ground in reason, or in God. Hence "we must neither mourn over things nor laugh at them, but understand them." According to him all ideas are true so far as they are present in God, and none of them is untrue save in so far as it is referred to the human mind. He therefore approaches the passions and desires of men, and deduces them and their activity from the necessity of the nature of man, and that again from the necessity of the divine nature, as calmly and with the same necessity as he deduces equal radii from the idea of a circle. This sounds fatalistic. And its inconsistencies have been admirably exposed by Dr. Martineau, with whose criticisms here we are much more in sympathy than we are when he endeavours to press Atheism home upon a thinker who counts the love of God the sum total of duty and joy. But let Dr. Land speak in an address, delivered at the bicentenary of Spinoza. He qualifies the fatalism materially. He says, "When we hear of a fatalist, we at once think of a Turk who makes up his mind to the inevitable, and takes good care not to be led away by any ideal he has formed to interfere in the course of events. Spinoza is a very different mind from this. With him necessity is no blind fate, to which God and men are subject as to a foreign power, but it is the true nature of ourselves and the surrounding things. He will not have us submit to necessity as we do to the circumstances outside of ourselves; he will have us understand it as identical with our own nature, and, by becoming reconciled in our mind with the order of the universe, find peace with ourselves. Nor is the inward peace all that is thus brought about. In the right understanding of the universal order Spinoza finds the motive and the standard of an activity, such as befits the reasonable man. Human freedom is with Spinoza, not the absence of determination, not indifference—as with Descartes—but it is of the same nature as the freedom we find him attribute to the Deity; the being determined, not from without, but by a man's nature, by the law that is in him. What that law is reason teaches us, and freedom is therefore identical with obedience to reason." Substantially Dr. Land, as well as Spinoza, explains freedom away. There is no freedom in the sense in which the consciousness of mankind demands it if the measure of action be the measure of power, and if we cannot act otherwise than we do act; and Dr. Land and Spinoza, and all Necessarians are, if we may use such a phrase, necessitated to act on the strength of belief in a practical freedom, the very possibility of which they theoretically deny.

The application of Spinoza's philosophy to politics, the Biblical interpretation, we have not left ourselves time to enter upon. We refer our readers to the "Tractatus Theologico-Politicus," and to Dr. Martineau's criticisms and exposition. We do the same with respect to the interesting discussion of the question of the duration of the human ego. It is a manufactured article with Spinoza, and seems as if it ought to disappear with the dissolution of the body of which it is the idea. But his language is inconsistent, and, as a mode of the divine attribute of thought, it seems also to be eternal in God. But as to whether this eternity in God carries finite consciousness along with it Spinoza utters uncertain sounds, and may be interpreted in various ways. We leave the religious philosophy. About the true meaning of that the world cannot make up its mind. We turn to the man. And here the critics who are most opposed to what they deem his conclusions are equally enthusiastic in their praise of his character with those who agree with what they deem his conclusions. Spinoza's reputation and character as a man has undergone strange vicissitudes, both in popular and philosophical thought.

His contemporaries called him imposter, Atheist, renegade. Graevius said, "his work is a pest and a black gift to hell." Portraits represented him with serpents in his hands. The philosophers of the time, with the exception of Leibnitz, were equally vituperative with the clergy and the populace. "Spit on that grave, there lies Spinoza," was the exclamation of the pastor of a Reformed Church 150 years after the heretic's death. Compare these blasphemies with Schleiermacher. "When philosophers become religious and seek God as Spinoza did, and when artists become pious and seek Christ, as Novalis did, then will be celebrated the great resurrection for both worlds. Kindly offer a lock of hair to the manes of that holy excommunicated Spinoza. He was penetrated by the great spirit of the universe, the Infinite was his beginning and end, the universe his one everlasting home. Therefore he stands alone and unequalled, master in his art, but exalted above the ordinary guilds—without disciples, without citizenship." Compare also Jacobi. "Blessed be thou, thou great, yea, thou holy Benedictus. However thou mayst have philosophised on the nature of the Highest Being, and lost thyself in words, yet his truth was in thy soul, and his love was thy life." Compare also Renan, when he inaugurated the statue of Spinoza at the Hague. "Woe to him who in passing by should dare to level an insult at that gentle and pensive figure! He would be punished as all vulgar hearts are punished—by his very vulgarity, and his impotence to comprehend the divine. Spinoza, meanwhile, from his granite pedestal shall teach to all the way of happiness he himself had found, and for ages to come the cultivated man who passes along the Pavilive Gragt will inwardly say, 'It is from hence, perhaps, that God has been seen most near.'" Compare also Dr. Martineau. "The logical estimate of a philosopher is one thing; the personal is quite another. Though Spinozism is atheistic and has no valid excuse for retaining the word God, there may still have been something congenial to Spinoza himself in the continued use of consecrated language which could never quite lose its glow; and he may have loved to linger in a mystical penumbra of his early faith even when the sun of Israel had become eclipsed. Though the only 'love of God' which remained possible was the 'Intellectual,' it is possible enough that a mere homage to the truth of things may have transferred to itself the fervour and the peace of a deeper worship; and that some rush of 'cosmic emotion' into the vacant place may have wrung from him those wonderful propositions in which the last book of the Ethics emerges from geometry almost into rhapsody. . . . Spinoza's moral ideal was high and noble. . . . By no moralist are larger demands made than by Spinoza on forbearing and generous affections, even to the desire for all the same good which we seek for ourselves, and the conquest of hatred by persistent love."

We must distinguish in Spinoza, as we have to distinguish in Kant, between the speculative and the practical reason. Logically, according to Dr. Martineau's critical analysis, Spinoza confounds God, nature and man, practically he separates them; logically he sacrifices freedom, practically he preserves it; logically he annihilates the distinction between good and evil, practically he keeps it intact; logically the human ego gets lost in a phenomenal fog, practically it comes out again into the open daylight. Any way there are noble inconsistencies in him, and we accept them as the signs of the true man struggling for clear vision and failing to attain it. He was, and he still is, a Son of God. W. B.

Short Notices.

We have received the following from Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein and Co. :—

Physical Education, its Place in a System of Rational Education, a clear, admirable, but somewhat diffuse lecture, by Concordia Löfving, a Swedish lady, who is an excellent authority on the subject, and has lectured in some of the principal Capitals of Europe. The lecture is published at the special request of the Princess Helena, and a very attractive portrait of the lecturer is prefixed.

The Life of John Wiclif, and The Life of Luther, both by William Chapman, belong to the same popular series as Miss F. E. Cooke's Story of Savonarola, lately noticed in these columns, and her Boy's Ideal (Sir Thomas More). They are both written in a pleasing style, and tell their stories very effectively, and each has appropriate illustrations.

Stories from Old History, by Ella Baker, also accompanied with good illustrations, tell in a pleasant readable style the good old familiar tales of the Black Prince, King Olaf of Norway, Richard in Prison, Bayard and others, as well as two or three of the classical legends of Rome and Greece.

Tales from the Edda are charmingly told by Helen Zimmern, so well known as the biographer of Lessing and Schopenhauer. They are comparatively new to the lovers of fairydom, and are quaintly illustrated by Kate Greenway and others. The "Death of Balder the Beautiful" is very striking, and is the origin of the fine poem so called.

Annals of the Poor is a reprint with illustrations, and a brief memoir of the author, by James S. Stallybrass, of Leigh Richmond's well-known "Dairyman's Daughter" and "The Young Cot-tager," so attractive for their vein of upretending piety, and flowery description of some of the most charming scenes in the Isle of Wight. The tales are a little antiquated in style, and the editor has judiciously curtailed some needless repetitions of sentiment and doctrine.

Pussy Cat Pur, The Three Foolish Little Gnomes, Cat and Dog Stories as told to one another, and The Book of Shadows, four excellent sixpenny toy books, which remind us of the great advance made in this class of literature since we thumbed the old editions of "Cinderella" and "Mother Hubbard." But even in the present day not many publishers who cater for juvenile readers seem able to compete with such a series as that now under notice, at the price.

We have also received from Messrs. Griffith and Farran The Babies' Museum, a delightful collection of "Rhymes, Jingles, and Ditties," newly arranged by "Uncle Charlie," adapted for those infantile minds whose scientific studies have gone just a little beyond "the milky way."

Locke on Words: an Essay concerning Human Understanding. Book III. With Introduction and Notes. By F. Ryland, M.A.—Mr. Ryland, in his introductory remarks on Locke's theory of the origin of our knowledge, admits that philosopher's ignorance of elementary biological facts, the imperfection of his psychology, his excusable non-recognition of the reaction of the sentient mechanism through its inherited structure, and dissenting as he does from Locke's main position, he shows a generous appreciation of the philosopher's great work by editing in a separate form the immortal third book, "On Words," from the Essay on the Human Understanding. In addition to the text of this book Mr. Ryland has in his "Introduction" tabulated the chief events of Locke's life, fixed his place as a philosopher, and discussed his doctrine of Ideas and Species. There are several notes at the end of the volume which will clear up many difficulties for students.

The Life and Speeches of the Right Honourable John Bright, M.P. By George Barnett Smith. (Hodder and Stoughton.)—This a popular edition in one neat and convenient volume of the two-volume edition of this excellent biography, originally published in 1881. The noble career of John Bright is chiefly to be found in his speeches; and these, or a considerable portion of them, are inwrought with much skill in the narrative, so as to make this volume a tolerably complete record of the principal speeches as well as an authentic account of the whole life of its subject. We previously reviewed the original edition at some length, and have only to record of this popular re-issue that it is a worthy pendant to the same author's Life of Mr. Gladstone—the only orator now living who can be compared with Mr. Bright—and that his work has permanent interest as incorporating a considerable portion of the most important political history of the last forty years.

Literary Notes.

SEVERAL theological works are announced for the present season. Messrs. T. and T. Clark promise the "Life of Jesus Christ," by Professor Bernhard Weiss, and the second volume of the "New Testament Theology" of the same author; "A History of Charity in the Primitive Church," by G. Uhlhorn; the Schaff-Herzog "Encyclopædie of Religious Knowledge" (on the basis of Herzog's "Real Encyclopædie"), edited by Professor Schaff; "A Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans," by Principal David Brown (forming part of the series of "Bible Class Handbooks"); and "A History of the Apostolic Church," by Professor Schaff. Messrs. Griffith and Farran have in the press a book on "Parish Work," by the Rev. E. Collett, vicar of Bower Chalke; and Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench and Co. a work on the Papacy, by Mr. J. N. Murphy, author of "Terra Incognita."

PROFESSOR NICHOL, of Glasgow University, has in the press a work on American literature which, in the form of an historical sketch, will bring under review the writers of America from the colonial period down to the present time. It will be published by Messrs. A. and C. Black.

MESSRS. TRUBNER and Co. have in the press a translation of Spinoza's "Ethics," by Mr. W. Hale White. It will be accompanied by a short preface and a subject-index.

WE are glad to hear that there is in preparation a "Dictionary of National Biography," in a large number of volumes, to be published quarterly by Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co. Mr. Leslie Stephen has accepted the arduous duty of editing this important work, and many of the readers of the Cornhill Magazine will regret to learn that this new claim on his time and attention will necessitate his relinquishing the editorship of a magazine which he has for many years successfully conducted.

A DRAMATIC poem which Longfellow left ready for publication will appear in an early number of the Atlantic Monthly. Its subject is "Michel Angelo."

M. RENAN sends another fragment of his "Souvenirs d'Enfance et de Jeunesse" to the Revue des Deux Mondes. This number gives a description of the College of St. Sulpice, and sketches the priests under whom he first studied Biblical history. M. Renan also describes his life and dawning doubts of the Catholic creed.

THE memoir of Emerson, by Mr. Alexander Ireland, has increased to something like twice its former size. The additional matter which appears for the first time incorporated in this new edition, published by Messrs. Simpkin and Marshall, is full of interest for Emerson's readers and admirers, comprising as it does additional recollections of his three visits to England, and further characteristic records. An important addition has also been made in the shape of tributes to Emerson's life and genius delivered at a special meeting of the Massachusetts Historical Society by Dr. Ellis, Judge Hoar, and Mr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. The volume, which now presents the fullest account of Emerson's life and works which has yet appeared in England, is accompanied by three autotype reproductions of portraits of the illustrious essayist, taken at various periods of life.

In the seventh volume of "Die Bevölkerung der Erde," published by J. Berthes, we find that the earth, on a space of 136,038,872 square kilometres, counts 1,433,887,500 inhabitants, making on an average 10.5 inhabitants to every square kilometre. Europe is the most thickly populated portion, with 34 inhabitants for every square kilometre, then Asia with 18, Africa with 7, America with 6, and Australia and Polynesia with 0.5. Of European States, Belgium comes first with 188 inhabitants per square kilometre, the Netherlands with 123, Great Britain with 112, the Azores with 106, Italy with 99, San Marino with 91, Germany with 84, Luxembourg with 81, France with 71, Switzerland with 69, Austria with 61, Liechtenstein and Denmark with 51, Portugal with 46, Roumania with 41, Servia with 35, Spain with 38, Bulgaria and Greece with 31, Montenegro and Turkey with 26, Bosnia and Herzegovina with 22, Russia with 16, Sweden with 10, Norway with 6, and Finland with 5. Of States out of Europe we take Japan with 95 inhabitants per square kilometre, India with 67, China (exclusive of neighbouring lands) 87, Annam 48. The United States has only 5.4, and Chili, the most thickly populated South American State, only 4.5. Excepting the Polar regions, the most thinly populated countries are Canada with 0.5, the Sahara with 0.4, and Siberia with 0.3 inhabitants per every square kilometre.

WE understand that Mr. J. L. Joynes, one of the Masters of Eton, has been required by Dr. Hornby, the Head-master, to suppress his book entitled "Notes of a Tour in Ireland," on pain of dismissal from his mastership. Mr. Joynes, it will be remembered, was the gentleman who was arrested when travelling in Ireland last summer in company with Mr. George, the author of "Land and Labour."

OWING to the very limited number of competitors during recent years for the Gilchrist Scholarships, tenable at the London University by natives of India, the Gilchrist trustees have decided on substituting one scholarship of £150 annually for India, for the two scholarships at £100 hitherto offered. The tenure of the scholarship may be extended from four to five years should the holder prove worthy. The new arrangement is to come into force in 1884.

MR. EDWIN ARNOLD's new poem, "Pearls of the Faith," will be published by Messrs. Trübner on December 20. The American publishers will also have a large edition ready for Christmas sale.

MR. HENRY CRAIK's "Life of Swift" will be published immediately. Among the more notable features of it will be some hitherto unpublished letters, fresh light upon the origin of the "Battle of the Books," and a careful analysis of the evidence bearing on Swift's presumed marriage with Stella.

MR. EDWIN WALLACE is, we understand, preparing a third edition of his "Outlines of the Philosophy of Aristotle." The work, which will include a fuller analysis of "Aristotle's Logic" than that given in the last edition, will be published in the "Pitt Series" of the Cambridge Press, and will probably appear early in 1883.

DEPTFORD.—The sixth of the course of lectures in the Lecture Hall, High-street, under the auspices of the London District Society, was delivered on Tuesday, on the subject of "Salvation," by Mr. G. Carter, who met with a most friendly reception, receiving cordially expressed thanks both for his address and his answers to the questions put to him. The chair was occupied by Mr. A. J. C. Fabritius.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7d., tins 1s. 1d., labelled, "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease." They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES, M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

THE REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A.

Our American correspondent, the Rev. S. W. Bush, of Boston, contributes to the Christian Register of that city the following interesting article:—

Stopford Brooke is the minister of an Independent [i.e., Unsectarian] Congregation, who worship in Bedford-street Chapel, in the business focus of London. His fame is so wide-spread that strangers from England and the two continents go to hear him. The form of service is Episcopal, with the doctrinal portions which are strictly Trinitarian omitted. In person he is a fine specimen of manly stature. He has a commanding figure, a little above medium height. He has a bright, striking face, which blends feeling and intelligence. His voice is flexible and soulful in expression. Though he cannot, in the highest sense, be called eloquent, he is attractive as a preacher; and his sermons are marked for their depth of emotion, intellectual freedom, and spiritual insight. He combines religious feeling with logical power, so that his sermons have variety and interest both for the richness of their thought and fine shades of devotional sentiment. He is more than a lecturer. He is a preacher.

What is there in this man's opinions and position which makes him eminent?

Stopford Brooke is an Irishman by birth, and a graduate of Dublin University. After a theological preparation he took orders in the English Church. He had the tastes of a scholar from his boyhood, and became known to all English-speaking people through his admirable biography of Frederic Robertson. The influence of this remarkable man, doubtless, did much toward stimulating within Mr. Brooke that love of truth and moral heroism which have distinguished his character. The volume of sermons entitled "Freedom in the Church of England" at once placed its author among the foremost preachers of the Broad Church. From the standpoint of the creed of the Established Church these sermons were both outspoken and radical. At this period of his development he maintained that a true national Church should tolerate and include the greatest variety of opinion, from the rational theism of Charles Voysey to the ritualism of Dr. Pusey. If the Church could not attain to this breadth he thought it was doomed as a National Establishment. Thus he laboured for ten years to keep the English Church open and on a level with the knowledge of the day, so that progressive thinkers and eminent scientists might still find there a home. His mind took various directions. He aimed to clear religious life and thought from false traditions, and in their application to make the teachings of Jesus as broad as humanity. "Every sphere of man's thought and life is in idea, and ought to be in fact, a channel through which God thinks and acts; and there is no subject which does not in the end run up into theology, and may not in the end be made religious." Hence, he would enlarge the functions of the Church, and give a wider scope to the topics of the sermon.

But, while Stopford Brooke was a radical, he was also a Christian; that is, he put special emphasis on the teachings and spirit of Jesus. He cordially welcomed the truth which came to the world through the other great historic religions. He saw the need and uses of these in the development of our religious nature and as conditions of religious history. Still, while recognising all this, he also believed that the ideas of Christ were capable of endless expansion; and in a series of sermons which he printed, entitled "Christ in Modern life," he unfolded in more detail his convictions on this subject. "I believe," he says, "and rest all I have to say upon the truth, as I think, that in Christ was life, and that this life, in the thoughts and acts which flowed from it, was and is and always will be the light of the race of man."

But the mind of Mr. Brooke gradually began to let go its belief in ideas which were considered by the great mass of Churchmen as fundamental. He freely conferred with his personal friends, such as Dean Stanley, Messrs. Jowett and Haweis. These advised him to remain where he was, on the ground that the English Church should be placed on a free and broad foundation. They could see no necessity for his withdrawal. But their urgent persuasions did not satisfy either his mind or his conscience. He, however, agreed to act with great deliberation, and not to take so serious a step until after long and careful thought. Meanwhile, he preached a series of sermons which contained his latest convictions. But it is best to let him tell this in his own words.

"In a series of sermons on 'Miracles and Authority' I expressed the conclusions to which I had arrived. These conclusions, being equivalent to an assertion of the incredibility of miracle and to a denial of the exclusive authority of the Church or the Bible, compel me to say that I cannot any longer, with truth to myself or loyalty to the Church, remain its minister. . . . But, though I depart on this ground, the rejection of the miraculous leaves all the great spiritual truths I have been accustomed to teach untouched by any doubts of mine. They are now, in my belief, more clear than before, more useful to men's inspiration and comfort. . . . Nor do I leave the Church to become a theist. I believe, though the person of Christ is no longer miraculous to me, . . . that the highest religion of mankind is founded on his life and revelation, that the spirit of his life is the life and salvation of men, and that he himself is the head and representative of mankind, Jesus Christ our Lord."

Recently, however, Mr. Brooke has become a pronounced Unitarian. At a meeting of the London Domestic Mission, an organisation founded and supported by Unitarians, he presided; and in his speech on that occasion he said, as reported in the London Inquirer, though he wanted to keep a free position, the time had come when he wished to be classed with the men he saw around him, if he were thought worthy to be so, and to be permitted to stand alone with them before the public. It was a position of which he was both proud and glad. The doctrines held by Unitarians were his, the lines in which they conduct their sacred work were the lines on which he himself would like to work. He hoped, therefore, he might be accounted worthy of being reckoned on the roll of those who, having left church or sect, had set themselves up as ministers of free Christian chapels, and felt in their consciences a determination to be classed by mankind as members of the Unitarian body.

To understand the cost of the step of breaking away from the Established English Church we must take in all the facts in the case. In this country one may pass from the Episcopal Church to another without any great wrench, because with us there is a separation between the Church and State. The Episcopal is one of many denominations. In Great Britain it is wholly different. There the Church is a National Establishment. It has great accumulated wealth and social prestige. Its history reaches back through centuries, and is closely interwoven with the civil life of the nation. It has endowments which give large salaries and high political privilege and power. It disposes of scholarships, and opens avenues for study to the inquiring intellect. Thus, this Church holds in her hand the most coveted prizes, and offers them to her loyal children. Moreover, there has grown up around her the most sacred associations. Her ritual expresses in choice and lofty language the devotion of more than five hundred years. Her chants and anthems are the ripened fruit of the musical culture of centuries. In every city or large town there are grand old cathedrals which appeal to the imagination, and tell of the struggles, the prayers, and the aspirations of successive generations. The symbols of the Church, alike with the flag, speak of the growth and the glory of the nation. To be a member of this Church is like being a citizen of the State,—a proud privilege. The long illustrious roll of scholars and preachers who have made the religious literature of England one of the richest and most learned, and its pulpit one of the most gifted in genius and eloquence; its list of eminent men and women, who, by the devotion of their lives, their illustrious virtues, their beneficent charities and untiring efforts for human good—all these conspire to make the National Church of England attractive to her devotees. True, there is another aspect of the picture. This Church has often sided with the strong against the weak, taken the side of the tyrant, trampled on the rights of the human intellect, and been a bulwark against progress; but, notwithstanding all that may be said, especially by outsiders, of her shortcomings, no thoughtful person can fail to see what a hold this Church has had on the convictions of the English people, and what a power she has exerted over her own children. It is more than the influence of a sect. It is broader than the range of the creed. The sources of strength and attraction will be found in the national life and convictions. This Church, I think, is destined to yield to other political, moral, intellectual, and religious forces, so as to cease in the future to be national. At present, however, she holds members to her bosom by the attractions of sacred tradition and association, personal conviction and devout memories.

Now, for a man trained in the spirit of this Church, who had been a favoured son and could be certain of future honours and emoluments, who was bound to other members by the ties of personal friendship, scholarly relations, and religious fellowship,—for a man thus to break loose from all these, and go forth from the home that had nurtured him and the mother who loved him, to take an untried place among strangers, with few of the rich prizes of life at their disposal,—for a man to take this step simply for loyalty to the truth is morally heroic. This Stopford Brooke did when he became a come-outer from the English Church.

In his sermon "Salt without Savour," he begins the reasons for this step. First, because the theory on which the English National Church is based is mixed up with an old aristocratic system and is a part of it. It systematises exclusion, and supports caste in religion. Secondly, it supports, and claims an outward authority for the faith of man. Third, it does not adequately express the idea of a universal Church. And, lastly, he could not rest finally his foot among any of the parties of the Church, and least of all among the liberal party, because, even if the Church is tolerant, a free mind is hampered by ecclesiastical relations. "Men," he says, "who love religion and believe in Christianity as the saving power of the race, and yet who do not see how they can, without self-inflicted blindness, deny that the results of science and criticism have changed the whole aspect of religious questions, have no business to ignore by silence, or to pass by only with allusions, these questions, in order that they may by their action widen the Church."

On taking his new position there is not the least wail of martyrdom. Like a brave man, he gives himself to his new work with hope and courage. "I am free, and I am heartily glad of it. I make no sacrifice. I have followed with joy and gladness my own convictions, and looked forward with ardour and with emotion to preaching the great truths that declare the divine relations to God and man. I shall speak of God abiding in nature and abiding in man, of God immanent in history, and filling and impelling, day by day, the race of man to a glorious and righteous end; of the revelation he is daily giving of himself to man, and of the inspiration which he pours into us all; of God as revealed in the highest way through Jesus Christ, my master; of the life which Christ has disclosed in his own life as the true life of mankind; of the power and love by which God, through him, kindles and supports that love; of man reconciled to God through Christ, and reconciled to his brother man; of God incarnate in all men, in the same manner though not in the same degree as he was incarnate in Christ, and the vast spiritual communion in which all men are contained, and the depth of the immortality in which they now live and the fulfilment of which is their destiny; of the personal life of God in the soul and of his immortal life in the race, and of a thousand results which in human history and life flow in practice from the vivid existence of these mighty truths in man."

I heard Mr. Brooke preach in the forenoon and Mr. Spurgeon in the evening of the same Sunday. Naturally, the position and characteristics of the two were noted. Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle is south of the Thames, in the midst of a dense population. The interior is spacious, with rows of galleries, the whole capable of holding one of the largest congregations of London. Though the rain poured the building was crowded. As he stood before that throng of thousands, he spoke with so clear and yet easy voice as to be heard by each and all. He impresses you with his sincerity and earnestness. As he read the Scriptures, he made a running commentary on the meaning of the passages, which was fresh and, from his standpoint, instructive. He was very direct in his sermon. His style was descriptive. Though earnest, he was not excessively impassioned, and was free from rant. He never rose to that electric eloquence which made Whitefield so effective. Still, as a preacher, he had force. His thoughts had a basis in common sense. His conceptions and images were material. His sermon was largely infused with imagination and religious emotion. In theology, as is well known, he is Calvinistic, and does not emasculate his creed by any concessions to liberalism.

As I heard the two on the same day, I naturally drew a contrast between them. They are wholly unlike in their training, mental characteristics, and religious opinions. Their conceptions of the scope and spirit of Christianity are very different, not to say opposite. Mr. Brooke spoke to the thoughtful and cultivated. As one sat in the gallery, it was interesting to see with what eagerness his listeners gazed into his face to catch his words. The congregation, in dress and expression of countenance, were in marked contrast to the crowd in the Tabernacle. The former were made up of cheerful, well-to-do, reading people. They seemed serious, thoughtful, and with that air of refinement which comes from culture. Mr. Spurgeon's hearers, on the other hand, were plain people, the toilers who read few books, and are not familiar with those great intellectual problems which generate modern doubt and call for a rational solution. Most of them, doubtless, listened without noting how he often mingled imagination and fact, or mixed argument with assertion. Mr. Spurgeon has very positive convictions, and expresses them with directness and force. He deals very largely with the experiences of our religious nature as interpreted by what we regard as a false theology. He is deeply moved and impressed by his own convictions. These are wrought into the fibres of his soul. He has no doubt of their reality and truth. Hence, he sways others.

As Mr. Brooke believes that religion is a growth, and that in this, as in all truth, the mind gains as it increases in knowledge, he does not speak as one who has already attained the full length, breadth, depth, and height of the love of God and his truth. Hence, with him there is more of the teacher. Mr. Spurgeon's chief aim is to save men according to his theological conception of salvation—a something to be done once for all through the blood of Christ. Religion with Mr. Brooke is closely interwoven with every-day thought and life. Its presence and worth in the soul are to be tested by its results in the character. Hence, he puts more stress on education, and aims to produce a wider influence on the daily life. Salvation is a spiritual result, to be wrought out in the soul. In the difference between the two will be found the difference of the two systems of religious thought and life known as "evangelical" and "liberal." Spurgeon represents the one, Brooke the other. They stand as types of piety in the Church, and represent some of the most prominent intellectual and spiritual forces at work in the religious life and development of Protestant Christianity.

In coming out from the Church of England Mr. Brooke believes he can more effectively work in enforcing the idea of a universal Church. He thinks that Christ gave to the world a mighty conception in the truths of the fatherhood of God and brotherhood among men, of God incarnate in all men, of the eternal and necessary bond that binds God to every single soul,—of a universal Church which embraces all the races which now exist in ideal, but which will be completed in fact in the future. These vast and glorious ideas, which, taken together, form the most magnificent conception of Christendom, are suppressed and stifled, he thinks, by the National Establishment. To aid in bringing about the coming of the universal Church of Christ, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth, he has consecrated his ripe scholarship, vigorous intellect, and devout spirit. In this he is an exponent of some of the best aspirations of his times. Whatever may become of the experiment at Bedford-street Chapel is among the secrets of the future. But the man and the ideas he stands for, both are in accord with the life and central truth of Christ. To this centre an advancing and progressive Christendom will gravitate. All honour, then, to this come-outer! His step is a forward one. He rises on eagle wings to a loftier vision of truth. Like the real prophet, he reaches the Pisgah heights and views the promised land. He believes that,

"Step by step since time began,
We see the steady gain of man.

"That all of good the past hath had Remains to make our own time glad,
Our common, daily life divine,
And every land a Palestine."

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD held its weekly meeting on Thursday. The long protracted subject of higher elementary education was again discussed, and the recommendation of the School Management Committee "that higher elementary schools be established, to be attended by boys and girls who have passed Standard V." was carried by 14 against 7. Mr. Mark Wilks, Chairman of the Committee, expressed his satisfaction with this result, and agreed that the question should be adjourned, so as to come before the newly-elected Board.

The Liberal Pulpit.

CHRIST OUR MASTER—NOT THEOLOGY.

Last Sunday evening the Rev. T. W. Chignell delivered a lecture on "Christ our Master—Not Theology," from Luke xxiii. 34:—"Father forgive them for they know not what they do." Everywhere, said the lecturer, there are signs of change in theology. Renan, in his last essay on the history of his own mind, tells us how German criticism and science undermined his belief in legend and miracle, and yet how one religious sentiment remained dominant in him, loyalty to the grand personality of Christ, who had ever been, and still is, his Master. Herein is Renan, the mouthpiece of modern religion. But in the spirit, not the letter, we must interpret Christ. "Verily, he is the son of God," said the Roman officer, watching his death. So we read in Matthew and Mark; but in Luke we read that the Roman said, "Certainly this was a righteous man." Here is no contradiction, "Son of God" and "righteous man," express one and the same sentiment. The text suggests Christ's ground-theory of human nature. Man, seeing the good, admires it and obeys it. Man is a unity. As the light and sound and shape of an electric cloud are phases of one force, so are thought, love, and volition. Man has pure affinity with the good. The soul's eyes love the light when they see it, and as fingers and feet straightway serve it. Christ showed to the worst of man what a pearl they dragged through the mire, what a light they made dark, and thus revealed them to themselves. Again, the text suggested Christ's thoughts concerning God. Let anyone read and realise the language addressed to God by Christ as he was dying, and no doubt could ever rise again in such reader's mind touching Christ's relation to the Father. The Bible does not teach the doctrine of the Trinity, as Cardinal Newman, then a Protestant clergyman, acknowledged. That, as he says, is the doctrine of the Church, not of the Bible. Christ obeyed the necessary instinct of the human soul, and conceived of God personally. Why do we weep and laugh, but because we must? Why do we realise God as our Father and Judge? because we must. It is part of our nature, and cannot be taken from us. Yet Christ conceived of God as modern science and philosophy bid us conceive Him. "It is not for that I speak," said he, "but the spirit of your Father that speaketh in you." Might, order, intelligence, beauty, benignity, high Providential care, in all that we are and see and handle—this is what we mean by our prevalent and every-hour belief in God. The text again is an instance of truest prayer. Not only on your knees, and saying after me, as the good prayer-book has it, but anywhere, and apart from all outward aid the spirit can find God. The greatest souls have found prayer their chief weapon of defence, and healing balm. "Into thy hands I commit my spirit," said Christ. He believed in immortality, but on mode and place he lifted not the curtain. The worst of men he regarded as capable of what is best, and never here or hereafter out of the reach of the divine pity. Death was not Christ's theme, but "a contemplation of life." Two evils he warned us against. One was falsity. Let your speech be true, your work sound. In seeking truth, be absolutely true; put aside all bias; say to the idea, lead me and I follow! Christ warned us against heartlessness. Reconstructions of society and of theory on paper are rife amongst us just now; but our need is a reinfusion of conscience and humanity into the general soul and framework of the human commonwealth.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Sudden changes, frequent fogs, and pervading dampness sorely impede the vital functions, and conduce to ill-health. The remedy for such disorders lies in some purifying medicine, like these Pills, which is competent to grapple successfully with the mischief at its source, and stamp it out, without fretting the nerves, or weakening the system. Holloway's Pills extract from the blood all noxious matter, regulate the action of every disordered organ, stimulate the liver and kidneys, and relax the bowels. In curing chest complaints these Pills are remarkably effective, especially when aided by a free local application of the Ointment. This double treatment will ensure a certain, steady and beneficent progress, and sound health will soon be re-established.

Religious Intelligence.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN UNION SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

The members of this Association assembled at Stourbridge on Saturday last for their autumnal conference, which has now become an annual gathering. The proceedings began with tea in the Wollaston-road Schools at half-past four, provided for all comers by the kind hospitality of the Rev. D. Maginnis and the Stourbridge friends. About 150 sat down, and the room was well filled. An adjournment to the chapel in High-street took place as soon as tea was over. The hymn "Sow in the morn thy seed" was given out by the Rev. W. CAREY WATERS (President), and sung without accompaniment. Then followed a short lesson and prayer and a few introductory words from the President.

Mr. H. NEW, jun., honorary secretary, read letters of apology from Dr. Crosskey and Mr. Herbert New, after which began the principal business of the conference—an address by Mr. T. Grosvenor Lee. The subject selected was, "Is it desirable or possible to test the result of Sunday-school teaching by examinations?" Mr. LEE stated that the subject had been suggested by a proposal to introduce into the schools connected with the Association a system of examinations similar to that which had been adopted by the Manchester District Sunday School Association. He admitted the advantages of such examinations, if the subjects taught in our Sunday-schools were to be History, Physiology, Geology, Astronomy, Political Economy, and other similar secular subjects, such as those which appeared to be taught in the Manchester district, but he maintained that the teaching of those subjects belonged to institutions of a totally different character from Sunday-schools, such as the Midland Institute in Birmingham, and the Mechanics Institutes, existing in most towns of any importance. The Sunday-school, whatever it had been hitherto, should in future be devoted to the giving to the children of the poor and ignorant the moral and religious training which the children of the wealthier and more educated classes received, or ought to receive, from their parents, and from the minister of their chapel. The Sunday-school teacher should be a kind friend rather than a strict schoolmaster, and should endeavour to touch the children's feelings and awaken their consciences rather than to impart mere scientific or historical facts, however valuable in its proper place the knowledge of such facts might be. Mr. LEE proceeded to give some details of what he considered should be taught in our Sunday-schools, and stated that in addition to ordinary, moral, and religious teaching, and the biographies of the great and good, he should advocate the rational teaching of the stories of the whole Testament, and of the life of Jesus, and particularly of the Parables from the New Testament. Some explanation of the simple religious faith of Unitarians should also be given to elder scholars, not so much with the object of making them future members of our congregations as of making them better and happier men and women, by giving them a religion which would stand the fire of modern scientific discovery. The reading of good poetry or even of a well chosen novel would also be thought to be found a great assistance to the teacher during a portion of the school hour. He wished the children to look on the Sunday-school as an entirely different place from a Board school, and to consider their attendance at it a pleasure rather than a duty. There could be no doubt that it was more important that children should learn truth, courage, honesty, modesty, purity, reverence, charity in its widest sense, simplicity of life, in fact, their duty to God and man, than that they should be able to answer the stiff scientific examination papers which had been set in the Manchester District, and he did not think that an hour or two a week was at all too long a time to devote to the first named subjects. On the whole, he had come to the conclusion, after carefully reading the papers on moral and religious subjects which had been kindly lent to this Association by the Manchester Association, that it was quite impossible to properly test the result of such teaching as he advocated by means of a system of written examinations, and he therefore objected to the introduction of the system into the schools of the Midland Association.

An animated discussion followed, though all the speakers, with one exception, supported Mr. Lee's views, and expressed their objection to the proposed system of examination. Mr. Alfred W. Worthington was the first speaker, next to him came Mr. W. J. Cross (Newhall Hill). Dr. COLLIER objected to examinations of any kind, and on all occasions, and also to prizes being given. The discussion was then taken up by Mr. G. TITTERTON, (Church of the Messiah), who supported the giving of prizes, and the Rev. J. B. GARDNER, who stated that a system of written examinations had been tried in connection with the North Midland Sunday School Association for some years, and the conclusion arrived at was, that on the whole they had not proved to be a success. The Rev. D. MAGINNIS argued that it was possible and desirable to test the results of moral and religious teaching by systematic examinations. Mr. T. C. PAYNE (Kidderminster) made a few remarks in favour of examination, and concluded by giving notice of a motion on the subject to be brought forward at the next Conference of the Association.

An earnest address from the President, who was entirely opposed to any scheme of examinations in our Sunday-schools, brought the debate to a close, and Mr. LEE was called upon to reply.

At the conclusion of his speech a vote of thanks for his able and interesting address was awarded to him on the motion of the Rev. D. MAGINNIS, seconded by Mr. H. NEW, junr. On the motion of the Rev. J. B. GARDNER, seconded by Mr. J. STOOKE, a vote of thanks to the Stourbridge Friends for their hospitable reception of the Association, coupled with an expression of sympathy for the Rev. D. Maginnis and an earnest desire for his restoration to health, was carried by acclamation.

A vote of thanks to the Chairman followed, and the benediction having been pronounced, the Conference terminated.

Among those present we noticed, in addition to the speakers, the Revs. W. Cochrane, H. Eachus, P. Dean, J. C. Lunn, H. McKean, T. Pipe, and E. T. Russell; Messrs. E. H. Lee, J. Cross, D. Heap, E. B. Martin, A. Homer, W. Hunling, W. H. Kedwards, A. J. Kedwards, and several ladies. A large contingent from the Kidderminster Schools accompanied their minister.

THE DUTIES OF ENGLAND TO NON-CHRISTIAN RACES.

[It was understood that the proceedings of a meeting convened by a Committee of the "Christian Conference" were to be considered strictly private, and for our own part we were prepared to comply with the prohibition against publicity. The following report, however, has appeared in the Nonconformist and Christian World, and in transferring it to our columns it will be clearly understood that those papers alone are responsible for the publication. At the same time we must express a strong conviction of the impolicy and impossibility of keeping meetings of this kind strictly private.]

Slavery has been long since arraigned at the bar of public opinion in this country, and been condemned by a judgment which can never be reversed on appeal, but the underlying contempt for races less fortunately circumstanced which so long beloclouded the minds of Englishmen so as to render them indifferent to its iniquities is still the malign root from which spring innumerable acts of cruelty and injustice which, when seriously considered, must excite loathing and abhorrence in all who, realising the blessings, recognise the responsibilities incident to Christian civilisation. We are glad to find that this matter has early claimed the attention of the ministers and laymen of various denominations who have banded themselves together with a view to promoting mutual knowledge and sympathy, "mainly with a view to making the life of the English people generally more Christian." The subject came up for consideration at a conference of the association, held at No. 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, under the presidency of the Rev. Dr. James Martineau, the question being thus defined: "The duties of England as a Christian nation towards the non-Christian races." Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., in the opening paper, while readily acknowledging the manner in which individuals were discharging their duties towards the heathen, through missionary societies, the Anti-Slavery Society, and other organisations, maintained that the national action towards uncivilised and half-civilised races was deficient even in justice, whereas an example of something more than justice—namely, forbearance, should be set forth by us in the sight of the world. He urged the desirability of cultivating a kindly and considerate habit of thought towards the less fortunately circumstanced members of the great human family. The Rev. T. J. Lawrence, formerly lecturer on International Law at Cambridge, next pointed out some of the difficulties attending the endeavour to apply the principles which govern the relations of civilised nations to savage races. The Zulu and Afghan wars were, however, condemned as altogether indefensible, and upon the authority of a correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette Mr. Lawrence narrated a horrible story of the massacre of natives in Queensland by low-class whites. The Rev. Malcolm McColl, who followed with a third paper, remarked that an unwarrantable use of the British gunboat was often made by the grasping trader. The signing of the Alabama Treaty by England and the granting of virtual independence to the Boers would, Mr. McColl declared, be classed among the noblest acts of modern statesmanship. With regard to Mahomedans, he appeared to have little hope for humanity under their sway, being, in his view, utterly destitute of national or patriotic feeling, devoid of civilisation, and held in hopeless bondage by their faith.

In the discussion which followed the reading of the papers, Mr. J. W. Probyn suggested that it was impossible to lay down any hard and fast line by which to regulate our dealings with non-Christian races. Anxious as we might be to do as we would be done by, it did not seem always possible. The vast continent of Australia could not be left to a sparse native population, although we should resent any foreign occupation of England.

Sir Bartle Frere having been invited by Dr. Martineau to address the Conference, emphasised the danger of too quickly drawing conclusions from unfinished chapters of history. In the Transvaal we had yet to see what would become of the 700,000 natives whom we had handed over to the Boers, and the future of Zululand it was still more difficult to forecast. It was not, he believed, so difficult as some had argued, to do as we would be done by, in respect of non-Christian races. We wanted for ourselves equality before the law, and liberty to do what was not hurtful to others. These things it was in the power of England to give to subject nations. The responsibility of English statesmen arose out of the fact that without war they could, from the knowledge of the power which was behind them, compel weaker nations to yield to their demands. But to abstain from intervening in the affairs of races more or less uncivilised would be, Sir Bartle held, to cease to be Christians, and to become Buddhists, who simply cared for growth in personal purity.

The Hon. and Rev. Canon Fremantle was of opinion that the necessity of protecting the natives against unscrupulous traders supplied adequate reason for the annexation of New Zealand and Fiji. Professor Bryce contended that there was no time to be lost if the policy of dealing tenderly with savage races was to be illustrated by England, for under the influence to which they were now exposed, many of the aboriginal races were fast perishing from the lands of which they had once undisturbed possession. He hoped the Queensland story would prove to have been exaggerated, but he feared there was only too good evidence for believing that the "stalking" of natives in Queensland for mere "sport"—horrible as such an idea may seem to all who cherish as a principle the sanctity of human life—was not uncommon some years ago! The Home Government, he contended, ought not to be afraid of arming the colonial authorities with powers to deal summarily with reckless and unscrupulous adventurers, for it was almost impossible in England to get a correct view of the facts of each case. The Rev. T. Hancock, of Harrow, while avowing himself to be a very High Churchman, extolled the example which the Quakers, and notably Penn, had set in dealing with savage races.

We augur much good from the efforts of the Association, fully assured that when the English public are accurately informed, their conscience awakened, and their feelings aroused upon the evils which formed the subject of deliberation, the death-knell of such abominations will be sounded in tones which will admit of neither resistance nor parody.

The Christian World, in an article entitled "The Christian and the Savage," in reference to the above meeting, has the following remarks on Dr. Martineau's speech from the chair:—"Dr. Martineau, in his opening address, expressed the hope that the conference would, from the present display of 'incipient sympathies,' and from discussion, into which the element of difference must necessarily to some extent enter, pass on to the adoption of a common line of action, and thus demonstrate to the world that Christians can and do love one another. In this hope we not only heartily join, but believe in its approaching realisation. Already the scare which was created three or four years ago by the endeavour of a few Christian men to find some common points of spiritual sympathy, and which led to rushing a creed through one of our great ecclesiastical Parliaments, has become merely a study for those who are interested in the history of dogmatic strife. The agitation is almost as much forgotten as that which preceded the passing of the famous Ecclesiastical Titles Bill. In the change of relations between Churchmen and Nonconformists, which this century has witnessed, Dr. Martineau discerned another indication of the nearing dawn of Christian unity. A generation or two ago, the Dissenting minister was, he said, looked upon by the clergyman of the parish as little better than a 'sheep-stealer.' The literature of the English Church did not penetrate Nonconformist circles, and still less did that of the latter—for which want of culture, due to exclusion from the Universities, sufficiently accounted—find readers among Churchmen. All this is now considerably changed, but not to the extent we are disposed to think, which Dr. Martineau apparently supposes. A select gathering of the London clergy, Established and Nonconformist, with a sprinkling of cultured laymen, can scarcely be taken as an index to the state of feeling prevailing throughout the country. But the day of small things is not to be despised."

SOUTHAMPTON.—On Tuesday, the 7th inst., there was a very pleasant gathering in the Kell Memorial School-rooms, to welcome the Rev. H. S. Solly and Mrs. Solly to Southampton. A goodly number sat down to tea, after which there was a public meeting, which was well attended. The chair was taken by Mr. B. R. Spencer, supported on the platform by the Rev. H. S. Solly, Messrs. T. Smith, Isted, Duncan, &c. The harmonium was presided over by Mr. T. Smith, junr. Speeches were made by the Chairman, Thos. Smith, Mr. Isted, C. Spencer, and R. Duncan, showing that the church had been for some time past in a low state, with a continually diminishing congregation. The pastorate was now undertaken by a minister of well-known antecedents, the basis of whose preaching is Christianity, and all wished him God-speed in his undertaking. The Rev. H. S. Solly said that he should give all his strength and energy to this experiment in Southampton, and he hoped, with the aid of the congregation, he should meet with success. Nothing should be wanted on his part to ensure a desirable termination to his efforts, but he looked to every member in the Church to afford him assistance. The choir sang several glees, which exhibited a high state of training, much credit being due to Mr. Smith for his indefatigable attention to the musical part of the entertainment.

TENTERDEN.—A Hastings paper under the head of Tenterden news has the following letter:—"The lecture by the Rev. R. C. Dendy, on Sunday evening last, was full of the best ideas that could be brought before working people as well as people in general. The advantages then spoken of in belonging to a church which is in no way creed-bound is worth the consideration of the people of Tenterden. Those who have any doubt as to the beneficial tendency of these services will do well to visit the chapel. Many persons have found fault with the doctrines advanced by Unitarians who have never attended a service connected therewith. If such persons would divest their minds of all prejudices, allowing others the liberty they claim for themselves, the cause in this town would certainly advance. The zealous efforts of the pastor are well worthy to be seconded by his fellow-townsmen, one of whom I beg to subscribe myself.—Tenterdenia."

UNITY CHURCH, ISLINGTON.—A social meeting of the members of this church was held on November 1st, to which they invited the minister and members of the Newington-green Chapel. The schoolroom, which has just been repainted and varnished, was tastefully decorated with pictures and flowers for the occasion. After tea Mr. J. T. Preston, the treasurer, gave, in the name of the congregation, a cordial welcome to their friends at Newington-green, hoping that such meetings as those held in Liverpool in the spring, in Portland-street schoolroom the previous week, and the present one, might tend to remove the apparent want of sympathy existing between the various congregations in the denomination. He also congratulated them on being settled with a minister who was giving them so much satisfaction as the Rev. W. Wooding. Mr. A. Titford responded, on behalf of the visitors from Newington-green, expressing a hope that the good feeling which had always existed between the two congregations might continue. During the evening short addresses were given by the Revs. W. Wooding and T. W. Freckleton, and Mr. H. Jeffery, interspersed with music, singing, and a recitation by Mr. G. Briggs. The Unity Church Congregation intend to have meetings of a similar character next year, when they hope to see the members of some other congregations.

Obituary.

DEATH OF "ARTHUR SKETCHLEY."—The death is announced of Mr. George Rose, better known by his assumed name of Arthur Sketchley, and as the originator of "Mrs. Brown," whose adventures and experiences have for many years afforded amusement to a large circle of readers. Mr. Rose was formerly a clergyman of the Church of England, but some years ago seceded to the Roman Catholic communion, and devoted himself to literary pursuits.

GOTTFRIED KINKEL, the celebrated German poet, died this week. He was sentenced to imprisonment for life for his connection with the revolutionary movement of 1848, but two years later he escaped to England by the aid of his old friend Karl Shurz, who has since risen to eminence as a soldier and statesman in America. Kinkel remained in England as a teacher of German, and ultimately became a professor in University College, London. Latterly he has lived in Zurich, where he died on Monday.

DR. SYDON.—We have to announce the death of Dr. Sydon, of Berlin, who was long one of the leaders of Liberal Protestantism in Germany. Dr. Sydon enjoyed for a time the favour of the late King of Prussia, Frederick William IV., but he lost it in 1848, Berlin having nominated him deputy to the National Parliament of Frankfurt. Notwithstanding his moderation he almost became one of the victims of the reaction which followed, and barely escaped being massacred by the populace. Re-entering the purely ministerial career, he continued the struggle against orthodox despotism, and in 1872 the minister Falk excluded him from the Consistory. Restored soon afterwards, he retired in 1876. German Liberalism loses in him one of its most venerated leaders.

MR. STEPHENS, A.R.A.—Yesterday week at 110, Buckingham Palace-road, the death took place suddenly of the well-known sculptor, Mr. Edward Bowring Stephens, A.R.A. The deceased was born at Exeter, and was a pupil of the late Mr. E. H. Bailey. In 1843 he gained the gold medal of the Royal Academy for an alto-relievo, "The Battle of the Centaurs and Lapithæ." He spent three years in Rome studying very earnestly, and produced some good work, which rendered more certain the promise of his earlier works. He became widely known by his famous groups, "Satan Tempting Eve," and "Satan Vanquished," both of which were in the Great Exhibition of 1851. His later works established his fame, and he will be greatly regretted by the profession at large and numerous patrons and admirers of his skill and genius.

THE REV. J. BALDWIN BROWN resumed his services at Brixton Independent Chapel last Sunday morning, after six weeks' absence from ill-health.

MR. THOMASSON, M.P., in response to an appeal by the Committee, has given £2,500 to the Bolton New Infirmary.

THE COURT of the Drapers' Company has again voted the sum of twenty-five guineas to the Rev. H. Solly for the maintenance of the technical carpentry classes, which they have supported for several years in the town of Croydon.

THE MANCHESTER SCHOOL BOARD ELECTION has resulted in the return of six Unitarians, six Churchmen, and three Roman Catholics. Mr. Herbert Birley, the chairman of the Manchester and the Salford School Boards, headed the list with 29,748 votes, Miss Lydia Becker was next with 27,368 votes; five of the Unitarian candidates came next, and the Rev. J. Nunn, a Churchman and the only new member of the Board, followed. There was a great effort on the part of the Church-people to turn out the Unitarians and elect their own candidates.

THE SUNDAY AFTERNOON MEETINGS IN LEICESTER.—The invitation given by the Rev. J. Page Hopps to a third series of afternoon services in the Temperance Hall received last Sunday a very hearty, and, in some respects, a remarkable response. Before three o'clock, the time advertised for the commencement of the service, the hall was crammed from floor to ceiling, and at the hour it was difficult to find room for another person—a large number being unable to gain admittance. The class of persons assembled seemed to be mainly those Mr. Hopps is desirous of attracting, whilst their evident interest and marked reverence of demeanour were all that could be desired. As heretofore there was an efficient band to lead the singing, and the platform was carpeted and decorated with flowers and shrubs, Mr. Hopps was well supported by members of the Great Meeting congregation, who assisted in placing the people comfortably in the various parts of the hall, and the choir from the same place of worship was also present. The hymns used were from the excellent compilation made for the purpose by Mr. Hopps, printed copies of which were distributed through the building. The heartiness of the singing by so vast an assembly was very enjoyable, and the profound attention paid throughout was impressive. At times during the discourse certain comments and responses appeared to be irrepressible, and once or twice there were signs of applause, which, however, were repressed. The subject of the discourse was "The Salvation Army: a Warning and an Example." The service commenced in the order established here during the past two seasons. After the performance of a sacred selection by the band a hymn was sung, followed by the reading of the parable of the lost sheep, and a short poem. After another hymn a prayer was offered in which blessing was sought on the particular objects of the services. The band then played a further sacred selection, and another hymn having been sung the rev. gentleman delivered his discourse in plain, telling, and homely fashion.

SLAVERY IN EGYPT.—A public meeting convened by the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society was held on Wednesday, at Willis's Rooms, to consider the subject of slavery and the slave trade in Egypt. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided, and amongst the speakers were Sir T. F. Buxton, Mr. Forster, M.P., Cardinal Manning, Mr. A. Arnold, M.P., and Mr. Villiers Stuart, M.P. Resolutions were adopted affirming the existence of the slave trade in the regions of tropical Africa over which Egypt claims to rule, and impressing on the Government the desirableness of causing effect to be given to the inoperative edicts for the suppression of the slave trade, and of securing the abolition of slavery throughout the Egyptian dominions.

WOMEN DOCTORS IN SPAIN.—La Tribuna, of Madrid, has a long account of the granting by the medical faculty of that city of a Degree of Medicine on Senorita Martina Casells y Bellaspi. She is the first Spanish woman who has ever studied medicine and taken her degree. The paper speaks in warm terms of her as a lady who, in spite of much opposition and national prejudice, has won high honours. Another Spanish lady is following in Senorita Casell's footsteps. Finding the Valencian School of Medicine had closed its doors against her, she is now studying in Madrid, where she has met with a more friendly reception.

An international congress for the discussion of the best means of educating the deaf and dumb is to be held at Brussels next year.

MR. WILLIAM ARTHUR WHITELEGGE, son of the Rev. W. Whitelegge, of Cork, has obtained the degree of B.A., with second-class honours in biological science, at the Royal University of Ireland.

SELECTED BOOKS.

- Creighton's (L.) Stories from English History, illus., 3/6
Hutton's (J.) James and Philip van Arteveld, 10/6
Metcalfe's (W. M.) The Reasonableness of Christianity, 5/
Morrison's (J. C.) Macaulay, 2/6 (English Men of Letters.)
Morton's (E. J. C.) Heroes of Science, Astronomers, 4/
Picton's (J. A.) Oliver Cromwell, the Man and his Mission, 7/6
Proctor's (R. A.) The Great Pyramid, illus., 6/
Stratford's (J.) Wiltshire and its Worthies, 6/
Tristram's (H. B.) Pathways of Palestine, Second Series, 31/6
Tyerman's (Rev. L.) Life, Letters, &c., of the Rev. J. W. Fletcher, 12/

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.
CHLORODYNE.

COUGHS, COLDs, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE, and the word Chlorodyne coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness, and as being the same thing. Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD, STATED PUBLICLY in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a LIQUID MEDICINE which ASSUAGES PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the NERVOUS SYSTEM when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

The GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "TWO DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC. PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

From W. VESALIUS PETTI-GREW, M.D., formerly Lecturer at St. George's Hospital, LONDON.

"I have no hesitation in stating that I have never met with any medicine so efficacious as an Anti-Spasmodic and Sedative. I have used it in Consumption, Asthma, Diarrhœa, and other diseases, and am perfectly satisfied with the results."

From W. C. WILKINSON, Esq. F.R.C.S., Spalding.

"I consider it invaluable in Phthisis and Spasmodic Cough; the benefit is very marked indeed."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

From Dr. B. J. BOULTON and Co., Horncastle.

"We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct Sedative and Anti-Spasmodic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other Sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after effects."

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS.

N.B.—EVERY BOTTLE OF GENUINE CHLORODYNE BEARS on the GOVERNMENT STAMP the NAME of the INVENTOR.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

SOLD IN BOTTLES, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., by all Chemists.

SOLE MANUFACTURER,

J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 19.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., P. MARTIN DUNCAN, Esq., M.B. Lond., F.R.S., on "The Metamorphoses of Insects and their Philosophy."

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary Newspaper, and Record of Reverent Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following terms, post free:—

Yearly (52 weeks)	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid)	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks)	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid)	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks)	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid)	2s. 6d.

ADVERTISEMENT SCALE.

Up to and inclusive of first five lines. 2s. 6d.
Each line afterwards 0s. 4d.
For Six consecutive insertions, 25 per cent. less.
For Thirteen " " 50 "

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to Mr. WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH AND SON.

DEATHS.

TITFORD.—On the 14th inst., after a short illness, at his residence, 14, Clissold-road, Stoke Newington, William Titford, of 56, Leadenhall-street, in his 73rd year.

WANTED, immediately, a Care-Taker for Chapel and Day Schools. Must be a married man who has had experience in similar work.—Apply to the Rev. L. SCOTT, Denton, near Manchester.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and No Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY

FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM, AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

WORK OF UNITARIANS IN THE PAST AND THE FUTURE. The Sermon Preached at the Annual Meeting, May 31, in Unity Church, Islington, by the Rev. Dr. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE. Price One Penny. Fifty copies will be sent, carriage free, for 5s.; one hundred for 5s. A large edition having been printed with a view to the widest possible circulation.

SERMONS, by ROBERT COLLYER. Cheap 1882. Price 2s.

POSITIVE ASPECTS OF UNITARIAN THOUGHT AND DOCTRINE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

TEXTS AND MARGINS OF THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT. By Dr. G. VANCE SMITH, 1s.

A Cheap Edition of this work is now issued, price 3d.

Address, Miss C. PHILPOT, Bookroom, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE. Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High street, Birmingham.

Now Ready, price 1s. 6d.

YOUNG DAYS

FOR 1882.—VOL. VII.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street Strand, W.C.

New Edition, the Ninth Thousand, Revised and Enlarged, 100 pages, 8vo., price 1s., post free.

THOUGHTS ON THEISM,

WITH
SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN HARMONY WITH MODERN SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

"Dealing with religious progress and advance, it contains matter and suggestions which should be read especially by members of Assemblies and all interested in the foundations of religion."—GLASGOW HERALD.

"Its pages are enriched with numerous extracts from the most eminent divines, metaphysicians, and scientists of modern times."—SHEWSDRY FREE PRESS.

London: TRUBNER and Co., Ludgate-hill.

[Every THURSDAY, Price ONE PENNY.

LESSONS FOR THE DAY.

Consisting of the DISCOURSES DELIVERED AT SOUTH-PLACE CHAPEL
By MONCURE D. CONWAY, M.A.

No. 1.—THIS OUR DAY, has been reprinted, and may now be had.

No. 2.—THE CELESTIAL RAILWAY.

No. 3.—JACOB'S WELL.

No. 4.—THE DESCENT FROM THE CROSS.

No. 5.—MARY MAGDALENE'S VISION.

No. 6.—INDIVIDUAL AND SPECIES.

London: E. W. ALLEN, Ave Maria-lane. Manchester: JOHN HETWOOD.

Post free, 6s. 6d. per annum, from the Publishers.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD YEAR BOOK.

JAMES CLARKE & CO., of 13 & 14,
Fleet-street, London, E.C., have in preparation a

"CHRISTIAN WORLD" YEAR BOOK FOR 1883:

A Directory of the Free Churches of Great Britain and Ireland, the chief feature of which is a full Alphabetical List of the Ministers of all the Nonconforming Protestant Denominations. With the view of making this list as complete and correct as possible, the Compilers ask that any Minister who has not already communicated will kindly furnish them with the full particulars concerning himself:—(1) Full Name, (2) Academic Degree, (3) College, (4) Date of Commencement of Ministry, (5) Name and Position of Church, and (6) Residence. A prompt response will greatly oblige, as the work is already in the printer's hands.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HRAVINSIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yorkford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

Enlarged Edition, pp. 360, bound, 1s., or 14 stamps.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By Drs. RICHARD and WASHINGTON EPPS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

THE MORAL REFORM UNION,

ESTABLISHED IN THE INTERESTS OF PURE FAMILY LIFE.

Office,

1, Leinster-place, Porchester-terrace, London, W.

"Thou shalt love thy Neighbour as thyself."

—MATT. xix. 19.

OBJECTS.

- I. To study, and confer upon, all subjects which especially affect the moral welfare of the young.
- II. To collect, sell, distribute, or publish Literature for Moral Education.
- III. To consider how best to carry out practical measures for the reform of public opinion, law, and custom on questions of sexual morality.

This Union will be in communication with Societies engaged in any branch of the same work, such as

The Social Purity Alliance.

The Societies for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice.

The Society for the Suppression of the Traffic in Girls.

The Societies for the Protection of Young Servants.

Young Men's Christian Associations.

The Vigilance Association, and many others.

Reports and important papers of such Societies will be kept on hand.

No person considered eligible for membership under the age of twenty-five.

The co-operation of members is invited for any branch of this work; and the business of the Union will continue to be conducted by those members who attend the meetings.

The Ordinary Meetings of the Union are held on Wednesdays, at 3 p.m. at the Office, 1, Leinster-place, Porchester-terrace, W.

Drawing-room Meetings will be held occasionally, of which due notice will be given.

Subscriptions and Donations of any amount will be gladly received by Miss LUCY JOHNSON, Hon. Treasurer, 1, Leinster-place, Porchester-terrace, W.; and Mrs. S. W. BROWNE, Hon. Sec., 58, Porchester-terrace, W. Bankers, THE NATIONAL BANK, 68, Gloucester-gardens, W.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

WANTED, by a Widow Lady in Belfast, a YOUNG LADY as GOVERNESS, for her two children, and to have full charge of them and their wardrobe. The children are under the ages of six and four years. Salary £20 per annum.—Applications, with references, may be addressed to A. B. C., care of Rev. J. C. Street, 50, Ulster-avenue, Belfast.

WANTED, after Christmas, a Certificated Teacher for the Girls' Day School, New Gravel Pit Unitarian Church, Hackney.—For particulars, apply to the Secretary, Mrs. CLENNELL, 87, Downs-road, Clapton, London.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabback, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

LEEDS NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS, DOMESTIC-STREET, LEEDS.

Cost of buildings, land, &c. £4500 0 0

Subscriptions paid and promised by Mill-hill friends £2100 0 0

Subscriptions paid and promised by the Holbeck congregation and Sunday-school 1000 0 0

Grant from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association 100 0 0

Amount to be raised at the Bazaar and by other efforts 1300 0 0

The GRAND BAZAAR in aid of the above undertaking will be opened by JOHN BARRAN, Esq., M.P. for Leeds, on TUESDAY, November 28, 1882, at 1 o'clock, and continued on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, November 29 and 30.

A great variety of useful and fancy articles will be offered at reasonable prices. A series of entertainments will be given. The Mill-hill String Band will play selections of music.

Refreshments at moderate charges.

Prices of admission:—First day, up to 6 o'clock, 1s.; after, 6d.

JOHN PAYNE, Minister, 3, Cambrian-terrace, Holbeck, Leeds; JOHN S. MATHERS, Chairman, 73, Albion-street, Leeds; COUNCILLOR JOHN WARD, Treasurer, Moortown, Leeds; E. F. MORLEY, Sub-Treasurer, 4, Gladstone-street, Holbeck, Leeds; WM. WESTERMAN, Secretary, Cemetery-road, Holbeck, Leeds.

CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

The MONTHLY MEETING of PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS of WARWICKSHIRE and the NEIGHBOURING COUNTIES, Established 1782, will celebrate its Centenary by a Series of Meetings to be held in BIRMINGHAM, on Wednesday, December 13.

1.—The Members and Friends will meet in the Lecture Room of the Church of the Messiah, when the Secretary will read a Sketch of the History of the Society, supplemented by members' remarks.

2.—To be followed by a Luncheon-Dinner at 1.30 for 2 o'clock punctually, at the Grand Hotel, Dr. RUSSELL, J.P., presiding. After dinner there will be a Conference, in which several Laymen and Ministers will take part.

3.—In the Evening, at 7 o'clock, there will be Public Worship in the Church of the Messiah, when the introductory service will be conducted by the Rev. JOHN ROBERTS, and the Rev. Professor ESTLIN CARPENTER will preach.

Tickets for the Dinner, Three Shillings each; can be had from the Hon. Secretary before December 4.

D. MAGINNIS, Hon. Sec.

Old Parsonage, Stourbridge, Nov. 8, 1882.

WOOD'S TRUST FUND.—The Trustees are prepared to make grants to Pupil Teachers of liberal religious opinions who require assistance in entering Training Colleges for the two years' course of study.—Forms of application, may be had by applying to Mr. J. T. PRESTON, 37, Highbury New Park, London, N.

SCARBOROUGH.—A BOARDING and DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS, in the above healthy locality, conducted by Mrs. EDWIN SMITH and Miss A. A. SMITH, of Newnham College, Cambridge, is proposed to be established after Christmas, if sufficient general support be secured. Special attention to HEALTH, home comforts, and physical training. Mere "cram" or over-work scrupulously guarded against.

Rev. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., would take some of the higher subjects. Efficient masters for special studies and accomplishments. TERMS STRICTLY MODERATE. Suggestions or promises of support will be gratefully welcomed, addressed to either of the principals, at Sandy Knoll, Forest-road, Nottingham.

SOUTH OF FRANCE, VALLEY OF LA DORDOGNE.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for Twenty-four BOYS from ten to fifteen. Modern and Dead Languages, Mathematical and Natural Sciences, taught according to the New PROGRAMME of the Elementary and Grammar Classes in the Lycées. Good German Tutor. A few English pupils would be admitted on moderate terms.

Apply for more information (at St. Foy, Gironde) to the Director, M. Gilard, pastor; and for references (44, Boulevard des Gobelins, Paris) to M. Steeg, late pastor at Libourne, member of the French Parliament for Bordeaux; M. Roudier, M.P. for Libourne; MM. Et. Coquerel and Viquied, pastors in Paris, and M. Fontanès, pastor at Havre.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Kiting, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Mariette.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday November 18, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2109.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

"Religion v. Liberty"	757
Temperance Reform... ..	758
Professor Mivart and the Limits of Evolution... ..	759
Love, the Fulfilment of the Law	759

CORRESPONDENCE:—

Is the Character of Christ Unique?	760
Ignorant Bigotry	760
London Domestic Mission Society... ..	761

OUR CONTEMPORARIES:—

... ..	761
--------	-----

OCCASIONAL NOTES:—

... ..	764
--------	-----

REVIEWS:—

The Early Days of Christianity	765
Chapters on Evolution	766
Wesley's Designated Successor: the Life, Letters, and Literary Labours of the Rev. John William Fletcher	767
The Doctrine of Last Things Contained in the New Testament	767
Short Notices	768
Literary Notes	769

OBITUARY:—

The Rev. Edward Hawkins, D.D.	771
Josiah Quincy	771

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the beginning of the New Year the price of the INQUIRER will be reduced from 5d. to 2d. weekly. See detailed notice in another column.

"RELIGION AND LIBERTY."

THE address by Professor DRUMMOND at the opening of the Session 1882-3 of Manchester New College, London, is now before us in pamphlet form. The subject with which it deals—the Relations of Religion and Liberty—is one of deep and abiding interest, and in Dr. DRUMMOND'S hands it receives a treatment worthy its importance. We are reminded at the outset that the demand for free inquiry in matters of religion may spring from two very different sources—from antagonism to the religious temperament, and from a profound sense of the awful import of religion. One man has no eye for those deeper problems that press upon the human heart, and still recur from age to age, though they may never receive from our limited thought a perfect and final solution. To him, with his defective range of mind, religion is synonymous with superstition. He views it only as an engine of oppression and an obstacle to the advancement of individual culture and social improvement. Of such a one the Professor says very truly, "Its secret life is hidden from him; and, however acute may be his intelligence, he remains a shallow interpreter of the mysteries of faith. His zeal for liberty is consequently one sided. He can recognise impartiality only in assaults upon venerable beliefs, and while he cheers on a destructive criticism, and applauds every crude innovation, he has nothing but contempt for the efforts of constructive genius or the holy calm of ancient piety." There can be no doubt, we think, that this accu-ately describes and justly estimates the unbelief of many in our day. It springs from a certain defect of religious sympathy. They are lacking in the religious temperament. Religion does not appeal to them. The arguments and considerations advanced on its behalf fail to convince them. Their cry for freedom is really a cry to be left alone, undisturbed by religious appeals of any kind. They have been driven into their present position, partly, no doubt, by the absurdities, puerilities, and horrible dogmas taught in the name of religion, and they will be encouraged to maintain that attitude so long as those dogmas are insisted on as the teachings of true religion.

Very different is the demand for freedom by other minds. In them it "grows from a nobler root, and expresses not indifference or hostility towards religion, but a profound sense of its awful import." Religion as conceived by them is too inward and sacred to be received as a matter of social custom or of arbitrary authority. It demands as an essential condition of its life and growth the air of freedom. In their estimation its interests are too high, too precious for it to be accepted on mere hearsay without the independent exercise of the thoughtful mind. "The theologian must be free in order to meet frankly the new conditions amid which he is placed, and, by framing a theology in harmony with the conclusions of science, save the religious sentiment from temporary eclipse. The cry for liberty, then, may be raised in the interests of religion itself. It may be the soul's response to a divine command to draw near and hear what the Spirit says, its pledge of fealty to the God of truth. One who takes this view must defend his freedom of thought as an inestimable possession; for it is to him the condition of spiritual wholeness and intellectual sincerity."

Speaking of himself, and the friends and students of the College, to whom, of course, his address bore immediate reference, Professor DRUMMOND says:—

"In reality, our liberty is the offspring of our faith, which at the same time would keep itself open to the deepening lessons of experience, and is too firmly settled to fear lest God should be dethroned unless we stop the mouth of some fellow mortal who may have a message for mankind different from our own, or lest darkness should overspread the world unless we excommunicate some brother who is groping in temporary blindness of spirit. Instead of imagining any antagonism between religion and intellectual freedom our college perceives that each is essential to the highest life of the other. Religion, when deprived of the bracing air of discussion and criticism, and the power of modifying its organism to suit its environment, must either dwindle into a shrivelled sentimentality or harden into an unspiritual dogmatism; and free thought, when it owns no higher inspiration, is superficial and contracted in its judgments, and oppressed by those prejudices of self-love which only the fire of sacrifice can burn away."

What is said here of the College applies equally to our congregations. They, too, perceive that there is no antagonism between religion and intellectual freedom, and that each is essential to the highest life of the other. This principle pervades their worship and their preaching, and gives to each somewhat of a distinctive character. And it is a noble principle which is here maintained, that both in prayer and teaching the free mind shall utter its own free thought. Very just is Dr. DRUMMOND'S plea on behalf of liberty:—

"We ask for freedom, then, as the condition of religious vitality, and deny the right of any fellow man to step between the soul and God and mar with his bungling fingers the work of the Holy Spirit. We remember, too, that theology, the intellectual expression of religion, stands in relation to the whole circle of knowledge, and must therefore participate in the great movements of thought which arise from enlarged science and improved methods of investigation. The needed modification cannot take place without a dangerous friction, unless the theologian be as unshackled in his department of research as the man of science in his."

So obvious is this that it is surprising every one does not see it at once. Why should the religious teacher alone be handicapped with pledges to the ignorance and superstition of mediæval times? Why should he alone amongst the world's inquirers and students be hampered with a stereotyped creed? Why should the religious teacher alone be tempted to insincerity, to mental reservation, to a stationary condition of mind when in every other department of thought and research the utmost freedom is not only allowed but felt to be absolutely indispensable to advancement in true knowledge? Is it not, then, unjust to the teacher and to the cause of truth to place him in this false position? But this is the position in which every clergyman of the Establishment is placed by subscribing the creeds and articles of the Church. These he has undertaken to teach, and by their theology he is pledged to abide. In this case religion and liberty are divorced.

Dr. DRUMMOND points out that spirituality and thought—reverent independent thought—must go together, and that if theology is to resume a worthy position and once more command the respect of educated laymen it must still unite these two factors:—

"It must grow from the spirit, and be shaped by thought. To a theology thus conceived liberty is indispensable, and you might as reasonably look for the highest results in poetry, art, or science, if you rigidly prescribed beforehand the path which they must take, as in religion if you refuse it any independent vision, and compel it to tread in time-worn ruts. It is not because we deem theology dead, but because we know it to be alive, that we desire to leave it unbound. If communion with God is a reality, we must allow the soul to hear for itself the divine voice, and, lifted above the world in the solitary exaltation of prayer, to receive that measure of light which the bounteous Giver has designed for it. If the great march of science and thought is a reality we must allow the mind to mingle in the crowd, and press on towards a fuller and deeper interpretation of the world in which it lives. When these two movements are permitted to go on without unnatural shocks they escape the antagonism which has been artificially fostered between science and religion, and proceed with the harmony of mutual friendship. The higher thought responds to the higher feeling, and the truer theory is found to be a spiritual gain."

These noble sentences indicate the path of true progress in theology, and not in theological study only, but in all sound religious attainment. It is only by this union, this harmony and accord of the free intellect and the spiritual nature that the advancement of mankind in all that is highest and best can be secured. To put the mind on the right track and aid it in its first onward steps is the service rendered to the student in our colleges, to the worshipper in our religious services, and to the reverent inquirer by our teaching. And we do not hesitate to say that among no religious denomination will the student, the worshipper, and the inquirer find higher, honest aids rendered to them than are to be obtained in our own free colleges and free churches. It is our mission, in part, at least, to show how religion and liberty may be united in perfect accord—how the free mind and the aspiring soul can blend together thought and worship in religious service. And it is a high mission to fulfil—one which we fully believe will be appreciated more and more as the old superstitions of the world die out and a pure rational religion takes their place.

"TEMPERANCE REFORM."

IN our last number the Rev. STOPFORD BROOKE, whose criticisms, strong as they are, we are glad to welcome in these columns, commented very severely on an article which appeared the week before under the above heading. This letter calls for some notice on our part. Mr. BROOKE accuses the writer of the article of coldness, ignorance and anger, and to these accusations we have at least the right of reply. It cannot be said that our correspondent has displayed any lack of warmth in his letter; it is written with all the fervour of a recent convert. We should be sorry to retort that the ignorance and anger are really not ours, although some of Mr. BROOKE's assertions are not quite accurate, and his condemnation of the remarks we felt called upon to make is somewhat fervid.

In the first place, we wish to disabuse him of the idea that our article was written by "a moderate drinker disturbed in the exercise of 'a pleasure or a necessity' by the inconvenient zeal of the total abstainers." The article in question, as is the present one, was written by one who was a moderate drinker, but is a total abstainer. But the reasons which induced him to abstain from the very small amount of alcoholic beverages that he took, he feels might not be equally cogent with others, and he is not therefore prepared to condemn other men for doing what he himself does not care to do. Mr. BROOKE's description, too, of the effect of the moderate dose is not correct, so far as the present writer is concerned, though it is possible that that may be the effect on some persons of a different constitutional tendency.

The statements we made to which Mr. BROOKE specially objects are (1), "In the eyes of many of these people all places where intoxicating drinks can be obtained are put into one category, wholly irrespective of their special character;" (2) "A moderate drinker is regarded with as much abhorrence as the habitual drunkard;" (3) "That all who are engaged in the trade are denounced with as much vigour as if they were criminals of the deepest dye;" and (4)

"That total abstainers are credited with virtues as citizens, and with an immunity from wrong doing which they, and only they, can attain." Now be it remarked in the first instance that while Mr. BROOKE speaks on behalf of total abstainers as a whole, we spoke of individuals, without, however, naming them. We are quite ready to admit that there are scores of total abstainers who are as moderate in their language, and as respectful towards those from whom they differ, as we could wish them to be; but unfortunately we know that there are scores whose intemperance of language is a strange contrast to their advocacy of temperance of habit.

With regard to Mr. BROOKE's criticism on our first assertion, we are almost content to let it remain as it stands, because practically he admits that in one sense it is true. At the same time we cannot go with him when he affirms, "it is not an exaggerated or absurd assertion" to say "that all this sale of poison should be done away with" because "it cannot be controverted." We know full well that medical opinion is divided on the point; it is not even clearly determined what is the exact effect that alcohol has on the human body. It is not many years ago that a sort of symposium was held in the pages of the Contemporary Review on this very subject by eminent doctors, the result of which was only to confirm the view pretty generally held, that doctors differ. One said that alcohol was a stimulant, another that it was a narcotic, another that it was food, and a fourth that it was a poison. This is sufficient in itself to prove that the assertion made by Mr. BROOKE is capable of being controverted. And where there is this diversity of opinion among those peculiarly qualified to form it, we do not feel guilty of gross ignorance or untruthfulness when we say that those who so confidently demand the total repression of the sale of alcoholic beverages, and vehemently denounce the sellers, are "neither just nor fair."

We are willing to credit Mr. BROOKE with having conscientiously made himself master of the literature of the subject, but we cannot help thinking that he has been very fortunate if he has neither seen, nor heard, the moderate drinker spoken of as even worse than the habitual drunkard. We have not been so fortunate. The habitual drunkard is already the slave of a habit, he has ceased to some extent to be responsible for his acts; he is, therefore, often only the object of pity. But the moderate drinker is a fool so far as he, himself, is concerned, because he runs into danger, and is wicked because, after warning, he permits his example to be so harmful to others. This is the language we have heard used by total abstainers,—it is practically that of Mr. BROOKE himself. The career of the moderate drinker is depicted in strong colours by our correspondent; we do not deny its accuracy in some cases, but we wholly demur to it as a faithful portraiture of ninety-nine out of a hundred. Mr. BROOKE says that the danger the healthy man incurs from moderate drinking is proved not only by the testimony of science, for which he quotes a passage from Dr. RICHARDSON's book, "Drink and Strong Drink," but by the testimony of statistics. Dr. RICHARDSON is an able man, but he is not, so far as we know, able to pronounce an ex cathedra judgment on this matter. There are men as able who will not endorse his scientific opinion. With regard to statistics Mr. BROOKE says:—"No insurance society will insure the moderate drinker at the same figure as the total abstainer."

We will not adopt his language and say—"This is a statement which is entirely untrue," but we will say that, so far as we have been able to test it, it is inaccurate.

We have taken the trouble to ask at five of our principal life insurance offices* whether any difference was made between total abstainers and other insurers, and the answer was invariably in the negative. Nor do any of their publications say one word on the subject. One of the questions asked of the proposed insurer is, "Are you of sober and temperate habits?" a question which every moderate drinker would answer in the affirmative. We do not doubt for one moment that our correspondent made the statement in perfect good faith, but nevertheless it is not accurate.

As to our third assertion, while Mr. BROOKE characterises it as "untrue," he curiously enough affords an example of its truth. He says that no total abstainer denounces those engaged in the liquor trade, or imputes to them moral blame, but he says, "The great brewers and distillers make this poison, and the merchants and publicans distribute it;" and then he adds, "The work of their lives is unfortunately bound up with the destruction of the bodies, and brains, and souls of men." This is not, however, denunciation nor imputation of moral blame. What, then, is it? "It is simple fact," says our correspondent. We cannot but feel surprised that he does not see that it would be difficult to denounce more vigorously, or to make a more serious charge.

So far as our fourth assertion is concerned, we need not go back many weeks to our own columns for its confirmation. In the report of a meeting a speaker is said to have asked, as if it were impossible to give but one answer, "Whoever heard of a teetotaller being in the workhouse, or being brought before the magistrates?" The obvious inference from which is that "total abstainers are credited with virtues as citizens, and with an immunity from wrong doing which they, and they only, can attain." It would be difficult to go to almost any temperance meeting and not hear language quite as absurd as that we have just quoted, and total abstainers must bear with the rebuke which naturally comes to the lips of more moderate men when they hear such extravagant folly uttered.

We have felt called upon to say so much in self-justification. We are not opposed to the Temperance Movement, so far as it is conducted on rational and fair-dealing lines. There is no difference at bottom between Mr. BROOKE and ourselves as to the end to be arrived at. We desire, as much as he does, to see crime, poverty, and disease decrease; we desire to see our countrymen sober, honest, and free from the chains laid upon them by debasing habits. It is when we come to consider the methods of effecting this that we cannot see eye to eye with some of our temperance friends. And it may be that to those who look with a calm gaze it is given to see wherein the true remedy for the mischief lies, and that "sublime ignorance" is not to be attributed to those who regard temperance as superior to total abstinence, and who consider regulation as better than abolition. Conscious that what we said was not really opposed to the attainment of the end our friend has in view, we will endeavour to bear his severe criticisms with our usual equanimity.

* The Equitable, the Gresham, the Atlas, the Mutual, and the Legal and General. The same is true of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution. No difference is made in the amount paid by the Temperance section of the assured and by the General section.

PROFESSOR MIVART ON THE LIMITS OF EVOLUTION.

It has been clearly established by Mr. DARWIN and his followers that there is a growth and continuity of organic forms running through the animal kingdom, and we are all familiar with this doctrine as that of scientific Evolution. But there are those who carry the doctrine of Evolution into intellectual and moral regions, and claim for it a like continuity in the growth of man's moral and intellectual powers. Against this latter application of the doctrine Professor ST. GEORGE MIVART has just uttered a protest in a lecture delivered before the Leicester Literary and Philosophical Society on the "Limits of Evolution." The arguments he adduces are for the most part as old as ARISTOTLE, but they are none the less welcome in their new application. Whatever extreme opinions may be held as to the origin of man and his psychological development from creatures immediately below him in the organic scale, it must be admitted that he at present differs very widely from even the most intelligent of such creatures. And this difference is, in our opinion, not one of degree, but of kind, arising out of a fundamental difference of nature. Man, for instance, is a worshipping animal; he builds churches, erects altars, institutes sacred rites and yields himself up to some kind of religious practices all the world over. But nothing of the kind is known among the inferior animals. Man, again, is a being who applies means to ends not merely from the law of instinct for the purpose of self-preservation and the like, but from far-reaching rational considerations. He is a progressive being; the appliances and contrivances of to-day are an advance upon those of yesterday. He is also possessed of a sense of historical continuity, thus consciously sharing the life of his race. No doubt there is progress in the lower animals, but nothing corresponding with the progress of mankind. Whatever progress the man of science finds in the advancing types of organic life is carried on by natural forces through such creatures, and not consciously effected by their agency, as in the case of man who builds bridges, constructs steamships and invents the Calculus, and thus marks his progress upon the earth. They are subject to the rule of necessity; he is a king in the realm of freedom. They are passive, he is active; they walk in a pre-ordained course, he has in great part to shape his own and take the consequences.

This being so, what is it that forms the dividing line between man and all the inferior creatures? It is, according to Professor MIVART, the power to form abstract ideas. Man is able to make an abstract quality the object of thought; none of the animals below him can do this. Hence, a great and impassable gulf between their nature and his; hence, too, the vast difference between the mere passive traces of their life and the mighty net-work of human analysis he has constructed. This is one of the limits of Evolution, and the great difference between man and the animals is not, therefore, a question of body, but of mind.

Having described the nature and outcome of man's lower faculties Professor MIVART said that in perception we first entered upon intellectual ground, since the idea of being was really at the root of it. In affirming or connoting the nature or qualities of any object, for instance, by an act of perception we virtually predicated the very existence of the thinking subject—ourselves. Hence every act of perception was two-fold—sensuous and intellectual, the particular image given thereby being associated with a general idea. Such an act involved also three elements—an apprehension of unity, a process of mental analysis, and then a synthesis of our impressions. Human intelligence was thus an active principle, which acted alternately by taking things to pieces and then reconstructing them; but there was none of this separating and reuniting of things in mere sensation. Language constituted the vehicle of this analytical and synthetical power in man; it was at once the symbol and the pre-requisite of abstract ideas. Wherever language existed abstract ideas were found to exist also as its necessary substratum, and wherever, on the other hand, such ideas were found, then some kind of language was used to express them. Hence deaf mutes were seen to employ a most expressive kind of gesture-language to indicate the abstract ideas they possessed in virtue of their manhood, while parrots, though they could reproduce vocal sounds, knew nothing of language, in the proper sense of the word. Professor MIVART urged that there was nothing in the manifestations of animal intelligence which could not be explained by those faculties in man which are below the plane of abstract ideas, and that if animals possessed such ideas they would clothe them in signs of sound or gesture. That they did not do this was a proof, he urged, that they did not possess ideas. What we called intelligence in the lower animals was not therefore intelligence at all in the general acceptation of that term, but a sensuous simulation of intelligence. All the powers corresponding with our feelings and lower faculties being found more or less fully developed in the animal races, with no trace of an abstract idea, and such ideas being present in a child, while the feelings in question were as yet relatively undeveloped, it was fair to infer that the power of abstraction is the impassable gulf between man and the inferior creation.

Briefly and imperfectly stated, this was Professor MIVART's argument, this his reason for assigning a lower limit to the doctrine of Evolution. At the same time, he hinted at a superior limit from the fact that however much man might progress he could never escape the conditions which were imposed upon him in the acquisition of knowledge and the growth of ideas. Intelligence was not, he said, necessarily associated with the analytical and synthetical process he had described, but this process was stamped upon human intelligence and could never be transcended. With regard to the obvious objection that many scientists set no such limits to the doctrine of Evolution, Professor MIVART replied that man's origin was a philosophical, and not a scientific question, and that it did not follow because a man was a great scientific discoverer that he was an equally great philosopher. He went so far, indeed, as to say that in his opinion hardly any of the scientific men of the day had grappled with the essence of the question of evolution. A very similar opinion has often found expression in these columns. It is almost universally forgotten that men who are eminent in the realm of physical research are often mere novices in the great world of ideas. It is popularly supposed that if a man is distinguished in one branch of knowledge he must be equally so in all others. Whereas, in opposition to this, the close observer of the limits and action of the human mind knows full well that the reverse is often the case. The patient, plodding industry of the scientific specialist calls into play a set of faculties totally different from those needed to deal with a question of philosophy which concerns itself with the very principles upon which science is based. It is the business of the scientist to find facts; it is only the true philosopher who knows how to use them. The former takes nature to pieces, the latter uses the materials thus detained to reconstruct her wondrous fabric on a vastly larger scale than that which presents itself to the eye of sense. It would certainly be well if scientists were a little more modest and less disposed to push their conclusions into provinces of thought they have not even superficially explored. Professor MIVART may or may not be right in the limits he assigns to Evolution, but assuredly many of his opponents are wrong in rashly concluding that there is no radical and inherent difference between man and the creatures next to him in the organic scale.

LOVE, THE FULFILMENT OF THE LAW.

In an article written several weeks back ("What Shall I Do to be Saved?") we pointed out that while the method of salvation inculcated by our Lord—the method, namely, of love to God and man, the "golden rule," as it has been well called—was so exceedingly simple and noble, and so consonant with the plainest common sense, men had constantly tried to avoid it and outflank it with devices of their own; the devices of sacerdotalism, of ecclesiasticism, of asceticism, and of prosaic morality. Why is this? Why adopt unreasonable and complex plans in place of the simple reasonable plan? Why adopt plans rather calculated to the altitude of the few—of the rich, and clever, and leisurely—instead of adopting a plan equally suitable to the poor, and wretched, and weak, and timid, and scrupulous?

The reason is not far to seek. The method of Jesus is simple enough. It arrests the conscience and understanding at once. But it is not easy except to a few noble natures. Nay, for most of us it is very hard; shall we not say impossible, except by slow and painful endeavours? Now it is easy to entrust our salvation to a priest. It is easy to hear what "the Church" has to say and to repeat the lesson afterwards, and thereby "pave our way to Heaven." It is not greatly difficult to practise asceticism and thereby scale the iron-bound coast that surrounds the celestial city, melting steps for our painful feet with mingled blood and tears. It is not greatly difficult to enact no more than our due; to be content with our wages; to preserve our self-respect with a certain saucy Miller-o'-the-Dee independence; to be cautious not to offend, and to be prudent; and to remember that honesty is the best policy. With all these methods to select from, it is not difficult for the different phases of human nature to pick and choose, and walk with religion in her silver slippers. But faith, hope, and love? Ah! that is a different matter. Not even faith, but the love that works faith; not deeds, but the attitude of mind that prompts deeds; not hopes that are self-centred (which is the object of the first four methods), but hope which is centred on God and our fellow-man. Truly this is the supreme difficulty of life! Truly, to accomplish this is to become the sons of God, and have entered into eternal life!

But with nothing less than this is God satisfied. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees," says Jesus, "ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of God." The method of Jesus is simple enough, but it is the hardest method of all, and the slowest learnt by most of us.

For observe once more. We can give obedience to a priest; we can patter prayers; we can go through fire and water; we can avoid infringing the rights of our neighbours; but we cannot, without much discipline of the severest sort, and not even then by any means always, command our affections, our tempers, our passions. Yet all the commands of the New Testament regard these only. They command what is felt to be impossible. Therefore men seek relief in any fashion they can from this heart surrender; not often, because they are not willing, but because they are not able. To the command "Pray without ceasing," they answer "We have no prayers to offer." To the command "Forgive your enemies," they answer, "Our hearts are filled with aversion." To the command "Rejoice evermore," they answer, "We are moody and melancholy, wrapt up in our own discontents and evil tempers." To the command to have trust in God they answer, even as Newman does in the unutterable sadness of his soul, "When I look out of myself into the world of men, I see a sight which fills me with unspeakable distress. The world of men seems simply to give the lie to that great truth" (of the existence of God) "of which my whole being is so full. If I looked into a mirror and did not see my face, I should experience the same sort of difficulty that actually comes upon me when I look into this living busy world, and see no reflection of the Creator." And yet a joyful, loving, responsive trust in God is the claim made upon men who would live the higher life. How are they to attain it?

Now, we may measure our love to God by our love to our fellow-man, and here is where we feel most conscious of the deep need there is for the regeneration of our sluggish, self-satisfied human nature, so far removed, it may be, from sympathy with and recognition of the Son of God, that it does not even perceive its low estate. To love "the brethren," or our countrymen, or even our fellow-men in the aggregate, is an easy phrase. It is delightful to love the wife of one's youth, the children who play about one's knees, the friend who has been the close companion of boyhood and manhood, and to whom we have unburdened our most secret hearts. But how shall we love A who is a bore, B who is a scandal-monger, C who is a tyrant and prefers successful injustice to slow-working righteousness, D who offends us and misunderstands us and misinterprets us, E whom we have offended and whom we therefore stand in awe of, F whom we believe to be a beast in his private life, G who belongs to an opposite party in politics and will not see as we do, H who holds heterodox opinions with regard to our most sacred religious predilections, I who is simply a nonentity and therefore naturally to be despised; and so on, through the alphabet? How, shall we love our servant, and our poor neighbour over the way, and the tradesman who cheats us in little things? Doubtless, it requires a larger heart than we have got to extend love to all these.

But we may learn. And we may begin to learn by taking lessons at the feet of our Lord. He loved little children. He was often indignant, but he was never contemptuous. He had sympathy for all; and he had an infinite compassion.

I would urge, then, on those who would walk in his steps to live with and cherish, to learn to be gentle and tender with young children. To become a child with little children is a great help towards insight into and sympathy with those around us. "Take care how ye offend one of these little ones," said our Lord. Maxima debetur pueris reverentia, said the Pagan philosopher.

Next, I would urge true courtesy to and a reverential regard for women. Man has pressed hardly in many ways on the defenceless sex. Woman's lot is frequently dull. Let it be brightened, even at the cost of some self-sought pleasure and at the sacrifice of valuable time. Woman frequently suffers intolerable injustice at the hands of men. Let us attempt to lighten the heavy burden, to restore some of the stolen dues, to correct the bias of legislation and the unjust customs of society. And I would say further that he who has a manly regard for even the defaced coinage of woman will not insult the person of a prostitute, and will take the greater care of his own chastity.

Then we would urge a sympathy with one's political and religious opponents, and for men of alien tongues. It is a great thing to dislike and condemn party spirit which divides men. It is a great thing to dwell on points of agreement. It is a great thing to perceive that a religion which shows its vitality by growth, even if it runs counter to our own, must be founded on some great truth. It is a great thing to expect to find and to look for something worthy and truthful in adverse views which we dislike or fear. It is a great thing to see in an enemy the image of God. Sympathy and insight are not love, but they are stepping-stones to it, and they are utterly antagonistic to hatred.

Lastly, we would urge men to emulate Jesus' infinite compassion. Only it must be compassion like his, without a trace of patronage or contempt. There are certain fretful souls, cross-grained and ill-natured, with whom it seems quite impossible to live in peace, who are a burden to themselves and others, whom one cannot love, or can only love in a somewhat unamiable fashion. But one may feel the deepest and tenderest compassion for them, the gentlest patience and forbearance, the willingness to help and to forgive. And this is not far removed from love.

If, then, with our imperfect natures, we cannot yet fulfil the "royal law," we can take the first steps towards doing so, we can train our heart and mind to act and think and feel in union with the law. To fulfil the law is the real and arduous scala coeli, easy for angels, but hard for men. It is this only which will make us like God, enable us to see Him, give us the filial spirit, teach us to love Him. To help us to obey this new commandment Jesus taught us his lessons. To the earnest request, "Show us the Father and it sufficeth us," he who was the Way, the Truth, and the Life, gave pregnant answer by bequeathing himself to his disciples, his spirit and his example, and thereby he imparted a living reality to the brotherhood of men.

It may be urged that there is nothing here about the remedy for sin. Well, the best remedy for sin is to have the heart and mind occupied with Christ-like works, to tread in the steps of Christ. The final strongholds of sin with that portion of humanity which lives "respectably," may be said to be the sacra auri fames, an evil temper (showing itself as harshness, moodiness, fretfulness, unjust judgment, incapacity to see good in an adversary), impurity, and Antaeus-limbed, Protean shaped selfishness, ever gaining fresh strength by contact with mother earth, and eluding the grasp by taking an unexpected form. We believe each of these sins can be subdued with the least difficulty by love to one's neighbour. A man whose heart is set on raising his brother to better and higher things will have the strongest motive that exists for restraint of these sins, and when he falls, as fall he will, will be most easily able to retrace his steps and to walk the uphill road. The reason is clear. To him alone of all men the downward road is in its broadest aspects simply odious. Where a man's treasure is, there will his heart be. We do not dwell here on the impossibility of leading a spiritual life without "instant" communion with God, because the necessity for that has been already insisted on. But love of God and love of man are twin brothers hard to dis sever. They grow together "like to a double cherry, seeming parted, but yet a union in partition." He, then, that will be saved, let him love his neighbour as himself. This is the true love of God. This is to flee from sin. This is to learn the lesson of Christ. This is the real fulfilment of the law.

H. C.

TURNING THE TABLES.—Canon Basil Wilberforce has expressed his pleasure at reading an account of the Archbishop of York's recent denunciation of the vices of working men. The particular sins which the Archbishop condemned were "sporting, drinking, and other debasing pastimes." The Canon says he turned over his newspaper after reading the above, and he observed:—(1) The restoration of the drinking and dancing license to a house notorious for aristocratic profligacy. (2) Graphic accounts of the gambling transactions of the aristocracy in a well known West-end racing club. (3) The betting upon the next horse race chronicled in the same type as the news from Egypt and the doings of the Imperial Parliament. (4) Two highly aristocratic divorce cases. He is accordingly driven to the conclusion that "to soold the working men of Middlesborough for sporting and vice, and not to carry the same crusade boldly into higher quarters, is to strain at national gnats and swallow national camels whole-sale."

Correspondence.

IS THE CHARACTER OF CHRIST UNIQUE?

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—If it be true, as stated in a paragraph of the Inquirer this week, that "the character and place in history of Jesus Christ are unique," that fact would, in the judgment of some persons, be far from constituting a ground for praying "through Christ," or interposing the person of Christ as a necessary channel through which the human soul is to have communion with the Divine. But I throw out, for the consideration of your thoughtful readers, the question:—Is it true that the character and place in history of Jesus Christ are unique?

To begin with the last part of the question. It may be urged that the existence of other historical religions, such as Buddhism and Mohammedanism, deprives the history of Christ and Christianity of its unique character. The dynastic changes which have arisen through the apostolate of Mohammed are surely as strongly marked as anything which has resulted from Christianity. If there be a valid claim to a unique position it surely belongs to Buddhism, which, by the purity of its precepts alone, has become the most numerous professed religion in the world. As against this, it must be admitted that the history both of Christianity and of Mohammedanism is to a large extent the history of successful and unscrupulous propaganda.

Again. Can we say that the character of Jesus Christ is unique? Understanding this to refer to moral goodness, what proof have we of the proposition? What a number of facts of which we are wholly ignorant have to be known before we can say that Christ was distinctly the best man who ever lived! Of Christ himself how little is known! We infer that his was a singularly if not a uniquely beautiful character more from his public teaching than from anything we know of the incidents of his life. As the son of a carpenter, he was necessarily exempt from many special temptations. The one act of heroism which has surrounded his name with a halo of glory is his calm and courageous death. But surely we can honour one noble and beautiful life without disparaging all others? Moral goodness may not be a quality highly essential to the survival of the fittest, but it is the glory of humanity that it is ever producing and has produced in all ages examples of the purest and noblest virtue.

They belong to various races and religions. History tells us very little of them. It will suffice to mention Buddha, Antoninus, St. Francis Assisi, Howard, Sir Isaac Newton, as instances. As an Oriental despot destroys every possible competitor for the throne, must we in the name of Christ make war on human goodness and virtue as exemplified in the names above quoted?

In the attempt to fix upon Christ a super-human goodness there has been a singular omission to take account of one very remarkable feature in his character, and that is his extraordinary imaginative genius. Bred among a semi-barbarous people, that genius could not be expected adequately to show itself; but in the parables and other fragments preserved in the Gospels we have indications of a mind of a rare and beautiful order and of high poetic and imaginative power. For many reasons the intellectual side of a man's character is far more capable of analysis than the moral side, and in the present case it is particularly so. S.

"IGNORANT BIGOTRY."

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The circumstance alluded to by your correspondent, Mr. Squier, in your last number, under the above heading, finds some parallel in my own case, for when I was at Taunton some few years ago I applied to a lady for the occupation of a house in which I wished to reside. In answer to my application the lady in question sent me a polite note, which I believe I have still in my possession, informing me that she had no objection to my becoming her tenant other than my religious opinions, but politely declining on that ground. I wrote in reply that as I could not change my religion to please any landlady, I must of course look elsewhere for a residence. Fortunately, however, I believe, for the lady as well as for myself, she had trustees in whom the property was vested on her behalf, who, thinking it undesirable to refuse what appeared to them a good offer, accepted me for a tenant, and I consequently obtained the house. I never heard that the lady refused the rent.

Bath, Nov. 20.

EDWARD COBB.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—We desire to invite the friends of the Spicer-street Mission to aid in some of its operations during the approaching Christmas season, by—

1. Contributions of toys, dolls, dolls' clothing, &c., for the children of the infant school; to be forwarded to the Mission, to the care of Miss Spurgeon, head mistress,

2. Contributions to the poor's purse, or to the recreation fund, which are nearly exhausted. It is intended out of these funds to provide, amongst other things, a special free tea and entertainment for the rougher and more neglected classes that live in close proximity to the Mission.

3. Contributions of clothing, so needful at this season.

4. Ladies and gentlemen who can sing or play instrumental music may occasionally render valuable help by taking part in the Monday evening and other popular entertainments.

C. L. CORKRAN,

local treasurer, pro tem.,

28, Colvestone-crescent, E.

C. H. WAID,

10, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.

Nov. 22,

THE Marquis of Ripon, the Clothworkers' Company, London, and Mr. J. Kitson, of Leeds, have subscribed £500 each towards endowing a Cavendish Professorship at the Yorkshire College, of which the late Lord Frederick Cavendish was president.

WOMEN GRADUATES OF LONDON UNIVERSITY.—Mr. A. P. Hensman, writing to the Daily News, draws attention to a remarkable result of the recent examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts in the University of London. There were 237 candidates altogether, of whom 215 were men. Of these 215 men, 90, or about 42 per cent., obtained the degree. Of the 22 women who presented themselves, no fewer than 16, or about 73 per cent., were successful. But further, only 58 of the 215 men, or 27 per cent., were placed in the first division, whereas 15 of the 22 women, or 68 per cent., succeeded in obtaining places in that division. To put it in another way, more than one in every three of the men who obtained their degrees was in the second division; only one of the 16 women who became graduates failed to be placed in the first division. Upon inquiry he finds that the average age of the women was not higher, probably, it was slightly lower, than that of the men. Another writer is surprised that it did not occur to Mr. Hensman that this result may have been partly due to the comparatively small number of female candidates. He asks:—"Does he consider that had an equal number of each sex presented themselves the percentage of ladies passing the examination would have remained the same? Almost every average man can obtain a degree, but the women who aspire to that honour are for the most part far in advance of their sex in ability. Thus, average men compete with picked women in these examinations."

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS & CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

Our Contemporaries.

DR. MARTINEAU'S "SPINOZA."

The Spectator writes:—

It is by no means to be regretted that Dr. Martineau was unable to compress this study of Spinoza within the limits assigned to writers of Blackwood's "Philosophical Classics," for which it was originally intended. We could ill afford to lose a single page of this delightful book. We wish, indeed, that Dr. Martineau had allowed himself a wider sweep, and entered at greater length on many of the topics which he has discussed, always with incisiveness, yet sometimes with undue brevity. He has written a book to which English students of Spinoza will always go, and from which they will learn all that at present is known, and is ever likely to be known, regarding the circumstances, mode of life, and outward history of Spinoza. The story of Spinoza's life has never been told as it is told here. We always find in the writings of Dr. Martineau a rare felicity of expression, combined with graceful subtlety of thought. In this biography, which occupies over a hundred pages, we find the old felicity and subtlety, combined with a power of dramatic narrative, which we had not formerly seen in the works of Dr. Martineau. He has been able to weave all the correspondence of Spinoza into the texture of the biography, and he has dwelt in detail on the order in which Spinoza's works were composed, so that we are enabled to see the successive phases of his development, and to trace the growth of his system. We can fancy that people unaccustomed to abstract thought may be unwilling to face the difficulty involved in reading the second part of this study; but it is not possible to imagine any one, however unused to metaphysics, laying down this work until he has read the biographical part of it, to its very last word. For the story itself is full of interest, and the literary form is worthy of the great story it has to tell.

JEWS AND OATHS.

The Jewish World says:—

To Jews, especially, is wholesale and indiscriminate swearing particularly distasteful. The ancient Hebrews were especially reticent in the matter of compelling people to take an oath. For instance, witnesses in a legal matter were never, under any circumstances, required to swear to the truth of their evidence; the unsworn testimony of two honest persons being considered amply sufficient in every case. And further, only one of the two parties to a suit could be required to take an oath. Altogether the general regulations respecting oaths were such as to prevent the "use of God's Name in vain." The defendant—in a civil cause—could purge himself of responsibility by taking what was known as the "Biblical oath"; or he could compel the plaintiff to take the "Rabbinical oath," by taking which he established his claim. And this only in cases where there were no witnesses. In criminal cases no oaths of any kind were ever administered. And so great was the objection of the Jews to oath taking, that when it was found necessary to swear one of the parties, the prolocutor read aloud the verse, "Depart from the tents of these wicked people," the use of God's name, even then, being considered sinful, since the dishonesty or unfairness of one of the two parties had rendered it necessary to attest on oath in a mundane matter.

THE WILLIAM PENN BICENTENARY.

The Christian Register, of Boston, U.S., writes:—

Philadelphia has just had its Penn celebration. Real enthusiasm was manifested in paying honours to the memory of this broad-batted, broad-souled, brotherly lover. It is well to conserve in the public gratitude the virtues of our worthy ancestors. The crowd was great, the procession long and varied; but there were two or three features which Penn might have deemed incongruous. There was a military display, which Penn might have deemed a reflection on his principles. Then, the programme was a little too dramatic for a Quaker. As it was "Landing Day," an attempt was made to represent that event by having a "made-up" William Penn land at the historic spot from an old Danish hulk, made to appear as much as possible like the original vessel. The harbour was crowded with tug-boats gaily rigged, and great enthusiasm was manifested. But the perfection of the tableau was marred by the fact that the person selected to impersonate

William Penn got drunk the night before. A substitute who had taken this part at Chester was suggested, but he, too, had succumbed to the bottle; and when finally a gentleman was found to take the part, he had so little time to prepare that he had to read his impromptu speech to the Indians from manuscript. There was a delegation of make-believe Indians, who responded to the sober words of the white man. It would have been easy to find some real Indians to take that part, and it would have been interesting to know what they thought of William Penn and the Indian policy of his successors.

UNIVERSITY REPRESENTATION.

The Times, in an article on the Cambridge University Election, writes:—

The propriety of academic representation is a very old question, coeval with the very foundation of the custom. Near three centuries ago one of the puzzles of the day was why a King credited with so little wisdom, goodness, or common sincerity did so good an act as to force on Oxford and Cambridge a privilege which they did not thank him for. It was even said that they would have refused point blank to send members to Westminster had not the King coupled with the duty what they really felt to be a very great boon—that is, the presentation to the livings in the gift of Roman Catholic patrons. This was regarded as the compensation for the other burden. Various ideas have been ascribed to the fantastic monarch, none of them quite complimentary. He wished to establish a Royalist party in the Universities, already leaning the other way; he wished to draw some academic strength into the Court; he wished to amuse himself and to air his own learning. But the truth is, he was only doing what his predecessors had done, for they had always reckoned on the Universities serving their need at one time or another, and even felt as much at home at a University as in their own palaces. The Universities are, indeed, mainly Royal foundations. Nor was there anything very novel in the act of summoning representatives from bodies that really were powers in the State. The controversy on the point has always assumed that the act was too good a one for the man that did it, and that a bad reason must be found. It seems never to have occurred to historians or University men to ask whether Parliamentary representation has really done the Universities much good. The proof must be found in some substantial form, if it can be found at all. What have the University representatives done for their constituents that Parliament was not ready to do without them, and what measures has it given up in deference to their representatives? The truth is that the Universities are abundantly represented in the fact that a large proportion of the House of Commons consists of University men. The representative is only one of a crowd, containing many quite as qualified to speak for Oxford or Cambridge as himself.

THE PUSEY MEMORIAL.

The Daily News writes:—

To honour the late Dr. Pusey it is not necessary to share his opinions. Most opinions, "provided they are virtuous," seem to become honourable by lapse of time, when they have been honourably held. Dr. Pusey was over eighty years of age when he died, and the stirring ecclesiastical times in which he fought have become matter of ancient history. No longer is it possible to become excited about Tract Ninety or the other eighty and nine tracts which are lost in the uninviting wilderness of theological dispute. New times have brought other controversies, though they are scarcely so fierce as that in which "the great one," as Newman used to call Pusey, took his part. We have to acknowledge and admire in Dr. Pusey very considerable Oriental learning, and a life which was an example of almost every virtue but tolerance. Dr. Pusey's youth and middle age were not passed in tolerant times, and he only returned a compliment when he opposed the payment of a Greek Professor. He himself had been excluded from the University pulpit. The controversial topics on which he chiefly wrote no longer retain quite their first freshness, though the matter of the deceased wife's sister has not yet been settled. What we ought chiefly—apart from his holy life and learning—to admire in Dr. Pusey's career is perhaps his maintenance of his stand on one of the many landing places of religious thought. People are sometimes found to argue that the golden stair of theological speculation is a stair with no steps. At the top of this Hibernian ladder is the firm ground of the Roman Church, at the bottom is the weltering abyss of atheism. During and after the "Oxford Movement" many persons were drawn to Rome by this argument. They stuck to the Church of England till the alarming idea occurred to them that they were on the point of becoming Monophysites, and what they might next become, as Clough says, "twas better only guessing." So they fled from temptation, as Christian fled from the City of Destruction, and took refuge in Rome. That was the tendency of the Oxford Movement, and Dr. Pusey checked the tendency. He remained a member of the Anglican Church, and neither joined the Romish Church nor the sect or Freethinkers. If he could find a landing stage to rest on between Rome and free-thought, others saw that the same place was wide enough for them. It is always an advantage to have it proved that these intermediate refuges for faith do exist. Dr. Pusey's form of religion suited very many men and women of every social rank, and of diverse characters, who otherwise might have done without religion altogether, and might perhaps have fallen into "utter wretchedness of unclean living." With Dr. Pusey they could enjoy the æsthetic attractions of Rome in a modified form; they could believe a variety of doctrines which other members of the English Church think superfluous, and they could relieve themselves by confession. The spirit that needs the aid of a confessor is not a very robust one, but has its right to exist like another. The amateur confessional was always a strong point with Dr. Pusey, though it is not essential to believe the story of the ghost in Brasenose-lane, the ghost which was expiating a fault in its relations to its confessor. That is an Oxford myth, born of pious fraud or of humorous intention. Dr. Pusey was the true founder of the modern High Church party, though he was too English perhaps to have much sympathy with extreme ritualism. He was one of the few men, who, in any age of inquiry, solve the religious question in a manner that can be accepted by considerable numbers of their fellows. There was another and less beneficial side to his activity; but we need not consider that here. His influence was conservative, not destructive, and his life was an example of piety, probity, and learning.

The Times writes:—

Dr. Pusey was first and foremost a great theologian. He was as learned as a schoolman of the Middle Ages. His erudition was immense. He walked in it as in a cloud which hid him from the eyes of men. The environing atmosphere never dimmed his own sight; his gaze remained keen and penetrating; he always perceived where to transfix an error in its vital part. For him divinity was a science, as astronomy is for Professor Adams. While he believed it to hold the secret of life and death, and while he could brandish it as a partisan, he traced its conclusions and its development with the spirit, at once impassioned and dispassionate, of a German student. The Church of England cannot, without surrendering its equality with other historical Churches, afford not to pride itself on one of its sons who had sounded its sources and was ready to testify with his whole soul to their purity. He was a master of theological science, and he used it for the defence of his Church; he used it no less, though perhaps hardly, as Lord Salisbury was inclined to contend, more, for the maintenance of faith against infidelity. He must be acknowledged to have been a mighty champion of Christianity against all its antagonists. He scented unbelief from afar with a subtle instinct, and dealt it inexorable blows. Lord Shaftesbury, whose son and heir, it is interesting to remark, was among the company in Arlington-street, could not have discarded the mere frivolities of controversy and ceremonial more austere in battling with the common enemy of the Church of nineteen centuries than the oracle of ritualists and bugbear of Exeter Hall. Cause might be shown why not Churchmen alone of all colours might have been collected in the drawing-room of the Oxford Chancellor, but the Spurgeons, and the Parkers, and Newman Halls of Nonconformity as well. If there be any apology for the comparative exclusiveness of the meeting, it is to be found in presentiment of a course of observations such as fell from one or two of the speakers, whom admiration for the less permanent features of their departed leader's career tempted to desert the excellent precedent set by their host. Dr. Pusey was not only a most eminent divine and a most pious Christian; he was notorious to the world in the less accepted character of a party chief. His followers revere him in that capacity; and none can deny them the right. To others than High Churchmen his example in this direction appears a thing to be deprecated sorrowfully, or at best to be left in silence, and certainly not to be lauded and panegyrised.

The Guardian writes:—

A library of books, without as yet a home, with two or more clergymen as librarians, may be represented as hardly adequate as a memorial of such a life. But it was the plan which best satisfied the conditions which had to be met; and it is just as easy to find objections against anything else that has been yet proposed. It is a beginning, which keeps together those books among which Dr. Pusey, in a more literal sense than can be said of most men, passed his days and nights; a large but merely working library, showing the marks of constant wear and tear, and into which nothing was admitted except for use. And it connects with these memorials of a life of hard study and work a number of men, whose business it will be to make a practical use of them. Their number is small at first, but if the plan answers—and with a good choice of men it ought to succeed—the number may be increased, and is likely to increase. Such a home of definite theological science, based on the data and the faith of Christendom, not bound to the University, but not debarred from its freedom, ought to make itself felt in the competition of interests and subjects in Oxford. It is an advantage of the plan that it is capable of expansion, and of meeting possible wants which have hardly yet made themselves so distinctly felt as to make an immediate remedy for them wise or desirable. No one can complain of Churchmen making provision for a study which to them at least is a real and an important one. If, as many fear—though we do not altogether share their fears—religion, the religion of the Church, comes to be systematically ignored and discountenanced in the University or the Colleges, no one will have a right to complain if Churchmen, who care for their children's faith and conduct, turn to account an institution which may be made available for religious training. But, whatever mischiefs exist, and whatever dangers are impending, things have not yet come to that pass.

PROVOST HAWKINS.

The Pall Mall Gazette writes:—

Arnold, Whately, Hampden, Keble, Pusey, all except the last Fellows of Oriel, are gone, and Newman, for whom so different a fate was reserved, alone remains. Dr. Hawkins was indeed less known to the world at large than the others of this brilliant group, but his position as the head of the illustrious foundation to which they belonged, and which became so much identified with the Tractarian movement, will always make his figure inseparable from theirs, strongly as he was himself opposed to that movement. And there were in his own character qualities that entitled him to rank among them. His literary gifts were not, indeed, of the highest order, nor did he ever exercise a potent influence as a preacher. His mind was rather critical than constructive. He had a clear, keen, dry judgment, averse not only to extremes, but even to vehement expressions of any view, distrustful of sentiment and imagination, and so much disposed to see the weak points of any theory that he could no more be counted as an adherent of others than as their leader. His conservatism in ecclesiastical and theological questions was due not to prejudice—his mind was far too masculine for that—nor to any superstitious regard for tradition, but to this critical tendency, which suspected and dissected whatever new systems or dogmas were presented to it. If there was a coldness, there was also a calmness and composure in his way of treating theological topics which gave great weight to his words, supported as they were by a learning which (though not comparable for width to Dr. Pusey's) was always sound and accurate. Whether you agreed with him or not, you felt he was well worth listening to, for his principles were carefully chosen, and his conclusions were drawn from them with unflinching clearness and cogency. In the quality of both his thought and his style he seemed to belong rather to the last century than to this; and that was one of the reasons that made it hard to assign to him a place in the ecclesiastical divisions of our own time. He was a Liberal in his dislike of sacerdotalism and symbolism, yet the only species of heterodoxy which was ever even charged against him, a tendency towards Sabellianism, did not bring him any nearer to modern Broad Churchmen. One might call his theology Evangelical in its general outlines, yet both his learning and the absence of anything like effusiveness made it seem absurd to class him with the Evangelical party. The merit of his intellect was partly in this critical department, partly in its honesty. As he was quick in detecting the fallacies of others, so he never indulged himself with arguments whose validity he doubted. He loved truth as he loved moderation, and had a scrupulous conscience in all his work as a divine.

DISCOVERY AT POMPEII.

The Jewish Chronicle says:—

That a singular discovery of some interest to Jewish students has been made at Pompeii. On the wall of a house just disintombed has been found a fresco representing the Judgment of Solomon, and archaeologists have been much puzzled to explain the reproduction of a scene from the Jewish Scriptures within a town so pagan and anti-Jewish and anti-Christian as Pompeii undoubtedly was at the time of its destruction. Three explanations of the phenomenon have been suggested by various schools of Italian antiquaries. One is of opinion that the house must have belonged to a wealthy Jew, but a correspondent from Rome commenting on the theory informs us that all the other decorations of the house are of so pagan a description that no Jew would have tolerated them under any condition. He might have added that it never was the practice of the Jews to have recourse to the Bible for decorative purposes. A second suggestion has been made to the effect that the story of Solomon's Judgment may have entered Latin literature, but the fact that the extant works of ancient Latin writers gave no indication of their acquaintance with this or any portion of the Old Testament in its authentic form is sufficient argument against the acceptance of this explanation. A third proposition is, according to the correspondent we have already referred to, worthy of more attentive consideration, and we are inclined to agree with him. We know from Tacitus and Juvenal of the indifference shown by the Romans for Jewish history. The former gives in his Histories an absurdly fabulous account of Judea, and the latter misrepresents Jewish faith with equal ignorance and contempt. But the Alexandrians were at the same time deeply learned in Hebrew archaeology, and wherever they settled carried a love of their learning. It is certain that at Pompeii many wealthy merchants from Alexandria had taken up their residence. It is very probable that the house belonged to one of their number, and that the fresco is due to their inspiration. Other decorative pictures in the house support the inference. Crocodile hunting, pigmies, and the Nile—all characteristic of Egypt—form the subject of several of them. Descriptions we have received of the picture represent it as faithful in all details to the Biblical account of the incident and of a very realistic type

THE MORAL REFORM UNION.—On Wednesday last, at a drawing-room meeting held under the auspices of the Moral Reform Union, at 58, Porchester-terrace, Bayswater, by the invitation of Mrs. Woolcott Browne, honorary secretary of the Union, a paper was read by Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, "On Wrong and Right Methods of dealing with Social Evil." The meeting was influentially attended by ratepayers and others, some members of the Paddington Vestry being present. The two following resolutions were passed unanimously: I. "That this meeting desires to express its sympathy with the action proposed to be taken by the Vestries of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields and adjacent parishes with the view of enforcing public morality, and in particular of checking vicious solicitation in the streets. And that this meeting would especially approve action similar to that which has proved so successful in Glasgow for suppressing street solicitation by either sex; and is also strongly impressed with the necessity of further legal protection for minors." II. "That this meeting earnestly counsels the formation of a Municipal League to secure the appointment of candidates, who consider the moral order of towns and the protection of the young a higher duty than the claims of political partizanship." It was further resolved that copies of the above be sent to each Vestry. A letter was read from the St. Martin's Vestry requesting the Union to send representatives to join their proposed deputation to the Home Secretary. The Rev. W. H. Channing, Mr. Charles Mitchell, and Mr. F. C. Banks, were elected by the Union as their representatives.

DEAN BRADLEY ON THE BOOK OF JOB.

The Dean of Westminster, discoursing on the Book of Job on a Saturday afternoon, with the shades of evening falling fast on a grey November day, in the old Abbey, makes up a composition in chiaro scuro which Mr. Whistler himself might fail to reproduce. It was enough to whet curiosity to see what light on the most ancient of mysteries, the Book of Job, would be thrown by Dean Stanley's successor. The day, the hour, the place, and the surroundings all seemed to suggest that if any light was to come out of these lucubrations it would be a lux ex tenebris. Accordingly a few minutes before four o'clock, as the last rays of a November day were fading away through the storied upper windows, "richly dight, casting a dim religious light," a pale figure, wearing a skull-cap and wonderfully like the late Dean when twenty years younger, stood in the lectern.

Opening his MS., and reading by the pale light of a pair of candles, Dean Bradley, in clear, nervous English, proceeded to give an outline sketch in popular language of the purport and meaning of this old world attempt at a Theodicea, as Leibnitz pedantically termed that class of discussion in which we try to indicate eternal Providence, and justify the ways of God to man. The problem of Job, as the Dean pointed out, is as old as human nature, and accordingly there is nothing in the poem itself to warrant us in assuming that it is either modern or antique.

On the whole, Dean Bradley seemed to lean to the theory that the poem is not of a pre-Mosaic period. He admitted that it was strange that if written by a Jew at all, and in times within what we call the historical period, he should have so subordinated himself from his Jewish surroundings as to have made not the faintest allusion to a single particular of the Mosaic covenant. But this, though an exceptional frame of mind for a Jew, would prove nothing either way, and the nature of the argument seemed to suggest to the Dean that the apparent slackness of God in rewarding the good and punishing the evil was felt more painfully even in later than in earlier times. Be this as it may, it must be admitted that a good case may be made out for either side. On the one hand, it may be argued that a naïve confession of the difficulty seems to suggest a very primitive state of society: we are in the morning of the world and the very infancy of thought. On the other hand, it is equally plausible to maintain that the difficulty was felt quite as strongly by the generation who, as in Ezekiel's day, used that proverb, "The fathers have eaten some grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge." The men of the age of the Captivity, when the religious world was already beginning to petrify into Pharisaism, had to be reminded that is is God's ways which are equal, and our ways unequal. From this point of view it is quite conceivable that Job was a thought-reading on the ways of God to men of the age of the Captivity. But it is equally conceivable that the same "obstinate questionings of sense and outward things," the same perplexity between the phenomena and the true dealings of God with men, may have occurred to some Arab sage; someone, for instance, like Hohab or Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, who was partly within and partly without the Covenant.

But we are here, perhaps, anticipating some of the latter conjectures of the Dean, who intends to return to the subject, and for several successive Saturdays to discuss from the lectern of the Abbey chair the questions which grew up out of the authorship and authenticity of the Book of Job.

We must confine ourselves at present to noting these addresses as a novel application of the teaching privilege of our caputular bodies. What are our cathedrals for? is the question asked by a utilitarian age. It is not enough to say that they are schools of music and monuments of art of an age when all art was ecclesiastical. In our day we expect to see something more in a dean than a custodian of church antiquities, or a kind of head verger of the campo santo of our mighty dead. The age demands that something of the teaching office of the old canons regular should be kept up among their successors. A canonry, and much more a deanery, should be a teaching post—a dignity for some one who should be as one of the sons of the prophets, in the old days before the Captivity, or of the Ezraites or scribes of a later age. The late Dean succeeded in compassing both these ends. He was a teacher as well as custodian of the Abbey, and his successor, after taking time to mature his plans, has stepped out in this higher capacity, in which the useful as well as the ornamental functions of his office are combined. If we may judge by the large and attentive audience at his first prelection, these discourses on the Book of Job are likely to be a decided success. We do not expect that any new light will be thrown on the many difficult points of Hebrew scholarship which grew out of this most archaic of the books of the Bible. Ewald from one point of view, Renan from another, and, let us add, Godet from a third point of view, have touched on all the questions which grew out of the problem of the unequal distribution of temporal rewards and punishments in Old Testament times. In any case Dean Bradley is to be commended for offering his contribution to a discussion, the interest in which is exhaustless. We cannot do better than invite our readers, in conclusion, to judge for themselves. They will, at least, come away with the impression that Dean Bradley is a capable and competent critic, and that having thought the question out afresh for himself, he is one of those "scribes instructed," who is bringing out of his treasure things new and old."—Christian World.

LIVERPOOL.—The Rev. V. D. Davis has accepted an invitation from the congregation of the ancient chapel of Toxteth Park, Liverpool, to take charge of the pulpit for a period of six months, commencing with the new year.

CHELMSFORD.—On Monday evening, the 13th, Mr. C. L. Corkran (who had kindly conducted the services on the previous Sunday) gave an interesting lecture on "Father Mathew and the Temperance Reform in Ireland," the Rev. W. Wardee (Primitive Methodist) presiding. Speaking from personal knowledge of the events so graphically described, Mr. Corkran gave it as his opinion that the instability of the reforms introduced by Father Mathew was attributed to the want of a good moral foundation.

TROWBRIDGE.—At the schoolroom adjoining the Conigre Chapel, on Monday evening, the Rev. J. C. Odgers, B.A., of Clifton, gave a lecture on the pyramids and temples of Egypt. There was a large attendance, and the chair was taken by Mr. Walker, who briefly introduced the lecturer. Mr. Odgers, who illustrated and explained his remarks by repeated reference to a number of large sketches and drawings suspended at the back of the platform, remarked that the events of the past few months had suddenly re-awakened our interest in that wonderful land of Egypt, so glorious in some of its aspects, so sad in others. The war was now over, and the work of diplomacy had begun. In whatever way the difficult and intricate questions might be solved, there could be no doubt that Egypt and England would be brought into closer relations with each other, and looking on the terrible destruction wrought there by our guns, he hoped we might as some return seek to raise the country to a higher civilisation. Speaking of the past history of Egypt, he said the vast temples now remaining would give some idea of the age of magnificent and colossal grandeur then existing, the like of which would never again be witnessed on this earth, and yet the descendants of that race had since been going backward; they had been conquered again and again, and at last, under Turkish rule, had reached the lowest depth of degradation. He hoped England would be able to return to the miserable Egyptians a little shadow of that civilisation which, in the days of the Pharaohs, overawed the world, and was still reflected from their crumbling temples and pyramids. The lecturer, starting from Alexandria, took his audience to Cairo, thence to the marvellous pyramids, explaining their construction and use, exhibiting illustrations of the mystical sphinx, and describing the contents of the Boulak museum and the quarrying of the gigantic obelisks, one of which—Cleopatra's Needle, now on the Thames Embankment, was, he remarked, a familiar object to Moses, the law-giver. The ruins of the Luxor temples were also referred to, and in a pleasant conversational manner, enlivened with many anecdotes, the lecturer kept his audience interested for nearly two hours, receiving frequent marks of their appreciation. At the close he was heartily thanked, and a collection was made in aid of the organ fund.—On Monday, November 20, the eve of her marriage with the Rev. J. Ruddle, late of Hastings, Mrs. G. Withall was presented with a very handsome marble timepiece by the members of the church and congregation at the Conigre, accompanied by an address, which bore the signatures of the subscribers.

SCHOOL BOARD ELECTIONS.

BIRMINGHAM.—The results of the School Board election in this important borough were declared as follows last week:—

SUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

Mr. H. Hawkes (Independent) ...	54,490
Miss Kenrick (Liberal) ...	38,551
Mr. Eli Bloor (Liberal) ...	35,056
Rev. Canon Longman (Roman Catholic) ...	33,207
Mr. G. Dixon (Liberal) ...	33,022
Rev. Dr. Crosskey (Liberal) ...	32,669
Mr. W. J. Davis (Liberal) ...	32,241
Rev. E. F. M. MacCarthy (Liberal) ...	31,094
Dr. Langford (Liberal) ...	28,521
Mr. C. Wallis (Liberal) ...	26,827
Rev. R. B. Burges (Conservative) ...	24,036
Mr. W. H. Greening (Conservative) ...	23,998
Mr. G. H. Kenrick (Liberal) ...	22,256
Rev. T. J. Haworth (Conservative) ...	21,132
Mr. J. Jones (Conservative) ...	20,467

UNSUCCESSFUL CANDIDATES.

Rev. W. H. Poulton (Conservative) ...	19,982
Mr. Thomas Wright (Radical) ...	2,044

Total number of votes given ... 479,593

Votes for the Liberal Nine ...	280,237
Votes for the Tory Five ...	109,615
For Hawkes and Wright ...	56,534
For Canon Longman ...	33,207

Majority of the Liberals as against the Tories ... 170,622

At the election in 1873 the number of votes given for the Liberal candidates—then eight in number—was 291,644; and the votes for the Tory eight numbered 195,838; the Roman Catholic candidate receiving 32,087, and the Wesleyan 19,193.

LEEDS.—A great victory has been secured by the Liberals of Leeds in the election of the whole of the eight unsectarian candidates brought forward by them. There were nineteen candidates in all, comprising eight Liberal or Unsectarian, five Church of England, two Wesleyans, two Roman Catholics, one Independent, and one Home Ruler. Fifteen were required to constitute the board. Three of the Liberal eight were returned at the head of the poll, two of the Church candidates followed, and next the other five Liberals. The other three Church candidates and the two Roman Catholics followed. The supporters of the Liberal cause were requested to plump for the candidate allotted to their respective district, and the request was generally complied with. Out of the votes recorded 244,000 were given for the Liberal candidates, whilst fewer than 206,000 were recorded for their opponents of all classes, among whom there was at least one avowed Liberal. The election condemns the policy carried out by the sectarian majority of the retiring board, and there is now a prospect of the Education Act being administered according to its letter and spirit for the benefit of the children and the interests of the inhabitants generally. The election also shows that the Liberals in the borough are a very large majority of the electors, and that they are thoroughly united and loyal to their leaders.

WOLVERHAMPTON.—The election here has resulted in the return of five Churchmen, four Nonconformists, one Roman Catholic, and one Independent candidate. The Church and Liberal parties carried all the candidates they nominated, and the Roman Catholics returned their old representative, as before, at the head of the poll. Miss Amy Mander, one of the successful Nonconformists, was placed on the Board by nomination of its members during the last triennial period. She was educated at Cambridge University, and has taken several degrees.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD held its last meeting previous to the general election of members on Thursday. The business transacted was mostly of a routine nature. Before breaking up resolutions were passed thanking for their past services the chairman, the vice-chairman, the chairman of committees, the clerk, and the officials generally, and others. Special reference was made to Mr. Stiff, one of the original members, whose retirement from the work of the Board met with general regret. The Board adjourned till next Friday.

MESSRS. HENRY TATE, of Liverpool, and R. S. Hudson, of Bache Hall, have each promised £1,000 towards the new University College for North Wales.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary
Newspaper, and Record of Reverent
Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price
of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following
terms, post free:—

Yearly (52 weeks)	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid)	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks)	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid)	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks)	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid)	2s. 6d.

ADVERTISEMENT SCALE.

Up to and inclusive of first five lines.	2s. 6d.
Each line afterwards	0s. 4d.
For Six consecutive insertions, 25 per cent. less.
For Thirteen " " " " " "	50 "

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to Mr.
WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH
AND SON.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1882.

DR. W. B. CARPENTER, C.B., is now giving his course of twelve lectures at the Lowell Institute in Boston, U.S. The first six are to treat of Marine Geography, the last six of Psychology. Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Gannett (Dr. Channing's colleague), recently gave a reception to Dr. and Mrs. Carpenter, which was attended by some of the chief literary and scientific persons of Boston, and was a great success. Dr. Gannett, it may be remembered, was the friend and correspondent of the Rev. Dr. Lant Carpenter, the father of Dr. W. B. Carpenter.

THE Times of Tuesday contains a leading article on the late Provost Hawkins, of Oriel, evidently written by the Rev. T. Mozley, author of the "Reminiscences of Oriel." The writer says that it is no secret that Provost Hawkins, throughout the whole of his long career, wished to see the example of the Roman Catholic Church followed in at least one respect—the quiet shelving of the so-called Athanasian Creed. We fancy that not a few of the most eminent men of the Church of England now wish with Tillotson that "we were well rid of it." The writer adds that the Provost had no belief in the current phrases of the day. On a young lady urging against him "the religion of the Bible," he promptly replied, "Which religion?
there are several." Someone we think defined the Bible as a book in which everyone looks for his own opinions, and finds them.

MR. HERMANN VEZIN, in a letter to the Standard, on the reception of Mr. Tennyson's new play, gives it as his opinion that neither orthodox Christian people nor Freethinkers have quite caught Mr. Tennyson's meaning. Mr.
Vezin says:—

"The author does not present Edgar as either a bad Christian or a good freethinker. He is a bad man, a weak man, faiblesse vaut vice; availing myself of words which have come to me from headquarters, I may say that Edgar is a sybarite, 'a cold wenkling, a sensualist who justifies his sensualities by the doctrine which he has adopted, and which he adjusts to justify his own wicked acts.' He feels passionate remorse for his crime, and this rather puzzles him, because he tries to argue himself into the belief that he only 'moved in the iron grooves of destiny,' and could not really help himself—he is a 'modern pseudo-philosopher'; 'his moral sense is blunted by his sensationalistic views.'

Such a man will naturally be condemned by good men of all creeds; but as such men exist, perhaps in larger numbers than most people imagine, a dramatist is justified in putting an Edgar on the stage, so long as he does not hold him up as a model.

"But, it is said, we do not want moral problems on the stage; the English audience will feel, but they will not think. Why not? If the thing is one which they ought to think about, they surely will, if you give them time. It is a fatal mistake, and a common one, for those who do not form a part of the general public, to underrate its intelligence. Had musicians been influenced by the same error we should not now see concerts crowded to hear nothing but classical music. . . . So, also, in time, will plays presenting social and moral problems crowd out dramatic trivialities which amuse for an hour and are then forgotten. Mr.
Tennyson, in The Promise of May, has inserted the thin edge of the wedge, and, as far as can be at present judged, Mrs. Bernard Beere will have no reason to regret the result of this the boldest experiment in the modern drama."

MR. EDWIN D. MEAD, in a long article on Unitarianism in the Index of Boston, U.S., written from the friendly critic point of view, comments on Dr. Robert Collyer's claim that the leavening process which has been going on during the century in the Orthodox denominations is the direct product of the Unitarian yeast. Mr.
Mead gives abundant credit to Unitarianism for its services in behalf of charity and rationalism, but he declares that the Evangelical churches have got their leaven at first hand from Robertson, and Arnold, and Darwin, and Renan and Kuenen, in short, from the Zeitgeist, rather than at second hand through Unitarianism.
"That is true," writes the New York Independent. "Our Evangelical college and seminary professors have gone to Cambridge, and Oxford, and Leipzig, and Berlin, rather than to Boston and Cambridge, for their fresh ideas." But, on the other hand, Mr. Mead and the Independent both forget how many Orthodox ministers of all denominations have acknowledged their indebtedness to Channing, Dewey and Parker in America, and to Dr. Martineau in England. These were the men who gave the impulse to liberal religious thought long before the Zeitgeist made it popular.

AN American paper says that by the resignation of his professorship at the Harvard Medical School Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes has conferred a benefit on the reading public, but inflicted a loss upon his alma mater. For thirty-five years he has served as professor of anatomy, and at the time of his appointment, in 1847, he was one of the six professors attached to the school. To-day there are upwards of forty-five.
During the coming year Dr. Holmes promises to keep himself busy with his pen.

ACCORDING to the recently issued report of the American Commissioner of Education for 1880 it appears that in 1871 twenty-nine states reported a school population of 9,632,969, while in 1880 the thirty-eight states and eight territories reported a total of 15,536,280. The number enrolled in the public schools, twenty-eight states only reporting for 1871, was 6,393,085, while for 1880 it was 9,781,521, all the states and territories reporting this item.
Twenty-five states reported the number in daily attendance in 1871 as 3,661,739, while in 1880 thirty-four states and eight territories reported it as 5,805,342. In twenty-six states the total number of teachers was given as 180,635, in 1871 and in all the states and territories as 282,644 in 1880, divided in the former case into 66,949 men and 103,743 women, and in the latter into 116,012 men and 157,657 women, only twenty-four states reporting the teachers separately in the first year and thirty-five states and eight territories in the latter.

A WRITER of an interesting article on "The Heart of England" [Yorkshire] in the New York Independent refers to the pretty village of Horsforth, near Leeds, as having been probably the ancestral home of Longfellow. It seems that the Rev. Robert Collyer, a Yorkshireman himself of the grandest type, has taken an ardent and painstaking interest in this subject, and we shall probably have the result in his forthcoming work on "The West Riding." In reference to Longfellow, the same writer mentions an interesting fact. In Bradford, on the 13th May last, a rare relic of the family was sold at an auction of old furniture by Mr.

Buckley Sharp, of Bradford. It was advertised and described as "A Dower Chest, . . . from an old farmhouse at Ilkley Yorks." The chest is of oak, and on the top front rail is this inscription:—

"We—once—were—two—we—two—made—one.
We—no—more—two—through—Life—be—done."

On the bottom front rail:—"Comfort—ye—one—another." The middle front panels are floral; but the centre one has these words:—
"Ion—Longfellow—and—Mary—Rogers—was —married—ve—tenth—dave—off—April—anno —dm—1664." The chest was sold for a trifle, and certainly ought to have gone to America, which prizes such waifs and strays as these.

THE Christian World has the following
"Note," which shows that even the Evangelical world is moving a little:—

"We note with great satisfaction and refreshment the rebuke administered by our revered contemporary, the Rock, to those who mistake the Bible for 'a text-book of science.' The mistake is often and mischievously made, and it is well to have a distinct idea of its absurdity. 'It is obvious,' says the Rock, 'that the commonest natural facts are there (in the Bible) recorded with regard to their apparent truth. Thus, if instead of reading
'the sun ariseth,' 'the sun knoweth his going down,' it had been written, 'the earth moveth,' the Bible would have seemed to all the ancients, down to the time of Copernicus, in the sixteenth century, to be palpably in error. And so of other things.' This expresses with perfect lucidity and comprehensiveness what we have always taught on the subject of the Bible's relation to every kind of science—astronomical, geological, or critical. But we warn our brother that he is on dangerous ground. All those who refuse to admit that our Lord, and his apostles, in addressing the multitude, spoke the language of their hearers, and did not proceed upon a knowledge of geological facts or Hebrew antiquities, which would have anticipated the results of modern research will shake their heads at this sign of declension. To talk rationally of the Bible will be found to savour, we fear, of rationalism."

ON behalf of the Conservative candidate for the representation of the University in Parliament Lord John Manners sent out circulars to the members of the Senate, asking for their votes for the Right Hon. Cecil Raikes. One of these circulars in due course reached Professor W. Steadman Aldis, one of the numerous Nonconformists and sons of Nonconformist ministers, whose brilliant university career has served to point the rebuke which those have received who have so ardently striven to keep the Universities sectarian instead of national. Mr. Aldis, in acknowledging Lord John Manners's communication, said: "It has probably escaped your recollection that ten or twelve years ago you received a somewhat similar circular from me, asking you to support a measure for the further opening of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, one effect of which would be the granting to myself and others similarly situated the vote for which you are now asking. In reply to that circular you did me the honour to say that you were astonished at being asked to support such a measure, and that if it were unhappily passed into law you would never send another son to the University. Under these circumstances, I can hardly think it likely that any of those members of the Senate of the University of Cambridge, now tolerably numerous, who, like myself, only possess a vote in spite of the strenuous efforts of yourself and your friends, will bestow that vote in favour of those who so long opposed their rights. May I add that it has been with sincere pleasure that during the ten years which have elapsed since the Universities Tests Act became law I have watched the continually-increasing prosperity of the old Universities, and I am pleased to find an additional proof of their well-being in the interest which, in spite of former threats, your lordship still retains in the University of Cambridge?" So "the whirligig of time brings in its revenges."

PRINCIPAL TULLOCH, in opening St. Mary's College, St. Andrew's, on Friday, delivered an address on "Educational Progress and University Reform," in which he reiterated the opinion expressed so far back as 1858 that the theological chairs in all our Scottish universities should be opened up to all Protestant denominations. Speaking for himself, he said he had in the study of theology so entirely outgrown all denominational interests that he hardly knew what they meant in connection with the subject. Everything of the kind disappeared before the scientific spirit which every professor was bound to cultivate.

WE are glad to see the eminent name of Dr. Story, of Roseneath, on the side of the movement for reform in the worship of the Church of Scotland, to which we referred with strong approval last week. In an address to the Edinburgh University Theological Society, entitled "Thoughts About Church Reform," Dr. Story sketched the improvements in worship which, in his opinion, were most desirable. These were "to hear better music rendered more fully and heartily by the whole congregation; to have the 'Amen' responded audibly at the end of all the prayers, and the Lord's Prayer and Creed repeated aloud after the minister; to see a proper service authorised for baptism, the Lord's Supper, marriage and burial, and the churches, in town at least, open for daily service." Touching also on the question of Creed Reform, Dr. Story expressed his regret that the Church had departed from her original confession of twenty-five articles to adopt the complex dogmas of a dogmatic assembly. They ought to labour for the simplification of those terms in which acceptance of the Westminster Confession was expressed.

"A BROAD CHURCHMAN" writes to the Scotsman objecting to the imposition of even the Apostles' Creed, as "members of the Church in increasing numbers are finding it impossible to believe in the miraculous conception; the descent of Christ into the nether world; his ascent in bodily form into the upper world beyond the crystalline spheres; the resurrection of the material framework of the human body." And yet these same members belong to a Church that professes a rigid adherence to all the articles of the Westminster Confession, with the larger and shorter catechisms.

MR. W. J. POTTER, one of the editors of the American Index, says that he was once talking with an influential orthodox Doctor of Divinity on the question of Bible-reading in the public schools. He had been a member of the school committee in a Massachusetts town, and he said he had always argued in favour of removing the Bible from the public schools, because the requirement, by Massachusetts law, that it be read without note or comment, naturally leads teachers to read only those parts that are plain without note or comment—that is, the moral and spiritual parts—and this habit favours Unitarianism. Hence he preferred, on denominational grounds, no reading of the Bible in the schools to the reading of it under the restrictions now imposed by law. Among the stricter sort of Evangelical people there exists a like dissatisfaction with the "no comment" practice of "preaching the great truths of Christianity."

SOME particulars respecting the recently formed "Christian Conference," over which Dr. Martineau recently presided, have appeared in several of the papers; but the representative of this paper has always been informed that the meetings were "strictly private," and we have conscientiously complied with the prohibition against reporting—greatly against our will, however. The London correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury gives its readers some inkling of the movement when he writes:—"A movement which has quietly been going on for some time, but which has only just come to the surface, seems likely to do a great deal to modify the intensities of religious bitterness. Originating with Mr. Fremantle, the rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston-square, it was taken up by the Deans of Westminster and of Peterborough, the Rev. Llewelyn Davies, the Rev. Harry Jones, Dr. Allon, Mr. Newman Hall, Professor Bryce, M.P., and others. It is an association without denominational limits, to enable persons of all forms of creed to compare their views and experiences, with the desire to make the life of English people generally more Christian." The writer makes a curious omission in altogether ignoring the Unitarians, who have taken a prominent part in the movement.

MR. SPURGEON disposes of the idea of the infallibility of Peter in the following summary manner:—"Peter had a wife. Now no man who had a wife would believe in his own infallibility, for his wife would soon convince him of his mistake." We fear that the Roman Catholic Church will survive even this clenching argument.

Reviews.

The Early Days of Christianity. By Fred. W. Farrar, D.D., &c. London: Cassell, Peter, Galpin and Co. 1882.

WE have a sincere respect for Canon Farrar as a most learned, accomplished, liberal and enlightened man. His mind is very rich indeed in the possession of certain theological knowledge which he has tried to work up into wisdom; but he seems to us to be a diligent, industrious student rather than a great thinker, and his mind, notwithstanding its resources and wealth of acquirement, has not, in our humble opinion, yet expanded into the dimensions of a large mind. If a little more philosophy had mingled with his theology the latter would have widened and improved. Were it possible for him to have fifty more years of life in vigorous health he would probably come out very exhaustively indeed; for by that time he would have taken up into his mind the rich revealings of modern science, have discovered in them their spiritual elements, and have incorporated their significance and suggestions into his theology. As it is, however, he, like other theologians, looks backwards over old theological literature rather than over present life, over the history of Churches and sects rather than over the general movement of thought.

These volumes are hardly true to the title. They do not show us, except incidentally and in a very slight way, what Christianity really was in its early days,—what were the feelings and thoughts it engendered in the minds of the common people,—what hopes it called into life,—what habits of personal and domestic life it helped to form,—what influence it exercised over temper, speech, manners and social intercourse. We have rather the early days of intricate theology and not the early days of simple Christianity presented to us in these volumes. We hear the buzz and murmur of the schools—the droning of pedantic Greek and dreary Latin instead of the fresh utterances of natural sentiment. We have gas instead of air. Nor does the worthy Canon relieve us much by his own method of using his materials. He is learned, acute, subtle, always correct and elegant in style, and now and then, when he pleases, even animated and picturesque; but throughout a large portion of these volumes he is unfortunately terribly diffuse. Though not at all incapable of succinct and compressed writing he has here been tempted into wearisome dilation. His exposition, commentary and paraphrase of the Epistle to the Hebrews runs on through more than a hundred pages with very copious notes in learned languages. The whole pith and interest of the matter might have been put into one-tenth of the space. We have the like voluminousness in the second volume where the Canon expatiates on the writings of John. There is no end of dreary citation and needless argument to prove this or that trifling matter, which is not of the slightest interest and importance after it is proved. We have toiled through these portions of the work with painful effort as though we were walking through stones and sand—very different from the fanciful wanderings of our childhood when we were supposed to be on certain fabulous ground "picking up gold and silver." There is marvellously little of the gold and silver of spirituality to be found in the ground of theology as hitherto explored.

The worthy Canon as a critic, analyser, expositor, and commentator of the New Testament is acute and subtle, and thoroughly furnished with an immense amount of ecclesiastical learning; but his argumentative and reasoning power is inferior to his erudition. We have studied his chapters relating to the genuineness of the First Epistle of Peter, and have also read his observations on the Epistle itself. Unlike the worthy Canon, we fail to see a single expression which, of itself, proves that the writer of the Epistle was under the influence of personal reminiscences and had distinct remembrances of what Jesus had said in years gone by. The expressions seem to us such as any Christian writer of that age might have used, whether he had known or not known Jesus of Nazareth in personal intercourse. As for the antagonism between Kaphas and Paul that was probably only momentary, without any abiding bitterness. Among the disciples and followers of each the differences were far more strongly marked, more lasting and more malignant. Paul had subtle and metaphysical tendencies of mind and rather involved and complicated ways of expression; he was exceedingly liable to be misunderstood. He seems to have built up a theory of Religion and Ethics on the basis of a mystical change in the inward life supposed to be wrought by Christ. Peter, on the other hand, with a mind less subtle and less profound, seems to have relied more on outward institutional agencies, and on authority and express commands, though he, too, now and then expanded to the conception of Paul's broader views.

The Epistle to the Hebrews is attributed by Dr. Farrar to Apollos and not to Paul, and the majority of competent critics are now probably of the doctor's opinion. He has no reproach whatever for the allegorising method of the writer of this Epistle, but he strongly disapproves of the allegorising habits of Philo the Alexandrian. Now the former writer, whoever he may have been, was very much under the influence of the latter, and as regards the reasonableness of their allegories, types and similitudes, we do not see much choice between them. The New Testament writer is certainly a little less extravagant and somewhat more spiritual than the Alexandrian Jew; but with respect to the new meanings which both of these writers poured into old words, old forms of faith, old ceremonies and old incidents historic or fabulous, we humbly think that both of them were utterly mistaken. The writer to the Hebrews had no more warrant for constructing Ante-types of Christ out of the old faith and ritual of the Jews than had Philo in his fanciful endeavours to show that the ideas of Plato were enshrined in the teachings of Moses, and that the Mosaic system was a parallel to the world of ideas as presented in the Timeas. Both writers were men of ability and good intentions, but both were travelling, as we think, in the regions of mere fancy.

We cannot agree with the worthy Canon in attributing the Book of Revelation and the Gospel and Epistles of John to one and the same writer at different periods of age. Men, it is true, may change their points of view as they grow older; they may elevate their tone, enlarge their thoughts and soften their feelings; but these changes, when they occur, are generally gradual, spread over wide spaces of time, such as that between youth and age; they do not come in rapid transitions or short intervals between one point of old age and another of the same senile period. The Apocalypse is conjectured by Canon Farrar and other inquirers to have been written about the year 68 A. D. If so, John (if he was the author) must have been nearly sixty-eight years of age, even supposing him to have been younger than Jesus, which is by no means a certainty. Now a man's mind when it begins to change, expand and grow; to leap over its old boundaries and to cast off its prejudices, commences that process generally long before sixty-eight, and not, as in this case, longer after. It is strange, indeed, that John, who is said to have enjoyed a closer intimacy with the great Master than the rest of the Apostles, and who was therefore more peculiarly under the influence of that large heartedness, boundless sympathy, beauty of thought and charity of feeling which characterised Jesus of Nazareth, should even after the lapse of more than sixty years show little or no traces of such influence, but continue in the narrow, exclusive, Jewish spirit which marks the Book of Revelation. This book, though not without a certain imaginative lurid grandeur, reflects no light from the mind of Jesus, still less of his spirit; and the Apostle who after so long a period since the death of his gentle Master could write such a book as the Apocalypse, so different from the spirit of that Master, was not likely, we think, to subside in his old age into the gentle John who addresses his friends as "little children" and talks of love. It seems to us far more probable that these Johns were two very different men—not one man mentally transformed. Moreover, there is a conjecture adopted apparently by Canon Farrar, which, if well founded, must still further weaken the supposition that the Gospel, the Epistles, and the Revelations may have been written by one and the same John. The learned doctor rather favours the view that the revival and reappearance of the "Beast" spoken of as the second Beast in the Apocalypse has reference to the Emperor Domitian, who was regarded and sometimes called a second Nero on account of his cruelties generally, especially to the Christians. But Domitian did not become Emperor till the year 81 A.D., thirteen years after Nero, so that John (supposing the reference to Domitian as the "Beast" to be a true conjecture) could not have begun, or at least could not have finished, the writing of the Apocalypse until the time of Domitian, when he, the writer, must have been more than eighty years of age. If a man, as we just now ventured to say, very rarely undergoes any sudden and complete changes of mental character after sixty-eight, it is still less likely that he will pass through such transitions after eighty. As for the contrast in literary style between the Apocalypse and the Gospel and the Epistles, which some scholars have noticed, that may possibly be accounted for by the reasonable supposition that some of the disciples of John may have recast, to some extent, the literary form of his Epistles at a subsequent period. To alter a man's writings, either for better or worse, was by no means an uncommon practice in early times.

We had made many notes in the course of our reading through these ponderous volumes on Canon Farrar's remarks on the writings of the Apostle James and also on the Gospel and Epistles of John; but we found that our notes, even after compression, would occupy more space than could reasonably be given in this paper. We, therefore, pass them by. We do so not in the spirit of indifference or disregard for anything the Canon has to say. His candour, sincerity, and deep learning entitle him to respectful attention at all times. His learning, indeed, we find rather oppressive and overabundant in reference to the questions to which it is applied. It often encumbers a subject instead of illustrating it. We confess that all this great camel's load of erudite exposition and commentary has been sometimes more than we could easily pass through the needle's eye of our understanding; but that may be our fault and not Dr. Farrar's.

We find on going through these volumes that the religious views of the writer are much more orthodox than we had supposed. He does not thrust forward his opinions dictatorially; he is liberal and free, and willing that every man should be "fully persuaded in his own mind" instead of being coerced by authority; but still the opinions, so far as they show themselves, seem to us rather strange in a man of his mental calibre. He speaks, for example, of what is called "the unpardonable sin," as if it were some mysterious offence different in nature and essence from all other sins, and as if there were any condition of life so low as to be beyond the ultimate reach of those transforming influences which are eternally at work in a slow but often invisible way to improve and uplift even the vilest of the vile. It is, of course, easy to show instances of perversity and depravity beyond the reach of any cure at present known to legislators, philosophers, and divines; but all these good people seem to discern "through a glass darkly" when they survey the region of morals. At present no one seems to know anything about a real remedy for wrong. We punish offenders and patch up consequences, and that is all. Divines talk about the mercy of God as if it were something very different from his wisdom and justice. But humanity will be saved by wisdom and justice and not by mercy, which is not a distinct and separate virtue in itself, but only the modification of a virtue. It is the softened intensity of a power working often through beneficent pain. It is not an annulment or even a suspension of any Divine law or principle. The God of Justice knows how to adapt divinely just means to divinely just ends, and assuredly will adapt them for the benefit of all humanity, including even those supposed to be lost in "unpardonable sin." Again, the worthy Doctor talks about "closed dispensations," and "second Advent," and a "last age of the world," as if the spiritual history of the earth had been divided into distinct acts like a stage play, with a drop of the curtain between them, instead of being a never-ceasing stream of influences effecting never-ceasing change. As for the "last age of the world," can any man pretend to say where that will be? Humanity and nature have at present so much about them that is inchoate and unfinished that the "last age of the world" would seem to be some millions of years distant in the unknown futurity.

But we have already a little overstepped our limits. We take our leave of the learned Canon with thanks for his labours, even though our appreciation of them may not seem quite so warm as that of most of his admirers.

E. A.

Chapters on Evolution. By Andrew Wilson, Ph.D., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., &c. London: Chatto and Windus. 1883.

In a recent discourse at South-place Mr. Conway said:—"Forty-seven years ago a young graduate of Cambridge, England, was voyaging round the world in search of that more light for which, while he set out, Goethe sighed with his dying breath." At the same time a young graduate of Cambridge, New England, set himself to explore the intellectual and moral world. . . . In 1836 Darwin returned from that voyage, now comparable to the voyage of Columbus, for the new world it added to knowledge, and sat down to his task. And in that same year, 1836, Emerson published his first work, Nature, which declared his vision of the law whose reality the science of Darwin was to confirm. The two men died about the same time. They were buried with the highest honours by the nations which had denounced them as apostles of infidelity. Their honour is the measure of our civilisation." It was, indeed, a remarkable revolution which was effected by one man within the compass of his own short life-time. So vast and sudden has been the change that thousands of intellectual people whose main opinions were formed before the world had received the rich gift of the "Origin of Species" find themselves out of harmony with the times, and many younger men, whose prejudices prevent them from accepting the new philosophy, are jostled from side to side in the march of intellect, and are quite unable to keep pace with those by whom they will shortly be left behind and forgotten. Very curious are the estimates some of these people form of the question they fail to understand. One gentleman has compared Evolution with Spiritualism. This, however, was from the innocence of his heart, and is a very distinct thing from the buffoonery of those who, prating on pulpit and platform, sneer at "protoplasm," and pander to the ignorance of their hearers by misrepresenting Darwin as teaching that mankind are descended from gorillas, and accounting for the atrophy of the tail by the habit of sitting on stools. A most valued contributor to the limited literature on the subject of Darwinism writes that "any longer to withhold assent from so vast a body of evidence is a token, not of intellectual prudence, but of intellectual incapacity." For the great mass of thinkers to become acquainted with the grounds upon which rest the huge edifice that has been erected for all time, may, perhaps, require a good part of a generation; perhaps less, for the whole body of scientific teachers of the day now, in their lectures, show by their attitude that the theory of Evolution is out of the region of debate,

The number of really good books bearing directly upon the subject is not numerous. As they become more so, the knowledge of "the general" will correspondingly increase. In the meantime those who remain ignorant of it will certainly be unable to grapple with either scientific or philosophic questions with the same effectiveness as one who has mastered the idea of the "survival of the fittest."

Dr. Andrew Wilson has had quite sufficient experience as a teacher of biology to know that the hesitation with which in some quarters evolution is accepted arises chiefly from the lack of knowledge concerning the overwhelming evidences of its existence which natural history presents. "Doubtless," says he, "a training in botany and zoology is required before the case for evolution can be fully mastered, but there need be no difficulty in the way of any intelligent person forming a just estimate of evolution upon even an elementary acquaintance with the facts of biology." He has accordingly sought to bring such facts prominently before the notice of his readers in a volume of nearly four hundred broad pages and nearly three hundred illustrations. The book itself is a marvel at the price of seven shillings and sixpence, at which it is published, and a careful perusal of its chapters has confirmed us in the opinion that its author is one eminently fitted for the task. For Dr. Andrew Wilson we feel sure a brilliant future remains, and we could only wish his life was being spent in the South instead of in the North. His occasional visits to the metropolis have raised the same wish in many minds.

There are two elements in modern scientific investigation which presage benefits to man that can scarcely be over-estimated. These are, first, organised method, and secondly, freedom from the thrall of prepossessions. It is in the adoption of organised methods, probably, that the scientist of to-day differs most notably from the student in many other departments of thought; and in having no prejudices to defend or prepossessions to consult the man of science, in the language of Dr. Wilson, "stands in no dread of the results to which he may be led, and is placed at no disadvantage when he replaces beliefs, however time-honoured they may be, by the newer phases of thought to which his studies have led." Had the Great Master, who so recently passed from our midst, lived but for the purpose of setting forth to the world an example of humility, patience, impartiality, and passionate love of truth for its own sake, he would have been a new Christ for the admiration of mankind. Yet He did more than this: he showed what splendid results a single life inspired by such virtues could accomplish; and it behoves us not to lose sight of the teachings while admiring the character of the man. These teachings, when seen in some of their wider effects, have a meaning far more reaching, possibly, than even their author at one time may have conceived. It has been said that they have revolutionised all thought, and the statement seems to be justified in the flood of light which they have shed upon the consideration of a variety of problems connected with life and mind. The study of mankind, especially, whether as pertaining to the individual, family, race, or nation, has received a most beneficial illumination. Mr. Herbert Spencer showed several years ago the importance of a preparation in biology for the successful study of man as a great social organism. So long as slumbering minds persist in the fancied recognition of Natural History as a mere description of species, so long will they miss the guiding clue to the very highest thoughts which are commanding the best attention of the best thinkers in the world. As a comprehensive guide to the general scope of the subject of Biology (nearly synonymous with "Natural History"), with especial reference to the established theory of Evolution, no better book has yet been published than the one now under review. The mass of facts and their effective marshalling sufficiently explain the delay which has occurred in the issuing of the volume. Dr. Wilson, moreover, combines with a brilliant mastery of his subject a literary style which is only too rare an accompaniment of great acquirements in science. In this he fairly ranks with Huxley and Lubbock, to the latter of whom he dedicates his work.

It is not our present purpose, and, indeed, it would occupy too great a space in our columns, to enter upon any minute examination of the contents of the book, or to give extracts from its pages, but we recommend a very careful reading of it. To such as are altogether unfamiliar with biological study it will require a little closer attention than many a volume on more favourite subjects.

Wesley's Designated Successor: The Life, Letters, and Literary Labours of the Rev. John William Fletcher, Vicar of Madeley. By the Rev. L. Tyerman. London: Hodder and Stoughton. 1882.

We do not profess to be learned in Methodist biography, and our chief knowledge of "Fletcher of Madeley"—one of the most saintly characters of the early Wesleyan movement—is derived from the references to him in Southey's charming "Life of Wesley," and Miss Wedgwood's "Wesley and the Evangelical Reaction," and the incidental allusion made to him in "Phases of Faith," by Mr. F. W. Newman, who says that in his early Evangelical years Fletcher of Madeley seemed to him as perfect as Jesus Christ.

The Rev. Luke Tyerman, one of the principal literary authorities of modern Methodism, is the biographer of John Wesley and his father, the Rev. Samuel Wesley; of George Whitefield and of the Oxford Methodists. He is, therefore, well qualified to write the history of Fletcher of Madeley, the dearest friend of Charles Wesley—the poet of Methodism—and one of the earliest of the devoted band of Evangelical clergymen in the Church of England who sided openly with the new movement when it was frowned upon by the bishops and other Church dignitaries of the age, treated with contumely and violence by the ignorant multitude, ridiculed by able statesmen and fashionable people of the world, and regarded with sincere respect and sympathy by poor old half-cracked George the Third, who, when one of his courtiers told him that Wesley must be mad, wittily replied, "I wish he would bite some of my bishops."

In Methodist history John Guillaume de la Flechere—a Swiss by birth and education—was a very remarkable man, not only, as we have said, from the saintliness of his character, but, as next to the two Wesleys, perhaps the most scholarly of the early Methodists, and as the first part of the above cumbersome title indicates, "Wesley's designated successor." Fletcher, from various reasons, declined the proposed honour when formally made to him by Wesley himself eighteen years before his death. As a matter of fact, Wesley outlived his friend by a few years, and preached his funeral sermon.

Methodist biography, as a rule—always excepting the lives of the Wesleys—has little interest for the outside observer. The movement itself was profoundly interesting, and was a greatly needed reaction against the formalism and deadness of the State Church, and the respectable conventional dissent of the age. The leaders of the movement—scholarly cultivated men as they were—were filled with the single, all-absorbing thought of "saving souls." And certainly there were multitudes of souls then, as now, that needed to be saved, multitudes that were like "brands to be rescued from burning." The work of spiritual revival—generally, but not always, resulting in a deep and lasting moral reformation of character and life, was infinitely too important to allow of time or thought for polite accomplishments, Biblical criticisms, or subtle philosophising. The appeal of the Methodist preachers was made direct to the human conscience, to the universal sense of sin, to the felt need of inward reformation. After the first outburst of interested prejudice and unreasoning violence the common people heard them gladly, and those who received their fervent teaching were lifted up from a mere worldly and indifferent life into a higher spiritual atmosphere, and gained clear perceptions, however simple and unformed, of the reality of spiritual and invisible things. But the piety of the Methodist reformers was of two ecstatic a kind to commend itself to the calmer judgment of the sober understanding, and the religion they taught was too ascetic and impractical to gain the lasting allegiance of the higher class of minds. It is wanting, too, in the deeper qualities that so greatly attract us to the mystics of all ages; and with all possible respect for the movement itself, it must be confessed that a world constructed after the Methodist ideal would have few attractions for minds of the predominately intellectual or rationalistic tendency. Yet it is a patent fact that Methodism has been, and still is, a great power in the world, influencing communities far beyond its original borders; and we of the Liberal school have yet to learn that no religious movement can hope to gain large and permanent influence which appeals mainly to the intellectual faculty and originates in theological controversy and philosophical disputation, instead of making its appeal to the deeper spiritual faculties and felt wants and emotions of the human heart and soul.

The life of the saintly fellow-worker of the Wesleys—Fletcher of Madeley—well deserved to be written in full, both on account of the singular beauty of his character and from the fact that new biographical materials have accumulated since the publication of Benson's life in 1804. He was one of those rare characters that combine transparent simplicity and childlike devotion with unusual intellectual ability and singular power of influencing others. Southey said of him that "no age or country has ever produced a man of more fervent piety, or more perfect charity; no Church has ever possessed a more apostolic minister." Good Dr. Richard Price, heretical as he was, once visited him, and afterwards said, "I was introduced to the company of a man whose air and countenance bespoke him fitted rather for the society of angels than for the conversation of men." Yet the book, while no doubt immensely interesting to those within the pale, adds little or nothing to our knowledge of the Wesleyan movement, and with its voluminous extracts of sermons and religious correspondence is dreary reading to those who have no special sympathy with the Methodist or Evangelical type of piety. Like all other works of its class, it is full of special interpositions and instances of providential grace, to doubt which, writes the biographer, "would be infidelity of the most impious kind," and if so we have to confess that we are guilty of this unpardonable sin. Nevertheless, the author has well and faithfully performed his work, and while disclaiming artistic talent has given a really life-like sketch, both of the subject of his biography and the early Methodism, with which he was so closely identified.

In Methodist history Fletcher of Madeley is chiefly known, besides his saintly character and his devotion to the spiritual welfare of a neglected parish, for his decided opposition to Calvinism, and Antinomianism, in opposition to Whitefield and Toplady, and in entire harmony with the two Wesleys, whose theology was always of the Arminian complexion. He was the chief writer on that side in the once celebrated Calvinian controversy of 1775-76. As Mr. Tyerman writes:—"Among the Wesleyan Methodists he settled for ever all the questions of the Calvinian controversy. For many a long year Methodist preachers—itinerant and local—drew their arguments and illustrations from his invaluable 'Checks' [to Antinomianism]; and, perhaps, it is not too much to say that not a few of the Calvinists themselves were led by his immortal productions to explain and modify, and to some extent to change their unwarrantable doctrines. John Wesley travelled, formed societies, and governed them. Charles Wesley composed unequalled hymns for the Methodists to sing; and John Fletcher, a native of Calvinian Switzerland, explained, elaborated, and defended the doctrines they heartily believed."

It is a noteworthy fact that Fletcher established Sunday-schools at Madeley almost contemporaneously with Raikes at Gloucester. Three hundred children were gathered whom he took every opportunity of instructing, and many of his parishioners lent their helping hand not only to defray the expense of teachers, but to erect a schoolhouse at Coalbrookdale. His last productions were an unfinished catechism to be used in his Sunday-schools, prayers to be read by the children, and "Hints" to the teachers.

We have a glimpse of Dr. Priestley, to whom Fletcher addressed some letters entitled "Socinianism Unscriptural," and "A Rational Vindication of the Catholic Faith," published after his death. There were no points of contact between Priestley and Fletcher, who while evidently respecting each other approached religion and the Bible from totally opposite points of view. A controversy between such men could under no circumstances have any practical result. As a matter of fact, however, several Methodist congregations in the North have embraced Unitarianism purely from their own Scriptural reading without any knowledge of its controversial literature, while it is the rarest thing in the world for a Unitarian to become a Methodist or a strong Evangelical. We read with great satisfaction the editor's remark:—"Never has there been a time when there was more need of essays like those of Fletcher than that which is now passing. Socinianism in various shapes, even among many who think themselves orthodox, is rampant; and the Methodist Book Committee would render incalculable service to the cause of Christian truth by publishing in a separate form, and at as cheap a price as possible, Fletcher's two unanswerable replies to the redoubtable Dr. Priestley. From the specimens here given we doubt whether they even touch the borders of the controversy."

Notwithstanding his opposition to "Socinianism," and his strong evangelical convictions, Fletcher had a vein of liberal thought in his theology. In his description of "Saving Faith" he refused to put the "black mark of damnation upon any man that in any nation fears God and works righteously." And in the appendix to his "Essay on Truth" he expresses his strong objection to the damnable "appendages" to the Athanasian Creed, while admiring "the Scriptural manner in which it sets forth the Divine Unity in Trinity, and the Divine Trinity in Unity." If the creeds of Peter (Acts x. 35) and Athanasius are irreconcilable, he well says, "I think it more reasonable that Athanasius should bow to Peter, warmed by the spirit of love, than that Peter should bow to Athanasius, heated by controversial opposition."

On the whole, after reading this interesting work, our opinion is confirmed that Fletcher of Madeley richly deserved the reputation he has won as a true saint of modern Christendom. The Government of King George III. desired to reward him for the service he had rendered them in one of his political publications, and an official was commissioned to ask him whether any preferment in the Church would be acceptable to him, or whether the Lord Chancellor could do him any service. Fletcher replied, no doubt to the amazement of all concerned, "I want nothing, but more grace." This was characteristic of the man, and there were not many others of that age, or of any other, who have shown such single-minded devotion to his Master's work.

The Doctrine of Last Things Contained in the New Testament. By Samuel Davidson, D.D. London: Kegan Paul, Trench and Co. 1882.

The whole spirit in which this little book is written is indicated in the two following quotations from two of the Apocryphal books:—"God created man to be immortal, and made him to be an image of his own Eternity," from the "Wisdom of Solomon;" and "Be thou not curious how the ungodly shall be punished, and when; but inquire how the righteous shall be saved," from the second book of Esdras.

Little is known of man's future, and little can be known now. We have to content ourselves with the belief that man is naturally immortal, and so trust in "the larger hope." Our author's main object is to bring together the ideas which the Biblical writers express respecting man's future, to estimate their value, and to compare them with the creeds of Churches. A brief statement of the main points of the book will be more useful to our readers than any remarks of our own, especially as there is really nothing we desire to controvert. The general conclusions will be accepted by the most scholarly students of the Liberal school.

"The New Testament teaches that Christ will come again to earth in a visible and glorious form, attended by angels, to raise the dead and judge mankind." We generally interpret such passages as simply indicating that men will be judged both here and hereafter in accordance with the eternal principles of truth and righteousness, of which the teaching of Christ is the highest expression we yet know. There is very little doubt that the declarations of Jesus respecting his visible advent were literally interpreted by his earliest followers, and consequently entirely misapprehended. The predicted reign centred in principles and their ultimate triumph. "The coming of which Jesus himself spoke was dynamic, implying that the gospel world asserts its influence over the course of events, and the transforming power in the hearts of believers. He has come in his spiritual power over the hearts of men, and will come with greater effect in the future."

With the return of Christ is associated the Resurrection. This also is set forth in both Gospels and Epistles in an external and symbolical form; and some words of the Apostle Paul, speaking of the resurrection of a spiritual body, have been perverted in the Church creeds into the actual resurrection of the flesh. Carnis is the original word in the Apostles' Creed, and although it is translated "body" in the Morning and Evening services, it is not generally known even by Church people that in three places in the Book of Common Prayer the word "flesh" is retained in the same creed. The Nicene Creed has the less objectionable clause, "the resurrection of the dead." Insuperable difficulties attend the very materialistic doctrine of the Church, and Dr. Davidson states the higher view when he writes:—"The resurrection begins here, and is proceeding at every step of eternal life, wherever men are conscious of their true destination. Allied as it is to the consciousness of the Divine, it has the same gradations, and marks the progress of humanity towards the perfect life. The true resurrection is not simultaneous, but successive; it is a rising of the soul in the sphere of the spiritual world."

The doctrine of the Intermediate or the Hades-state held in various forms by the Hebrews, and appearing especially in the Johannine writings, was an imperfect fore-shadow of immortality. The creeds have generally rejected it, and it can hardly be supported by reason. "It is sufficient to rest in the idea of spiritual evolution, without perplexing oneself about peculiar states or places for the soul when it leaves the body."

The Last Judgment is also conveyed in a highly scriptural representation in the New Testament, although it is probable that the sacred writers believed that Christ would appear in visible form to judge the world. In a deeper spiritual view "the judgment is divine, because it accords with an immutable law agreeable to which virtue is rewarded and vice punished. Christ is Judge so far as man's goodness or badness is measured by the pattern of his life, and by the strength his spirit gives for reaching perfection. In one sense we judge ourselves, conscience accusing or acquitting; but an objective standard is also set before us. The judgment-seat of Christ and his solemn condemnation or acquittal of men may be said to symbolise the award accorded by the moral sense supposed to be active in the true Church of Christ."

In the chapter on "The Resurrection State, Rewards and Punishments," Dr. Davidson will rather startle some of his readers by the statement that the declarations of Christ favour the doctrine of eternal punishment. He grants, however, that the general tendency of his teaching was not in harmony with the everlasting punishment of the wicked, and that along with the usual doctrine current at the time there are unmistakable traces of a more liberal view. The expressions employed in the Bible do not entirely settle the question, but it is only, as our author maintains, bad exegesis that attempts to banish it from the New Testament. The whole question should be looked at from a larger platform than single texts, in the light of God's attributes and the nature of the soul. The creeds of all Orthodox Churches, as we know, accept the doctrine of the endless punishment of the wicked, and generally express it in the harshest possible form. As Dr. Davidson says with caustic severity, "The divines of a cruel and fiery temperament, who are extremely pleased with eternal and infinite torments, cannot endure softening expressions and draw out the state of the unrighteous into detail, painting it with horrid colours. Their logic pleases themselves at least, though it be harsh and horrid. We shall not disturb the meditations of such theologians upon the damned, neither do we envy their feelings. The infinite loving kindness and mercy of God disown the notion of putting the wicked into infernal flames for ever. The final impotence of rational creatures were a blot upon the aspect of a universe in which God is all in all. A ghastly hell is a kind of limit to His infinite goodness."

In the last chapter, entitled "Concluding Observations," Dr. Davidson gives his views on the general question of the future life in a very interesting way. The eschatological picture, he observes, as well in its early as its late ecclesiastical forms, rests upon an antiquated conception of the mundane system. It is impossible to round the notions of the New Testament on this subject into a whole, or to make them a compact creed. When the spirit leaves the body man's state is hidden from the living. We have to separate the Jewish Messianic elements of New Testament teaching from those which are conformable to the deepest Christian consciousness; to lay aside the temporal and retain the eternal. "The resurrection of the body, the coming of Christ in person to judge mankind, the Hades state between death and the resurrection, the endless torments of the wicked, may be looked upon as the opinions of men at a stage of culture which the present day has passed. The creeds of the Churches are pervaded by the Pauline rather than the Johannine theology, though the latter exhibits a more spiritual apprehension."

The nature and form of the future life are utterly unknown. What we do firmly believe is that "Individuality, foreign as it is to Buddhism, belongs to the essence of Christianity. The future is but a continuation of the present I amid different surroundings, all tending to exalt but not obliterate."

From this brief analysis it will be seen how interesting and valuable is Dr. Davidson's comprehensive little work. It enables us to separate the permanent truth from the mythological imagery of the New Testament; and so upon such momentous questions as the spiritual life in heaven, the final judgment, and the hope of ultimate salvation of all men, we rely not upon the testimony of fallible texts, but upon the eternal principles of the Divine government.

Short Notices.

Introduction to the Science of Religion. By F. Max Müller, M.A. (Longmans. 1882.) Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, as illustrated by the Religions of India. By F. Max Müller, M.A. (Longmans. 1882.)—These are both new editions, in a convenient and handsome form, of two well known and, to the student of Comparative Religion, invaluable works, of which full reviews appeared in these columns at the time of their first appearance. We need only mention now, therefore, that the first comprises, with many additions, the four lectures delivered at the Royal Institution in 1870, and form an introduction to the more elaborate "Chips from a German Workshop," first published in 1867, and republished in 1881 with additions, under the name "Selected Essays." We read with melancholy interest the dedication "To Ralph Waldo Emerson, in memory of his visit to Oxford in May, 1873; and in acknowledgment of constant refreshment of head and heart derived from his writings during the last twenty-five years." The second work comprises the memorable Hibbert Lectures, delivered in the Chapter House of Westminster Abbey, in the summer of 1878. We expressed at the time our highest appreciation of these most interesting and delightful lectures. But in mentioning them as "Hibbert Lectures" we can never cease to enter our decided protest against the practical perversion of a Trust—by men of the highest honour and integrity—which was certainly never intended for the benefit of Oxford and Cambridge Tutors and Fellows, or for scholars like Max Müller, Le Page Renouf, and Renan, who occupy the foremost literary position in Europe, and command publishers and audiences for whatever they choose to write and say. One or two of the subsequent courses show that the Trustees have strange ideas of the best mode of "spreading Christianity in its most simple and intelligible form"—simple and intelligible Christianity being conspicuous by its absence. Of the great value of all the lectures we have often expressed the highest opinion; but it is quite obvious that the learned and highly influential lecturers are not members of the struggling and unpopular denomination whose interests the Founder of the Trust earnestly desired to promote, and whose scholars until lately have been excluded from the prizes and emoluments of the ancient Universities. Mr. Hibbert's own wishes and intentions were as clear as moonlight as recorded in his memoir, but almost against his will he was persuaded by his advisers to leave almost absolute discretion to his Trustees, by whom his views have been deliberately frustrated, and the principle of "Open Trusts" brought for the time into contempt.

James Burn, the "Beggar Boy." An Autobiography. (Hodder and Stoughton, 1882.)—This is a bulky book of 650 pages, "relating the numerous trials, struggles and vicissitudes of a strangely chequered life, with glimpses of English social, commercial, and political history during eighty years." It is a strange and in many respects a deeply interesting record, which would have been more readable if it had been compressed into half the space. The author, as his name indicates, is a Scotchman, possessed of some of the best characteristics of his countrymen, who has worked his way up literally from the position of a beggar boy to one of high respectability and usefulness. Now in a green old age he recounts the varied scenes of his eventful career, and gives in the second part a very intelligent and interesting survey of the last eighty years, during a large portion of which he bore a manful part in helping forward the cause of social and political freedom. His chief education seems to have been the varied experiences of life as interpreted by a watchful eye and careful reading. His style is clear and simple, with a good deal of Cobbett's homeliness and directness; and the book would be really a valuable one to put in our Sunday-school or Mission libraries. It is impossible in a review to follow minutely so voluminous a narrative, and we can only add that the writer, notwithstanding many painful experiences and a constant struggle for life, writes without any bitterness in a large-hearted and large-minded spirit; and his book is particularly adapted for the reading of intelligent working men. Somewhat late in life he went with his family to America—too late, indeed, for success in that eminently pushing quarter of the globe, but his acute remarks on American manners and political institutions are not among the least interesting part of his book. His American experiences are recorded more at length in a work published in 1866, entitled "Three Years among the Working-classes in the United States during the War." The present work is very appropriately dedicated to our friend Mr. Thomas Baker, of Wokingham, who came to the author's rescue in adverse circumstances, and obtained for him the comfortable situation which cheered his old age.

Some of our readers will be glad to have their attention called to the Journal of the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis, published at Middletown, Connecticut. This publication, of which the first number (1882) is before us, contains the papers read, and the abstract of proceedings, at the half-yearly meetings of the Society in June and December, 1881. The body from which it proceeds includes many of the best known scholars and divines of the United States, and appears to be constituted upon the most liberal and comprehensive basis. In proof of this it may be mentioned that this first issue of the journal contains elaborate and exhaustive papers by Professor Ezra Abbot, on Titus ii. 13, and on Rom. ix. 5, in both of which what may, for brevity, be termed the Unitarian view of the meaning and punctuation of the two verses is defended and illustrated at great length, and, we need not add, with sound reasoning and admirable fulness of learning. Along with these papers there is also one by Professor Timothy Dwight, also on Rom. ix. 5, setting forth with almost equal fulness of detail and knowledge of his subject the opposite view of that passage. We may be biassed in our judgment, but, nevertheless, we venture to add that the exposition of Professor Abbot will be found to be an effective reply, and much more than an effective reply to Professor Dwight, on every point of importance. It presents the subject in a way which is eminently clear, logical, and self-consistent, and with a force both of evidence and argument which, we should expect, would carry conviction to the mind of every impartial reader. In addition to the papers just mentioned there are several others which deserve special notice, as the article by Professor Toy on "the Babylonian element in Ezekiel," and that by Professor Goodwin on ψυχή and πνεῦμα. It is quite a remarkable circumstance that papers so detailed and minutely reasoned as are those contained in this journal should be read out at the meetings of the Society, as well as discussed vivâ voce; and that time can be found for this, within the limits of about ten hours, as the hours are usually reckoned on this side the Atlantic. The chair was taken, we are told, at ten A.M., and the discussion on the successive papers continued till 9.40 P.M., with a "recess" of an hour and forty minutes. The papers, as here printed, fill more than 200 closely printed and large sized 8vo. pages. We may assume that the numerous minute references to chapter and verse were simply "taken as read," as well as those to the hosts of commentators, German, Latin, and English, to say nothing of ancient Church Fathers, almost equally numerous, in the papers of Professor Abbot. We must express the hope that these two dissertations will be republished in a separate form. They would make a substantial volume, and would form a valuable addition to theological literature.

Literary Notes.

MR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, who is now in his seventy-fourth year, has resigned the chair of anatomy in Harvard University.

OF new theological books we may mention one or two. Messrs. A. and C. Black promise "Thoughts for the Weary and the Sorrowful," by the late Dr. Alexander Raleigh. "The Gospel of the Secular Life" is the title of a work by the Hon. W. H. Fremantle, rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston-square, and Canon of Canterbury, which will shortly be published by Messrs. Cassell and Co.

THE opinion of the ratepayers of Belfast has been taken as to the adoption of the Free Libraries Act there, and the result is strongly in favour of the project, the number of votes for the adoption of the Act being 5,238, and in opposition to it 1,425.

MESSRS. WYMAN AND SONS will publish before the end of this month the volume of selections from the Wentworth papers in the British Museum, chiefly illustrating political and social life during the reign of Queen Anne.

MR. A. J. DUFFIELD, who has recently visited the scenes of the earliest discoveries of Columbus and his companions, will publish shortly "American Days: the Romance of a Lost Kingdom."

UPWARDS of 1,500 students are now industriously pursuing their studies in the Guildhall School of Music.

"THE SERPENT PLAY; A DIVINE PASTORAL," is the title of Dr. Gordon Hake's new poem, to be almost immediately published by Messrs. Chatto and Windus.

THE report on the manuscripts of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, upon which Mr. Maxwell Lyte has been for some time engaged under the authority of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, is now completed.

MR. EDWIN ARNOLD's new poem, "Pearls of the Faith," will be published by Messrs. Trübner on December 20. The American publishers will also have a large edition ready for Christmas sale.

THE BISHOP OF DURHAM is preparing a notice of eleven Coptic MSS. in the Cambridge University Library, which have been entrusted to him for that purpose.

OWING to the very limited number of competitors during recent years for the Gilchrist Scholarships, tenable at the London University by natives of India, the Gilchrist Trustees have decided on substituting one scholarship of £150 annually for India for the two scholarships at £100 hitherto offered.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER has arrived in England from America, but we regret to hear that his health has not improved.

MR. RUSKIN is announced to lecture at the London Institution, on Dec. 4, on "Cistercian Architecture."

THE death is announced of Professor Henry Draper, of the University of New York. He was the son of the late eminent Professor J. W. Draper, author of the "Intellectual History of Europe."

AN important discovery has just been made by two German travellers, Dr. Sester and Dr. Puchstein. On a lofty cliff of the Nimrud Dagh, between Malatiah and Samsat, where the Euphrates forces its way through the Taurus, they have found colossal blocks of stone covered with Hittite sculptures and inscriptions. The mountain rises in terraces to a considerable height, and it is upon these terraces that the new monuments have been discovered. They are stated to be in good preservation; and, like the sculptures of Boghaz Keni, to represent the deities of the Hittite race. The locality in which they are found once formed part of the kingdom of Komagene, the Kummukh of the Assyrian inscriptions.

MADAME DE NOVIKOFF is engaged in writing a biography of the late General Skobeleff.

DR. SMILES has in the press a biography of the veteran engineer and inventor Mr. James Nasmyth, whose steam hammer has done so much work in the world as to justify the inventor's motto, non arte sed marte.

MRS. MARK PATTISON hopes to have ready early next year her monograph on Claude written in French.

MR. H. VAN LAUN has been long engaged on a history of the literary exiles in England—those who from the free use of their pens had to leave their country at the bidding of arbitrary power.

ON Tuesday four chairs in the University College, Dundee were filled up as follows:—Mr. Steggall, Fielden Lecturer in Mathematics, in Owen College, Manchester, was appointed Professor of Mathematics; Mr. Carnelly, Professor of Chemistry in Firth College, Sheffield, was appointed Professor of Chemistry; Mr. Ewing, Professor of Engineering in the University of Tokio, Japan, was appointed to the chair of Engineering; and Mr. Thomas Gilray, M.A., head master in English at Glasgow Academy, to the chair of English Literature and Modern History. The salary guaranteed to each professor is £500.

THE DUTY OF ENGLAND TO THE NON-CHRISTIAN RACES.

BY MR. HENRY RICHARD, M.P.

[We subjoin the address of Mr. Richard, delivered at the recent "Christian Conference" of ministers and laymen held at Adam-street, Adelphi, of which some account appeared in our last number, taken from the Nonconformist and Independent.]

I presume that what is intended is the duty of England in its national capacity, acting through its recognised organ—the Government—towards the non-Christian races. There are individuals and there are bodies of Englishmen associated in anti-slavery societies, missionary and other societies, who have done, and are doing, their duty towards the non-Christian races in a manner worthy of the religion they profess, and which leaves nothing to desire but the multiplication and extension of their agencies. I am a declared admirer and partisan of what is called the missionary enterprise. A nobler one cannot engage the thoughts and hearts of men. Among those who have laboured in this field in modern times there are men who have displayed the highest form of heroism, a far higher form than that of the battle-field; men who have forsaken home and kindred, who have resigned all the pleasures of refined and cultivated society, all the advantages of Christian fellowship, and have gone forth with their lives in their hands to dwell among barbarous and brutalised communities, in the hope of planting among them the seeds of civilisation and Christianity. And not a few of them have found a worthy place in the roll of the noble army of martyrs. So far as these are concerned, we have no reason to be ashamed of the way in which the duties of England as a Christian nation have been discharged towards the non-Christian races.

But, if I may presume to do so, I should like to refer with the utmost respect and tenderness to what has of late weighed heavily on my heart—an apprehension that there is some danger of a departure on the part of those who are engaged in these beneficent enterprises from what were, I think, their earliest and better traditions as to the way in which their work should be done. There are signs, I fear, that some of their agents are not content with the sublime boast of the greatest missionary that ever lived—"The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the putting down of strongholds." It seems as though the unbounded confidence in brute force, which has become the worship of Christendom, and which has converted all Europe into one huge camp, is beginning to some extent to infect the Christian Church. Events of a doubtful, or indeed of a not doubtful, but of a distinctly culpable and deplorable character, have taken place in the mission-fields occupied by the representatives of more than one Christian body, and I fear an increasing disposition is shown to invoke the arm of flesh to facilitate or protect the labours of those who go forth among the heathen as the messengers of the Prince of Peace. This, in my opinion, would be an utter and most disastrous error, which would assuredly not in the long run help the spread of the Gospel, but which would bring deep dishonour on a great cause.

It is a satisfaction, however, to know that, as a rule, the friends and directors of such societies at home have set themselves boldly to discourage and rebuke these indiscretions, to use a very mild word. When one of the saddest of the events to which I refer occurred in connection with a mission to Central Africa, there were words spoken by the upholders of that mission, both at Cambridge and Oxford, so noble and true, that I venture to cite two or three sentences from them here, as laying down the true principles on which such enterprises should be founded and conducted. The Rev. Dr. Jeremy Regius Professor of Divinity at Trinity College, Cambridge, said, "The Christian missionary ought to know nothing of war, except as something to be earnestly deprecated, as the greatest of crimes when it can be avoided, and the greatest of calamities when it cannot." Then, in allusion to the use that had been made of arms in the case in question, he added, "Christianity needs no such aid, no such defenders. Her cradle was, indeed, bathed in blood, but it was the blood, not of her slaughtered foes, but of her own sons, her martyrs. It is only as you divest religion of everything associated with the fierce passions of man that you can show it in its true and lovely light as first pure and then peaceable."

And the venerable Dr. Pusey used language no less earnest and emphatic at Oxford: "It seems to me a frightful thing that the messengers of the Gospel of peace should in any way be connected even by their presence with the shedding of human blood. . . . There never would have been martyrdom had it been allowable to shed blood. The appeal in the time of Tertullian was that Christians filled their streets and cities, and if they would destroy them they must decimate Africa. It is clear that with the Christian energy of character had they chosen they could easily have overthrown the enervated, degraded, and sensualised Romans of that time; but they knew that the seed of the Church was the blood of martyrs, and that the Gospel has always been planted, not by doing, but by suffering."

These are admirable sentiments, and they, or sentiments equivalent to them, might well form part of the instructions given to all missionaries, by whatever society they are sent forth. We have had many sorts of war in the history of the world, Religious wars (unhappily), Dynastic wars, Revolutionary wars, Commercial wars, Territorial wars. But God forbid that we should ever have a Missionary war.

But if we turn to the other interpretation I have suggested of the phrase which is the text of our discussion, that by the duties of England we mean its duties in its collective capacity, or, in other words, our national policy to the non-Christian races, I am afraid it invokes a retrospect on which we can dwell with little complacency. Indeed, I have always thought that there is not a sadder chapter in the annals of mankind than that which records the story of the intercourse of so-called civilised and Christian nations with other races. Ever since Christendom began in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries to overflow its ancient boundaries by maritime adventure and colonisation, there is scarcely an instance in which the contact of the stronger, and what ought to have been the wiser and juster races with those that were uncivilised or semi-civilised, has not been to the latter the source of unspeakable oppression and misery. If any one doubts this, let him read the story of the Spaniards in Mexico, Paraguay, and Peru, of the Portuguese in Brazil and India, of the Dutch in India, and South Africa, of the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers in North America, and alas! of our own conduct too frequently in India, in China, in Burmah, in Japan, in the West Indies, in South Africa, in West Africa and elsewhere.

It would seem at first sight as though the question raised by this thesis admitted of a very simple and obvious reply—namely, that the duty of England as a Christian nation is to act upon Christian principles and in a Christian spirit toward the non-Christian races. But there are several difficulties in the way of this summary solution of the problem. In the first place, we are met with the fact—which I am afraid is a fact—that up to this time our Christianity has not been brought much into the region of practical politics. A short time ago I ventured to say in the House of Commons what produced a momentary murmur, though I fancy that on reflection most of my hearers, "convicted of their own consciences," would be obliged to admit the substantial accuracy of the statement—namely, that no man in that House durst, except at the risk of incurring ridicule, attempt to bring our foreign policy to the test of a severe Christian morality. We have our own way of showing our reverence for Christianity, but it is not by taking its precepts as our guide in the conduct of our international relations.

There is a further difficulty, that of deciding what are Christian principles and what is the Christian spirit. I am afraid that our current Christianity is not yet wholly disengaged from the elements of Judaism with which it has been unhappily blended, and which, in my opinion, has inflicted upon it great detriment and dishonour. The elder Puritans openly avowed that the examples of the Old Testament in all political affairs were to be those which Christian men and Christian communities were bound to follow, and they constantly cited Saul's special commission to slay the Amalakites, and Samuel's judicial hewing of Agag before the Lord as precedents which they had a right to imitate. Nobody, perhaps, makes such an avowal in these days, but there is, I fear, a good deal of the same spirit almost unconsciously governing our conduct towards the non-Christian races.

There are some profoundly sad and painful passages in Lord Elgin's diary in India and China. "I have seldom," he says in one place, "from man or woman, since I came to the East, heard a sentence which was reconcilable with the hypothesis that Christianity had ever come into the world. Detestation, contempt, ferocity, vengeance, whether Chinamen or Indians be the object." And so, after he reached China, he writes in a letter home, "I am sure that in our relations with China we have acted scandalously. Have you read Russell's book on the Indian mutiny? It has made me very sad, but it only confirms what I believed before respecting the scandalous treatment which the natives received at our hands in India. Can I do anything to prevent England from calling down on herself God's curse for brutalities committed on another feeble Oriental race? Or are all my exertions to result only in the extension of the area over which Englishmen are to exhibit how hollow and superficial are both their civilisation and Christianity."

I cite the words of Lord Elgin, and not those of a professed philanthropist or member of the Aborigines' Protection Society, because he was a statesman (and also, I believe, a very sincere Christian), who was sent out to deal with the disastrous consequences of very gross and then recent acts of injustice towards one of these non-Christian races. The first thing, therefore, it seems to me, we have to do, in order to harmonise our conduct with our profession, is to form just conceptions of what is the true character of the religion we profess in its bearings on our relations with our fellow-men.

I think, if I may be so bold as to say so in the presence of so many far more competent to give an opinion on the subject, that the characteristic attribute of Christianity is not justice but charity, charity in the old sense of that word as signifying love and something more than love. It is not a religion that requires us to test human character and deserts by rigidly "laying judgment to the line, and righteousness to the plummet," but which teaches us to show the utmost forbearance, even to the unthankful and the evil, and to cherish an infinite tenderness of compassion to those who are ignorant and out of the way. Now, if we are to act as a Christian nation towards the weaker and less favoured races of mankind, we must translate something of this spirit into our policy. Unhappily, it is not so at present. When we come into collision with any of these people the cry is, "Let us deal out rigid justice to them, let us execute justice upon these wretches," or some other epithet of hatred or contempt, and so on. I am very far from believing that we always do even this, that we come up even to our own stern standard of mere justice. But my contention is that if we are Christians something more may be expected of us than mere justice. There is a very pregnant line in one of Keble's beautiful hymns.

Help us to live more as we pray.

And very curious it is to contrast the prayers which men address to the Most High on their own behalf with the judgments they so often pronounce upon their fellow-men. The one is all penitential acknowledgment, earnest deprecation, humble entreaty, a plea for mercy, an appeal to the compassion and clemency of our Father in Heaven. The other is all austerity and sternness, a lofty demand for justice, a rigid exaction of the right even to the uttermost farthing. We crowd our churches and chapels on Sunday and cry, with what seems solemn earnestness, "We have erred and strayed out of Thy way like lost sheep. We have followed too much the devices of our own hearts. We have offended against Thy holy laws. We have left undone those things which we ought to have done, and we have done those things which we ought not to have done, and there is no health in us. But Thou, O Lord, have mercy upon us miserable offenders." "If Thou art strict to mark iniquity, O God, who can stand before Thee. But there is mercy with Thee that Thou mayest be feared." "I will arise and go to my Father, and will say unto Him, Father, I have sinned against Heaven and in Thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called Thy son." And so on. And yet mark the spirit and conduct of those who have just risen from their knees with these words on their lips, if they happen to hear just at that moment of some unhappy fellow creatures who have wronged them, or who have dared to set themselves in opposition to their government or their country. And what do we find? A countenance mantling with pride, an eye flashing with indignation, a voice hard, cruel, inexorable in its accents. And when tidings come that those who have thus sinned have been stricken without pity, pursued with remorseless severity, they exult over the punishment inflicted, however bloody and terrible it may have been. Should any one venture to remonstrate, he is answered, in a loud and harsh voice, "It is only justice, sir, I want only justice to be done." Only justice! one is sometimes tempted to exclaim, supposing you had only justice measured out to you by Him who is higher than the highest, how, according to your own confessions, would it fare with you? It is impossible, indeed, to put the right answer to this proud plea in more exquisite language than that employed by our great bard. It is in reply to one who, when petitioned for mercy, urged that the life of the culprit was justly "a forfeit of the law."

Alas! alas!

Why all the souls that were, were for it once;
And he that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. How would you be
If He, which is the top of judgment should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that,
And mercy then will breathe within your lips
Like man new made.

De Tocqueville, in writing to Lady Theresa Lewis at the time of or after the Indian Mutiny, says that no doubt we had in India to deal with a people who had acted like savages. "But your title to govern these savages," adds he, "is that you are better than they. You ought to punish, but not to imitate them." Our profession is that we have a religion better than those of the non-Christian races, a religion whose characteristic features are benignity, mercy, grace. Would it not be well, then, that we give some evidence of our better religion by some display of these qualities in dealing with the benighted people whom we are desirous of rescuing from the dominion of what we call their dark and cruel superstitions?

But there is another speciality of the Christian religion as it appears to me, the full recognition of which would be of great value to us in dealing with other races, namely, its teaching that it is possible to influence and govern men by moral power, to subdue their enmity and win them to submission and trust by kindness and love. This seems to me, indeed, to be the fundamental principle which underlies the whole system of truth revealed in the New Testament. But a great deal of our policy towards alien nations consists in a peremptory denial of this cardinal principle of the Christian faith, and a loud declaration, on which we immediately proceed to act, that certain races can only be ruled by coercion and terror. But this theory that nothing can avail but the strong hand of brute force has been the cherished creed of oppression everywhere and at all times, whether that oppression be exercised by an individual tyrant, or by a dominant race grown arrogant by long prosperity. The King of Naples, as appeared by his published letters, declared with the most emphatic positiveness that the Italians could be governed only by fear and force. Was not this the creed of Lord Strafford and Charles I. respecting the English people? Did not Lauderdale and Claverhouse attempt to force it in Scotland by tortures and wholesale executions? Was it not the cant by which the party then in the ascendant drove the American colonists from respectful remonstrance to open and triumphant rebellion? Did not many of our countrymen in India for years avow and act upon the same doctrine as respects the natives there, and found the result at last in that outburst of hatred against our rule and race which marked the mutiny? But it is a theory that cannot succeed in the long run, because it utterly outrages those fundamental principles of our common humanity which the Maker of us all has interwoven with the constitution of our nature, by which, in every age and every clime, it has been found that violence and insult engender indignation and resentment, while kindness and conciliation beget confidence and gratitude. And surely it must be held to be flagrantly at variance with the whole spirit and purpose of Christianity. Is not this, indeed, its peculiar claim, I may almost say its peculiar boast, that it conquers by love, that it rules men from within, by taking possession of their hearts, winning their affections, and subduing them into willing and joyful obedience? And do we not give the lie to this peculiarity of religion, when we proclaim our trust only in violence and severity?

Perhaps we may be asked to formulate some distinct policy, and prescribe in detail plans and rules to govern our conduct as a Christian nation towards non-Christian races. Well, that is not very easy, nor must we be charged as impracticable men if we fail to do so. There is a wise observation on this subject in one of Sir Arthur Helps's works, one of many wise observations scattered through his thoughtful writings:—"One of the reproaches," he says, "that will ever be made with much or little justice (generally with little justice) against men who endeavour to reform or improve anything is, that they are not ready with definite propositions; that they are like a chorus in a Greek play, making general remarks about nature and human affairs without suggesting any clear and decided course to be taken. Sometimes this reproach is just, but very often, on the other hand, it is utterly unreasonable. Frequently the course to be taken in each individual instance is one that it would be impossible to decide, still more to lay down with minuteness without a knowledge of the facts in the particular instance, whereas what is wanted is not to suggest a course of action, but a habit of thought which will modify not one or two notions only, but all notions that come within the scope of that thought."

Yes; what is wanted here also is a habit of thought which all Christian men should try to cultivate among their countrymen, as the only way of rightly teaching to them the duties of Christian England towards non-Christian races.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION SOCIETY.—On Sunday last the new premises, 4, Rhyl-street, Weddington-road, Kentish Town, were opened. A house-to-house visitation was made in the neighbouring streets during the previous week by the missionary, the Rev. Joseph Pollard, with the help of a number of students from Manchester New College; copies of the hymn book compiled by the Rev. H. Williamson were distributed with a circular containing a statement of the operations of the Mission. At the Sunday-school in the morning twenty-six children were collected, and in the afternoon sixty-four assembled spontaneously. In the evening the Mission Room was well filled, about a hundred being present; and a large number of children who could not be accommodated at the service were addressed in the front class rooms by two or three gentlemen from the College. A mothers' meeting has been begun; a free reading-room will shortly be opened two nights a week, and a Band of Hope will be started at once. Other institutions are being planned, as help is offered. Those who desire to co-operate are requested to communicate with the Rev. Joseph Pollard at the Mission, or the Rev. J. E. Carpenter, Leathes House, Fitzjohn's-avenue, N.W.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—All our Faculties.—Almost all disorders of the human body are distinctly to be traced to some impurity of the blood. The purification of that fluid is the first step towards health. Holloway's Pills recommend themselves to the attention of all such sufferers. They search out and remove all impurities from the vital fluid. In indigestion, confirmed dyspepsia, and chronic constipation the most beneficial effects have been, and always must be, obtained from the wholesome power exerted by these purifying Pills over the digestion. Persons whose lives have been restored to ease, strength, and perfect health by Holloway's Pills, after fruitless trial of the whole pharmacopœia of physic, attest this fact. This is beyond dispute.

Obituary.

DEATH OF JOSIAH QUINCY.—We regret to learn from the New York Independent of the decease of the witty, kindly, charming Josiah Quincy, some of whose "Leaves from Old Journals," or reminiscences of his early life, we have transferred to the columns of the Inquirer. He died early in this month, at the age of nearly eighty-one years, having been president of the Massachusetts Senate and Mayor of Boston. He took a very active part in all Boston interests, having introduced the Cochituate water and having done much to organise the public schools of his native city and to develop Massachusetts railroads and to care for the Boston harbour. His reminiscences of early times, published in the New York Independent, take high rank in this fascinating branch of literature, and should be collected in a volume. They constitute almost his only claim to be remembered as a literary man, though his addresses on the co-operative system for working men are of value. He was famous in his youth and hardly less in later years as a leader in society, and was much sought for in all public or private entertainments, not only as the representative of the most distinguished of Boston families, but for his own wit, culture, and bonhomie.

DEATH OF THE PROVOST OF ORIEL.—The news arrived in Oxford on Sunday of the death that morning at Rochester of the venerable Provost of Oriel College, the Rev. Edward Hawkins, D.D., in the ninety-third year of his age. The deceased took his B.A. degree in 1811, and was elected to the Provostship in 1828, performing all the duties of the office until 1874, when the Rev. D. Binning Monro was appointed Vice-Provost. Dr. Hawkins, who also held a canonry in Rochester Cathedral, and the College Rectory of Purlough, Maldon, Essex, was Bampton Lecturer in 1840, and also one of the four Perpetual Delegates of Privileges. He was the author of many sermons, amongst which may be mentioned "Sermons on Scriptural Types and Sacraments," "Sermons on the Church," "Discourses on the Historical Scriptures," "Sick-bed Services from Scripture and Common Prayer," &c. He had a difficult position, but a man who possessed the love of Newman, the confidence and affection of Arnold, and the respect of all that varied body of able men, could have been possessed of no ordinary qualities. With the retirement of Dr. Hawkins in 1874 there disappeared from Oxford well-nigh the last link binding the Oxford of the "movement" with the life and aims of the modern University; and the Oriel of Newman, Kemble, Arnold, Hampden, and Whately entered upon a less brilliant and less distinctive, though, perhaps, equally useful phase of academic life. It was typical of impending changes, and by an irony of fortune that it was the Provost of Oriel who was Chairman of the Committee for the Extension of the University, which met in 1865, whose work resulted finally in the founding of Keble College, the commencement of the non-collegiate system, and the ever-increasing growth of the colleges themselves upon new lines, and under relaxed conditions. It remains to add that Dr. Hawkins was a double first-class man of the old days—that he was Bampton Lecturer in 1840, and was appointed Dean Ireland's Professor of Exegesis in 1847—being the first to hold the chair. The death of the rev. gentleman was referred to in graceful terms from the University pulpit by the Rev. Professor Fowler, who preached the morning sermon. By a statute made by the University Commissioners, it was ordered that on the next vacancy in the Provostship the canonry of Rochester held by the Provost should be severed therefrom, and be thenceforth permanently annexed and united to the office of Dean Ireland's Professor of the Exegesis of Holy Scripture, or to such other office or place of a theological or ecclesiastical character in or connected with the University of Oxford. By a later statute it was ordered that there should be established a Professorship of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, to be called the Oriel Professorship of the Interpretation of Holy Scripture, to which should be annexed the Canonry of Rochester immediately on the severance of the canonry from the provostship, and the first election of a professor was to be held as soon as might be after such severance. It was also provided in the same statute that the professorship might be held together with Dean Ireland's Professorship of the Exegesis of Holy Scripture, but was not to be tenable with a benefice with cure of souls. The electors of this professorship are the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, the Vice-Chancellor, the Provost of Oriel College, and the Regius Professor of Divinity. Dr. Hawkins married, shortly after his appointment as Provost, Mary, daughter of Mr. Richard Buckle, of Bristol, who survives him, together with one son and daughter.

NORWICH.—The Rev. A. W. Timmis, late of Manchester New College, has accepted an invitation to take charge of the Octagon pulpit for a period of three months.

BOURNEMOUTH.—The ladies of the congregation in this town have been preparing for some months for a sale of work to be held at the time of the first anniversary next January. They would be very pleased to receive any help from friends, as they are anxious to raise as much money as possible to form the nucleus of a building fund.

An organisation under the title of "The Maccabees" has been started in Cincinnati with the object of promoting the pursuit of Agriculture by Jews in the United States. The colonies of Russian refugees already established will no doubt serve as a nuclei for the new organisation, and the experience gained by the "pioneer" Russian refugees will be very valuable.

A NOVEL SERMON.—A novel sermon which we can scarcely recommend for general imitation was delivered on the recent New Year Festival by the Rev. I. Myers at the Sandhurst Synagogue (South Australia). It was "an ably-written and beautiful sermon in verse, consisting of over 250 lines." We are informed that it was listened to with close attention and appreciation.

THE SCHOOL BOARD MEETING AT EXETER HALL on Tuesday, called by the Central Committee to advocate the return of candidates pledged to support the past policy of the Board, with increased efficiency, was a large and animated one. Between two and three thousand people, mostly men, were present, and every sentiment of the several speakers was either cheered or reprobated. The Duke of Westminster presided, and among the speakers were Sir K. Shuttleworth, the Rev. Brooke Lambert, Sir John Lubbock, M.P.; Mr. Holland, M.P.; Mr. Suter, Mr. Allanson Picton, Mr. Rowlands, Mr. Burrows, Sir T. Fowell Buxton, and Professor Bryce. The resolutions approving of the School Board action, and affirming "that the best use ought to be made of the children's school-time by giving them the most thorough and practical education authorised by the Government Code and the Elementary Education Acts," were carried virtually unanimously, though Mrs. Surr proposed a rider to the first resolution with the view of discrediting all candidates who had not been heartily with her in the matter of the Industrial Schools Inquiry. A good deal of sympathy was shown with Mrs. Surr's proposed addition, and nearly a third of the meeting voted for it.

LONDON UNIVERSITY.—The Daily News states that the Senate of the University of London have lately come to an important decision which will do much towards removing a grievance long felt in relation to the government and practical working of the University. One of the chief causes of the agitation which resulted in the establishment at Manchester of the Victoria University was, that while students of the affiliated colleges were greatly affected in their studies by the London University regulations, the colleges had no influence on the governing body, which prescribed regulations or cancelled them in a purely autocratic manner. The Convocation of the London University recently urged on the Senate the desirableness of a change in this respect, and proposed the establishment of Boards of Studies in Arts, Laws, Medicine and Science, the members of these Boards to be in part chosen from the professors and teachers in the colleges and schools. The Senate has assented to this proposal in principle, though not in form. The principal teaching bodies which send candidates to the University examinations are to be authorised to nominate representatives who shall attend in conference, or otherwise, deliberate on such questions relating to the examinations as may be brought before them by the Senate. This change, it is believed, will bring about a fuller harmony between the examining and teaching bodies, and tend to prevent in future collision and secession. In addition to this important reform, the Senate propose that the University examiners shall meet from time to time to consider suggestions for the improvement of the examinations. It is likely that thus coherence and continuity in the practical working of the University system will be preserved, and occasion removed for such taunts as that the metropolis University is a nebula floating about in space, with an examining Board for its head, but otherwise without internal congruity and consolidation.

SELECTED BOOKS.

- Conway's (M. D.) Emerson at Home and Abroad, 10/6
 Corneille's Horace, ed., with Introduction and Notes, by George Saintsbury, 2/6
 Ledger's (R.) The Sun, its Planets and their Satellites, Lectures read in Gresham College, 1881-82, 10/6
 Nature at Home, from the French of T. Gautier, with illustrations by Karl Bodmer, 31/8
 Nicoll's (H. J.) Landmarks of English Literature, 6/
 Réville (A.): Les Religions des Peuples non-Civilisés, 12fr.
 Ritchie's (J. E.) East Anglia, Personal Recollections and Historical Associations, 6/
 Sacred Books of the East: Vol. 14, The Sacred Laws of the Aryas, translated by G. Bühler, 10/6; Vol. 18, Pahlavi Texts, translated by E. W. West, Part 2, 12/6
 Savile's (Rev. B. W.) Fulfilled Prophecy in Proof of the Truth of Scripture, 10/6
 Seeborn's (H.) Siberia in Asia, a Visit to the Valley of the Yenesei in East Siberia, 14/
 Shute's (R.) Anecdota Oxoniensia, Classical Series: Vol. 1, Part 3, Aristotle's Physics, Book 7, 2/
 Yorke's (J. F.) Notes on Evolution and Christianity, 6/
 Wylie's (J. A.) Egypt and its Future, a Visit to the Land of the Pharaohs, 2/6
 Waddington's (S.) Arthur Hugh Clough, a Monograph, 7/6
 Wood's (Rev. J. G.) Common British Insects, 3/6

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 26.

LONDON.

- Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
 Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., Rev. H. R. HAWKES, M.A., Incumbent of St. James's, Marylebone, on "Garibaldi."

BOURNEMOUTH.

- Rev. ALFRED HOOD, at the Town Hall Buildings, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

TUESDAY.

- Opening of Bazaar at Leeds, by J. BARRAN, M.P.

WEDNESDAY AND THURSDAY.

Leeds Bazaar continued.

* * Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

MARRIAGE.

RUDDLE—WITHALL.—On Tuesday, the 21st inst., at the Conigre Chapel, Trowbridge, by the Rev. J. Felstead, the Rev. J. Ruddle, late of Hastings, to Mary Catherine, widow of the late G. N. Withall, Esq.

DEATHS.

- ARMSTRONG.—On the 18th inst., at 23, Burns-street, Nottingham, in her 77th year, Frances, widow of the late Rev. George Armstrong, A.B., formerly Incumbent of Bangor, county Down, and latterly Minister of Lewin's Mead Chapel, Bristol.
BUCKTON.—On the 17th inst., at West Lea, Meanwood, near Leeds, Elizabeth, wife of Joshua Buckton, and daughter of the late William Lupton, of Leeds.
COX.—On the 20th inst., at Honiton, Susan, the beloved wife of Spencer M. Cox, Solicitor, and daughter of the late Benjamin Heape, Esq., of Rochdale. No cards.
HORWOOD.—On the 16th inst., at Ryde, Isle of Wight, in her 84th year, Mary Anne, widow of Thomas Horwood, late of the Middle Temple, Esq.
HUTTON.—On Tuesday, the 14th inst., at the Rectory, West Heslerton, Yorkshire, Blanche, eldest daughter of the Rev. J. H. Hutton, in the 25th year of her age.
PRITCHARD.—On the 24th inst., at 87, St. Paul's-road, Highbury, Andrew Pritchard, F.R.S.E., aged 78, after a long illness.
ROBINSON.—On the 19th inst., of croup, aged 5 years and 10 months, Maudie, the youngest daughter of the Rev. W. W. Robinson, of Gainsborough.

WANTED. Post as Non-Resident Assistant MISTRESS, to prepare for Local Examinations, or as Subject or Visiting Teacher, by a Trained Teacher, Cambridge Higher Local Honour and Teacher's Theoretical and Practical Certificates, South Kensington Advanced Physiology (1st Class), Geometry, and Perspective—Miss FERRON, 38, Malvern-road, Hornsey-road, N

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High street, Birmingham.

Now Ready, price 1s. 6d.

YOUNG DAYS

FOR 1882.—VOL. VII.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street Strand, W.C.

New Edition, the Ninth Thousand, Revised and Enlarged, 100 pages, 8vo., price 1s., post free.

THOUGHTS ON THEISM,

WITH

SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN HARMONY WITH MODERN SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

"Dealing with religious progress and advance, it contains matter and suggestions which should be read especially by members of Assemblies and all interested in the foundations of religion."—GLASGOW HERALD.

"Its pages are enriched with numerous extracts from the most eminent divines, metaphysicians, and scientists of modern times."—SHEWsbury FREE PRESS.

London: TRUBNER and Co., Ludgate hill.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

Third Edition, pp. 116. One Shilling, or 13 stamps. SKIN DISEASES TREATED HOMEO- PATHICALLY. By WASHINGTON EPPS, L.R.C.P., M.R.C.S. Describes and prescribes for fifty varieties of skin diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS OF THE LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Marianne.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms. Address, Mrs. Stablack, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

DIXON'S IRON CHAPELS, SCHOOLS, &c.

Are tasteful in Design, Economical, Durable, made of the Best Materials, and erected in the most careful manner. Can be taken down, removed, and re-erected at small cost.

Careful comparison of Specifications, Structural and Architectural details, Materials and Workmanship are invited before placing orders. IRON CHURCHES, &c., usually on hand or in progress at the Works. IRON BUILDINGS for all purposes and all Climates. Catalogues, Designs, Estimates, and all information on application.

ISAAC DIXON, Windsor Iron Works, Liverpool.

THE LATE W. A. POPE.

LAST ADDITIONAL LIST.

	£	s.	d.
Amount advertised	2035	12	1
Mrs. Powell, Birkenhead	1	1	0
Mrs. Wyman, Putney	2	0	0
A Friend, per Mr. Summers	0	2	6
C. E. A.	0	5	0
Mrs. Summerford	1	1	0
C. G. Oates, Esq., Meanwood, Leeds	20	0	0
Rev. Dr. Hornby, Eton	1	0	0
Rev. T. Dalton, Eton	1	0	0

P. MEADOWS MARTINEAU, Treasurer.
J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, Hon. Sec.

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certificate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by correspondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials. Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

WANTED, after Christmas, a Certificated Teacher for the Girls' Day School, New Gravel Pit Unitarian Church, Hackney.—For particulars, apply to the Secretary, Mrs. CLENNELL, 87, Downs-road, Clapton, London.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.

ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.

ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING

AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or 8, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHARING-CROSS LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

LEEDS NEW UNITARIAN CHURCH AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS, DOMESTIC-STREET, LEEDS.

Cost of buildings, land, &c. ... £4500 0 0

Subscriptions paid and promised by Mill-hill friends ... £2100 0 0

Subscriptions paid and promised by the Holbeck congregation and Sunday-school ... 1000 0 0

Grant from the British and Foreign Unitarian Association ... 100 0 0

Amount to be raised at the Bazaar and by other efforts ... 1300 0 0

The GRAND BAZAAR in aid of the above undertaking will be opened by JOHN BARRAN, Esq., M.P. for Leeds, on TUESDAY, November 28, 1882, at 1 o'clock, and continued on WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, November 29 and 30.

A great variety of useful and fancy articles will be offered at reasonable prices. A series of entertainments will be given. The Mill-hill String Band will play selections of music.

Refreshments at moderate charges.

Prices of admission:—First day, up to 6 o'clock, 1s.; after, 6d.

IDEN PAYNE, Minister, 3, Cambrian-terrace, Holbeck, Leeds; JOHN S. MATTHEWS, Chairman, 73, Albion-street, Leeds; Councillor JOHN WARD, Treasurer, Moortown, Leeds; E. F. MORLEY, Sub-Treasurer, 4, Gladstone-street, Holbeck, Leeds; WM. WESTERMAN, Secretary, Cemetery-road, Holbeck, Leeds.

CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

The MONTHLY MEETING OF PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS OF WARWICKSHIRE and the NEIGHBOURING COUNTIES, Established 1782, will celebrate its Centenary by a Series of Meetings to be held in BIRMINGHAM, on Wednesday, December 13.

1.—The Members and Friends will meet in the Lecture Room of the Church of the Messiah, when the Secretary will read a Sketch of the History of the Society, supplemented by members' remarks.

2.—To be followed by a Luncheon-Dinner at 1.30 for 2 o'clock punctually, at the Grand Hotel, Dr. RUSSLE, J.P., presiding. After dinner there will be a Conference, in which several Laymen and Ministers will take part.

3.—In the Evening, at 7 o'clock, there will be Public Worship in the Church of the Messiah, when the introductory service will be conducted by the Rev. JOHN ROBERTS, and the Rev. Professor ESTLIN CARPENTER will preach.

Tickets for the Dinner, Three Shillings each; can be had from the Hon. Secretary before December 4.

D. MAGINNIS, Hon. Sec.

Old Parsonage, Stourbridge, Nov. 8, 1882.

SCARBOROUGH.—A BOARDING and DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS, in the above healthy locality, conducted by Mrs. EDWIN SMITH and Miss A. A. SMITH, of Newnham College, Cambridge, is proposed to be established after Christmas, if sufficient general support be secured. Special attention to HEALTH, home comforts, and physical training. Mere "cram" or over-work scrupulously guarded against.

Rev. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., would take some of the higher subjects. Efficient masters for special studies and accomplishments. Terms strictly moderate. Suggestions or promises of support will be gratefully welcomed, addressed to either of the principals, at Sandy Knoll, Forest-road, Nottingham.

SOUTH OF FRANCE, VALLEY OF LA DORDOGNE.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for Twenty-four BOYS from ten to fifteen. Modern and Dead Languages, Mathematical and Natural Sciences, taught according to the New Programme of the Elementary and Grammar Classes in the Lycées. Good German Tutor. A few English pupils would be admitted on moderate terms.

Apply for more information (at Ste. Foy, Gironde) to the Director, M. Gilard, pastor; and for references (44, Boulevard des Gobelins, Paris) to M. Steeg, late pastor at Libourne, member of the French Parliament for Bordeaux; M. Roudier, M.P. for Libourne; M.M. Et. Coquerel and Viquié, pastors in Paris, and M. Fontaues, pastor at Havre.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S

CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY

FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM, AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday November 25, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2110.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—
The London School Board ...	773
The Church and Modern Thought ...	773
Charity and Charities ...	774
Hungarian Delegate in America ...	775
OPEN COUNCIL:—
The Cause of Drunkenness ...	776
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Temperance Reform... ..	777
New Unitarian Churches ...	777
London Domestic Mission Society... ..	778
The Character of Christ Unique in History	778
OUR CONTEMPORARIES	779
OCCASIONAL NOTES	780
REVIEWS:—
Christ: a Series of Sermons	781
England and Egypt... ..	782
Mind: a Quarterly Review	782
The Magazines	783
Literary Notes	784
THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—
The Moral Aspect of Party Government... ..	785
OBITUARY:—
Andrew Pritchard, F.R.S.E.	785

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the beginning of the New Year the price of the INQUIRER will be reduced from 5d. to 2d. weekly. See detailed notice in another column.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

THE friends of education are on the whole to be congratulated on the result of the election for the London School Board. Those who are known as the advocates of the School Board policy, which has been tersely summed up as "a place for every child, and every child in its place," have returned a majority of their candidates; and some of those members of the old Board who distinguished themselves by obstruction, based on no intelligible principle except that of pure wilfulness, have found that the ratepayers do not as a rule sympathise with that kind of thing. With two exceptions, Mr. S. C. BUXTON and Mr. GEORGE POTTER, the School Board party have elected all their candidates, and the places of these two gentlemen are taken by two men who are on much the same platform, though at present without the same experience. It is perhaps fortunate that the Oath Question does not arise here, otherwise Mr. BRADLAUGH might find a dangerous rival in public fame in the person of Dr. AVELING. Having regard to the peculiar method of voting in connection with this election, it is somewhat difficult to ascertain the real wishes of the majority of the ratepayers. The cumulative vote very frequently only represents the desire of a minority of ratepayers to place their special favourite in a safe position, while the fact that some of the old members received less votes than at the last election may simply mean that many who accumulated their votes last time felt they were somewhat prodigal, and distributed their favours more evenly this time. It is, we think, to be regretted that only seven lady candidates have been returned. Seeing that in no case has a lady candidate been rejected, we feel that it is the more to be regretted that each division had not the opportunity of electing one. Only seven members of the old Board seeking re-election were rejected, and thirty-one were elected. Many of the new men are unknown to fame, although one at least has an unenviable repute in connection with a recent parliamentary election inquiry. What the future of the Board will be remains a question to be solved, but it is not too much to hope that the "School Board Policy" indicated above will continue its ascendancy. The addition of such men as Sir C. H. CURRIE and Sir ARTHUR HOBHOUSE will do much to enhance the position of the Board. Mr. LUCRAFT will no doubt find in the latter a valuable ally in dealing with the City endowments, though Sir REGINALD HANSON, whose platform was the protection of these coveted means of helping education, will be prepared to do battle on their behalf. We have never joined in the outcry against the School Board on the ground of extravagance, believing that the time has not yet come when it would be safe to look too closely into the cost. Nevertheless, we should be sorry to think that it deserved half the hard things that are said of it; nor do we understand the recent election to justify an inordinate expenditure. But we do regard it as saying in effect that the ratepayers are satisfied with what has been done; and the very fact that so little interest was, comparatively speaking, manifested by the ratepayers in the election, bears this out, though we admit this is not altogether a healthy sign. However, the new Board has three years' work before it, work which does not diminish in importance, but grows with the ever-increasing growth of the metropolis. Whether it will manage to rouse the ratepayers from their apathy during that time, or will make them still more contented, remains to be seen. But, be it remembered, it is work, not talk, that is wanted, and so long as that is really given, the ratepayers will not be too critical.

THE CHURCH AND MODERN THOUGHT.

WE have before us a full report of Archbishop THOMPSON'S sermon on the above subject, preached before the late Church Congress at Derby. A perusal of it gives us the impression that Dr. THOMPSON aimed to grapple fairly with his subject, and to deal with it in a manner that would be useful and suggestive to his hearers. Like all the leading Churchmen he seems fully aware of the difficulties that beset the relations of the Church and modern thought. As the subject is one not of adventitious or temporary, but of abiding interest, we will recall the leading points of his address, adding such comment of our own as they may suggest to us. The trials of the Church occupy the foreground in his thought. He thinks that for the next few years they will be of a new type. Churchmen now have no open persecution to fear. Indeed, he supposes no time has ever been more favourable for giving what is called fair play to the Church. "Rome in old days tolerated everything but Christianity; England tolerates everything. The times are peaceful; the flock secure; the duties of the shepherd plain," and we may add, the means of support abundant, and the opportunities of doing good more abundant still. Yet there are dangers peculiar to the time. What are they? The progress of thought, of scientific research, and of materialism.

"A mighty tide of thought is rising before us. Other tides have been, like the eruption of Etna, fierce and terrible, but moving slowly and confined in narrow space. This flood is like the tide of the great sea, that penetrates every part, so that no particle that is below sea level can escape the contact. Such a flood of thought seems rising on the modern world, and it will leave no inch dry, and that which is soluble it is likely to dissolve, and that which is ancient and strong it will try and test, and only that which is above the waterfloods will entirely escape its effects. I doubt, for my own part, whether any former time has presaged severer tasks for the Church."

Why should the Church stand in dread of modern thought? Why should the Archbishop speak of it as a devastating flood? What is it which brings the Church in conflict with modern opinion? Repeatedly in this journal these questions have been answered, but it is needful to reply to them so long as these fears are expressed. The danger arises from the stereotyped creed of the Church. It is its unprogressive theology which raises the barrier that it fears will be swept away by the advancing tide. Were the Church a progressive institution, breathing the air and living in the light of freedom, accepting all new truth, from whatever quarter it may come, as a fresh revelation from on high, it would have nothing to fear. It would then be in a just and natural relation towards the world's growing knowledge; and instead of regarding with suspicion every step in its onward path, would welcome it as a new contribution to be utilised in the highest interests of mankind. But so long as the Church rests on baseless assumptions and stereotyped creeds its apprehensions will be amply justified.

"Some speak," the Archbishop says, "as if all changes in the world were but a change from evil to evil, from bad to worse." He does not take this gloomy view; there is good as well as evil in the advancement of these modern times. "The progress of the world, so far as it is the development of justice, knowledge and mutual help, is divine; it is good and very good, and perfect gift comes and can come from one source only." We heartily endorse this view, and rejoice that it is so distinctly recognised by a high dignitary of the Church. The marvel is that any one can doubt it who believes that the world is under the rule and providence of GOD. "It is one of the fruits of the Reformation that the Church and the State are no longer regarded as enemies, but as two distinct powers, working each for the good of man, the one in the road of civil freedom and security and happiness; and the other with the object of moral freedom, peace of mind, and eternal hope for the people of GOD." We like this theory of Church and State, and would be glad to see it practically realised, but before that can be Church and State must become independent of each other, so that each might pursue its own course according to its own prompting and sense of duty. In this direction things are evidently tending, and even many Churchmen are preparing themselves to accept the inevitable result.

"We of the clergy," says Dr. THOMPSON, "understand that much better than we used to do; and on such subjects as encouragement to temperance, to thrift, to recreations of the people, readings, lectures, news-rooms, and the like, we step out and do our best to help the State toward law and order and civil improvement; confessing thus that the progress of civilisation helps the progress of religion."

Without doubt there has been a marked improvement in all this; a deeper interest than formerly has been shown by many of the clergy in the temporal welfare of the people, and the result has been beneficial to both clergy and laity. As the clergy have mingled more freely with the world and taken a more lively interest in its concerns, their influence for good has strengthened. And they know this, and are not likely to retire from the favourable position which this gives them.

On the subject of Science the Archbishop has something to say. "Science in itself is no enemy of CHRIST; secular culture in itself is not an enemy, civil government is no enemy. But at this moment the modern spirit is making progress round us with a rapidity which the Church has not yet learned to measure. Within a few years changes have come over the horizon of thought which cast a shadow upon every part of the field of our teaching." Some of these shadows the preacher proceeds to indicate.

The first is cast by the modern doctrine of Evolution. Dr. THOMPSON admits what a great work DARWIN has done. "He has made a complete revolution in the mode in which inquirers now regard the physical world." While protesting against the "extravagant deductions of DARWIN and his followers," he admits that "new light has been thrown on dark places in natural history by the new system. In rather more than twenty years it has made itself a place in the thought of all countries. Whatever truth there may be in it, it is not to be disposed of by mere denial and ridicule. Nor must we confound these researches with the crude materialism which borrows some help from them. A new induction has been made from physical facts; its novelty has startled and distressed us. It may be criticised, revised, even superseded by other inductions, but as it was needless for the Church to urge COPERNICUS to revoke his astronomy, so will our children see that new views of Natural History cannot kill the spirit, or prevent it from turning to GOD for strength or comfort, or from conceiving immortal hopes." All this is well said; it takes a just view and expresses, we believe, the real sentiments of candid and thoughtful minds on this subject. The Archbishop believes that religion, that is the sentiment of trust, reverence and love towards GOD, faith in Him and His rule, has nothing to fear from the doctrine of Evolution, and so do we. What has good cause for dread is the artificial theology constructed by the fathers of the Church, in ignorance of the true system of the universe. It is this antiquated theology with its six days of creation, its fall of man, and other prodigies and marvels which make up the traditional belief—it is this which science contradicts, and which it is helping to banish from the world as mistaken and false.

Another shadow cast by the doctrine of Evolution consists, Dr. THOMPSON tells us, in the attempts made to apply the new theories to morality. "The last theory is that mankind, struggling upward from unexplored depths of being and fighting fiercely for survival in a world too narrow, finds the need of social ties to reinforce the single hand with allies for the struggle, that society develops sympathy, and that sympathy, ever increasing, tempers and will finally subdue selfishness and the grasping instincts and desires. The sense of right and wrong, therefore, is the result of the opinion of society acting on our mind, and it is needless to seek any higher sanctions." We agree with the Archbishop that this theory strikes at the root of religion and religious worship and service. But is it an adequate explanation? Is it satisfactory? Is it in accord with the higher impulses of human nature? We think not. We need not long-drawn calculations to give us strength. We need "Thou shalt" and "thou shalt not" from some higher sphere. Natural science cannot speak them. "The divine is heard," to quote the words of Professor MULLER, in the "I ought," which nature does not know and cannot teach.

Modern thought concerns itself much with the misery and suffering existing in the world. What Dr. THOMPSON does not like is that men should go about among the suffering poor and point to their condition as a proof that there is no Divine government at all. "GOD is not the author of evil, He is the sender of succour to it. We have not yet come near the boundaries of that succour. And we know not how much misery and suffering may still be removed from society by Christian pains. All we have to do is to recognise the immenseness of trouble and sorrow, and to urge everyone who loves CHRIST to do his part in its relief. The love of CHRIST shall thus have its perfect work." It is precisely the presence of this evil which shows the need of religious hope and consolation; and so long as pain and sorrow exist in the world the heart of man will cry out for succour to the living GOD, and feel its deep need of trust in Him.

What is needed is that the Church should strive to be equal to its great opportunity, that it should aim to employ wisely and well its large resources; that it should abate its high pretensions and be willing to learn of the leaders of thought and knowledge—the "men of light and leading"—in the fields of science, politics, social economy and social life. The day for exclusive pretension is fast passing away. The Church must become a worker among other workers, a learner among other learners, not holding itself aloof in cold isolation, but descending from its pedestal of pride and mingling freely as a purifying, elevating, inspiring influence amidst the busy walks of life. The clergy need a higher consecration—not the consecration of priestly assumption—but the consecration of the spirit. And clergy and laity have to learn that the Church is but an agency in the hands of Providence for the advancement of mankind. It has its own dignity, its mission, its functions, but it can fulfil its part best by co-operating with all the other agencies which are working by various methods, but with the same great aim, and towards the same grand result—the education and elevation of humanity—working, as the prophet said of old, to make the crooked straight, and the rough places plain.

CHARITY AND CHARITIES.

CHARITY, of which Love is the synonym in the Revised Version, is the impulse of pity and sympathy directed to some object or objects of need or suffering; and charities are amongst others the methods by which the impulse finds practical expression. The first gives birth to the second, and were the latter always the true expression of the former we should hear but little of the abuses of charity, and its need of thorough reform and organisation. But, as a matter of fact, while the impulses of charity are pure in themselves, the forms they take too often degenerate into mere dry routine, or become positively mischievous in their ultimate results. The truest charity is that which takes away the need, and more or less permanently removes the suffering. The physician who by his experience and skill completely heals is far to be preferred to the charlatan who simply mitigates some malady at first, but slowly and surely intensifies, and even multiplies, it in the course of his too popular practice. That many charities, originally the offspring of pure charity, do this has for some time been brought fully into evidence by the much misunderstood and much misrepresented Charity Organisation Society. This Society has grown rapidly in number, power, and influence since its formation some twelve years ago. Its primitive object, still held in theory, was, not to create a new society for administering charitable relief, but to bring into friendly practical relationship all existing charities, with a view to their better organisation, and the wiser and more economical employments of the funds placed at their disposal by their subscribers and supporters. It was assumed, at the first, that the public charities of the metropolis were soundly based, and more or less efficiently managed, but that there was an undue waste of funds, owing to their overlapping each other, and a total perversion of their objects in the cases of unworthy applicants, while a positive encouragement was given to open and shameless impostors. The Organisation Society soon made all this, and much more, apparent; and not only so, but brought to light that there existed and flourished numerous sham charities, with their offices and officers, their collections and annual reports. The Earl of SHAFTESBURY, no mean authority on points of this kind, has estimated that these sham or sometimes effete charities raised little short of a quarter of a million sterling annually in the metropolis, to say nothing of the whole tribe of begging letter-writers who prey upon the thoughtless benevolence of the generous public. Unfortunately for the success of the Organisation Society, its detections and exposures so scared and alarmed many bond fide charities that with very few exceptions they declined, and still decline, to be organised. But in truth the detective is the merely negative side of the Society. Its real object after all is to purify charity; to restore it to its true functions; to find out its real objects, and after adequate inquiry to afford or obtain for them adequate relief. In the attainment of these desirable ends it has sought and found a large sympathetic and growing constituency; that constituency it has, in an important sense, educated, and its work of education still goes on, and will continue, we have no doubt, until the charities that refuse to be duly organised find their supporters alarmingly decrease. Charity will then, and then only, become efficient when its objects are so helped that, as a rule, they will no longer need the assistance sought; but be able to maintain themselves by their own energies, and cease to be petitioners or to decline into the habits of the permanently indigent or the habitual pauper.

This one great function of the Society—that of educating the public in the true principles and methods of efficient charitable relief—it is steadily and successfully pursuing. These are admirably set forth by the able Secretary of the Council of the Society, Mr. C. S. LOCH, in his introduction to “The Charities Register and Digest,” recently issued by the Society. The volume itself, of more than 1,100 pages, sold at five shillings, contains a clearly arranged alphabetical list of metropolitan charities, with condensed information as to their several specific objects, income, &c. Only charities believed to be bonâ fide are inserted; the known mala fides are excluded; but a wise caution is given to the reader not to assume that the former are all to be trusted merely because they are found in the Register. Many a charity that has begun well has seriously degenerated. Not a few maintain themselves merely by their traditions, or the vis inertiae of their subscribers; and many have ceased to fulfil the works and intentions of their original founders. Take that curious one of RICHARD WATTS, and his hospice for six poor travellers—commemorated in DICKENS’S Christmas story—excluding, however, “rogues and proctors.” The original testamentary bequest of the eccentric donor grew in value to such an amount that under the control of the Charity Commissioners the fund has for some years been greatly utilised, and a fine set of almshouses at Rochester have taken the place of the quaint little way side building near Gads-hill.

One important leading principle of the Organisation Society is to see, through the action of its district committees, that before any charitable society or individual that may be applied to to assist an applicant renders such assistance, his or her nearest relatives, if such exist, and are able, shall first be asked to afford some proportionate aid. To an extent quite unknown to the public many well-to-do relatives will shirk if they can a duty much more obviously theirs than that of strangers. Sons and daughters in fairly good circumstances will only too often attempt to throw the burden of maintaining their aged and helpless parents on the bounty of the charitable public. This they are tempted to do by the facilities afforded by numbers of charities easily approached and as easily deceived, where adequate inquiry is not one of their rules. Take, as an illustration, such an institution as the Royal Maternity Charity, for delivering poor married women at their own homes. This charity has an annual income of nearly £2,000, chiefly derived from large donations and legacies. The poor women delivered in one year reach to 3,600. Let it be borne in mind that the births in the metropolis weekly now average over 2,500, or 130,000 per annum; and as most of these occur amongst the working-classes and the poor, it is obvious that the Royal Maternity can only reach a mere minimum of the cases it professes to provide for. Now we ask, does this Charity take adequate steps to guard against any but the necessitous obtaining its aid? What safeguard does it employ against deception by an applicant using the marriage certificate of another borrowed for the purpose? or of a young widow—we write of an actual case—producing her own, and giving birth to a child other than that of her deceased husband? Again, what inquiry is made to ascertain that the husband of an applicant is not in receipt of fairly good wages, or is not a habitué of the public-house, while he sanctions the poor wife begging from the door of one subscriber to another for the coveted letter of admission to the Society’s benefits? Not unfrequently the marriage certificate is covered with the private memoranda of the secretary, denoting that the woman had already had four, five, or even six “deliveries” under the auspices and at the cost of the Charity. The subscriber who grants the admission letter usually knows little or nothing of the applicant; he is, perhaps, a Lombard-street banker or a merchant, furnished with his six letters for each guinea he subscribes, or possesses a score or more, for that matter, if a heavy donor; and he is only too ready and too glad at once to gratify his sympathies and get rid of the woman’s intrusion on his time by giving her the letter she seeks; about her antecedents, her circumstances, or her character he usually knows nothing; her delicate situation is apparent, and that is enough. Now if this Charity were invited to radically change its methods it would probably say “non possumus. We are tied hand and foot, bound by our testamentary bequests. We cannot allow of applicants to contribute any portion of the needful outlay.” It is worthy of note how really small is the help afforded by this Society, and with what comparative ease the husbands of the women “delivered” might, if they were at once manly and thrifty, meet the expenditure of birth, as thousands of their class in fact do. Deducting from the £1,880 income, salaries and office expenses, fully £400, and dividing the balance by the 3,600 cases—it costs the Society less than six shillings each case! Surely when both husband and wife know months beforehand that a child is likely to be born, less than sixpence per week saved from their beer would far exceed this amount, and neither the woman nor the man be pauperised by the dole of the Charity, with its grand title of Royal, and its comparatively insignificant results, for it deals with scarcely one tenth of the cases occurring annually amongst the class it professes to assist. The best feature of the Society is perhaps that its midwives are trained for their delicate duties, and competent medical men are available in cases that exceed their feminine skill.

We have selected the Royal Maternity Charity as a noted typical example where the nearest and dearest relation, that of the husband to the wife, is virtually passed by, and where both are practically taught that it is no duty of theirs to prepare for an emergency that comes not suddenly and unawares but may be foreseen and provided against with some small effort and self denial on their part long before the need arrives. We shall return to the general subject in one or more future articles. Meantime, we strongly commend to our readers’ serious attention this remarkable compilation, the Charities

Register, with the very valuable, lucid, and highly instructive essay of Mr. LOCH, whose enthusiasm in the cause of true charity is only equalled by the fulness of his information, the ripeness of his experience, and the solidity of his judgment. C. L. C.

HUNGARIAN DELEGATE IN AMERICA.

Good news comes to us across the Atlantic of the warm reception accorded to Professor Kovacs by our American co-religionists, and the munificent help he is receiving towards the further endowment of the college in Klausenburg. Those who have visited Hungary are well aware of the great opportunities for influencing the religious and intellectual life of the country through the educational institutions of the Unitarian Church. In the college or high school of Klausenburg alone there are at present 355 pupils, and the number might be largely increased if the buildings were extended and the income raised to anything approaching an adequate amount. About nine years ago, chiefly through the influence of Mr. John Fretwell, a generous American lady, Mrs. Richmond, of Providence, founded a professorship in the Klausenburg College, but since her death this has run the risk of terminating, after the balance of the fund was exhausted. A portrait of this lady hangs in the Consistory Chamber at Klausenburg, and her name is enrolled in the “Golden Book” amongst the benefactors of the Hungarian Church. Priestley and Channing Professorships were also established to meet the growing requirements of the college, but the latter, after being sustained for four years by gifts from America, was allowed to lapse. The mission lately entrusted to Professor Kovacs was thus by no means of an easy kind. He had not only to convey the fraternal greetings of the Hungarian Church to the American Unitarian Conference, but to endeavour to enlist the sympathies and secure the help of the American churches for the educational work in which he and his colleagues are engaged. And happily his efforts have met with such signal success as to make it a pleasure to give a sketch of his route and work, as described in the Christian Register and other American papers.

Leaving Klausenburg towards the end of August, Professor Kovacs travelled direct to London, where a substantial proof of the liberality and goodwill of the American brethren awaited him. Then taking Wakefield in his way, he preached in Westgate Chapel on September 3, and sailed two days after in the Aleppo, from Liverpool to Boston, rejoicing to find himself the fellow-passenger of Dr. A. P. Peabody and his family. Reaching Saratoga on September 19, he was introduced to the Conference by the Rev. J. H. Allen, and cordially welcomed by a large assemblage. The really fine address which he gave in response appears in full in the Christian Register, and from it we give the following extracts:—

“Your Churches and ours are divided by many degrees of longitude, by a wide expanse of land and sea. But glancing at the map, it cheered me to find that New England and Transylvania are wondrously alike in latitude. And if I may be pardoned a figure of speech, latitude is a very important element in religious relations. In Europe you are believed to have a special fondness for things that are old and venerable, and perhaps I may touch a responsive chord in your hearts if I remind you that our Unitarian Church in Hungary had seen its golden age before the trees of which the ‘Mayflower’ was built had been laid low by the woodman’s axe. Nay, we can go further back than that. The little boys who in our Hungarian village heard of the discovery of the New World by Columbus, could have lived to hear the Unitarian faith preached from the great stone in Kolozsvár market-place by our famous Reformer, Francis David. Since then the star of Unitarianism, like the star of Empire, has westward held its way. The West is now sending back rich treasures of thought and inspiration to cheer older lands. Your saints and prophets are our common possession. Lately, as the tidings reached us of Longfellow and Emerson, and Bellows and Dewey, we felt that each of these illustrious men belonged not to the Western Hemisphere, but to the whole wide world. In this, as in other respects, we Hungarians receive from you more than we can give in return. But of gratitude can repay you, of that we can give in abundance."

The resolution embodying the reply of the Conference to the letter submitted by Professor Kovacs from Bishop Ferencz and the Hungarian Consistory was moved by the Rev. E. E. Hale, and seconded by the Rev. R. S. Morison, both of whom have visited Hungary. The first portion of this resolution or message so eloquently and touchingly portrays the services rendered to the cause of religion and progress by the Unitarians of Eastern Europe that we place it before our readers in the hope of stimulating their interest in the earlier struggles of their faith:—

"The presence in our assembly of a delegate from the Consistory of the Unitarian Church of Hungary connects us directly and organically with the martyr age of our communion. There is no passage in Christian history more romantic or exciting than that which tells of the struggles and trials of the Fathers of the Unitarian Faith in Poland and in Transylvania, nor is there any lesson more honourable than the lesson which they taught to Christendom in their loyal adherence to the sacred law of liberty, when every temptation offered by power might have led them to swerve from its path of light. For centuries, in the noble valleys of their grand mountains, they wrought out the great problems of Christian liberty, while their work was unknown to our fathers in England and in America, who were working out the same problems on another field. Nay, through the seventeenth century, they were in arms for Christendom, that Christendom might be able to work out its own problems. In the eloquent phrase of Baron Arban, while England was sending her colonies to America, while science had its new birth in western Europe, while free government was organised in the councils of Great Britain and of the New World, Hungary was engaged in battle,—in keeping the Turk off the back of Europe. After three centuries in which the Unitarian Churches have been parted, they are permitted to exchange their books, to compare their notes, and to greet each other. And it appears now that Truth, where solicited by the lovers of Truth, gives one and the same oracle, whether she speaks in the noble language of the Magyars, whether she speaks in the classic philosophy of Martineau, or whether she chooses the simplest dialect of New England or of the banks of the Mississippi."

On the Sunday after the Conference Professor Kovacs preached at Peterborough, where he was the guest of Dr. Morison, and on October 1 at Cambridge, where he visited Mr. Allen. On the 8th he preached in the forenoon at Cambridgeport, and in the evening delivered a lecture on Hungarian Unitarianism to a large audience in Mr. Hale's church in Union Park-street, Boston. This meeting was of a representative character, being held under the auspices of the Suffolk Conference of Unitarian churches. On the following day he attended the monthly meeting of the American Unitarian Association at the rooms, 7, Tremont-place, and laid before the Committee a communication from the Consistory of his church, and in a short speech expressed his grateful appreciation of the welcome he had received and the sympathy felt in his mission. About this time a strong and influential committee was also formed, with Dr. Morison as chairman and the Rev. J. H. Allen as secretary, "to consider the subject of raising funds in aid of the Unitarian College in Kolozsvár," Mr. Hale and others promising to secure liberal assistance.

During his stay in Boston Professor Kovacs was one of the invited guests at an important meeting of the Unitarian Club. This society, though only recently established, has already its full number of 250 members, which is the limit fixed by the rules. About two hundred gentlemen sat down to the banquet, which was held at the Hotel Vendome. The proceedings which followed were of an exceedingly pleasant kind, speeches being delivered by Dr. Peabody, Dr. James Freeman Clarke, and the Rev. E. E. Hale, all of whom had recently returned from Europe, on their impressions of various countries of the Old World. Mr. Hale's remarks on France and Spain were specially interesting. Professor Kovacs gave a speech which was warmly applauded, his subject being the Unitarian Churches of the United States and their methods of work as compared with the more complicated and centralised organisation of his own communion.

On October 15 we find Professor Kovacs preaching at North Easton, Massachusetts, on the need of self-denying zeal in the promotion of religious reform. Here he was most hospitably entertained by the family of Mr. Ames, of whose kindness he speaks in the most grateful terms. On October 19 he went to Providence, Rhode Island, the home of the Richmond family, and was rejoiced to receive the munificent donation of 5,000 dols. towards the endowment of the Anna Richmond professorship. This was followed by handsome gifts of 428 dols. from Miss Caroline Richmond, and 100 dols. from Mrs. Ellen Richmond Parsons. The whole amount now contributed, together with the balance of the Richmond Fund in the charge of the American Unitarian Association, enabled Professor Kovacs and the committee to make the gratifying announcement in the Christian Register of October 26 that the professorship founded by Mrs. Anna Richmond, of Providence, in 1873, was now completely and permanently endowed. This intimation was followed by an appeal for ten thousand dollars for the endowment of the Channing Professorship in the Klausenborg College.

On October 22 we find Professor Kovacs at Newport, lecturing in the beautiful Channing Memorial Church, and pleading so earnestly and ably for help towards this second endowment fund that the ladies of the church at once made arrangements for a "fair" on its behalf.

The Newport News, in giving a long report of his lecture, describes also with what enthusiasm and reverence he visited the scenes identified with the early life of Dr. Channing. It was also his privilege during this visit to Newport to dine with Mr. Herbert Spencer, Mr. Wendte, and some of the chief residents of the town. On October 29 Professor Kovacs preached at North-borough, and on November 5 in the Church of the Messiah at Montreal, from whence he left after a delightful visit of a few days for Chicago, visiting Niagara Falls on the way. Afterwards he means to visit the principal Unitarian churches in the midland and western States, returning to Boston soon after the new year. Those who know the past history and present condition of the Hungarian Church cannot but wish success to its delegate, who with untiring zeal and energy is pleading the cause of an institution which has been a civilising power in Hungary for many generations. And were it only more widely known among our wealthy English Unitarians with what scanty resources the higher educational work of our co-religionists is carried on, or if they could go through the Klausenborg College and see the students crowded at night into rooms that have been used for classes during the day, their beds as closely packed as emigrants' berths, they would feel a pleasure in smoothing away the difficulties that have so long cramped the energies of our co-religionists in Eastern Europe. A. C.

STROUD.—The Rev. Wm. Birks has resigned the ministry of the Lansdowne Chapel.

BRADFORD.—The Liberals of Bradford have had the satisfaction of returning the whole of their eight candidates, while two of the seven Church candidates have been rejected. The Board consists of fifteen members, and will now be composed of eight Liberals, five Churchmen, one Roman Catholic, and one Independent. The Roman Catholic candidate headed the poll, and Miss Lupton, the lady candidate, came next. With the exception of Dr. Bardsley, the Church candidates were in a group at the bottom of the poll, while the Liberal lowest on the list obtained 2,000 votes more than the lowest of the successful Churchmen. The average number of votes cast for each of the eight Liberals was 15,400, while the average for each of the seven Churchmen was 13,130. A comparison with the figures of 1873 shows that there has been a distinct improvement of the Unsectarian position since that year. The Board will be able to continue the policy it has hitherto pursued, and will not attempt to press the life out of the voluntary schools by extending the Board system unnecessarily, nor starve its own schools for fear they should put too much pressure on the competing system. The Rev. J. Cuckson, Unitarian minister, was one of the successful candidates.

Open Council.

THE CAUSE OF DRUNKENNESS.

SIR,—In your last article on "Temperance Reform" you refer to the Symposium held on the subject in the Contemporary Review a few years ago—in 1878. It may be of interest to some of your readers to hear what Dr. Moxon, one of the writers in question, said of the effects of alcohol on the nervous system, and consequently on the feelings and imagination of the individual making use of it. Such a view of the subject is all the more necessary, because it is clear there must be some psychological effect of a pleasurable kind in the use of alcoholic beverages or they would not be so largely used. In other words, the very abuse of alcohol presupposes its use, for men do not drink with a mere swinish appetite, as some temperance advocates seem to suppose. It seems probable, indeed, that a craving for excitement, or a more or less conscious aim to secure the psychological effect in question, runs through all the stages of the drunkard's sad career, till at last his very brain has completely yielded to its action. But here let me turn to Dr. Moxon.

"In considering the mind of man," he says, "so as to study the cause of drunkenness, we must start from the principle that every individual exists in two distinct phases—phases which are distinct, to whatever depth you analyse the character of man, and which remain distinct throughout every development and extension of him, however manifold his powers become. These phases may be difficult to name, but they are not difficult to identify and recognise, and I care more for things than for words.

"One of the phases is the man as the subject or seat of his own natural emotions, and the other is the man as the seat, or subject, or object, or what you will, of what other people make him know and feel. I mean the man as the seat of the set of feelings that make up his conscious life, and the man as a unit under influences dominating his spontaneous powers. Perhaps if I call the feelings, views, &c., imposed on the individual by society common sense it will be best. Many people use this term vaguely, and half fancy it means vulgar or ordinary sense. But common sense means the sense capable of being common to two or more individuals; in short, the sense we seek to impose on each other, and are impatient if we do not succeed. Let us, then, call the sense imposed on the individual by his fellows common sense, and the sense which the individual has naturally within him as his own native bent to this or that feeling, individual sense.

"Next note this important truth, that individual sense and common sense compete with and oppose each other for power over the stores of memory, so that according to their respective hold upon these stores the man's readiness for use by himself and others is different in different people. A person who has strong individual sense, which is much, but not quite the same thing as saying an emotional, vivid person, reaches best the stores he has in his memory when his emotional nature is aroused and lively, otherwise there is darkness in his chambers of imagery. If an actor or speaker, he acts or speaks best when not dyspeptic and dull. On the other hand, a man whose sense is chiefly common to himself and others, a kind of man who never means more than other people say, which is much the same, but not quite the same thing as saying, a dull common sense kind of man, has the advantage of possessing what he has, independent of his feelings at the time. He does not want a spirit lamp to light the chambers of his imagery, despises it. It is diffuse daylight in such a mind. There is no unfairly kind illumination of one side of things, as there is when the light radiates from a glowing centre.

"The power of alcohol in the world is due to the fact that it keeps down the oppressive power of others and of their common sense over the individual sense, and so makes a man better company for himself and others. It places a man's individually stored memory more within his own power, raising his individuality temporarily but with danger. . . In sickness it brings back the man to his own help. It makes him come to himself and believe in himself by its aid. It gives the patient courage, and he is fearless again. In short, it is a medicine of the mind with some power over the body. But as to those whose common sense is small and their individual sense great alcohol acts upon them as a poison of the soul. Unchecked by common sense they enjoy the spin of their own minds till it is a passion to do so. Whenever, indeed, there is strong individual sense with little capacity for common sense we may look out for trouble of some kind. Such are the born intemperate."

Now it seems to me, Sir, that this view of the use of alcohol is in harmony with experience, and offers at the same time a philosophical explanation of its advantages and its dangers. It is not for me to say here how far these preponderate. If life be a joy when the spin of memory is vivid and bright, and the mind is crowded with an overflow of imagery; and if alcohol lights this lamp of the past, it is easy to account for its vast influence, for the fascination it exercises, for the fearful abuse to which it leads in excitable natures. How is the abuse to be avoided? By wholly abjuring the use, say the total abstinents, acting upon Von Hartmann's principle for getting rid of a pessimist order of things. But, failing this radical cure, surely the spread of knowledge, and, above all, the cultivation of social intercourse as the means of natural mental excitement, ought to do much towards removing the curse of strong drink from our midst. The French drink alcoholic beverages universally, and yet rarely get drunk. Why? J. MODEN.
Leicester, Nov. 28.

THE CITY OF BOSTON, U.S., pays £1 per head of its entire population yearly in local taxes for educational purposes, and expends nearly £6 per head per annum on every child in its schools. New York pays 12s. per head of population, and expends £5 8s. on every scholar annually.

BLACKLEY.—An invitation has been accepted by Mr. J. MacLaren Cobban, of London, to become the minister of the Blackley Unitarian Chapel, and he will commence his duties on Sunday, the 3rd of December. [Can any one inform us who Mr. Cobban is, and what claim he has had to be regarded as a Unitarian minister?]

MALTON, YORKSHIRE.—Our friends at this place are about to put up in their chapel a marble tablet as a memorial of the Rev. James Wilson, who was a short time their minister. Mr. Wilson was formerly a Wesleyan minister, and in that capacity went out to Newfoundland. On his return he occupied for about three months the pulpit at Whitechurch, Salop, and thence removed to Malton; after a short ministry, to the great regret of our friends, he died.

BIRKENHEAD.—On Thursday week a conversation in connection with the Birkenhead Unitarian Church was held in the lecture room under the chapel, Charing-cross. The Rev. W. Binns presided, and there was a numerous attendance. The programme was opened with a duet on the pianoforte, played excellently by Miss F. E. Cooke and Miss Lawford. Mr. Binns gave an address on "Advanced Thinking," which is printed in full on another page. Miss New having sung the song "A Winter Story" with much sweetness and expression, Mr. T. G. Carver made an interesting speech "on some recent speculations as to tides." He dealt more particularly with the discoveries which had been made, and the theories which had been advanced, by Mr. Charles Darwin, son of the celebrated Mr. Darwin, and argued that the moon had been thrown out of the earth and had since the performance of that operation been steadily getting further and further from this globe. The results of the receding action of the moon were, said Mr. Carver, that the tides were becoming weaker and our days were getting longer. Mr. C. E. Melhuish displayed his fine bass voice to advantage in the song "Friend of the Brave," while Mr. Isaac B. Cooke read a singularly beautiful pathetic piece, entitled "The Life Boat," by Mr. George R. Sims ("Dagonet"), in a most tender, truthful, and affecting way. Miss Moore contributed the song "Auld Robin Grey," and Mr. A. H. Paterson made a good impression by the way in which he recited one of Mr. W. Carleton's quaint American pieces. The proceedings were brought to a termination by a representation of the comedy Delicate Ground; or, Paris in 1793, the rising of the curtain on which was preceded by an overture, nicely played by Master Laurence Barnes. The little play had justice done it by Miss Lloyd, Mr. C. W. Willmer, and Mr. Arthur W. Willmer, and seemed to be much enjoyed by the audience.

Correspondence.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I cannot let your rejoinder to the Rev. Stopford Brooke on Temperance Reform pass unnoticed. We are indeed obliged to him, not only for his admirable article, but for bringing out your explanation. I am sorry that in so doing you have not endeavoured to show your interest in the cause to which you avowedly belong, by stating the facts which no doubt Mr. Stopford Brooke had in his mind when he made a somewhat incorrect statement about the insurance of the moderate drinker. There are Societies which make a distinction in their assurance in favour of teetotallers. This is done by the "Temperance and General Provident Institution," whose experience during fifteen years is given below:—

MORTALITY EXPERIENCE—Years 1866-80.		TEMPERANCE SECTION.
		Expected Claims.	Actual.
1866-70, 5 years	549	411
1871-5, 5 "	723	511
1876-80, 5 "	933	651
15 "	2205	1573
		GENERAL SECTION.
		Expected Claims.	Actual.
1866-70, 5 years	1008	944
1871 5, 5 "	1268	1330
1876-80, 5 "	1485	1480
15 "	3761	3754

It will be seen from this that the claims in the Temperance Section are only little over 71 per cent. of the expectancy, while in the General Section they are but slightly below the expectancy.

Bonus is given in proportion to these savings for five years. Is it not incorrect to say, then, that it is not "at the same figure" that "the total abstainer is insured with the moderate drinker?" Again, it is known "that publicans," however "moderately" many of them may drink (which of course they must to keep their licenses), are not accepted by most Insurance Societies at the ordinary rate, "their lives" being far the "worse" of any class in the community. I hope this fact is not "denunciation nor imputation of moral blame," although it may be quite as much so in the true statements of the Rev. Stopford Brooke, who did not judge "the men" but "their actions," which is a very different thing. There are not many Buxtons who will give up a business which till lately has been most lucrative on account of its known fatal results to the community. Many young men still say, and more think, "O! that I were a brewer," when they see the fortunes that in a few years are made by many in that trade. Surely, then, it is time that you and others should speak "the whole truth," in sorrow, not anger, in love, not in malice. R. S.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—From your article of November 25, on the Rev. Stopford Brooke's letter, I believe you will agree with me in the assertion that there are no more injurious opponents of temperance than the injudicious advocates of total abstinence.

Temperance is surely the moderate indulgence of a national or race habit, and the excessive indulgence or the excessive abstinence from such habit is equally intemperance. This is as true of the use of alcohol as of any other habit that has been inherited from many generations of ancestors.

Excessive self-denial equally with excessive indulgence has been long recognised as one of the manifestations of an inherited tendency to insanity; my casebooks furnish me readily with instances in which the inherent mental disorder has first declared itself in excessive self-denial of alcohol as of other habits.

Excluding inherited forms of intemperance self-denial or indulgence, my experience has given me the very decided opinion that in relation to the numbers of each class the proportion of the intemperate and total abstainer who become insane will be found to show very little difference when the statistics on the subject become available. I have for some years abstained from expressing this opinion publicly from fear of injuring the cause of temperance, which has my earnest sympathy, and I only do so now in the hope of protecting it from injurious advocacy.

Total abstinence for a more or less prolonged period is frequently found to have preceded the outbreak of insanity in the intemperate, a result to which it has conducted by the mental stress of self-denial having broken down the enfeebled nervous system. In this way the doctrine of total abstinence is responsible for much evil. The assumption is made that total abstinence is the only method of dealing with temperance, and in place of really treating intemperance in the early curable stages by teaching how to control the craving, the effect of this doctrine is to substitute a periodical succession of alternate self-denial and excess, which often culminates in insanity.

Again, the excessive abstinence of one generation is apt to be avenged by excessive indulgence in the next; the most marked case of alcoholic insanity in my notebook is the son of a rigid total abstainer. This alternation of habits of self-control and indulgence may be traced not only in families, but in classes and even nations.

Alcohol is asserted to be a food by many unprejudiced scientific observers, the principal of those who deny this on the contrary being better known by their advocacy of total abstinence than by their general scientific investigations. That nutritional value is confirmed by the general experience, which concedes that total abstainers consume more solid food than temperate persons.

Alcohol is, however, a food specially needed in active adult life, easily and often necessarily discarded as life progresses to the stage when milk is again the most suitable diet. Persons past middle life may therefore often dispense with it with advantage, while others in the prime of life can only do so at a risk.

The poisonous qualities of alcohol would rank it with meat, which latter, in England at least, probably produces more disease and premature death than the former.

I regret if anything I have here advanced should be thought to militate against temperance; but I am reassured by knowing that no truth can injure the truth.

HENRY RAYNER.

Lecturer on Psychological Medicine,
St. Thomas's Hospital.

The Asylum, Hanwell.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Perhaps the following extract from the prospectus of the London, Edinburgh and Glasgow Life Assurance Company will help to clear up a matter in dispute between Mr. Stopford Brooke and yourself.

TEMPERANCE SECTION.

Assurers who are total abstinents from alcoholic drink of one year's standing pay the same rates of premium as non-abstinents, but they are assured in a separate and distinct section, the profits of which (ascertained separately from the general business of the Company) are divided solely amongst the members of the Temperance Section. It being an ascertained fact that the rate of mortality of total abstinents is less than that of the general public, the former derive the full benefit, at the periodical divisions of profits, of their superior health and longevity. It is important to observe that persons who are in the least intemperate are not assured by this Company upon any terms.

A TEETOTALER.

NEW UNITARIAN CHURCHES.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In your issue of the 18th inst. there appears a letter signed "Vigilans," suggesting the appointment by the British and Foreign Unitarian Association of an organising secretary to "prospect" the suburban localities of London, with a view to the institution of new congregations. Possibly your correspondent is unaware of the existence of the London District Unitarian Society, one of the main objects of which is to do within that district the work which he wishes to see done; and if he will furnish me with an address to which they can be sent I will gladly forward to him copies of the last three or four years' reports of the society. He will there find that this very subject of founding new Unitarian churches in the suburbs is continually engaging the attention of the committee, and that within the last twelve-month they have started an effort at Wandsworth, which promises at no distant date to become a self-supporting congregation. Previously to the formation of the congregation at Croydon services were maintained for two or three years at Forest Hill, and afterwards at Norwood Junction, mainly through the instrumentality of this Society. If the Unitarians of London and the neighbourhood would furnish the society with funds more in accordance with the necessities of the work requiring to be done, the committee would make arrangements for commencing services in any of the suburbs where a fair amount of local support would be forthcoming.

ARTHUR TITFORD,

Joint Hon. Secretary, London District Unitarian Society.
Nov. 27.

LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Through the medium of your paper would you allow me to make my appeal to kind friends for that assistance which at this season of the year is so specially needed? I should be glad to receive toys, books, clothing, or money for the Poores' Purse; and anything may be sent either to George's-row or to my private address.

Feeling that the beneficent objects of the Mission are worthy of support, and that there are many who desire to strengthen the hands of the Missionary, with simplicity and confidence I make my appeal.

F. SUMMERS.

1, Fassett-road, Dalston, E.

THE CHARACTER OF CHRIST UNIQUE IN HISTORY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I must confess that, as a Christian, I was considerably astonished, and not a little pained, at the letter in your last issue signed "S." With your permission I would like to ask "S." a few questions.

1. Granting that the ethic character of Buddhism is not behind that of Christianity, does he consider that Buddhism, as an economy, as an organisation, and as a political conception, stands on an equality with Christianity?

2. Buddha said, Quell your desires; Christ said, Train your desires. Buddha said, No desire is good; Christ said, All things are good and lawful. Which is best, to crush nature, or to guide it?

3. Christ's mission was to show the Father; Buddha said, there was no Father. Which is truest?

4. Christ proclaims immortality; Buddha a state not far removed from extinction. To which view have the wisest and greatest men cleaved?

5. Christ wished to establish a "kingdom" with citizens, implying an active worldly existence; Buddha established mendicancy as a religious profession, and recommended meditation without passion, thereby encouraging (as a matter of fact) idleness and sloth. Which was best?

6. The spirit of Christianity is still active; that of Buddhism has lapsed into formalism. Why is this?

7. Does "S." think that the civilised nations of Europe would have accepted Buddhism as they have accepted Christianity?

8. In the present vast strides of democracy, and in the certainty that in a future not so far removed, the "lower classes" will be the ruling classes, which is likely to prove the best master, Buddha or Christ? In the best and noblest sense of the word is not Christ the only perfect "demagogue," and wise, clear-headed, and far-sighted, as well as good?

9. If our religion is better, more enduring, strong in its hold on the best races, superior to corruptions near its heart, so as to spring again and again from its ashes with new spiritual life and vigour, may we not accept that as a priori evidence that the character of its founder was (probably) more exalted than that of the founder of the weaker religion?

10. Is there not a greater destiny in future for Christianity than for Buddhism? Will not Moses's rod swallow up the rods of the magicians?

11. Is not the character of Christ unique? Buddha is a Lord. Is not Christ Lord of Lords?

H. C.

"ADVANCED THINKING."

BY WILLIAM BINNS.

Thinking proceeds from personal experience or personal belief in what we have been taught, to an understanding of the meaning of our experience and belief, and the principles implied. Then, it spreads over a wider area, and discovers general or universal principles, under which all personal cases and temporary generalisations are included. "Advanced Thinking" is that thinking which has made its way to universal principles, and then applies them consistently as rules of judgment for everything which occurs, or which is said to have occurred in former times. Or we may say that we start with a tendency to these universal principles, which are implanted in the constitution and nature of our minds, and that experience gradually makes clear what has always been present as a law of thought, although not always present in consciousness. On this view, advanced thinking is the same as before, practically. Whether the general principle be worked up to by degrees, and then termed a law by us, on our own authority, so to speak, or the germ of it is in us to begin with, and ripens with our ripening experience, advanced thinking, as I mean it, implies taking the utmost possible care in examination before we admit the principle, and, when we have admitted it, implies an intellectual and, I may say, a moral fidelity to it afterwards. I must make one further addition to my definition. What we call a general or universal principle may in time turn out to be an open door of thought by which we go out into a still wider world. And if we are to be true thinkers, such as God desires, we must not bolt and lock the door so as to shut ourselves up, but we must let it swing to and fro. Meanwhile, we make our home inside. If, however, we see, or think we see, anything better outside, we go and study it. If we see good cause to reject it, we come back to where we were. If, on the other hand, we see good cause to accept it, we take the old door off the hinges and let the freer air blow through the old house, and forthwith we proceed to build afresh as we best can. We have no abiding city here. The New Jerusalem is always before us.

Nightly we pitch our moving tents
A day's march nearer home.

Or, as Longfellow says:—

And so the shadows fall apart,
And so the west winds play,
And all the windows of our heart
We open to the day.

This is what I mean by advanced thinking, taken in a broad sense. There is much talk about advanced thinking in these days, but I do not think there is much of the reality of it after all. A large number of people decline to have anything to do with it in any way. If you talk to them of it in relation to politics, they fall back on the Constitution as it is, take Queen, Lords, Commons, and laws all as they are, and cry out that meddling with fundamentals is only muddling. If you talk to them of religion, they quote the Bible and the Prayer-book. The Hebrews stated the truth of the matter in the Old and New Testament, and the divines of the Stuart age clearly interpreted it; so that with what was done then and by the Westminster Assembly we are as rich as we can be and need not play the fool by seeking new truths, which are more beyond our reach than are needles in haystacks. We may find the needles by the prick of our fingers, but the new truths are not there to be found. Here, of course, there is no thinking worth the name. There is only credulity. In the political realm, these people, if they had been born in Russia, would have worshipped the Czar. In the religious realm, if they had been born in Siam, they would have worshipped Buddha. To have invited them to constitutional monarchy and to Christianity would have been looked on as the same thing as recommending them to become revolutionists and infidels. At the same time, I willingly call a man an advanced thinker who accepts these conclusions after due inquiry. I count the late Lord Beaconsfield an advanced thinker, and also the late Dean Mansel. They examined all sides, and they strained their eyes into the far distance, and when they finally settled where they did—though to my mind they settled wrong—at least they settled with a distinct understanding of their whereabouts. It is not the conclusion to which we come that makes us out as advanced thinkers: it is the road by which we come to it, and the quantity and quality of the mental activity that we have brought into play.

I often hear political talk of the sort which is said to characterise advanced thinking of the Liberal type. People say—abolish the House of Lords, disestablish the Church of England, make arrangements for constituting the State the common landlord, inform the members of the Royal family that none of them must expect to possess the privileges possessed by her present Majesty; and so on. Very good. Personally, I have not the slightest objection. But I am sure there is quite as much blind credulity on the part of many of the Radicals who talk this kind of talk as there is on the part of many of the Conservatives who talk the opposite. They have not thought their conclusions out, or even tried to think them out. They have no reasoned principles on which to rest. If they are right, it is more an accident than a merit. They have repeated a parrot cry. Now, Mr. John Stuart Mill was a genuine advanced thinker in politics. So is Mr. Henry George, as is shown past all doubt by his remarkable book on Progress and Poverty. If we look at current religion, we find that superstition and advanced thinking make their appearance in pretty nearly equal proportions alike in the orthodox and heterodox camps. Say you put the Bible in the same class as the other national collections of religious literature, and you profess to criticise it in the same independent fashion. You put miracles outside the pale of belief; you are not convinced of the personality of God or of the immortality of man; or, perhaps, you roundly deny them both. Do you call that in itself advanced thinking? Very often it is no such thing. No strenuous thought has gone to the making of your faith or your no faith. You are, possibly enough, only credulous and superstitious in your heresy as other people are credulous and superstitious in their orthodoxy. In some cases you have lost your way in a fog or stuck fast in a bog, and because you see nothing and cannot move you pretend that all men are as blind as you are, and that progress has come to an end. In other cases your so-called advanced thinking is on a par in its denials with the belief of the young candidate for holy orders who, when he was asked if he was prepared to accept the Thirty-nine Articles, answered "Yes, forty if you like." Voltaire and David Hume were advanced thinkers of the sterling kind. They thoroughly knew what they were doing. And so, too, were Bishop Butler and Dr. Chalmers. They also thoroughly knew what they were doing. The conclusions of both couples could not be right. The truth might be midway between.

But, again, advanced thinking is not proved by the mere conclusion; it is proved by the quantity and quality of the mental activity which is exercised in reaching the conclusion. However, the intellectual aspect of this question is only one aspect. Thought would be a poor thing if it led to nothing beyond thought. Moral action, life in harmony with thought, emotional fervour and energy generated by the contemplation of the conclusions at which you have arrived, are the only outcome that can satisfy all your manifold being, and serve you as a pilot star to steer by in the endless voyage on which you are embarked. What you think, that also say. What you are within, that also appear without. "Never act a part," was a favourite maxim of saintly Marcus Aurelius. "Do not be a sham," was the oft-repeated precept of Carlyle. "My dear sir, clear your mind of cant," was the excellent advice of stout old Dr. Johnson. Alas! good books are soon swept away into the whirlpool of oblivion by the stormy currents of modern literature. I should like to rescue from it for every man's reading John Morley's book on Compromise. This compromising age needs such a stimulus to help to make it honest. I do not agree with all John Morley's own conclusions. But that is of small importance. Get as near to your ideal as you can is the burden of his prophecy, and never stay on a lower step of the ladder if you can possibly mount to a higher step. And it is the burden of my prophecy.

And now to end: I mean by credulity and superstition the acceptance of any doctrines blindly, even if they be true doctrines. I mean by advanced thinking the bottoming of our beliefs and the searching out and consistent application of universal or general principles. Advanced action is the crown of all, and I mean by it, saying and doing openly and bravely, in the best style we can, what we think and believe. In thought, speech, and action altogether, I mean joyful allegiance to the true and divine light which enlightens every man coming into the world, and which shines all the brighter in proportion as we are faithful and true.

THE TRAGEDY OF JOB'S LIFE.

On Saturday afternoon the Dean of Westminster delivered, in the Abbey, the second of the series of five lectures on the Book of Job, which he has announced for consecutive Saturday afternoons, and the first of which was sketched in these columns last week. The lecture began at a few minutes before four o'clock, immediately after the conclusion of the usual service, and it lasted just half-an-hour. The congregation was a large one, and the discourse, which was strikingly concise and felicitous in expression, and was delivered with great clearness and, if we may say so, quiet emphasis, was listened to with deep attention.

The Dean began by stating that he still had to deal with what might be called the Prologue of the dramatic and tragic poem of which Job was the subject. The Prologue, however, was an integral and essential part of the Book, and it gave colour, emphasis, and significance to all that followed. The opening words of the first chapter supplied the key to a great deal which would afterwards come under consideration. It was not needful to go into the question of the precise geographical position of the "Land of Uz," in which Job lived, but it was important to note that it was far beyond the confines of the Holy Land. While the Book of Ecclesiastes, some of the Psalms, and some other portions of Scripture had little or no local Jewish colouring, of this book it might be said that it was distinctly and definitely something other than Jewish; it was, indeed, the only book of the Old Testament which distinctly anticipated the words of St. Peter: "God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth Him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with Him." The history contained in this book, so far as it was a history, was of a Gentile Patriarch. The statement that Job was "perfect," must be taken as meaning whole-hearted or sincere, rather than as technically and theologically entirely free from sin; it was emphasised by the addition that he was "one that feared God and eschewed evil." The next thing noted was his wealth, and his wealth was of a kind corresponding to the age in which he lived—a transitional period, marked by some traces of nomadic customs and by some indications of a more advanced social condition, and even of city life. He was rich in sons and daughters, in flocks and herds, and also in slaves. With regard to the slaves, the Dean observed that Job, in language quoted as his utterance, spoke of his bondsmen as no Roman or modern slave owner would ever have spoken of them—as one, indeed, who recognised human brotherhood, and who understood what it was to "honour all men." The mention of the festivities of Job's children while indicating his affluence and prosperity, indicated also his blamelessness, may more, his active affection and piety. Probably he sent for his children to join him in the act of purification and worship which is described, an act which showed how completely he was outside the Levitical law, and presented him to us as a Gentile and a layman engaged in devotional rites and exercises.

Now, the Dean observed, the scene changed and we were carried upward, as it were, in a vision, to where Jehovah is represented as holding His Court, like an Oriental Sovereign. The dramatic character of the conversation between Jehovah and Satan was set forth, but the visionary nature of the scene having been indicated by the single expression already quoted, nothing further was said in the way of theorising or explanation upon the matter. Satan's suggestion that there was no such thing as disinterested goodness—"Doth Job serve God for nought?"—was a question, we were reminded, that was still often raised. Happy were they who knew, from their own hearts and from their observation of those whom they knew through and through, that it was possible for men to care for goodness, righteousness, purity, for its own sake! Satan, however, pursued the argument, again uttering a typical sneer—in effect—"How easy is it for men to be good on an abundant income!" In response to this objection, power was given to Satan to bring calamities upon Job. The scene is once more on earth; it is a festival day with the children of the happy Job; and then came the successive messengers of evil tidings. The Dean, by a few well chosen touches, set forth the narrative in a realistic way, and then pointed out how Job bore the test; his integrity was vindicated, and the Evil One was foiled.

With equal terseness and graphic force the second scene of the tragedy was presented, when Job, smitten with leprosy, covered in ashes, loathsome to himself and to others, and when there was even "yet another turn of the rack," his wife saying, "Curse God and die!"—A Roman hero would have obeyed the suggestion and committed suicide, but "in all this Job sinned not." Acquiescence in the Divine will was a striking feature in Eastern religions; it represented the best side of Mahomedanism. It was, in fact, the essence of all religion, and it was essentially the Christian spirit to be anxious that God's will should be done, to be ready to leave all in God's hand, not only because He is great and powerful, but in the full confidence that He is wise and good. Job was the type of resignation, and every pious soul must feel that if God be above us and another life beyond us, it was better to feel as Job felt, when suffering on his dunghill, than to be prosperous and yet in antagonism to God. In real life we still often had instances of trouble on trouble, and his sufferings are but a type of the tragedies that are yet possible in this tangled world. One more touch—the account of the arrival of Job's three friends—gave the transition to all that followed. When they came they were overcome by the misery and horror of the spectacle, and they sat silent for seven days and seven nights. If the imagery was eastern, the sentiment—that, sometimes, sympathy was best expressed by silence—was of world-wide application and value. . . . Now the picture was complete; step by step the distance between Job's deserts and his lot in life had widened from the beginning of the narrative. He knew to the full "the sad, sweet uses of adversity," but while the shadows grew thicker and blacker he still maintained his piety, his love of God. What a problem would such a history present to the pious Hebrew, who had always learned that it was the good who were rewarded in this present life and the wicked who were like the chaff which the wind driveth away. The problem presented by Job's history was not an easy one even to us.—Christian World.

THE great edition of Keats, upon which Mr. Buxton Forman has been engaged for so many years, is now at last passing through the press.

REVISION OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.—The company appointed for the revision of the Authorised Version of the Old Testament finished their seventy-eighth session yesterday week at the Jerusalem Chamber.

DROYLSDEN.—On Saturday afternoon last a new iron church was formally opened in Ashton Hill-lane, Droylsden, near Manchester. The devotional service was conducted by the Rev. C. T. Poynting, B.A., and a most appropriate sermon was delivered by the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, from Hebrews x. 23, 24, 25. The chapel was most tastefully decorated with plants and flowers, and in the course of the service anthems were sung by the members of the Brookfield Church choir, Gorton, conducted by Mr. C. H. Wrigley. In the evening a public meeting was held in the Educational Institute, over which Mr. William Hadden presided, supported by a considerable number of the ministers and laymen of the district. The meeting was addressed by the Chairman, Mr. Edgar Winsor, Mr. Bibby, of the Home Missionary Board, Revs. C. T. Poynting, S. A. Steinthal, H. E. Dowson, J. C. Slater, and others.

Our Contemporaries.

JEWISH CHARITY.

The Jewish Chronicle, reminding us that Jewish charity is little less than proverbial, writes:—

As is but natural, charity in material affairs has developed in Jews many little touches of thoughtfulness which mark a higher stage of charity. Many Talmudic and Rabbinical adages lay stress on the guilt of raising a blush on a neighbour's cheek in the presence of others, though the duty of edification is equally insisted on. A familiar example is that the penultimate passage in the grace after meals is said silently. It is feared that the reference to "the seed of the righteous begging bread" (Psalms xxvii. 35) might hurt the feelings of some one present. The Kiddush on Friday nights recalls the times when the poor and strangers had a Sabbath meal in the vestibule of the Synagogue. Even at the present day the bread and egg presented to mourners after a funeral recalls the thoughtfulness of neighbours in providing the mourners with the meal they would be too troubled to prepare—the egg chosen as a symbol of immortality. On the other hand, there are few indications of the higher charity with regard to variance of opinion or custom. Up to the present day scarcely any difference was drawn between non-observance and apostasy, and the bitter feeling connected with the Reform movement may recall that this higher charity was wanting even within the present generation.

Perhaps the most conspicuous merit of Jewish charity is that it is not solely confined to Jewish recipients. The charity lists of the Times contain the names of Jews whenever the object is unsectarian and worthy. The Rothschilds, Montefiores, Goldsmids, and Mocatts of our race are appealed to with confidence for extra-communal charity as well as for the sake of Jews. The account we gave recently of the munificent benefactions of Herr Poliakov is sufficient to show that this trait is not confined to English Jews. His charitable gifts for general purposes are officially estimated to be over a quarter of a million sterling. In fact, just as Jewish charity on the one side has developed a class of Schnorrers whose sole function is to receive, so on the other side it has created the distinctively Jewish philanthropist who regards himself as the "steward of his own fortune," and lives but to distribute his wealth among his fellow men. This voluntary socialism is the only true view of wealth, and the only theory which would solve the difficulties hopelessly attacked by the robber-socialists. And many who do not rise to this height of self-abnegation keep up the old Biblical law of the tithe and keep a strict "charity account," which is credited with a tenth of their income.

THE OXFORD SCHOOL.

The Literary World remarks upon the contrast between the young Oxford of Mozley's "Reminiscences" with the young Oxford of our day:—

Fifty years ago there were dreams in Oxford of a theological revival of authority. Ecclesiasticism struck its roots downward, and soon a shoot of æstheticism grew upward, but soon—only too soon—it was seen that the root was dead and the flower withered. Ritualism, as it has been called, like a bramble rose, may flourish in country parsonages here and there. But in Oxford, strange as it may seem, it has not found the kindly soil which it expected. The critical spirit of the age has been too much for it, and men at Oxford, as elsewhere, in proportion as they are educated, have refused to take blindfold their religion on antiquarian grounds. But, instead of this Anglican revival, so much desired by some, so dreaded by others, there has sprung up at Oxford a critical school, which, in philosophy as in history, has pushed its researches fearlessly on in the teeth of dogmatic teaching. We have only to name two or three heads of houses to point to the leading spirits of the Oxford of our day. At Christ Church, Dean Liddell, and at Balliol, Dr. Jowett, Mr. Patteson at Lincoln, and Dr. Percival at Trinity, not to name others equally. The neologians, as they are called by a curious barbarism, have beaten the theologians on their own ground, and Oxford, as we have described it, which began with a Patristic revival a half century ago, has produced a critical school in philosophy and history which even Germany must regard with respect, and in some cases even learn a lesson from.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary
Newspaper, and Record of Reverent
Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price
of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following
terms, post free:—

Yearly (52 weeks)	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid)	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks)	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid)	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks)	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid)	2s. 6d.

ADVERTISEMENT SCALE.

Up to and inclusive of first five lines.	2s. 6d.
Each line afterwards	0s. 4d.
For Six consecutive insertions, 25 per cent. less.
For Thirteen	50

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to MR.
WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH
AND SON.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1882.

We regret to observe that the usual order has been made for winding up "The Nineteenth Century Printing Company," which was formed by Miss Emily Faithful, some years ago, with the object of furnishing employment for women.
And so we suppose comes to an end an experiment which has been watched with great interest, and at one time seemed full of promise.

ON Sunday "a grand military thanksgiving service," for the recent victories in Egypt, was held in the Cathedral at Canterbury. How incongruous it sounds! Can we possibly imagine him who was styled "the Son of Man" taking any part in such a thanksgiving service for victory over poor deluded people who believed that they were fighting for national independence? The service was of course of a special character, and as it would not have been easy to find suitable words in the Gospels, the anthem was taken from the savage history of the semibarbarous people of Israel, the subject being "The Lord is a Man of War," and the accompanying choruses from Handel's "Israel in Egypt." So let it be clearly understood that the vindictive Hebrew Jehovah, "the man of war," is the God of our modern Jingoos and the national clergy; and not the Beatitudes, but the war songs of the most savage period of Jewish history are the Bible of modern Christendom. How much has Bibliolatry to answer for?

MISS FRANCES POWER COBBE, in a preface to the seventh American edition of "The Duties of Women," writes:—"Few events in my long and happy life have given me deeper pleasure than to find that my words of sympathy and exhortation to my sister-women have been not only warmly welcomed by them in my own country, and also in France and Italy in translations, but still more that they should, as I am told, have reached the hearts of those noble and thoughtful women of America, toward whom I have long felt drawn by a thousand cords of fellow-feeling, admiration and friendship. The countrywomen of Harriet Beecher Stowe, of Louisa Lee Schuyler, of Mary Livermore, of Charlotte Cushman, of

Harriet Hosmer, of Julia Ward Howe, of Maria Mitchell, of Sarah Wister, and of other honoured American women whose hands I have never had the joy to press, but whose names have long sounded in my ears across the Atlantic—the countrywomen of these have been of necessity dear to me, even before their generous welcome met my address to them on our common duties. May they accept now my grateful thanks; and may God help us all—the women of the Old World and of the New—to prove ourselves worthy of the noble destiny which He is opening out before us in the order of His Providence."

ON the 16th of August last Dr. Julius Rupp, minister of the Free Congregation at Königs-burg, celebrated his Doctor-Jubilee. For twenty years he has devoted his whole activity solely to religious literature and his ministerial duties.
On account of his national sermons he was persecuted by the Clerical Court, and in 1845 deprived of his benefice for having protested against the anathema of the Athanasian Creed.
The largest congregation of his native town, Königsburg, elected him for two succeeding years as their pastor, but neither the King nor the Clerical Court sanctioned the election.
Meanwhile a body of rational-thinking men and women had formed a society and appointed him their minister, which place he still holds.

A CORRESPONDENT forwards the following acrostic on Tel-el-Kebir:—

T reading a silent march, as we drew nigh,
E re day had dawned we saw their fortress high,
L ined with fierce troops that numbered three to one.
E arthworks and trenches guard them. On we run,
L eap to the conflict; bullets fly around.
K ept as by magic scarce we feel a wound,
E nter their trenches, scale each strong defence,
B eat down their arms and drive each foe man thence.
I n Tel-el-Kebir, victors in the fight,
R ing out a cheer for England and the right.

THE author of "Natural Religion," which we lately reviewed in a series of articles, has published a second edition, with a new preface, for an account of which we are chiefly indebted to the Christian World. The author corrects some misapprehensions which the first edition has occasioned, and endeavours more distinctly to define his attitude towards Christianity and current questions in relation thereto. He maintains that readers of "Natural Religion" have not been sufficiently mindful of the fact that "this book deals with a strictly limited question." It was his purpose "not to try the question between religion and science, but simply to measure how much ground is common to both," and he "thought it essential to take the scientific view frankly at its worst." The author proceeds to observe: "I therefore make no attempt to show that the negative conclusions, so often drawn from modern scientific discoveries, are not warranted, but admitting freely, for argu-ment's sake, all these conclusions, I argue that the total effect of them is not to destroy theology, or religion, or even Christianity, but in some respects to revive and purify all three. For I maintain that the essential nature of religion is popularly misconceived, and that an accident of it—viz., supernaturalism, is mistaken for its essence." Such an argument as that which he has pursued must, the author admits, "leave on the mind of the supernaturalist a somewhat painful impression, for naturally he wants to see the negations of science refuted rather than to meet with an estimate of the precise amount of destruction caused by them. He has "no great respect for the traditional science of theology, such as it has come down to us from unscientific times, artificially protected against revision."
He regards certain theological opinions, "such as the legal or forensic view of the Divine Government," and "that exaggeration of super-naturalism which crushes the present life under the weight of an overwhelming future," as "not merely temporarily out of fashion, but as really obsolete;" and of course he has a profound regard for science and scientific methods; but he points out that "in general, the negative is regarded in this book no otherwise than as" it is regarded "by most of those to whom the book is principally addressed, viz., as a fashionable view difficult for the moment to resist, because it seems favoured by great authorities, a view therefore concerning which, however unwillingly, we cannot help asking ourselves the question,

"What if it should turn out to be true?"
Personally the author avows that he is by no means satisfied that "the new views of the universe" are so conclusive as their extreme supporters imagine; and he is amazed that any one should have supposed that his book was intended to be "adverse in its effect to Christianity," or should question that his ideas are essentially Christian. He regards himself as being still in a very definite sense Christian, and remarks: "What I mean (by claiming to be Christian) I can hardly hope to explain to those who, after reading this book, still require an explanation. But I may say in one word that my ideas are Biblical, that they are drawn from the Bible at first hand, and that what fascinates me in the Bible is not a passage here and there, not something which only a scholar or antiquarian can detect in it, but the Bible, as a whole, its great plan and unity, and principally, the grand poetic anticipation I find in it of modern views concerning history."

The Christian World adds the comment:—
"This simplification of Christianity, by setting aside the supernatural, may afford to some minds a certain degree of relief; but whether what is left when the supernatural is gone is Christianity still, and whether this process of simplifying by bowing the supernatural out of court does not ultimately lead to yet greater difficulties are questions which will occur to many minds."

WE are glad to hear that the Brahmo Somaj is making converts among persons of rank and influence. A recent Bombay paper writes:—"Shahaji Maharaj, adopted son of Protap Singh, the late Rajah of Sattara, who has been staying at Kurrachi, but is now in Puna, in the course of his travels through the south, is a follower of the Theistic faith, and has delivered two discourses in the local Praathana Samaj on Brahmoism. It was given out the other day by a correspondent of a contemporary that Shahaji Maharajah had lectured against Brahmoism; but this was a mistake, as he is a staunch follower of the Brahmic faith."

THE deaths are announced of Lady Stratford de Redcliffe; Lord Berwick, aged 80; Lady Laura Meyrick; Mr. Thurlow Weed, a well-known New York politician; Mr. Beaumont, of Newcastle, a distinguished naturalist; James Lillywhite, a famous cricketer; Sir William Henry Walton, formerly Queen's Remembrancer; Rev. Joseph Walker Pease, formerly M.P. for Hull; Mr. John Bramwell, the Recorder of Durham; the Dowager Lady Grey-Egerton; and Baron Manteuffel, the Prussian statesman.

THE Jewish Chronicle reminds us of an heroic but little known age of the later Biblical history of the Jews when it says:—"Once more the cycle of the months brings round the anniversary of the glorious struggle for independence by the Maccabees. Though seemingly purely national, the Feast of Hanucah had universal consequences which renders it the record of a crisis in the world's history. As Lieutenant Conder showed in his admirable little book on "Judas Mac-cabæus," but for the heroism of the Maccabees Christianity would have not come into the world, or certainly not in the form in which it ultimately did. Most Jews are now of the opinion of Maimonides that Christianity has done good work by spreading the ethical principles of Judaism and the sacred books of Jews among the nations. We can, therefore, even regard it as one of the merits of Hanucah that it records the struggles which enabled Christianity to do Jewish work. But there are memories far more nearly connected with the Feast that should keep alive the enthusiasm of national feeling among Jews. The patriotic struggles of Simon Maccabæus and his heroic sons form one of the most brilliant pages in Jewish history."

It seems likely that the final result of the Miles Plating case will be the simple substitution of Mr. Cowgill for Mr. Green as rector of the parish, the illegal ritual, in all probability, going on as before without interference. Nothing could more effectually show the futility of the whole proceeding. It may be said that Mr. Green has been deprived, that other ritual offenders have been deprived also, and that deprivation following thus upon disobedience, however slowly, will ultimately effect its purpose. But, on the other hand, it is evident that the Bishops, who know that the Ritualists are the growing party in the Church, are determined to allow no more of these ritual prosecutions, and that if more of them did take place, and were followed by deprivation, the exasperation produced would be such that the Establishment itself would go down in the general commotion. It is well known that the Royal Commission on Ecclesiastical Courts is anxiously endeavouring to find some way out of this perplexing deadlock—some mode of satisfying the Ritualists, and giving them a recognised place in the Establishment. The one thing obvious, and beyond all dispute, is, that the legislative contrivance to “put down Ritualism” has utterly failed of its object, and has brought both the Legislature and the Courts of Law into something like contempt.

Reviews.

Christ: a Series of Sermons. By the late Rev. Thomas Fairfoot Bird; with Memorial Sketch by the Rev. W. H. Fitchett. George Robertson, Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide.

We reviewed in these columns quite recently a work by A. J. Gordon, D.D., an American divine, “In Christ; or, the Believer’s Union with his Lord.” We have now to ask the attention of our readers to an Australian work on the same great subject. Both works are inspired by an exalted spirit of reverence for Christ, but the one now before us dwells at much greater length on the humanity of Jesus. It is not so ecclesiastical in tone as the other, and, though orthodox, its orthodoxy is not so objectionable. It is blended with much healthy, natural, and rational thought. The brief memoir which introduces the discourses is an interesting sketch. We learn from it that Mr. Bird belonged to that large number of promising lives that never fulfil their promise. They do not live long enough to do so, but are cut off in the midst of their days, with their high gifts only partially developed, and the great work they were capable of little more than begun. Mr. Bird was of English birth, but when he was a lad of nine years of age the family came to Victoria, so that in mental and spiritual character he was of Australian growth and shaping. The conditions amid which his early years were passed were singularly unfavourable to intellectual culture. He was employed on an Australian farm.

“From his very boyhood the poet awoke in him. Amid the unpoetical drudgery of the farm, while holding the plough handles, or casting the seed, or wielding the sickle, his mind would be weaving the rainbow-coloured web of fancy; and he would come home at night with richer harvests than his sickle had reaped—the ‘harvest of a quiet eye’ gathered from sky and earth, from the waxing and waning splendours of morning and evening, from the hush of noon-tide heat, from the blue of far-off hills, from the floating clouds that hung above his head in the intense azure of summer skies, and would embody them in verses of every conceivable metre. Mr. Bird’s education, then, was not that of the college and the university, but the wider one, in a sense, the nobler one, of self culture, of contact with men and nature, and of large general reading. No doubt the lack of formal and exact mental training was a disadvantage, and one which to the very last he sorely felt. But energy of will and native force of intellect largely supplied that lack. He was consumed by a passion for reading; every book which fell in his way was devoured; and he had a grasp and unrelaxing tenacity of memory which made what was once read an indelible possession; and he had a rare and almost unique power. By some kind of intellectual magic, as though he had some extra sense not given to ordinary men, he seemed to reach the results of harmony without the toil of its processes. As a flower, from earth, and air, and light, and dew, and rain, drinks in life without conscious effort, at every pore, so from men, and nature, and books, with as little of apparent toil, he seemed to take all they could give him. And the result was that he brought to the work of his life an intellect lofty by original cast, hardened by self discipline, and richly stored with the fruits of studious powers.”

Mr. Bird’s parents were pious Methodists. In the Methodist Church the door of the pulpit stands wide open to every young man of zeal and intelligence. Accordingly, in 1864, having been for some time employed as a local preacher, he was nominated by the quarterly meeting of his circuit as a candidate for the regular ministry, and, after passing through all the usual examinations, &c., formally began his ministerial life in April, 1865. He was stationed successively at several places, but they were not important or populous charges, and gave Mr. Bird no scope for the intellectual gifts and great preaching powers he possessed. How was it that this gifted man was shunted to an obscure siding instead of being brought forward on the main line of prominence and usefulness? His biographer has some interesting remarks on this point which are worth quoting:—

“It has been suggested that distrust of Mr. Bird’s orthodoxy caused him to be kept thus in the background. But it was not so. Mr. Bird, no doubt, shaped for his faith a literary vehicle intensely fresh and original. And there are men in all Churches who are incapable of recognising their own creed when stripped of the antique verbal livery in which their grandfathers clothed it. They require that religious subjects shall be discussed in a musty dialect, intelligible to the initiated only, and they resent any departure from what they are fond of calling the ‘form of sound words.’ Mr. Bird’s fresh and unconventional habits of speech may have disturbed men of this class; but not the faintest air of suspicion ever breathed on the integrity of his faith, or the loyalty with which he preached the doctrines of the Church in whose ministry he stood. How came it to pass, then, that having a preacher of Mr. Bird’s rare gifts and culture, a man specially qualified to speak to crowds, the Methodist Church found no better use for him than to put him through a succession of its smallest and roughest circuits, and condemned him to minister to a series of congregations having an average of not more than fifty adults? It can only be written down as a blunder. The reputation Methodism has of making the most of its men, and putting each one to his special task, is ‘not always justified by facts. The Methodist Church, moreover, judges her workmen, perhaps too rigidly, by the test of tangible and countable success. And it must in honesty be admitted that, tried by this standard, Mr. Bird did not in any notable degree succeed. He preached nobly, he took captive by the charm of his character and ability the best minds in each circle; but he left the circuits no larger or stronger than he found them. The qualities which such spheres of labour needed—the petty prudences, the minute financial economies, the deference to the crochets of individual men, the patience with the narrow gossip-filled circles of village life—were not his gifts. A smaller man would have done the work better, or a greater one; for the power of doing small things greatly is as true a note of the highest style of greatness as the capacity for great achievements.”

Seeing no prospect of advancement in the Methodist Church he determined to seek an entrance into the Congregational Ministry, hoping thereby to obtain a pulpit which would give him a wider and more prominent sphere of usefulness. Accordingly, in January, 1873, he became the pastor of the Oxford-street Congregational Church, Melbourne. His ministry was brief, but it was eminently happy. His people gave him exactly what a true preacher most values—the largest liberty of teaching and action, and the most unquestioning trust. The bond that united pastor and church never became a yoke. There was perfect mutual confidence and an affection that knew no cloud till the shadow of grief fell on it, and pastor and church were parted by the divorce of death. But here there was no rush of crowds to hear him, and no great addition to the membership of the Church. He gathered round him a circle of bearers, many of whom ordinary preaching had ceased to hold, but who found in Mr. Bird’s teaching a statement of Christian truth which, to them, satisfied the intellect while it stimulated the conscience.

Towards the end of 1875 Mr. Bird’s strength began to give way. Unsparring toil of brain and body (besides preaching he was a constant contributor to the leading Melbourne journals) was doing its sure work, and the delicate machinery of life commenced to fail. The new year dawned sadly enough, with the shadows of sickness upon it; and thenceforward the story is but one mournful record of pain and failing life, broken by fitful rallies, till the end came on the morning of April 22, 1876, one of the fairest days of the opening year.

The last act of Mr. Bird’s ministry was to prepare and preach a series of sermons under the title, “What think ye of Christ?” He was specially requested by his congregation to re-deliver them and prepare them for publication. They were but partially re-delivered, when death stilled the eloquent tongue for ever; and the task of preparing them for the press had to be undertaken by other hands. The aim of these sermons is, in Mr. Bird’s own words, “to lay bare the human springs of the power that was divine in Christ, that we may find in him the ideal Son of Man, no less than the Son of God.”

Having given so much space to Mr. Fitchett’s interesting memorial sketch we have little room left for considering the sermons. They are eleven in number, and deal with the following subjects:—Current Opinions about Christ; the Early Days of Christ; the Temptation; Christ the Friend; Christ the Teacher; Christ the Healer; Christ the Sin-killer; the Cross of Christ; the Resurrection; the After Life; the Christ of To-day. These several aspects of his great subject Mr. Bird presents in a fresh and striking manner, and discourses on them in a style very different from that of the ordinary pulpit. There is a heartiness, a vigour, an outspokenness, and originality about these sermons which must have made them—delivered, as we understand they were, with force and animation—very attractive to those who could appreciate them. We are not surprised that they were few, nor are we surprised that the Methodist Church kept in obscurity a preacher much of whose preaching would sound like heresy to Methodist ears. We can scarcely agree with Mr. Fitchett that Mr. Bird’s free, bold, unconventional, rational style of preaching had nothing to do with his being relegated to small congregations in out-of-the-way places. In his first sermon he introduces his general subject in these terms:—

“I have no desire in these sermons to take you into the graveyards of the vanished centuries, and ask you to look on in awe while I unearth a corpse. Our home is among the throbbing forces sounding spaces of to-day; our sphere is life, and our God is the God of the living. The opinions which surged through the brain-cells and proud voice in the speech of the man who sat, and walked, and ate with the man Jesus, are of little or no moment to us. To discuss them to-day would be as absurd as to lecture on the Ptolemaic system, or to preach a crusade against witches. They have had their day, like mummies, and have no title to affront our pulses with their rigid veins and glassy stare. I propose to let death rest in his coffin of stone or dust, disliking the body-snatchers of theology as heartily as the riflers of graves, and believing that the passion for the antique in religion is a mania that should be treated to the strait-jacket of common sense. The ever-living Christ who brought and who brings life and immortality to light is the possession of every age. Life itself is not complete without him. He is a part of the race he wins and saves by his love. But the notions that lived and spoke and died while he walked from the Jordan to the Cross belong not to us, and we shall not stir them from their sepulchres.”

As illustrations of “Current Opinions about Christ” Mr. Bird in a few sentences gives the characteristic leading thought of Ward Beecher, Canon Liddon, Dr. Martineau, the Author of “Ecce Homo,” Renan, John Stuart Mill, Strauss, and Canon Farrar. His brief criticism of each is marked by fairness and good sense. We give one brief specimen:—

“James Martineau, whose influence on the religious thought of the day is very great, and whose moral tenderness and mental strength are equally marked, speaks of Christ as ‘the Representative and the Revealer of the human and the divine mind,’ as ‘the emblem of the Deity,’ ‘the ideal and picture of the mind of man.’ This type of thinking about the Christ is similar to that of Beecher's, and his honour and love to Jesus as the Master and Example are beyond question; but he fails in worship, and loves a Christ without a crown. The Divine in us has reached its perfect flower in Him—that is all. To Martineau Jesus is divine in the sense in which our sacrificial sorrows, or our noblest purposes are divine; but He is not what the Christian worship means by God."

With another short extract from the sermon on the Temptation we must close this review:—

"We need hardly stay to inquire whether it was the devil in person, appearing in his true character, or the devil in essence, diffusing a moral poison through the currents of emotion and thought, that met Jesus among the ledges and caverns of the Quarantania. The latter is the devil that we meet, and we have no proof that the Great Example whose steps we are to follow met any other. In my opinion, the question is not of the slightest interest to any sane Christian. Unless, indeed, there be an attempt to move Christ away from us and our sphere, by pitting him against an antagonist that no moral human fighter ever saw. In which case it may be urged, that until we are told on good authority that Christ was not only tempted in all points like as we are, but was tempted in some points as we are not, we shall rest in the view that he fought the same devil that we have to fight, and fought him with the same weapons, and in the same way. . . . Suggestion, impulse, bias, memory, hope, he creates or plays on; and the battle rages in us as it raged in Christ, when he stood in that desert as the Son of Man, with provisions of his sacrifice and glory, and gathering strength as He fought down hint after hint of dishonour, thought after thought of wrong."

C. F. B.

England and Egypt. An Address given at South-place Institute, Finsbury, on Tuesday, October 24, 1882. By B. Fossett Lock. London. 1882.

However weary our readers may be of the painful subject referred to in the title of Mr. Lock's pamphlet we should very strongly recommend them to give the pamphlet itself a careful reading. They will not find much that is new either in matter or statement with regard to Egyptian affairs, but they will find instead a highly original and interesting attempt to explain philosophically the causes which have led the Liberal party to deal with those affairs in such shameless violation of its own solemn and apparently genuine protestations made under the late Administration.

The great campaign that culminated in Midlothian, raised hopes that the Liberal party had embarked on a course of national righteousness; and its leaders have secured its acquiescence in one of the most sordid and hypocritical wars that have ever disgraced their country. How are we to account for the change of moral tone?

Such is the problem which Mr. Lock attempts to solve; and his treatment of it furnishes abundant and most wholesome food for reflection. Taking the Bulgarian question on the one hand and the Egyptian question on the other, the author attempts to show that morality is as much interested and speaks as clearly in the latter case as in the former, but that in the Bulgarian affairs morality enjoyed the support of a great mass of interest, prejudice, and passion, to which it then lent a kind of respectability, and even sanctity; whereas they now stand opposed to it, and have demonstrated how weak a force in British international politics morality, unaided, still remains.

In working out this thesis Mr. Lock attempts a rough division of the Liberal party into four main groups. His nomenclature does not seem to us very happy, nor do his divisions themselves reach even the modest standard of adequacy which is all he claims for them. Nevertheless, his analysis, defective as it is, throws a flood of light upon the devious course of Liberal politics, and deserves the most careful study.

First come the Whigs, as to whom Mr. Lock is very explicit. "I say boldly that [upon questions of international policy] they have no morality: they are men of business and nothing more. In deciding upon matters of international policy they look to two conditions only. Does it appear to be safe, and does it appear to be profitable? I do not think that history relates any occasion upon which the Whigs in power were able to resist the temptation to aggression if it appeared to be safe and if it appeared to be profitable."

Next come the "Nonconformists"—a name, as Mr. Lock uses it, indicating a habit of mind, not an ecclesiastical position or policy—"sturdy, obstinate, and narrow-minded. They will fling away money and time and energy upon some unprofitable chimera, like the conversion of the Jews or the French proletariat to the tenets of the Salvation Army . . . and will risk everything, provided they think that they are advancing the cause of truth against what they call heathenism or Rome."

Thirdly, we have what Mr. Lock (still more inappropriately) calls the "Darwinian" party. They might, perhaps, better be called the party of Industrial Philistinism. They believe in the survival of the (industrially) fittest. "Their Sermon on the Mount, their Declaration of Independence, is the address of the wolf to the lamb in the gospel according to St. Æsop."

Lastly, we have what Mr. Lock calls the "Positivist" party—meaning, apparently, all those who adopt as their rule of political life principles of justice and morality.

As to the application of these divisions to the elucidation of the cases of Bulgaria and Egypt, we will let Mr. Lock speak for himself:—

"To side with Turkey would involve an expensive war, with a doubtful issue, and with no prospect of profit in case of success; to this all the instincts of the Whigs were opposed. The Bulgarians were Christians and not Roman Catholics, set in array against the infidel Mahomedan; the religious fanaticism of the Nonconformists was white-hot with rage. In another aspect the struggle was between the progressive and vigorous Slav and the effete and stationary Turk; the Darwinians joyfully lalloed to the Slav. . . The Positivists . . supported the freedom of the Bulgarians, but would have opposed the aggression of Russia."

With regard to Egypt: "The Whigs perceived at once that the war was safe and profitable. . . . The Nonconformists saw a chance of a further slaughter of powerful Mahomedans and a further field for missionary enterprise, and, with characteristic energy, they 'went for that heathen,' Arabi. The Darwinians looked upon it as a struggle for supremacy between the impersonal Anglo-Saxon and the impersonal Arab, and went into it almost as a matter of duty." The Positivists alone protested.

As for Mr. Gladstone, he was, as he had been, a Whig, a Nonconformist, and a Darwinian (in Mr. Lock's sense of these terms, be it remembered), but was now unable to give his policy the tone of morality that had appeared to leaven its whole lump before. Though still "occasionally floundering and foundering in hopeless attempts to express his new policy in terms of human morality":—

"It is possible to express the Whig shrinking from expensive and hazardous wars of aggression in terms of a morality which shrinks from all wars of aggression; and Nonconformist sympathy with a struggling Christian nation in terms of a morality which sympathises with all nations struggling into freedom; and the Darwinian admiration for progressive races in terms of a morality which looks upon all races as actually or potentially progressive after their kind. . . . But it is not possible in like manner to translate the Whig penchant for safe and profitable aggression, nor the Nonconformist hatred for non-Christian freedom, nor the Darwinian contempt for stationary races, in terms of the same morality. . . . and the subterfuges to which Mr. Gladstone has been forced are sufficiently conclusive of this."

Much of this is fairly open to criticism, and some of it is extremely far-fetched. Moreover, Mr. Lock ignores the immense difference between the ghastly directness and concentration of the appeal that came from Bulgaria and the complication and monotony of the appeal that comes from Egypt. Everyone has his better instincts enlisted on behalf of a "picturesquely" massacred and outraged people; but when the question can be presented as a financial one it is only those who look into it, and who have generous principles as well as generous impulses who will take the right course, or be able to see that chronic outrage and something very like chronic massacre are involved in the financial statements, the laws of liquidation, the controls, and what not, that look like mere matters of banking.

We have criticised Mr. Lock freely, perhaps disproportionately; but we heartily welcome his pamphlet, and believe that it is well calculated to rouse Englishmen to a sense of the grievous apostasy of which the Liberal party has been guilty.

P. H. W.

Mind: A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy. October, 1882. Williams and Norgate.

This number of Mind is almost wholly occupied with the discussion of fundamental matters in philosophy. Three out of the four long articles which it contains deal with the question of Perception, i.e., What is the external world, and how far can we become acquainted with its real nature? It may probably be taken as an indication of the rapid decline of Hume's doctrine of Phenomenalism or Sensational Idealism (a doctrine which not long ago curiously achieved such sudden popularity in the writings of J. S. Mill and Dr. Bain) that all these three articles, differing as they do in almost every other respect, agree in emphatically advocating a realistic view of the Cosmos. If the editor of Mind be, as he is generally supposed to be, a distinguished member of the Idealistic school of thinkers, it is an additional proof of his liberal and unsectarian spirit that he thus allows free expression to views widely differing from his own. Probably he has in reserve a weighty article by himself or by some other formidable champion of Idealism; but at present Realism is decidedly in the ascendant, and the majority of English philosophical writers seem to be growing more and more persuaded that Evolution and Sensationalism are incompatible doctrines, and that, as the former has assumed a well-established and dominant position, the latter must take itself off. They feel that it will no longer do to assert, on the one hand, that successive states of consciousness constitute the sole reality both of our personal lives and of the universe in which we live, and, on the other hand, that we and all our states of consciousness are among the products of the evolution of that identical universe which, according to the foregoing doctrine, derived its existence from those very states of consciousness which it is now said to have evolved. We do not say that the Evolutionists can justify their assumptions, but it is clear that so long as the views of Mr. Spencer continue their triumphant march the philosophy which Hume initiated must needs go to the wall.

The first of the articles referred to above is entitled "Scientific Philosophy; a Theory of Human Knowledge," by Mr. Francis Ellingwood Abbot, a writer well known as one of the leaders of the Free Religionists in the United States. It is a vigorous polemic against the Kantian doctrine that the relations we ascribe to external objects are the creation of man's perceptive and cognitive faculty, rather than real and objective relations existing independently of the mind that apprehends them. Mr. Abbot contends that Kant was mistaken when he supposed that in teaching that "things must conform to cognition, and not cognition to things," he was inaugurating a new philosophical method. The revolution which Kantianism emphasised was indeed a mighty one, and Kant might well say that its influence in the sphere of speculative thought was as vast as that of the Copernican theory of the heavens in relation to cosmical science; but, argues Mr. Abbot, the standpoint of the critical philosophy had been already assumed by many thinkers before the time of Kant; but Kant only completed, organised, and formulated the veritable revolution which was initiated in the latter half of the eleventh century by Roscellinus the Nominalist—"which was condemned in his person by the Realist Council of Soissons, revived in the fourteenth century by William of Occam, and finally made triumphant in philosophy towards the end of the fifteenth century, not so much by the inherent strength of Nominalism as by the weakness of its expiring rival, Scholastic Realism." The Nominalistic doctrine, that universals, or terms denoting genera and species, correspond to nothing really existent outside of the mind, is interpreted by Mr. Abbot to mean that the supposed resemblances and differences of things have no objective reality, and therefore, all the relations we ascribe to the external world must be attributed to the action of the mind alone. We are strongly disposed to think that the Nominalists who lived before Kant would not have accepted this explanation as a fair account of what their theory either explicitly declared or logically implied. Scholastic Nominalism was a revolt against the two forms of ancient Realism, the Platonic and the Aristotelian, and with such Realism as is now asserted by philosophers like Mr. Spencer, or by scientists like Dr. Tyndall, the old-fashioned Nominalists would, we think, have had no contention. That in their antagonism with ancient Realism they sometimes used expressions and made assumptions which can be shown to lead necessarily to the Kantian doctrine, we do not doubt, but we still think that if they had clearly seen this logical implication they would have expressed themselves differently, and therefore they can hardly have intended to set forth a view of external reality fundamentally different from that which Mr. Abbot describes as the present faith of the scientific world.

The Kantian doctrine which refers all the relations between objects to the activity of the knowing mind, and also the English sensationalism which considers the universe to have no reality apart from consciousness, are foreign to mediæval speculation, and the conditions favourable to their growth were not present till Descartes had criticised the faculty of cognition, and had made the mind's knowledge of its own states the final and only indubitable test of truth and reality. As Mr. Abbot, however, attaches much importance to his view that Nominalism logically implies all the obnoxious anti-realistic features of modern philosophy, he has given his readers an introductory sketch of the progress of speculation from the time of Thales with a special reference to the appearance in philosophy of realistic or nominalistic ideas. This sketch is interesting and instructive, but by far the most important and sound portion of the article is the eloquent and, as we think, conclusive demonstration that both the Transcendentalism of Kant and the Sensationalism of Mill and Bain must, in so far as they are true to their basal principles, land their advocate in Solipsism, i.e., in the belief that he alone exists, and that the phases of his individual consciousness constitute both the objective and the subjective universe. The same reasoning which leads the Idealist to deny the existence of external power or force ought to lead him to deny the existence of other human minds, seeing that it is no more difficult to understand how the mind can generate out of itself the phenomena of the Universe which appear to succeed each other according to laws that are quite independent of our consciousness and control, than it is to understand how it can generate those particular phenomena of sight, hearing and touch, which are commonly assumed to indicate the presence of other minds. This line of argument tells, of course, far more fatally against the doctrine of J. S. Mill than it does against the doctrine of Kant, and it is on this point that our English Associationists, in defending themselves from Mr. Abbot's severe strictures, will have to concentrate all their energies. It will be useless for them to urge with the late Professor Clifford that it is absurd to deny the existence of other minds, because "though it may very well be that I am myself the only existence, it is simply ridiculous to suppose that any one else is," for to this the reply which immediately suggests itself is the Associationist assumes the existence of other minds, because he finds this assumption the simplest way of accounting for a certain number of his sensations which do not appear to be explicable by his own personal activity. On what rational ground, then, does he decline to assume the existence of a power other than his own to account for the rest of his objective sensations, for they in like manner find no explanation in his own personal activity?

But while we believe that Mr. Abbot's attack upon English Idealism is justifiable and well sustained we are by no means clear as to the meaning of his own doctrine of Realism, or, as he calls it, Relationism.

"By Scientific Philosophy or Relationism I mean (says Mr. Abbot) the philosophy which founds itself theoretically upon the practical basis of the scientific method, and teaches accordingly, that knowledge is a dynamic correlation of object and subject, and has two ultimate origins, the cosmos and the mind; that these origins unite, inseparably yet distinguishably in experience, i.e., the perpetual action of the cosmos on the mind plus the perpetual reaction of the mind on the cosmos and on itself as affected by it: that experience, thus understood, is the one proximate origin of knowledge; that experience has both an objective and subjective side, and that these two sides are mutually dependent and equally necessary; that the objective side of experience depends on the real existence of a known universe, and its subjective side on the real existence of a knowing mind." (P. 484.)

A little further on in the essay Mr. Abbot gives the following advice to recent philosophy:—

"Philosophy is still scholastic to-day; it has never yet modernised itself in any true sense, and it never will do so until it sits modestly at the feet of science, imbues itself thoroughly with the spirit of the scientific method, and applies the principle of Relationism to the reconstitution of the moral sciences and the total reorganisation of human knowledge."

Such language as this is sure to win widespread laudation in an age like the present, when physical science is the dominant study; but we venture to think that Mr. Abbot might with more reason than justice have advised contemporary science to sit down, and then in a teachable mood at the feet of philosophy; for very much of the discord now prevailing between the utterances of scientists and man's moral sentiments and religious trusts is due to the circumstance that our men of science forget that the soul's knowledge of itself is nearer and more fundamental than its knowledge of nature, and therefore it is more reasonable to study nature in the light of self-knowledge than to make our self-knowledge conform to ideas and methods derived from observation of the external world.

We doubt, too, whether Mr. Abbot's own philosophical creed is in harmony with the more prevalent scientific conceptions of the universe. He emphatically endorses Ferrier's dictum, "To know a thing per se, or sine me, is as impossible and contradictory as to know two straight lines enclosing space; because mind by its very law and nature must know the thing cum alio, i.e., "along with itself knowing it;" but if so, how can Mr. Abbot be sure that the relations in which objects appear may not be among the contributions which the knowing mind makes "in the dynamic correlation of object and subject?" He says that the respective contributions of the mind and the cosmos in the act of knowledge are inseparable yet distinguishable. We should like to know how on Mr. Abbot's and Ferrier's theory this act of "distinguishing" is accomplished? The ordinary scientist believes that the relation of cause between the mind and the eddying leaf is quite independent of the knowing mind, and would exist if evolution had never got beyond the botanical kingdom, and therefore had fashioned as yet no conscious intelligence. Does Mr. Abbot's theory of Relationism enable him to justify this assumption of the scientific mind? If all that Mr. Abbot means is that science may safely go on discovering and predicting, for there is reality in nature, and this reality ensures that there is and will be coherence and consistency in past, present and future phenomena, and that all minds under the same conditions will have the same sensations and perceptions, surely this is a doctrine by no means peculiar to the scientist, but, on the contrary, common to science and most of the philosophical systems which Mr. Abbot vehemently condemns, such as Berkeley's Idealism and Mr. Spencer's Transfigured Realism. We cannot help thinking that Mr. Abbot, with all his confident assurances about the marvellous illumination which philosophy will receive if she seats herself humbly at the feet of science, entangles himself at last in a hopeless muddle of incompatible ideas; for while boasting that his doctrine of relationism banishes Agnosticism and points the way to a progressive knowledge of noûmena, he at the same time, by adopting Ferrier's theory of the indissoluble amalgamation of subject and object in the act of knowledge, renders it utterly impossible to determine how far, if at all, the relations which science supposes to exist among objects are realities independent of the knowing mind. It must be allowed, however, that the article is a vigorous and striking one, and we quite expect that it will provoke some of the ablest representatives of both the Transcendental and the Associational school to enter the lists against this daring and somewhat arrogant assailant.

The next paper is by Mr. Thomas Davidson, the learned and acute expounder of Rosmini's philosophy, and the subject of it, "Perception," differs only in name from the subject of the previous article. The theory is too subtle to admit of exposition in the space at our disposal. The pith of the paper is that knowledge implies being as well as feeling, and from this it follows that "the Universe must be explained in terms of sentience and being, not these in terms of matter and motion as is usually done, and that materialism is a logical blunder of the very worst kind, equalled only by the blunder of idealism." In accordance with this view Mr. Davidson holds that "all nature is animate, a conclusion which natural science is gradually reaching by mere experiment." In the third paper Dr. Edmund Montgomery gives us the fourth and concluding instalment of his long essay on "Causation and its Organic Conditions." He thinks that Mr. Spencer, for whose philosophical insight he professes the warmest admiration, has not sufficiently understood the nature of organisation, and that consequently his attempted reconciliation of Intuitionism and Experientialism by means of the doctrine of heredity is somewhat defective, and for its completion requires the conception of organisation set forth in Dr. Montgomery's essay.

In the remaining article Mr. H. Sidgwick treats of the "Incoherence of Empirical Philosophy," and indicates with great acuteness some of the unverifiable assumptions and intrinsic self-contradictions which at present beset empirical thinker (whether they be Materialists like Dr. Maudsley, or Mentalists like Dr. Bain), but, as will be seen from the following words, with which he concludes his paper, his distrust of Empirical Philosophy does not extend to Empirical Science:—

"If, finally, the reader who has got through this paper should say that my cavils cannot shake his confidence in experience, or in the aggregate of modern knowledge that has progressed and still progresses by accumulating, sifting, and systematising experience—I can only answer that my own confidence is equally unshaken. The question which I wish to raise is not as to the validity of received scientific methods, but as to the general epistemological inferences that may legitimately be drawn from the assumption of their validity. It is possible to combine a practically complete trust in the procedure and results of Empirical Science, with a profound distrust in the procedure and conclusions—especially the negative conclusions—of Empirical Philosophy."

This number of Mind is rich in interesting Notes and Discussions, and contains also some valuable Critical Notices. Among the former we may mention especially a paper by Mr. Norman Pearson, on "The Sense of Sin and Evolution," and one on "The Action of So-called Motives," by the Editor. Among the Critical Notices a long and admirable account and criticism of Mr. Leslie Stephen's "Science of Ethics," by Mr. H. Sidgwick, is worth careful study. In conclusion there are interesting sketches of the careers of two eminent philosophical writers who have died since the publication of the former numbers—Professor W. S. Jevons and Dr. M. G. Ward.

C. B. U.

More Magazines.

Longman's Magazine, which has now come to its second number, is not quite equal to what we expected. Mr. James Payn's serial story, "Thicker than Water," does not take strong hold of us, and Mrs. Oliphant's story, "The Lady's Walk," of which the first part is given, is founded on spiritualistic phenomena, in which she is a believer, and which we emphatically reject. We confess to a dislike to the whole subject, both in fiction and in real life. There is an interesting sketch of "John Harrison, the Chronometer Maker," by Samuel Smiles, and a striking account of the picturesque scenery of "The Norway Fjords," by J. A. Froude. Mr. R. A. Proctor contributes one of his science made popular articles on "The Earth in Meteoric Shadow," and there are two moderately good poems by the authors of the "Epic of Hades" and "Mrs. Jerriugham's Journal;" and a short note on Mr. Mackworth Praed's, "St. Hilary's Prayer." Voila tout.

Good Words with the end of the year brings to a conclusion Mr. Anthony Trollope's "Kept in the Dark"—one of the thinnest and least interesting of his many readable books, and "The Golden Shaft," a much more ingenious story of Scotch life, by Charles Gibbon; "A Young Artist" is a biographical sketch of the late James C. Henderson, a student of the Royal Scotch Academy, who died last year, too early for his fame. Mr. R. W. Dale has a seasonable paper on "Christmas Day and Family Life;" and "Home Life Amongst the Lancashire Operatives" is graphically described by a Lancashire Parson. The Rev. M. Kaufmann in the fourth of his series of papers on the "Christian Socialists," gives an interesting account of Victor Aimé Huber, the friend of F. D. Maurice and his co-worker, and author of the well-known work on the English Universities, translated many years ago by Mr. James Heywood. Among the other contributions are "Poison in Common Things;" the third of a series by Professor Simmons, M.D., telling the old story of death in all that we eat and drink; "The Vaudois Emigrants in Algeria," by Mrs. Charles Garnett; "Local Museums," by John Gray; "Rambles with the Romans," by Irving Montague, who recalls to our mind Borrow's works on that curious race; the fourth of a series of papers on "Bible Truths and Eastern Ways," by Dr. Fleming Stevenson; and "My Little Sailor Boy," a charming little story, by Mr. C. J. Corkran, a near relative, we believe, of our friend and contributor Mr. C. L. Corkran.

The Sunday Magazine brings to a conclusion Mr. George Macdonald's tale, "Weighed and Found Wanting," and Miss Doudney's "What's in a Name?" The Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan contributes "An Autumn Pastoral" well illustrated, and the late Thomas Jones, the poet-preacher of Wales, is the writer of a fine homily, entitled "Two Views of Life." Among the other papers are "Japan at Home and at Church," by Ralli Stenning; "Natives Among their Brethren," by C. F. Gordon Cumming; "Breakfast with the Homeless," an account of charitable work in Spitalfields; "Legends connected with Tourists' Cathedrals," by E. Neville Johns; and the very attractive anecdotal "Sunday Evenings with the Children," by the Rev. B. Waugh.

Nobody's Neighbour, in the Christmas number of the Sunday Magazine, is the title of a well-told and pathetic story of life among the London poor, from the pen of Miss L. T. Meade, whose stories are graceful and interesting, and always characterised by a high purpose.

The Magazine of Art is scarcely so striking as usual. The frontispiece is "The Cruise of the Rover," drawn by Seymour Lucas, and with four other engravings, illustrating a stirring poem under the same title, from the pen of Edmund W. Gosse. "Art on Wheels," by R. Heath, does not interest us much, nor do we care to see engravings of grand state carriages preserved in the Musée de Cluny. Jane E. Harrison continues her paper on "Greek Myths in Greek Art," illustrated with seven fine engravings from Greek vases, cups, and marble reliefs. Cosmo Monkhouse gives a very interesting account of the "Pre-Raphaelite Collection" formed by Mr. Triest at Brighton, with engravings of some of Rossetti's, Burne Jones's, and Madox Brown's masterpieces. Among the remaining articles are "Hogarth's House and Tomb," by Austin Dobson; "The Nativity in Art," by Julia Cartwright; and "Velasquez," with engravings of three of his great works.

Cassell's Magazine begins a new volume, and has two new and promising serial stories, "Paradised" and "Down in the World." There are also two short complete stories entitled, "Thousands and Thousands," and "Our Mr. Jenkins," the scene of the former laid in Guernsey, of the latter in the city. Among the bright and sketchy papers which constitute the chief attractions of this useful magazine are "A Word about Wit"; "Some Facts about Frost and Snow," "My Journey with the Khedive," by his former tutor; "Ice-boating in America;" "Profitable Employment for Gentlewomen;" and "Christmas Presents, and how to make them."

We have also received from Messrs. Cassell a cheap "Jubilee Edition," of The Life of W. E. Gladstone, by George Barnett Smith, which is a wonderful shillingworth, corresponding with the recent cheap edition of the same author's "Life of John Bright," and John Morley's "Life of Richard Cobden"; and Greater London, the second part of the very attractive history of the district round the metropolis, by Edward Walford.

The World of Wit and Humour, the first part of a new issue of this well-known collection of humorous and witty sayings, with numbers of illustrations by well-known artists.

Cassell's Illustrated Universal History, Part XV. The New Testament Commentary for English Readers, edited by Bishop Ellicott, Part XXXIII.

The Bible Educator, edited by Dean Plumptre, Part IX.

The World of Wonders, Part II.

The Bow of Strength, the Quiver Annual for 1882, full of stories of a mild Evangelical character, with profuse illustrations.

Literary Notes.

MR. A. G. VERNON HARCOURT, F.R.S., has been appointed general secretary of the British Association, in the room of the late Professor F. M. Balfour.

THE Queen has been graciously pleased to confer on the members of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours the distinction of a diploma signed by Her Majesty.

DR. J. BURDEN SANDERSON, of University College, London, has been elected to the Waynflete Professorship of Physiology at Oxford, which is one of the new ones founded by the late University Commission. The duties of the professor are to lecture and give instruction in human and comparative physiology with histology, and his emoluments are to consist of the annual sum of £600, appropriated to the professorship by the statutes of Magdalen College, and the proceeds (£200 per annum) of a fellowship at Magdalen College attached to the chair.

It is generally affirmed that when Benjamin Franklin first came to England he was employed at Palmer's printing-office on the second edition of Wollaston's "Religion of Nature," and, in fact, Franklin himself asserts as much; but Mr. Solly proves, in an article appearing in the December number of the Bibliographer, that it was the third edition, published in 1725, after the author's death, upon which Franklin worked.

THE Academy says that an important discovery has just been made by two German travellers, Dr. Sester and Dr. Puchstein. On a lofty cliff of the Nimrud Dagb, between Malatiyeh and Samsat, where the Euphrates forces its way through the Taurus, they have found colossal blocks of stone covered with Hittite sculptures and inscriptions.

DR. ANDREW WILSON's "Chapters on Evolution" has already reached a second edition.

THE Mayor of Manchester presided at a meeting on Wednesday for the purpose of raising a fund to establish a Natural History Museum in connection with Owens College. Towards the £50,000 which will be needed subscriptions of £1,000 each were promised by the Duke of Devonshire, the Earl of Derby, Mr. Hugh Mason, M.P., Mr. Grafton, M.P., Mr. John Rylands, Mr. James Worthington, Mr. Samuel Fielden, Mr. Edmund Potter, Mr. Thomas Ashton, and others. The Bishop of Manchester and Mrs. Fraser gave £500. About £20,000 have been subscribed.

A new feature will appear in the Illustrated London News with the beginning of the coming year. The number for January 6 will contain the first instalment of a new tale, entitled "Yolande," by Mr. Wm. Black.

MR. EDMUND W. GOSSE has printed privately ten copies of a very interesting memoir of Thomas Lodge, the Elizabethan poet and romance writer. It will be remembered that Mr. Gosse is editing Lodge's works for the Hunterian Society.

MADAME DE NOVIKOFF is engaged in writing a biography of the late General Skobelev.

A new work by the Bishop of Rochester, entitled "Christ's Claim on the Young," has at last been issued.

PROFESSOR PACKARD has written the history of Bowdoin College, Maine. In it he says he remembers Longfellow as a fair-haired youth, blooming with health and early promise.

It appears from the Administration Report of the Central Provinces of India for 1881-82 that the average attendance at schools during the year was only 58,135 out of a population of nearly ten millions, and that only 4.7 per cent. of the whole male population were returned as under instruction or able to read and write. It is stated that a considerably larger percentage of Mahometans than of Hindus avail themselves of the education offered at the schools of the province and are employed under Government.

OVER two millions of readers visited the Manchester Free Libraries during the twelve months just ended. To nearly half of these books were issued, the remainder presumptively having used the libraries merely to read periodicals on the tables. Altogether, considerably more than a million of volumes were handed over the counters, of which more than 210,000 were used in the reference library. The attendance on Sundays averages about 4,000. Four of the branch libraries are now, it appears, provided with special reading-rooms for boys, who have used in the course of the year 190,493 volumes.

IN reply to a deputation from the Longfellow Memorial Committee, headed by Earl Granville, the Dean of Westminster on Wednesday consented to allow a bust of Longfellow to be placed in the Abbey. He esteemed it an honour, he said, to bear his part in adding to the treasures of the Abbey a memorial to one who held so marked a position among great writers, and whose pure and tender poetry had made his name as dear and as familiar in English as in Trans-atlantic homes.

AT the Sunderland sale the trustees of the British Museum obtained the commentary of Guido Pisano on the "Inferno" of Dante, a paper MS. of the fifteenth century, of the greatest interest to students of Dante; a Mænum for the month of February, dated 1431; a Greek palimpsest MS. of which the under writing is a portion of the Gospels written in the ninth century; and a Greek Evangelistarium of the eleventh, and another of the twelfth century.

MR. GRANT ALLEN has collected, and will re-publish next week, with Messrs. Chatto and Windus, his papers contributed to the Pall Mall Gazette, entitled "Colin Clout's Calendar."

MR. LYALL, the proprietor of the Sportsman and of the Perth Constitutional, has bought the Whitehall Review, which will be conducted on the same political lines as heretofore.

MESSRS. MACNIVEN and WALLACE, of Edinburgh, will publish immediately "C Sonnets by C Authors," a selection of sonnets edited by Mr. H. J. Nicoll, containing representative specimens of all the most prominent English sonnet writers from Wyatt to Rossetti.

PRINCE KRAPOTKINE has prepared for an early number of the Nineteenth Century an article on "Russian Prisons," with the interiors of which he is familiar.

UNDER the title of "Hours in a Mosque" Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. will publish, in January, a volume of essays on various phases of Islam by Mr. Stanley Lane Poole, partly reprinted from the Edinburgh Review.

MESSRS. E. PLON and Co. have just published a French translation of "Democracy."

M. DE NEUVILLE, the celebrated painter of battle-scenes, has received a commission from the English Government to paint the taking of Tel-el-Kebir. He was present at the review held by the Queen, and he has already made a number of sketches for his work, including one of Sir Garnet Wolseley at the head of his troops.

MR. THOMAS LONGRIDGE GOOCH, an eminent engineer and coadjutor of George Stephenson, has just died at Gateshead, aged seventy-five. Mr. Gooch was apprenticed to Stephenson, and was his chief draughtsman in the construction of the Manchester and Liverpool Railway, and his principal assistant in the making of the London and Birmingham Railway. Mr. Gooch was the brother of Sir Daniel Gooch.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jububes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d., tins 1s. 1½d., labelled, "JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen.—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jububes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

The Liberal Pulpit.

THE MORAL ASPECT OF PARTY GOVERNMENT.

On Sunday night the Rev. J. Moden preached in the Free Christian Church, Leicester, on the uses and abuses of party Government, in which the moral aspect of the subject was chiefly noticed. The recent local controversy respecting Mr. P. A. Taylor and the cloture had suggested to his mind, he said, the desirability of considering the principles which underlay party Government, and of pointing out the need of high moral rectitude to keep it free from abuse. Taking as a text the words from the Book of Proverbs: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," he remarked that this statement was as true in political as in commercial or social life, and having noticed the origin and character of the old despotic Governments of the world, he said these should have found their grave in the rise of Christianity, but that as a matter of fact it had needed the Reformation and the French Revolution to show even the foremost races of mankind that the people have rights as well as their rulers. Having traced the development of what is termed constitutional Government, he continued: We thus reached the natural basis of Government by political parties. Some persons were born Liberals, others were born Conservatives, and each gravitated towards action or rest according as a bold belief in the new or a reverent or possibly foolish love for the old dominated his mind. These were the two poles of political life, though they were modified by innumerable social and personal influences. There was thus a diversity of opinion or conviction which was roughly related to either the Conservative or the progressive principles, and party government was the delegation of the supreme power of the State to that section or party which happened to be the numerically stronger. Though far from logical perfection, party government was the best expression to be found of the national will, since it enabled a people to guide its own destinies by the direct action of the majority and the indirect action of the minority. The great value of such a mode of government consisted in the way in which it balanced natural tendencies when men were true to the principles they professed, as well as in the union of responsible action and critical supervision. He spoke as a Liberal, but he had a great respect for a man who was a Conservative from conviction. The best of institutions, however, were open to abuse, and this was specially the case with so delicately-adjusted an arrangement as party government. There was the temptation on the part of the dominant party to put personal advantage before the public good, to sacrifice efficiency for private preference, and to use their vast influence in order to retain supremacy. But an abuse of power was held in check by the eager watchfulness of the opposite party. Just this very watchfulness, however, exposed those who exercised it to grave moral dangers. The spirit which thus came into play was not a spirit of love and charity, but that assigned to Satan in the Book of Job, whose business it was to look for the bad instead of the good. Since the Opposition strove to secure power, just as the governing party strove to retain it, political life was often disgraced by the saddest passions and intrigues. Hence a party-governed State ought to consist of good and reasonable citizens who opposed each other from conviction, for where men were unscrupulous such a mode of government offered full scope for ambition and envy as well as for lying and slander. What men called truth in politics was often an article of their own or their leader's manufacture, something made to order, in which they themselves appeared as angels while their opponents were placed in the darkest shadow. Without great watchfulness party feeling became, not only an unlovely, but an almost fiendish thing. Kings had always been exposed to great temptation, but the temptations which beset a party statesman were far greater, not as regarded the abuse of power, but in that immoral attitude of mind which political animosity generated. If there had ever been, indeed, a party statesman who was perfectly just when in opposition, he was a man before whom the virtue of all the saints in the calendar and of all the patriotic heroes of classic days faded into insignificance. But the religion of Jesus—all religion—demanded an exercise of the eternal principles of morality in party warfare. It condemned the varnished falsehood or the careless exaggeration indulged in to damage the prospects of a political opponent. It inculcated the golden rule of the Gospel, calling upon men to treat others as they would have others treat them. But partisans forgot all this; they ceased in some cases to worship the God of truth, in order that they might pay a fuller measure of devotion to their respective party leaders. A higher tone was needed in our whole political life, and men were called upon to be as just and kind in politics as they were in their private relations. Till principle was placed above prejudice and personal ambition, righteousness must often be content to suffer, but its martyrs were stars heralding the dawn of a better day.

Obituary.

ANDREW PRITCHARD, F.R.S.E.

An old friend to the cause of religious and scientific progress has just passed away. Mr. Andrew Pritchard, of Highbury, died on Friday, Nov. 24, after a long illness of more than three years; and it seems fitting that something should be said about the quiet but actively useful life which has just been recalled from among us, a life as fruitful and complete as any can well be.

Andrew Pritchard, born in 1804, was mainly indebted for his upbringing to his grandfather, Mr. Fleetwood, cashier in the Bank of England. When a young man he spent some years with Mr. Cornelius Varley (brother to John Varley, the Father of Watercolours), and during this time had ample opportunities for cultivating his many-sided faculties. No subject seemed too great or too small for him. At one time he would spend hours watching the planets through the telescope, or investigating minute organisms through the microscope. At another he would be deeply engrossed in mastering the details of some new patent, the drawing of which he was then making; while again during odd moments he might have been found busily employed in fashioning a steel pen, when these were first suggested as substitutes for the quill. Knowledge was to him a goal worth seeking, no matter in which direction it might be approached; and when, in 1823, Dr. Birkbeck and others founded the Mechanics' Institute, Andrew Pritchard became one of the original members, worked actively on its committee, and after a few years taught in it himself.

Microscopic science was now taking the chief place in his studies, and he set himself to conquer some of its many difficulties. The coloured margin incidental to ordinary flint glass lenses was a great obstacle to the clearness with which any object could be viewed, and the first mark he made in public life was by forming diamonds into single lenses (1827), their high power of refraction rendering the lens almost achromatic. But this not being altogether a satisfactory solution to the problem, he continued to experiment until the introduction of compound microscopes (by which the coloured margin of one lens was neutralised by that of others) rendered the achromatism practically complete. The results of his microscopic research were embodied in the books which he published from time to time, "The Microscopic Cabinet," "Micrographia," &c., but his chief work was "A History of Infusoria," which was first published in 1834. Of this four editions were issued, the last (of nearly a thousand pages) in 1861, and this became the standard book on the subject, but is now out of print. It was in recognition of his microscopical labours that the title of Fellow was conferred upon him by the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1873. Mr. Pritchard was likewise a member of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, having been proposed by the late Professor Faraday and elected in 1836.

Turning now to his history in the religious world, we find him as a boy accompanying his grandfather Fleetwood to the old Independent Chapel in Hare-court, City (since removed to Canonbury), and imbibing from him the earnest thoughtfulness that had descended from his Puritan forefathers. This gradually led him to bend his steps to another meeting-house in the same old court, that belonging to the Sandemanians, a quaint little sect that has but few followers. For some years he attended here, although he never became an actual member, and it was in this community that he first made the acquaintance of the late Professor Faraday, with whom he was afterwards united in warm friendship. But after a time the strict limits which surrounded this simple little body of Christians seemed too narrow for him. It was Faraday's oft-expressed opinion that, although questioning into scientific truths was a duty devolving on all real seekers after knowledge, yet in the realms of theology all spirit of investigation was wrong and to be condemned, while to Mr. Pritchard no such line of demarcation seemed right or was possible, and he felt that he ought not to stifle the voice of reason in matters of theology any more than in matters of science. Thus, after careful investigation, he became a Unitarian, and in 1840 joined the congregation at Stoke Newington-green, then under the ministry of the Rev. Dr. Cromwell, and with this congregation he continued to be actively associated until his last illness. During his connection with it the Sunday-school and various other activities were started, and the building was enfranchised, altered and enlarged. This latter fact may appear curious to those who know how small its dimensions still are, but a comparison with the old plans will show that it is now about one third larger than in earlier days when Dr. Price, Mrs. Barbauld, Samuel Rogers and Samuel Sharpe met to worship within its walls. In 1842 he and a few others commenced the Newington-green Conversational Society, a society formed with the object of bringing members of the Chapel and their friends together for social and intellectual intercourse, and of this he was the indefatigable President for twenty-five years. In 1850 he became treasurer to the chapel, which post he zealously filled for twenty-two years.

Mr. Pritchard married Caroline Isabella Straker, in 1829, by whom he had eleven children, to whose education he devoted himself with that thoroughness that was characteristic of his whole nature. He was essentially a domestic man, and most of his works were written in the ordinary sitting-room surrounded by his children, whom he had engaged in some quiet occupation. His general information was of a most varied and reliable nature; there was scarcely a subject upon which a disputed question arose that he was unable to supply with the needful answer, either from his own knowledge or by instant reference to one of his many books which filled his well used and much loved library.

In March, 1879, he was seized with an attack of paralysis and gradually lost his physical and partly his mental powers. For the last two years, however, his sufferings were very slight, and his wife and children were most happy in being able to minister to his comfort and to feel that they could do something for him who had done so much for them.

He died on Nov. 24, and the funeral service took place on the 28th ult., at Newington-green Chapel, the Rev. W. Wooding officiating, and the Rev. Charles Voysey, Mr. Pritchard's old friend, giving the address, which appears on another page. The chapel was decorated with plants and flowers, all dreary adjuncts being as far as possible avoided, for it was felt that such a complete and happy life was a matter for deep thanksgiving, and that "rejoicing in hope" all present might feel that the falling cloud was indeed very brightly tinged with a silver lining.

After the address many of those present went on to Abney-park Cemetery, where Mr. Wooding concluded the service with a few appropriate words.

The following is a list of Mr. Pritchard's works.

- 1827. On the Art of forming "Diamonds into single lenses for Microscopes." Royal Institution.
- 1828. A Treatise on "Optical Instruments."—Library of Useful Knowledge.
- 1829-30. "Microscopic Illustrations" of a few new popular, and diverting living objects, &c., conjoined with accurate descriptions of the latest improvements in the new microscopes;

the best methods of constructing their mountings, apparatus, &c.; and complete instructions for using them,—illustrated by highly-finished coloured engravings from magnified drawings of the actual living subjects, by C. R. Goring, M.D.—Royal 8vo.

1832. The "Microscopic Cabinet" of select animated Objects; with a description of the Jewel and Doubet Microscopes, Test Objects, &c.—To which are subjoined memoirs by C. R. Goring, M.D., on Microscopic Phenomena and an exact method of appreciating Microscopes and Engiscopes.

1834. The Natural "History of Animalcules," containing descriptions of all the known species of Infusoria; with instructions for procuring and viewing them,—illustrated by upwards of 300 magnified figures on steel.

1835. A list of 2,000 "Microscopic Objects," with remarks on the circulation in animals and plants, the method of viewing crystals by polarised light, &c., forming a guide for selecting and labelling subjects of natural history, Botany, and Mineralogy for the Microscope. The work contains the first proposal for a standard length for slides.

1837. "Micrographia," containing practical essays on Reflecting, Solar, Oxy-hydrogen, Microscopes; Micrometers; Eye-pieces, &c., with an appendix, on making Drawings of Microscopic subjects, by F. Bauer, F.R.S., and a new method of illumination by Rev. J. B. Reade, F.R.S.

1838. "Microscopic Illustrations," a new edition amended and enlarged, with an appendix on the optical phenomena of certain Crystals.

1839. A "Catalogue" of the Orders, Families, and principal Genera of British Insects, arranged in conformity with their organisation, and printed on one side only for labelling cabinets.

1842. A History of "Infusoria," living and fossil; arranged according to "die Infusionsthierchen" of C. G. Ehrenberg; containing coloured engravings of all the genera, and descriptions of all the species in that work, with several new ones. To which is appended an account of those recently found in the chalk formations.

1845. "Microscopic Illustrations" of living objects, &c., 3rd edition.

1847. "English Patents," being a register of all those granted for inventions in the Arts, Manufactures, Chemistry, Agriculture, &c., during the first forty-five years of the present century.

1847. "Microscopic Objects," Animal, vegetable and mineral, with instructions for preparing and viewing them.

1850. A practical Treatise on "Optical Instruments," with an appendix, giving an account of new instruments and improvements to the year 1850, illustrated by 100 engravings on wood.

1852. A History of "Infusorial Animalcules," living and fossil, illustrated by several hundred magnified representations on twenty-four plates, new edition, pp. 704.

1861. A History of "Infusoria," including the Desmidiaceæ and Diatomaceæ, British and Foreign, Fourth edition, enlarged and revised by J. T. Arlidge, M.D., W. Archer, Esq., J. Ralfs, M.R.C.S.; W. C. Williamson, F.R.S., and the Author. Illustrated by forty plates, pp. 968.

MR. VOYSEY'S ADDRESS.

The following is Mr. Voysey's Address at the funeral service:—

"The memory of the just is blessed."

If ever these words were true, they are true indeed of him whom this day we mourn, and whose body we are even now carrying to the tomb. All who had the privilege of knowing Andrew Pritchard will have some good thing to say of his blessed memory. Those who knew him most intimately knew also the best side of his nature.

There is the outer circle of the literary and scientific world who confess their obligations to his wonderful and patient investigations in the realm of nature, by which he not only enlarged our knowledge of the mystery and beauty of the microscopic world, but also conferred on living men and on posterity safeguards from the sinful practice of the adulteration of food and medicine.

Another circle there is, composed of those who were privileged to know him as a companion and friend, and who will never forget the charm of his discourse on a great variety of subjects, upon all of which he had something to teach or some fresh light to throw. They will remember his geniality and glowing cheerfulness, and how they went home from his society with the brightness of the sunshine which he had shed upon them.

Yet another circle within these, to which I have the honour to belong, is composed of men and women who were the special objects of his sympathy, his bounty, and his help. How lovingly and generously he would stand by all who needed his support, and would serve them unweariedly by word and deed. No man ever deserved better the sacred name of friend, or fulfilled more faithfully and willingly the duties of friendship. Tender as a little child, his heart overflowed with sympathy, and if he ever took pride in the wealth which God had bestowed upon him, it was only when he could share it with those in need, or confer it on some high and noble cause.

My tongue almost fails me when I come to speak of that innermost circle of all—of those precious ones with whom and for whom he lived his life of love, and who were to him not only the treasure of all his treasures, but by their love, and loyalty, and devotion, helped him greatly to be the noble man he was. You, my dear friends, who are gathered here to-day, bearing his honoured name, or having his blood flowing in your veins, will feel with me that a stranger's tongue cannot speak worthily of this theme: that the wedded love of more than half a century was rich in felicities that cannot be adequately painted; and that the vast inheritance of children and grandchildren—all of whom loved and revered, and obeyed him to his last hour—have a tale of joy and privilege to tell, which could not be told by other lips than their own. But for the accident of living in the nineteenth century, this man was a veritable patriarch, and would in ancient time have been held up as an instance of the special favour of Heaven in multiplying his seed and conferring upon him the greatest blessing which can belong to us as mortals—a large family of loving, clever and godly children. And there is truth in the old conception still. For the cup of Andrew Pritchard's earthly bliss was full. Never was he tired of saying so, and of giving God thanks, as well he might, for so much happiness.

Yet to us his friends, and to his own nearest and dearest, he always seemed to deserve it. To us he seems the normal type of what a man ought to be, of what he should grow into, if he is to be complete and harmonious in all the components of his nature.

But I am reminded that I stand here to speak to you to-day, not only by my own desire, but by his written request, which I did not know until after his death; but I am just as certain of what he would wish me to say as if he had given me full instructions. He would have pardoned and permitted some words of grateful eulogy as a concession to human nature; but not for eulogy alone did he ask me to speak to his beloved family and to his sorrowing friends to-day. It surely was more in his heart to hope that his dear children and descendants should follow in his steps, so far only as those steps were right, and to avoid his mistakes and failures. Bear with me, then, if I touch on a few features of his character and life as examples for us all to follow.

I first notice a feature common indeed to all real truth-seekers—absolute fearless fidelity to truth. The most patient and minute search into facts, long and unwearied observation, accuracy even to exactness in all reports, descriptions, drawings; modesty in stating inferences and generalisations; firmness in standing by an unpopular theory when convinced of its truth. As a Fellow of the Royal Society for Scientific Research, Andrew Pritchard was conspicuous for his fidelity and industry. Those of his children who have followed their father in scientific pursuits will well know the value of the qualities here named. Of his special contributions to science it does not become me to speak, and they will be duly recorded at suitable length elsewhere. But it is within the province of the speaker on this occasion to dwell on the fact that his marvellous devotion to science never had the effect—slandorously imputed to the study of science—of alienating his mind from God, or of weakening his trust in the divine love. On the contrary, he ever claimed to have learned more, and not less, of the infinite wisdom and bounty of God, the more beauty and skill which he discovered in God's works. His delight was the joy of reverence, the ecstasy of seeing the hand behind the instruments, of coming face to face with the eternal Mind in every fresh instance of wonder and adaptation. The unknown beauties, elegances, and even splendours which his microscope unfolded to his admiration sang to his heart of a God who delighted in beauty of form and colour, and to whom the very smallest of His creatures was an object of Divine care and decoration.

From early years accustomed to trust in, to love and to worship God, he never feared a new truth either in science or in religion. Hence it was that he welcomed with all his heart any token of real progress in our conceptions of God, every honest relinquishment of untenable positions, every casting out of tawdry sentiment, which, may be, had lingered too long, even in his own free and unorthodox communion. Standing to the last by the venerable Unitarian Church, giving bountifully to Unitarian causes and taking his seat in this chapel so long as he had strength to come, he, nevertheless, was a staunch and genuine Theist, and did not scruple to confess that he had outgrown many of the traditions which still survived among modern Unitarians. To the very last, I say, he was a good and true Unitarian, because he was a good and true Theist, and put his trust in God alone, without leaning on the Bible or on miracles, or on Christ. And although I feel sure that he was the last man to impose his own views and beliefs and denials upon any one—least of all upon his own children—yet I feel sure also that he would have us follow him steadfastly in this; viz., in keeping our hearts and minds ever open to receive truth, unwelcome truth, unpopular truth, truth which does not pay well, truth which costs something to obtain, and still more to proclaim.

Last of all, I would say a few words on that feature which was the key to his whole life. He was a most loving man. I might go through the long list of honoured relatives, and then through the roll of his friends and acquaintances, and fearlessly ask the question, "What was the special feature, the brightest characteristic in Andrew Pritchard's life?" and the answer from every one in turn would be the same. "He was a most loving man." This made him faithful; this made him religious; this made him fearless; this made him happy; this made and built up the intense happiness of his home; this carried him over all his difficulties and consoled him under all affliction.

And the love he gave and had begotten came back to him like a flood in his hour of weakness and mortal decay; and the very bitterness of his wife's and his children's woe was quenched in that outpouring of loyal reverent love.

Let us not weep that his sufferings are over, that the lamp has gone out on earth to be re-kindled in Heaven! To his grave let us carry him with thoughts of joy and gratitude, and even of triumph, thanking God that such an one has lived and died, and praying Him for celestial grace that we may walk in his steps.

MANCHESTER.—In a recent number we stated that six "Unitarians" had been elected to the Manchester School Board. "Unitarians" was a misprint for "Unsectarians."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Enfeebled Existence.—This medicine embraces every attribute required in a general and domestic remedy. It overturns the foundations of disease laid by defective food and impure air. In obstructions or congestions of the liver, lungs, bowels, or any other organs, these Pills are especially serviceable and eminently successful. They should be kept in readiness in every family, being a medicine of incomparable utility for young persons, especially those of feeble constitutions. They never cause pain or irritate the most sensitive nerves or most tender bowels. Holloway's Pills are the best purifiers of the blood, the most active promoters of absorption and secretion, whereby all poisonous and obnoxious particles are removed from both solids and fluids,

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

The following is a complete list of the newly-elected Board, given in alphabetical order, the constituencies represented by the various members, being also given. An asterisk denotes the names of the members of the previous Board:—

Aveling, Dr. E. B. ...	Westminster.
Barker, Rev. W. ...	Marylebone.
*Belcher, Rev. Brymer	Westminster.
Beven, Mr. T. J. ...	Hackney.
*Bond, Mr. E. ...	Marylebone.
Bourke, Mr. W. R. ...	Finsbury.
Bousfield, Mr. William	Chelsea.
Brooke, Rev. C. E. ...	Lambeth.
Bruce, Mr. G. B. ...	Marylebone.
Burroughes, Mr. J. S.	Westminster.
*Buxton, Mr. E. N. ...	Tower Hamlets.
Currie, Sir E. H. ...	Tower Hamlets.
Denny Umlin, Mr. Richard	Chelsea.
*Diggle, Rev. J. R. ...	Marylebone.
Dillon, Hon. C. A. ...	Lambeth.
*Freeman, Mr. Robert	Chelsea.
*Gladstone, Dr. J. H.	Chelsea.
*Gover, Mr. H. ...	Greenwich.
Gudgeon, Mr. E. B.	Lambeth.
Hanson, Sir Reginald	City of London.
Hastings, Miss ...	Tower Hamlets.
*Hawkins, Mr. A. ...	Southwark.
*Heller, Mr. T. E. ...	Lambeth.
*Hill, Miss Davenport	City of London.
Hobhouse, Sir A. ...	Westminster.
Hughes, Mr. E. ...	Greenwich.
Lawrence, Rev. C. D.	Southwark.
Lobb, Mr. J. ...	Hackney.
*Lucraft, Mr. B. ...	Finsbury.
*Miller, Mrs. F. ...	Hackney.
*Mills, Mr. Arthur ...	Marylebone.
Mitchell, Mr. George	Chelsea.
*Morse, Rev. T. D. ...	Greenwich.
*Müller, Miss ...	Lambeth.
*Murphy, Rev. G. M.	Lambeth.
*Olding, Mr. B. S. ...	Hackney.
*Pearce, Mr. W. ...	Tower Hamlets.
*Pearson, Rev. H. D.	Hackney.
*Prendergast, Colonel	Tower Hamlets.
Richards, Mr. H. C.	City of London.
*Richardson, Miss ...	Southwark.
*Roberts, Mr. T. L. ...	Finsbury.
*Ross, Mr. J. ...	Westminster.
*Saunders, Mr. J. E.	Greenwich.
*Spicer, Mr. H. ...	City of London.
*Stanley, Hon. E. L.	Marylebone.
*Taylor, Miss Helen	Southwark.
*Wainwright, Rev. Dr.	Finsbury.
Webber, Rev. W. T.	Finsbury.
*Westlake, Mrs. ...	Marylebone.
*White, Mr. C. R. ...	Lambeth.
Whiteley, Mr. G. C.	Lambeth.
*Wilks, Rev. Mark ...	Finsbury.

Of the fifty-three members of the Board thirty-one were re-elected in the following proportions:—Four for Lambeth, two for the City of London, two for Chelsea, four for Finsbury, three for Greenwich, three for Hackney, five for Marylebone, three for Southwark, three for the Tower Hamlets, and two for Westminster.

CLERICAL OBSTRUCTION OF THE NEW BURIAL ACT.—The Herts and Essex Observer gives particulars of a painful scene at Harlow, on Saturday last, on the occasion of a Nonconformist funeral in the district churchyard of St. John the Baptist. The deceased, Mrs. Graves, was a Baptist, and it was her wish to be buried with her husband and father in the churchyard, and with Nonconformist rites. This wish her daughter, Miss Hannah Graves, faithfully respected, notwithstanding the vicar's assurance that if her mother could return she would release her daughter from her promise, and desire to be interred by him. Further, finding he could not prevail, he had the grave dug from north to south, instead of from east to west, as usual, and in a marked-off corner of the churchyard. In addition, a special entrance to the churchyard was made for the funeral. Against these irregularities a protest was entered; and it being found that the lich-gates would be looked at the time of the funeral, he was warned that he would be held responsible for any obstruction he might offer. Nevertheless, on the procession reaching the churchyard gates they were found to be locked, and upon application at the vicarage "Sister Ellen" refused the key, and said that the vicar considered that he had complied with the Act by providing "free access." The mourners thereupon passed through the new entrance, and,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,

COLD,

ASTHMA;

BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE, and the word CHLORODYNE coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness, and as being the same thing. Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD, STATED PUBLICLY in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS A LIQUID MEDICINE WHICH ASSUAGES PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES THE NERVOUS SYSTEM when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

CHLORODYNE is the

GREAT SPECIFIC FOR

CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

The GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "TWO DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

From W. VESALIUS PETTIGREW, M.D., formerly Lecturer at St. George's Hospital, LONDON.

"I have no hesitation in stating that I have never met with any medicine so efficacious as an Anti-Spasmotic and Sedative. I have used it in Consumption, Asthma, Diarrhœa, and other diseases, and am perfectly satisfied with the results."

From W. C. WILKINSON, Esq. F.R.C.S., Spalding.

"I consider it invaluable in Phthisis and Spasmodic Cough; the benefit is very marked indeed."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

From Dr. B. J. BOULTON and Co., Horncastle.

"We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct Sedative and Anti-Spasmotic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other Sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after effects."

IMPORTANT CAUTION. The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS.

N.B.—EVERY BOTTLE OF GENUINE CHLORODYNE BEARS on the GOVERNMENT STAMP the NAME of the INVENTOR.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

SOLD IN BOTTLES, 1s. 1/4d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., by all Chemists.

SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.

re-forming the procession on the inside of the lich-gates, the coffin was lifted over. The officiating minister had refused to assent to the suggestion of the crowd that the gates should be forced. At this point a rush was made, and the gates were unhung. Two lads, inmates of the vicarage, resisted this violence, and a policeman took the names of some of those who assisted. The consequent proceedings were orderly, and the gates were ultimately rehung, but little the worse for their temporary removal.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., Professor H. N. MOSELEY, M.A., F.R.S., on "Life on the Ocean Surface." (With Oxy-hydrogen Lantern Illustrations.)

BOURNEMOUTH.

Rev. ALFRED HOOD, at the Town Hall Buildings, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

 Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Alcock's (D.) The Roman Students, 6/
Alison (Sir A.) Autobiography, edited by Lady Alison, 2 Vols. 3/6
Brace's (C. L.) Gesta Christi, or a History of Humane Progress under Christianity, 12/
Cambridge Bible for Schools: Acts of the Apostles, xv.-xxviii., by J. R. Lumby, 2/6
Feilden's (H. St. C.) Constitutional History of England, 6/
Foster's (C.) Story of the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, 6/
Hobart's (Rev. W. K.) The Medical Language of St. Luke, 16/
Hudson's (E. H.) History of the Jews in Rome, B.C. 160 to A.D. 604, 7/6
Miscellaneous Travels of J. W. Goethe, ed. by L. D. Schmitz, 3/6 (Bohn's Standard Library).
Oldenberg's (Dr. H.) Buddha, his Life, his Doctrine, his Order, translated from the German by W. Hoey, 18/
Scott's (L.) Messer Agnolo's Household, 6/
Scott's (L.) The Renaissance of Art in Italy, 31/6
Smiles's (S.) Life of a Scotch Naturalist, Thomas Edward, Popular Edition, 6/
Spurgeon (Rev. C. H.) Life and Ministry, by Rev. W. Walters, 2/6
St. Anselm, Life and Times of, by M. Rule, 2 Vols. 32/

MARRIAGE.

WINNER—FRETWELL.—On the 29th ult., at Mill-hill Chapel, Leeds, by the Rev. C. Hargrove, M.A., Julian Winner, of Warrington, to Fanny Emmeline, youngest surviving daughter of the late Wm. Fretwell, of Leeds. No cards.

DEATHS.

TAPP.—On the 27th ult., at her residence, 99, Welington-road, Stoke Newington, Mary Ann Tapp, aged 87, deeply regretted.

TAYLOR.—On the 28th ult., at Starston, Mary, widow of the late Thos. Lombe Taylor, Esq., of Starston, Norfolk, aged 73.

WRIGHT.—On Wednesday, the 22nd ult., at the Limes, Mickleover, near Derby, Amelia, widow of the late Samuel J. Wright, Esq., in the 82nd year of her age.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

WANTED immediately, in a Gentleman's family, a young lady as GOVERNESS, to instruct two girls, aged respectively 5½ and 7; she would have to take entire charge of them, and also, during the holidays of two boys.—Address, Mrs. BALDWIN LATHAM, Nantwich House, Park Hill Rise, Croydon.

WANTED, immediately, a Care-Taker for Chapel and Day Schools. Must be a married man who has had experience in similar work.—Apply to the Rev. L. Scott, Denton, near Manchester.

A CERTIFICATED TEACHER OF MUSIC is seeking a re-engagement for next Term.—For further particulars, apply to Mrs. TUTIN, Sherwood-street, Nottingham.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S

CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY

[FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM, AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY:

FOR DECEMBER, 1882, Price 2s. 6d.

The Egyptian Question and the French Alliance. By Mons. JOSEPH REINACH.

England and the Suez Canal. By Admiral Lord DUNSANY.

The Second Division at Tel-el-Kebir. By Lieut.-Gen. Sir EDWARD HAMLEY, K.C.B. (With a Map.)

The Fallacy of Materialism:

(1) By GEORGE J. ROMANES.

(2) By the Right Rev. the LORD BISHOP OF CARLISLE.

Walt Whitman. By G. C. MACAULAY.

Must it be "All or Nothing"? By the Rev. Canon WYNNE.

"Uncle Pat's Cabin." By PHILIP H. BAGENAL.

Farming and Taxation. By the Right Hon. Lord STANLEY of ALDERLEY.

The Hamlet Saga. By His Excellency Count de FALBE.

Is the Education Act of 1870 a Just Law? By His Eminence CARDINAL MANNING.

Instructions to my Counsel. By AHMED ARABI the Egyptian.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND CO., LONDON.

Just Published, price 6d.

A FULL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE.
Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High street, Birmingham.

New Edition, the Ninth Thousand, Revised and Enlarged, 100 pages, 8vo., price 1s., post free.

THOUGHTS ON THEISM,

WITH

SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN HARMONY WITH MODERN SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

"Dealing with religious progress and advance, it contains matter and suggestions which should be read especially by members of Assemblies and all interested in the foundations of religion."—GLASGOW HERALD.

"Its pages are enriched with numerous extracts from the most eminent divines, metaphysicians, and scientists of modern times."—SHREWSBURY FREE PRESS.

London: TRUBNER and Co., Ludgate Hill.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

Enlarged Edition, pp. 360, bound, 1s., or 14 stamps.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY INSTRUCTOR. By DR. RICHARD and WASHINGTON EPPS. Describes fully and prescribes for general diseases. London—JAMES EPPS & Co., 48, Threadneedle-street, and 170, Piccadilly.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabrick, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

"MEM SAHIB," North of Ireland.—Please communicate address to INQUIRER Office.

EDWARD T. WHITFIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 178, STRAND, W.C.

E. T. WHITFIELD begs to inform his Friends and Customers that he now keeps a very large stock of GENERAL and FANCY STATIONERY, and that he executes orders for every kind of Die-Sinking, Stamping, and Engraving. Parcels amounting to £1 sent Carriage Free.

Card Plate Engraved, and Fifty Cards with name only, Gentlemen's or Ladies' size, 2s. 6d.; Addresses, 9d. per line extra.

Five Quires of Note Paper and 100 Envelopes, stamped with Monogram or Lady's Name, 4s.

Rubber Stamps, both for marking Linen and for Business Purposes, at very low prices.

Christmas, New Year, and Birthday Cards, in great variety.

E. T. W. continues to supply UNITARIAN and all other Books, post-free, at the Publishers' Prices, from One Shilling upwards.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—Nothing is so highly appreciated as a case of GRANT'S MORELLA CHERRY BRANDY, which can be ordered of any Wine Merchant. Queen's quality, as supplied to Her Majesty, 42s. per dozen; Sportsman's special quality, 50s. per dozen.—Manufacturer, T. GRANT, Distillery, Maidstone.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano-forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Marquette.

UNITARIAN CHURCH, AVONDALE-ROAD, PECKHAM (within ten minutes' walk of Rye-lane Railway Station).

OPENING SERVICES.

The new Church will be opened on Wednesday Evening, December 13, at 6.30, when the Rev. T. SADLER, Ph.D., of Hampstead, will preach. A Collection will be made at the close in aid of the Building Fund, which is still deficient £150.

A PUBLIC MEETING will be held in the Schoolroom at 8 o'clock, presided over by EDWIN LAWRENCE, Esq., LL.B.

The following sums have been received towards liquidating the debt on the new Church:—

	£	s.	d.
Mrs. F. Withall
Mrs. Mather
Mr. T. Pallister Young, LL.B. (2nd sub.)
Mr. W. Shien, M.A. (2nd sub.)
Miss Hall, Twickenham (3rd sub.)
Mr. Robert Hume

Further donations will be thankfully received by

GEORGE CARTER, Minister,

83, Chadwick-road, Peckham, S.E.

HAHNEMANN EPPS, Treasurer,

9, Eliot Bank, Sydenham-hill, S.E.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE LONDON AUXILIARY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION will be held at STAMFORD-STREET CHAPEL, on WEDNESDAY, December 6. W. BLAKE ODGERS, Esq., LL.D., will preside.

Tea at 6. Chair at 7 o'clock. Tickets Sixpence each.

CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

The MONTHLY MEETING OF PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS OF WARWICKSHIRE and the NEIGHBOURING COUNTIES, Established 1782, will celebrate its Centenary by a Series of Meetings to be held in BIRMINGHAM, on Wednesday, December 13.

1.—The Members and Friends will meet in the Lecture Room of the Church of the Messiah, when the Secretary will read a Sketch of the History of the Society, supplemented by members' remarks.

2.—To be followed by a Luncheon-Dinner at 1.30 for 2 o'clock punctually, at the Grand Hotel, Dr. RUSSELL, J.P., presiding. After dinner there will be a Conference, in which several Laymen and Ministers will take part.

3.—In the Evening, at 7 o'clock, there will be Public Worship in the Church of the Messiah, when the introductory service will be conducted by the Rev. JOHN ROBERTS, and the Rev. Professor ESTLIN CARPENTER will preach.

Tickets for the Dinner, Three Shillings each; can be had from the Hon. Secretary before December 4.

D. MAGINNIS, Hon. Sec.

Old Parsonage, Stourbridge, Nov. 8, 1882.

SCARBOROUGH.—A BOARDING and DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS, in the above healthy locality, conducted by Mrs. EDWIN SMITH and Miss A. A. SMITH, of Newnham College, Cambridge, is proposed to be established after Christmas, if sufficient general support be secured. Special attention to HEALTH, home comforts, and physical training. Mere "cram" or over-work scrupulously guarded against.

Rev. EDWIN SMITH, M.A., would take some of the higher subjects. Efficient masters for special studies and accomplishments. TERMS STRICTLY MODERATE. Suggestions or promises of support will be gratefully welcomed, addressed to either of the principals, at Sandy Knoll, Forest-road, Nottingham.

SOUTH OF FRANCE, VALLEY OF LA DORDOGNE.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL for Twenty-four BOYS from ten to fifteen. Modern and Dead Languages, Mathematical and Natural Sciences, taught according to the New Programme of the Elementary and Grammar Classes in the Lycées. Good German Tutor. A few English pupils would be admitted on moderate terms.

Apply for more information (at Ste. Foy, Gironde) to the Director, M. Gilard, pastor; and for references (44, Boulevard des Gobelins, Paris) to M. Steeg, late pastor at Libourne, member of the French Parliament for Bordeaux; M. Rondier, M.P. for Libourne; MM. Et. Coquerel and Viquié, pastors in Paris, and M. Fontanes, pastor at Havre.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE FOR WOMEN

STUDENTS OF THE LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gattton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday December 2, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2111.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—
Archibald Campbell Tait ...	789
Renan's Autobiography.—I. ...	790
REVIEWS:—
Our Liberal Movement in Theology ...	792
The "Nineteenth Century" ...	799
The "Contemporary Review" ...	792
OUR CONTEMPORARIES ...
... ..	793
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Rev. J. Maclaren Cobban ...	794
Temperance Reform ...	794
Was Christ Unique? ...	794
Popular Services in London ...	795
OCCASIONAL NOTES ...
... ..	796
RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—
London Auxiliary Sunday School Association ...	797
Birmingham: Church of the Messiah ...	800
Ministry to the Poor ...	800
Leeds: Holbeck Bazaar ...	800
THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—
Liberty Face to Face with Alcohol ...	801
Tennyson's New Play ...	802
OBITUARY:—
William Titford ...	802
UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE ...
... ..	803

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the beginning of the New Year the price of the INQUIRER will be reduced from 5d. to 2d. weekly. See detailed notice in another column.

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT.

EARLY on Sunday morning, the 3rd of December, the Primate of all England breathed his last. His end was like his life, calm and serene, in spite of suffering. Not in extreme old age, as age is reckoned now, but yet well stricken in years, surrounded by a family circle sadly thinned by former bereavements, beloved and regretted, we may venture to say, by all who were personally known to him, lamenting in his last moments that he should not live to pension an old servant of his household, the Archbishop of CANTERBURY passed away. It is easier to chronicle the career than to estimate the character of one who has filled the position of the foremost of English prelates. The trappings of the dignity obscure the personality of the man. An Archbishop is chiefly known to the outer world by acts for the most part perfunctory. His official life seems made up of ordinations, confirmations, visitations, charges, taking the chair at congresses, distributing prizes at schools, sitting in committees, speaking in Convocation or in the House of Lords; and in even the most spontaneous of these public appearances the weight and responsibility of office must hamper, if they do not crush the individuality of the performer in the part which custom has assigned him.

As we recall the well-remembered figure, courteous and urbane in manner, grave and sedate in bearing, slow and sententious in utterance, the measured and deliberate speech, occasionally relieved by unexpected sallies of a somewhat ponderous humour, we have wondered which of these traits belonged to the Archbishop, and which to the man himself. In private converse he was much the same. His unaffected suavity and gentle politeness of demeanour, devoid of all pomposity or condescension, put the guest completely at his ease.

But there was combined with this a passion, a self-possessed composure, a certain tranquil imperturbable impassibility, lightened only by glimpses of repartee that rather gleamed than sparkled, which afforded no certain clue to the inner workings of the mind. On the casual visitor, at all events, he left the impression of one who was reserved without being taciturn; circumspect, though not suspicious; cautious, though guileless of craft. And the question returned unanswered, How much is due to nature? How much to the exigencies of position?

Perhaps we shall obtain a clearer insight into the character of the late Archbishop by briefly tracing his career. Born in Edinburgh on December 22, 1811, his father, a Scottish lawyer, of Harviestown, Clackmannan; his mother, a daughter of the late Sir ISLAY CAMPBELL, President of the Court of Session, ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT studied at the University of Glasgow, where he obtained what is called a Snell Exhibition, with which he passed to Balliol College, Oxford. Here he also obtained an open scholarship, and graduated with first-class honours. Soon afterwards he took orders as curate of Baldon, near Oxford, and in the following year became Fellow and Tutor of his college. In 1838 he was a candidate for the Greek professorship in the University of Glasgow, but his Anglican orders proved a disqualification for the post. He was reserved for greater things. About this time JOHN HENRY NEWMAN published the famous "Tract Ninety," in which he endeavoured to prove that the Articles of the Church of England, being historically articles of peace, in other words a compromise so worded as to secure the formal adhesion, rather than the hearty acquiescence, both of the Puritan and Sacramentarian parties in the Church of the Reformation, might be honestly subscribed to by clergymen holding those very views against which they were currently supposed to be expressly directed. On the wave of consternation caused by the publication of this notorious tract ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT first floated into prominence. He was one of four Oxford tutors who appended their names to a protest against the principle of "Tract Ninety," a protest which he himself is believed to have drafted. The document in question "admitted the necessity of allowing liberty in interpreting the formularies of the Church," but demurred to that liberty being carried to an extent which would obscure the differences between the Roman and the Anglican Churches. The document was, then, at once Latitudinarian within certain limits on the one hand, and anti-Romanistic on the other. It thus defined at the outset, as far as it had ever been defined, the position which its probable author ever afterwards maintained. The publication of this protest led to the censure and suppression of the "Tracts for the Times," and was followed at no distant date by Doctor NEWMAN'S secession to the Church of Rome. To be one of four opponents to the foremost theologian of the day is the next best thing to being a theologian oneself; and from that day forward ARCHIBALD TAIT was a man of mark and distinction.

In 1842 Dr. ARNOLD died suddenly at Rugby. The liberal Protestant traditions which he had left behind him were at stake in the appointment of his successor. Who more fit for the post than the young Balliol tutor who had drawn up the protest against the Tractarian manifesto? Thus at the age of thirty TAIT succeeded ARNOLD. To maintain a reputation such as ARNOLD had left behind him was no easy task; but the newly appointed Head Master fully justified his election, and for seven years the school flourished under his superintendence. But the work that proved fatal to ARNOLD told on the health of his successor; and after seven years' labour he gladly welcomed promotion to the deanery of Carlisle. Here, as at Rugby, he displayed the tireless, steady, persistent activity which distinguished him through life. He visited the sick, he established night schools, he restored the cathedral, he re-organised the Grammar School, and exhibited a restless industry common enough among the clergy of to-day, and comparatively rare in those times, and rarest of all in a dean. Here one of the great calamities of his life overtook him. In the space of six weeks he lost five children by scarlet fever. Bereavements as bitter, as sudden, and as vast have doubtless befallen others, but they have not often perhaps attracted the attention and moved the sympathy of royalty, or proved the occasion of preferment. Partly to his activity in promoting liberal legislation in connection with the Universities, which gained him the notice and favour of the Prince Consort, and partly to the QUEEN'S compassion for his domestic affliction, he owed his elevation by Lord PALMERSTON to the Bishopric of London, which fell vacant at this time by the superannuation, under special Act of Parliament, of Bishop BLOMFIELD. Instead of devoting himself like his scholarly predecessor to the editing of Greek plays, Bishop TAIT rendered his tenure of office memorable, and acquired no small share of popularity by inaugurating what is known as the Bishop of London's Fund. The scheme which he propounded was the raising of a million sterling for the extension of Church work, and the relief of necessitous clergy.

In a short time a sum of £350,000 was thus collected, and seventy new districts were created. In these and kindred undertakings the new Bishop manifested the same consummate tact and administrative powers which he had shown at Rugby and Carlisle. And now we begin to see, ever more clearly revealed, the guiding principle of his life, the inspiring idea of his action. It was, to use his own language, that of practical usefulness, the enlargement of the power and influence of the Church, not by the path of sacerdotal pretension, but by the road of service and succour, as he understood these things.

But of this more anon, when we have reached the final stage of his advancement. In 1868 the see of Canterbury fell vacant by the death of Dr. LONGLEY, and Mr. DISRAELI, then for the first time Prime Minister, offered the Archbishopric to him, who has held it for the last fourteen years. Thus ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT became Archbishop of Canterbury, having had in the meantime the good fortune or the good judgment—which shall we call it?—to decline the Archbishopric of the Northern Province, offered him by Lord PALMERSTON in 1862. Dr. TAIT was the ninety-second Archbishop who has filled the see of Canterbury, and the twenty-third from MATTHEW PARKER, the first Protestant Primate. With whom of his predecessors, illustrious or obscure, can we compare him? He was not, like ANSELM, a leader of thought, the constructor of a systematic scheme of theology. He was no THOMAS-A-BECKET, haughty and overbearing towards the Sovereign to whom he owed his promotion. Nor was he, like LAUD, a proud, though saintly sacerdotalist swelling with prelate assumption, defying and denouncing Dissent, and pursuing recalcitrant Puritans with pains and penalties; still less was he a WOLSEY, rolling in luxury and pomp, flattering the vices of a monarch, and versed in Court intrigues. The time had passed for Primates of this type. And yet the age in which he lived was big with mighty issues and loud with angry controversies. In what relation did he stand to the stirring questions of his day? In that of a cautious mediator between extremes. Identified with none of the parties in the Church he was abused in turn by all, and now that he is gone one of the daily papers in its obituary notice speaks of his “rigid Protestantism,” another claims him as a “moderate High Churchman,” while the rest regard him as “Broad.” We may take these divergent estimates as fairly conclusive evidence that he was none of the three. To secure for the Church as a whole, and not for this or that party, the undisturbed possession of her temporalities; to widen, deepen, and popularise her hold upon the masses; to act as her “parliamentary representative” in the House of Lords; and now by kindly concessions, now by judicious compromise, now by passive resistance, to stave off the evil day of disestablishment and disendowment, this was the object of his life. With regard to the Irish Church and the Burial Bill alike, he would haggle over details with the view of securing the best bargain for the Church consistent with the inevitable diminution of her exclusive privileges. That the Church of England as by law established was a beneficent institution he thoroughly and sincerely believed. It was, according to him, “the peculiar inheritance of the poor;” but there were not wanting occasions when he interpreted this maxim as though it had been the converse, and the “poor were the peculiar inheritance of the Church.” When appealed to to surrender a portion of his estate of Lambeth as a recreation ground for the people, his reply was as sturdy a “non possumus” as ever a Pope could have penned. He would surrender only to compulsion, though then with a good grace.

But how, then, did he conceive of the Church, whose vessel he so skilfully piloted through so many a stormy sea? A stalwart and devoted Churchman without a theory of the Church is a strange and puzzling spectacle. And yet it would be hard to say what theory of the Church the late Archbishop espoused. That he was tolerant of diversity of opinion and friendly towards Dissenters we know, but that he never suggested or advocated any such scheme of comprehension as by the modification or abolition of the Act of Uniformity or the terms of subscription would make the Church potentially co-extensive with the religious life of the nation, is equally beyond dispute. On the one hand he was an ardent admirer of the late Dean of WESTMINSTER, on the other hand he strove to prove, though not till STANLEY was dead, that the Dean was strictly orthodox. He opposed with laudable courage, and in face of considerable obloquy, the condemnation of “Essays and Reviews,” and the threatened deposition of Bishop COLENSO; but he never, to our knowledge, satisfactorily defined his own position in relation to the views of the Neologian school. It is said, indeed, that when in the early Rugby days he expounded the Bible to his pupils, he would remark, “Men say there are legends in the Bible. Of course there are; there are legends in all early literatures.” On the single occasion when the writer of these lines had an interview with his Grace, now some three years ago, he found him deeply interested in the perusal of a work now known to be by Dr. ABBOT, Head Master of the City of London School, and entitled “Philochristus,” in which the miraculous element in the Gospel narratives is ingeniously explained away, and the Resurrection itself is spoken of not as a physical fact, but as an “illusion,” by which the presence of the immortal CHRIST was brought home to the first believers.

Not a syllable, however, was volunteered by the Archbishop as to his opinion of the tenability or otherwise of the views advanced, beyond that it was a most remarkable book, that the author evidently believed in the Divinity of CHRIST; and as though adroitly to forestall any further confidences, we were bidden to take the book home, and write to the Archbishop what we thought about it.

Moderate in all things, the late Primate was moderate even in his moderation. The line must be drawn somewhere, and he drew it, not on any abstract or theoretical principles, but in a practical manner at Ritualism on the one side, and the Theism of Mr. VOYSEY on the other. He was the promoter in the House of Lords of the Public Worship Regulation Act, which Mr. DISRAELI, when it got to the House of Commons, discovered was a Bill to “put down Ritualism.” Nothing could have been further from the Archbishop’s mind than to “put down” with a high hand either Ritualism or Rationalism, or any other movement in the Church. To restrain within certain bounds, to “regulate,” to moderate, to tone down offensive extremes, was his policy throughout. The Act is an admitted failure, and the elevation of “contumacious clerks” into imprisoned martyrs, through the unforeseen application to their case of a statute of GEORGE III., was a result which the author of the Bill neither expected nor desired. So far as we can discover, the standard of doctrine and discipline which the departed Primate upheld was not that of abstract truth or right, but the utilitarian one of a “working hypothesis.” As much diversity of practice and belief as could fairly be brought within the four corners of the Prayer Book without too great an outrage upon common sense, he would tolerate and no more. The Ritualists transgressed this border on the one side and Mr. VOYSEY on the other; therefore, though sore against his will, he was a party to the imprisonment of the former, and the expulsion of the latter. What were the private convictions of the amiable tolerant Primate whose voice we shall hear no more we shall probably never know.

Fain would we summon from the grave some articulate response to the question What were his hidden thoughts when he penned those missives to the clergy exhorting them to pray for fair weather, or calling on them to thank the ALMIGHTY for the favour shown to our arms in suppressing the Egyptian insurrection? Fain would we have from a man of his large culture and wide experience some more definite and satisfactory pronouncement concerning the religion of the future, than such vague generalities as that “the Church and the world are entering on entirely new phases,” or that the “best men of the time have a dislike of all schools of theology; that they desire a religion which shall serve them and their neighbours in life and death, without tying them up to unnatural phrases or locking their feet in the stocks of some antiquated system of discipline;” “a Church whose ideal is practical usefulness, with LIGHTFOOT for its head, FRASER for its model bishop, MACLAGAN for its parish priest.”

Farewell, thou kindly, courteous, charitable, and tolerant prelate! thou has wielded a masterly activity in Church and State; thou hast softened the rigours and blunted the thorns of controversy; thou hast expounded with some eloquence and in ambiguous terms a colourless and cornerless theology; thou hast restored a cathedral, organised grammar schools, built churches, raised funds, sent away a colonial Dean with thy blessing to an heretical Bishop; thou hast abounded in works, and not been chary of speech, but thou hast gone to the grave with the secret of thy inmost faith locked in eternal silence, and left us wondering in the dark.

RENAN’S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.—I.

It is with the greatest pleasure that, after the lapse of nearly a year, we find ourselves in possession of a further and final instalment of M. RENAN’S charming auto-biographical sketches, which were commenced in the Revue des Deux Mondes as far back as March, 1876, and are completed in the two November numbers of the same periodical. Assuming that our readers who may not have read the papers themselves have been interested in our notices of the earlier ones, we propose to follow the same course with regard to those just published. It is impossible for us to convey more than a statement or assurance of the charm which characterises the articles themselves, but we can at least enable them to look in some measure through the eyes of a great heretic at a system of faith and belief which he was obliged to abandon, but which still occupies so large a place in the religious life of the world. Owing to the fact that Orthodoxy in some one of its many forms dominates nearly the whole of the education of this country, not a few of our readers have had to pass through the furnace of doubt and to bear the pangs of separation from a dearly loved past, in a manner not dissimilar to that of M. RENAN. This will constitute for them the special interest of his "souvenirs," since they will find much of their own experience reflected and expanded in his.

The first of the two papers which we are about to notice begins with a description of the principal teachers and fathers of the Catholic seminary of St. Sulpice in 1843, the year our author entered it as a student. M. GARNIER, the superior, who was "an ecclesiastic of the old school," was more than eighty years old. He was also a learned Orientalist, and "the ablest man in France in Biblical exegesis, as this was understood among the Catholics at the earlier part of this century." His mantle had specially fallen, we are told, upon a M. LE HIR, who was both "savant and saint," though the later predominated. His superiority sprang from his profound acquaintance with the learning of his master and his knowledge of German theology. The supernatural caused him no intellectual repugnance. The balance formed by his judgment was very just, "but in one of the scales there was an infinite weight—that of an immovable faith." Whatever he found in German theology that lent itself to Orthodoxy he appropriated; whatever was opposed to this he passed by without a moment's concern. Owing to the advanced age of the superior the cares of the establishment were entrusted to the "directeur," M. CARBON, who was "goodness, lightheartedness, and justice itself," but "not a theologian." Such were the leading men of the institution, "who defended their dogmas as a good soldier defends the post which has been confided to him." Life seems to have been pleasant enough among the good fathers, and not altogether destitute of a mirthful side. When, for instance, the father confessor, who had assumed the management of the Seminary, read from the manuscript works of the aged superior, he was accustomed to draw the attention of the students to antiquated passages in order to amuse them. In some cases this was unnecessary, as, for example, where the good superior tried to find a modern parallel for the passion which PHARAOH conceived for SARAH when she was almost seventy years of age—a passion which caused the father of the faithful so much embarrassment.

Two unknown worlds were before me, says M. RENAN, when I entered St. Sulpice. That of theology, the scientific exposition of Christian dogmas, and the Bible regarded as the depository and source of this dogma. "My ardour for knowledge was now about to be satisfied; I therefore plunged eagerly into study. I knew not a soul in Paris, and my solitude was greater than it had been at Issy." He conversed but little with any one, he continues, and yet the good fathers were always extremely kind to him. Some of them, it appears, inferred from his quiet studious habits that he was destined to become one of themselves. Their words were: "Voilà pour nous un futur bon confrère." Speaking of his studies pursued at St. Sulpice, our author says that the theological course was divided into two sections—dogmatic and moral—and that the work on "La Vraie Religion" formed the foundation of both. This foundation, he adds, was of a very doubtful character. For not only did the author fail to establish any special divine revelation for the Christian religion, as compared with other forms of faith, but he did not even succeed in proving that a supernatural fact or miracle had ever occurred within the range of human experience. As regards his own growing doubts, he tells us that they did not spring from one but from many sources, and that though Orthodoxy has an answer for everything and never acknowledges itself beaten, the innumerable subterfuges to which it had to resort in his case formed an overwhelming probability against the truth of its thesis. One subtle solution of a difficulty may be accepted as true, he adds, and even two may be at times admissible, but when three or four are needed its truth is almost impossible. How, then, can any theory of revelation or the like be accepted when it requires a hundred such gratuitous suppositions?

It was the study of Hebrew which formed the turning point in our author's theological career, opening up to him a whole network of difficulties which no amount of subtle reasoning could remove. That study was not compulsory at St. Sulpice, he tells his readers, and was, as a matter of fact, pursued by very few of the students. Still there were two courses of lectures or lessons carried on in that language. The higher course was taken by the aged Superior, M. GARNIER, in his own room, and the lower or grammatical course by M. LE HIR. This study proved most fascinating to the future heretic, and he pursued it with the greatest avidity and success. "I had," he says, "at this time an extraordinary power of mental assimilation." Besides the charm of language itself there appears to have been a peculiar pleasure in the thought that this was the battle-ground upon which he must carry on the conflict with his ever growing scepticism. By the end of about a year he had made so much progress that when increasing infirmity compelled the aged Superior to give up the higher teaching to M. LE HIR, he was himself able to take charge of his fellow students in the lower. This advance to a kind of professorship led to his being offered an honorarium of 300 francs a year, only half of which he accepted, for the purpose of buying books. Nor was this the only advantage it brought him. He was also permitted to attend twice a week a series of lectures on the same subject at the College of France. Here, however, similar difficulties met him. For M. QUATREMERIE, the professor who gave the course there, made use of a "superficial eclecticism" with regard to the miraculous which satisfied him but little. Still the oriental scholarship of the professor in question was, he says, very great, and opened up to him a new world of thought and knowledge. Nor was this the only source of mind-growth which was open to him. His own teaching compelled him to arrange and systematise the ideas he was imbibing from others, and for a more thorough and faithful fulfilment of it he was led to the study of German. As regards this study his words are:—"Literature was so subordinate to me in the midst of the ardent inquiry which was absorbing all my energies that at first I paid little attention to it. Still I soon felt the influence of a new order of thought and one of a very different kind from that of our nineteenth century. The peculiar spirit of Germany at the end of the last and the beginning of this century struck me forcibly. I seemed to enter a temple under its influence. It was what I was seeking; the reconciliation of a sincerely devout with a critical spirit. I regretted at times that I was not a Protestant, so that I might become a philosopher without ceasing to be a Christian." But the light thus found cast its natural shadow from the opaqueness of human circumstances. For he found that his studies placed him in a very false position; they showed him on the one hand the impossibility of Biblical criticism without concessions, while on the other he saw clearly enough that the authorities of St. Sulpice were right, from their own point of view, in making no concessions whatever, "since a single admission of error suffices to ruin the edifice of absolute truth." The attentive study of the Bible showed him the existence of errors and contradictions, fables and legends, which though of small account to a rational and untrammelled critic lead the Orthodox to resort to a thousand subtleties by way of explanation.

The change was now drawing nigh. As regards the motives which were impelling him to break with a much-loved past, and a long cherished dream of the future, he says:—"Men of the world who imagine that opinions and the changes they lead to are adopted from sympathy or antipathy will be astonished at the kind of reasons which removed me from the Christian faith to which I had so many motives of both heart and interest to remain attached. Persons unacquainted with the scientific spirit can scarcely imagine how a man may let his opinions form outside of him by a kind of impersonal growth or aggregation of which he is in a certain sense a spectator." But these reasons were not of a metaphysical order. If he could have settled Biblical difficulties, such doctrines, he says, as the Trinity and the Incarnation would never have troubled him. His difficulties were philological and critical, and if he could have overcome them he would have left ecclesiastical and metaphysical matters to the care of the Church. No doubt he is sincere in this opinion, but it may be doubted whether the minor set of difficulties would not have clamoured for satisfaction in case the other could have been met. As regards the authorities of St. Sulpice he contends that they were only indirectly responsible for his heresy. They were good and sincere men, who remained true to the principles of Catholicism. At the same time it was not his fault, he argues, if he profited to the utmost by their teaching. They taught him scholasticism and logic, theology and Hebrew, and he adds:—"I was a good pupil; I cannot surely be damned for that." Be this as it may, we shall find him next in his native Brittany, from which he forwards the letter that settles his fate for the present world.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.—At the first meeting of the newly-elected Board on Friday, the 1st inst., Mr. E. N. Buxton was re-elected chairman of the Board, and Mr. Freeman vice-chairman. At the meeting on Thursday the Board received a deputation, who presented a memorial setting out objections to proposed sites for a new school in Richmond-road, Dalston. The debate on higher elementary education was again renewed and again adjourned, without any progress being made. The question of local managers was also discussed without any definite vote. It was resolved to commence the Christmas holidays next Thursday, and to remain adjourned till the second Thursday in January.

FRAMLINGHAM.—A large audience gathered at the Old Meeting House on Wednesday evening to hear a lecture on "England and Egypt," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A. Mr. James Youngman presided. The lecturer traced up the monetary difficulties of Egypt inaugurated by the late Khedive; the European financiers' rapacity; the Egyptian method of raising taxes; the bondholders' alarm; the control; the national movement; House of Notables—its attempt to deal with the unassigned taxes; European parasites in office; the attempt to banish Arabi; memoranda of Alexandrian merchants to Sir Beauchamp Seymour; Alexandria in flames, &c. The only reason, said the lecturer, that could be assigned for England being in Egypt was a financial one.

Reviews.

UNITARIANISM IN NEW ENGLAND.

Our Liberal Movement in Theology, chiefly as shown in Recollections of the History of Unitarianism in New England, being a closing Course of Lectures given in the Harvard Divinity School. By Joseph Henry Allen, Lecturer on Ecclesiastical History in Harvard University, &c. Boston (U.S.): Roberts Brothers. 1882.

Mr. Allen is well known to many of our readers as the author of "Hebrew Men and Times," and "Fragments of Christian History," as well as by numerous essays which are characterised by great candour, thoughtfulness, and learning. These lectures are published at the request of the young men who heard them. We do not know a more able and interesting account of the progress of Liberal theology in New England. Mr. Allen is especially qualified to write it; he is the grandson of the Dr. Henry Ware whose appointment to the Divinity Professorship in Harvard College in 1805 was an era in the theological history of New England, and led to the establishment of the orthodox institution at Andover—the orthodoxy of which has recently undergone so conspicuous a change:—

"As a child I was brought up in the midst of all its (Unitarian) influences, within hearing of all its earlier controversies, and with a child's natural interest and pride in the names which were considered then to do it honour; while my earlier university and professional life was just when the controversies of the second period began to take shape and force (p. 26). My heart [he afterwards says] lives so largely in the gracious and venerable past of our communion, and my thought goes forward with so keen and active sympathy with those younger minds to whom the privilege of my place brings me into daily near relation, that it would be impossible for me to say a word that should put me, consciously, at difference with a single phase of it that has been honestly thought or lived' (p. 177).

In the first chapter, "Antecedents," Mr. Allen remarks that "it is the history of a movement we are to study, not the attitude of a sect." He gives a brief history of Unitarianism in England. As exemplified in Priestley and Price, "it was a movement of Reason in sympathy with the scientific spirit and a movement of Right in sympathy with the Revolutionary spirit;" "a system of morality and piety founded on the authority of a divine revelation in the New Testament;" a "half-way rationalism." In New England "Unitarian" became a denominational name in 1815, when the controversy arose which resulted in the breach in the Congregational body—of which Unitarianism is the Liberal wing:—

"The Congregational Order made part of the original constitution of New England. Each town must maintain a church or parish organisation, and every voter must be a church member. This old constitution of things was not wholly done away in Massachusetts till 1833, when the voluntary system was fully adopted. Till then, every citizen's tax-bill included a religious tax; and till 1820 that tax must be paid for the support of a Congregational Church" (p. 37).

The Unitarian element seemed to grow from the influence, and to follow the widening circle of culture that went out from Harvard College. It prevailed in Eastern Massachusetts, reaching back only about forty miles; and its ministers were, like their Orthodox brethren, the Established clergy of the State. Their churches at first embraced many who had no sympathy with the movement, but who did not choose to become Dissenters; and even the Liberal members of this State Church were often so averse to Nonconformity that when they crossed the Atlantic they could not feel at home in a Dissenting chapel. Of course, there were many whose Unitarian zeal overcame this Conservatism, and who were glad to fraternise with their brethren in England. All congregations that reject the Trinity are, with us, commonly called "Unitarian;" but in the United States the Universalists and the "Christians" and the free-thinking Friends are quite distinct organisations, though they have all abandoned the Orthodox creeds; and the Unitarian denomination was, till recently, almost entirely composed of New England Congregationalists, and was regarded as somewhat exclusive and sectional.

Mr. Allen gives an interesting description of the Unitarian body as he first knew it, and has a very discriminating chapter on the character and influence of Dr. Channing. It was in 1836 that the second period began, which succeeded to "the tranquil and grateful sense of intellectual rest" on which our churches were beginning to repose. The Transcendentalists asserted that "the fundamental ideas which make the basis of the religious life—the idea of God, of duty, and of immortality—are given outright in the nature and constitution of man, and do not have to be learned from any book, or confirmed by any miracle. In one way this followed easily enough from what Channing had taught of the dignity and divine elements of human nature (p. 71). In connection with this type of Unitarianism Mr. Allen devotes a chapter to Theodore Parker.

A new era commenced with the Civil War. "It was, in fact, as much a breaking up of old lines of sect, and a liberalising of the public mind on religious questions, as it was the introduction of a new era in politics." As regards denominational activity this period was best represented by Dr. Bellows.

"Perhaps the period before us is still better characterised by a much younger class of men who, with less of critical study or defined opinion than their predecessors, have a readiness in action, a vigour of self-assertion, a directness of method, and a range of popular sympathy that set them quite apart from the older school, and give them a new and different hold upon the future. . . . In short, Unitarianism, so far as it is destined to survive at all, must understand that it has outgrown its old theological tenets; and as it was once the liberal side of the old Congregational body, so now it must know itself as the Christian side of the broader scientific movement of our time. As a part of this broader movement it may still retain its intellectual dignity and its interest for thinking men, whatever its denominational strength or weakness" (pp. 115, 116).

Mr. Allen gives eight different senses in which the name Christian is found in modern use, and he adds his own:—"We are Christian by habit or inheritance, unless we deliberately choose to renounce that name in favour of some other." This definition reminds us of our own use of the name Presbyterian ("by habit or inheritance") long after we had discarded the church-government which the name denotes. He entitles his sixth chapter—"A Scientific Theology." He draws a contrast, however, between Science and Theology:—"Theology assumes as its postulate or ideal, that everything at bottom proceeds from living, intelligent personal force, and sees in any given event an exhibition of that force." It deals with persons, as Science does with things.

There are some men "who hold the two halves of their thought quite independent and distinct, as it was said of Faraday, that when he went into his oratory he turned the key of his laboratory;" there are others "of Christian habit and nurture, who with their best intelligence adjust and harmonize the two." "The scientific spirit is likely to prove braver, manlier, honest than the ecclesiastical spirit, even if less serious and tender; and the tendency to a certain mental timidity, half-heartedness and compromise can never again, I should think, be quite as strong as some of us have felt it in the past" (p. 144).

"The Religion of Humanity" is the subject of an interesting chapter. "The old creed, Catholic and Calvinist alike, had its root in a sort of despair of human nature and earthly destiny." Voltaire and Rousseau, despite of their gross offences, kindled the new spirit of the Revolutionary era, both in America and in France. "The doctrine of Theophilanthropy was futile, its forms were melodramatic and ridiculous; but as far as sentiment goes, nothing was ever more generous; few things, I should think, have been more sincere. A humble but very touching illustration of it struck my eye on visiting the great School of the Blind in Paris, where the dates of charitable foundations and gifts were the dates of successive stages in the French Revolution" (p. 148). The early Unitarianism "became committed to a generous faith in human nature, and more and more made its religion consist in service to mankind." This genial optimism has been too often succeeded by a shallow sentimentalism, or a sombre pessimism; while thoughtful men are compelled to submit it to "a stern revision and collation with pitiless facts." "Our great, our real, religious task is to aid in the unfolding of human nature, society, and life, towards the highest, noblest, fairest forms of which they are capable (p. 171).

"A religion of humanity is taking the place in our generation of a religion of theosophy. Its foundation is Law, not Dogma. Speculative theology has no longer any place in it, as defining arbitrarily the nature and character of our obligations, any more than it has in shaping our views of history and cosmogony." While he believes that "the service of humanity hereafter may be more wise, more fruitful, and more various," he feels that "it will never be more tender, generous and devout, than it has been during the long ages of its [Christian] training."

"The Gospel of Liberalism" is treated in the last chapter. It is not summed up in the word Culture—so much in vogue half a century ago; nor in the profounder word Salvation, so far as it means our own rescue from wrath to come. "Its watchword is at once lowlier and nobler—that is Service." Mr. Allen anticipates a loss, through the tendencies of Liberalism, of much that was valued, that it may give place to something more precious still:—

"We may, indeed, for a generation or two, lose that near and comforting assurance of the Divine Personality which, I am sure, will come back to us in a glorified form, when our minds are grown to apprehend the conditions under which it must be held. . . . So, too, it may be needful that men should lose for a season their clear and vivid conviction of the future life, seeing what evil use has been made of it. . . . It were better for us all to ask less how we may be sure, than how we may be worthy, of that incomprehensible and august destiny. The nobility of the Hebrew race began when it left behind the Egyptian creed of another life, and entered on the wilderness of wandering and pain, believing only in the present deity; when it cast aside the 'Book of the Dead,' with all that solemn ritual and imagery, and the grave judgments of Osiris beyond the dark rim, and accepted instead for its sole portion the Ten Commandments, as it began its bleak but valiant march. From that seed grew its later, better faith in immortality, and the larger life which is ripening to-day" (pp. 197-198).

The Appendix contains a Memorial Address by the Rev. Dr. Hedge on "Henry W. Bellows and Ralph W. Emerson," which is a valuable addition to the biographical treasures of the volume. The book well deserves the attentive study of thoughtful readers. R. L. C.

The Nineteenth Century. Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co.

The Contemporary Review. Isbister and Co.

Both the monthly Reviews are, as usual, full of interest, and the Nineteenth Century, has quite a resplendent list of "Eminences," "Excellences" and "Right Honourables" among its contributors. In neither is theology the most prominent feature this month. In the Nineteenth Century we have a philosophical-theological discussion on "The Fallacy of Materialism," under which heading there are two Essays, one on "Mind and Body," by the eminent scientific writer, G. J. Romanes, who shows that at the bar of Philosophy Materialism must be pronounced conspicuously inadequate to account for the facts of existence; the other on "Matter and Mind," by the Bishop of Carlisle—an eminent Mathematician—who claims to have proved that the existence of Mind, apart from and distinct from Matter, is susceptible of demonstration of a quasi-mathematical kind by reference to the knowledge which we possess of Matter itself; and that this proposition affords the basis of a theology and altogether forbids Atheism. Both Essays are somewhat abstruse, but will be perused with pleasure by the philosophical student, and show that both Science and Philosophy become fitting hand-maidens of Theology. There is also an article by the Rev. Canon Wynne, under the title

"Must it be all or Nothing," in reply to the thesis laid down by Mr. Kegan Paul in a previous article—which was criticised by us at the time—that there is no alternative in this disorganised age but to accept all the dogmas authoritatively taught by the Church of Rome as "the Christian Faith," or else to confess that there can be no faith at all in "the supernatural." In a singularly calm and candid, but in by no means a profound philosophical spirit, the worthy Canon combats this position. The concluding passage is worth quoting in full, although it is characterised by the vagueness of the Maurician school:—

"Mr. Kegan Paul perceives both in the Church of England and in the Nonconformist bodies a growing tendency to diminish the amount of definite dogmatic teaching, and to care less for the formal creeds of the Church. He sees in this a symptom of the modern spirit of destructive criticism, showing itself even among those who are not yet conscious of its presence. He may be partly right in his diagnosis. Something of 'a revolt and discontent' 'at being so long in darkness pent' may stir in restless and dissatisfied minds. But may there not be another, a deeper and more hopeful course for the effect he notices? If the 'modern spirit' of criticism is busy and within due limits, useful in its work, is there not along with it throbbing through all Christian communities a very strong pulse of earnest and practical spiritual life? And may not that disinclination for formal statements and long lists of 'articles' be the stirring of one of the instincts of the living Church of Christ, the true Church Catholic, the great body of all who love and trust Him amidst varieties of outward organisation—may it not be her instinctive recognition more and more of the kind of tone in which the Father's voice has spoken? May it not arise from her seeing more and more clearly that God's revelation has come not in a long series of difficult and definite propositions, but in the life, 'grand and sweet,' of a living Person? Statements of facts and doctrines are needful and useful. But is not their great use, after all, to make us acquainted with this divine Person, to make us know what He is to us, and what we are to be to Him? And have we not reason to hope that there is gradually growing among those who are striving for righteousness in varying outward communions a tendency to dwell chiefly on the great fundamental truths of religion and morality; to feel that there are such, assured to us by evidence we must yield to even while on other points we are in uncertainty; to feel that our common belief in these makes among us a real union, however otherwise we may be divided; and to feel that all those who are longing to offer trust, and love, and loyal obedience to God manifested in Christ Jesus, hold together in the deepest sense the 'faith once delivered to the Saints?'"

In the Contemporary Theology is represented by two articles, which are interesting and instructive to the student, but call for no particular comment. The first is an elaborate essay on "The Primitive Polity of Islam," by Principal Fairbairn, who shows the necessity of considering and handling it, "not simply as a Monotheism, a religion based on a simple and rudimentary theology, but as a theocracy, a theism incarnated in a political system." The other is an essay on "Early Christianity and Class-influence," by the Rev. C. G. Clarke, who shows that the members of the different classes of Pagan society were very largely influenced as to the attitude they assumed towards Christianity by the question of their class. The practical application is that the existence of such a class-influence in the past renders probable its operation at the present day, however limited and modified it may be by other influences.

Cardinal Manning's article, entitled "Is the Education Act of 1876 a Just Law?" is also of a theological character. The Cardinal's position is that there can be no religion apart from the dogmatic teaching of doctrinal Christianity, and that the Act of 1876 "endows schools without religion at the joint if not the chief cost of those who, by energy and generous self-denial, have created the national and Christian education of England mainly at their own cost." There is not, as we hold, the shadow of a foundation for the Cardinal's astounding assertion that the Board School system does not represent the mind of the people; or that it gives instruction without religion; and there is not the slightest chance that our present wise educational policy will ever be reversed.

The other articles in the Contemporary we can only notice in the briefest possible way. "England's Duty in Egypt" is the subject of a recent lecture by Mr. John Westlake, Q.C., who is opposed to annexation, and strenuously advocates self-government, very much over-rating, as we think, the superiority of the native Egyptians to our Indian fellow-subjects. "Impersonality and Evolution in Music," is by the well-known writer, Vernon Lee, who, in a very ingenious manner applies the principle of Evolution to the history and forms of Music. Mary Elizabeth Christie contributes a lively article on "Miss Burney's Novels," which, from the outline she gives of two of them, are still well worth reading as clever character-sketches of the last century. Lady Verney continues her somewhat too prejudiced articles on "Peasant Properties in Auvergne," rashly generalising, from her rapid observations during a short visit to the poorest and least progressive district of France, that the minute subdivision of land is more injurious to the State than the old feudal system, which is gone in France for ever, and the remnant of which will one day disappear in England also. The remaining articles are "British Policy in West Africa," by C. S. Salmon; "Representative Government for India," by Colonel R. D. Osborn; and "The Army, the Volunteers, and the Press," by Phil Robinson, who, himself a "Special Correspondent," recommends that the "Special" of the future should be recognised as a regular constituent of a camp, to be treated with public consideration; and adds a suggestion of very doubtful wisdom as one of the lessons of the Egyptian Campaign, that a garrison corps of the Volunteers should in future campaigns be attached to the army, to be entrusted with the defence of the lines of communication.

Returning to the Nineteenth Century, we find no less than four articles relating to the still all-absorbing question of Egypt. In the first, on "The Egyptian Question and the French Alliance," M. Joseph Reinach confesses the mistake committed by France in not acting with England, acknowledges the preponderating influence given to the victors of Tel-el-Kebir, but urges the re-establishment of the status quo ante Arabi, with the dual control and all the other unbearable evils against which the national party arose in just rebellion. O sancta simplicitas! Next Admiral Lord Dunsany, in an article on "England and the Suez Canal," contends for the preponderance of British control over the Canal as our highway to India or the construction by British capital of a new and wider canal, in order to counteract the anti-English policy of the patriotic Lesseps. Then General Sir E. Hamley gives a graphic account of "The Second Division at Tel-el-Kebir," who bore so much of the heat and burden of that memorable day. Finally, in the deeply interesting "Instructions to my Counsel," by "Ahmed Arabi the Egyptian," we have the great rebel's own defence admirably translated by his counsel, Mr. A. M. Broadley. It is a deeply interesting document, and proves conclusively that Arabi was not a self-seeking adventurer, but the leader of a movement which deserve to be styled both patriotic and national in the widest sense of the words. Good will, no doubt, be the result of the recent war for Egypt herself as well as for British interests; but when History comes to pronounce her impartial verdict, it will be that we had no more right to interfere with the internal affairs of Egypt than we had to send an army and fleet to the Crimea a quarter of a century ago. In the long run the Peace party are always proved right in principle, and nearly all our wars, both great and small, have originated from selfish views of our political and commercial interests.

The remaining articles are "Walt Whitman," a discriminating attempt by G. C. Macaulay to estimate the real value of a writer who is sometimes described as "the poet of America"; "Uncle Pat's Cabin," a painful account, by P. H. Bagenal, of the hopeless poverty of the agricultural labourers of Ireland; "Farming and Taxation," in which Lord Stanley of Alderley examines the part which taxation, sometimes unequal and unjust, bears in the present agricultural depression; and finally, "The Hamlet Saga," a very interesting account by Count de Falbe of the Danish history of Saxo-Græmmaticus in the twelfth century, from which the story of Hamlet is evidently derived.

Our Contemporaries.

THE LATE PRIMATE.

The Times says:—

Dr. Tait was certainly not a weak man, and he was a moderate man. As in every previous position he had occupied, he understood precisely what he had to do, and he did it manfully, steadily, unobtrusively, and yet effectually. He never magnified his office, nor gave himself the airs of a great prelate; but he held his high place in the world by the masculine force of a strong intelligence, and by the native dignity of a character which gave at least as much authority to his office as it derived from it. The reign of the late Primate deserves to be remembered with honour, because it was marked by a wisdom and charity which gave it far more influence for good than could ever have been obtained by the most rigid exercise of ecclesiastical authority.

The Morning Post says:—

Between Dr. Tait and the leaders of what is called, not very exactly, the Catholic school, there was a great gulf which he never passed. But it is as Archbishop of Canterbury that he will go down to posterity. Few of his predecessors have, on the whole, borne the office with greater dignity, or won a larger share of genuine respect and veneration. It has been our duty at times to write in strong depreciation of some portion of his policy, especially of that great mistake of his life the Public Worship Regulation Act. But when we turn to the personal qualities that adorned his private life it is impossible to speak too highly of him, and we only give expression to the feelings of the great majority of English Churchmen when we say that the whole Christian world will bear of his removal from us with reverent and unaffected regret.

The Daily News says:—

He had the caution and prudence of the Scot, and he applied it to the great concerns with which he had to do. His lot was cast in troublesome times, and his duty and happiness were to earn as far as was possible the beauty of the peace-makers. Such men do not make enthusiastic disciples, and they are very apt to be misunderstood by those whom they restrain. They have to moderate rather than to lead, to adjust differences rather than to strike out a great policy of their own. They do not make eras, but they cause the political and ecclesiastical machine to work more smoothly and more happily for all the while they live. It is too early as yet to estimate the extent of the late Archbishop's services to the Church over which he ruled and the times in which he exercised his episcopal authority, but it may be confidently said of him that few men who have occupied high positions in the Church or the world leave behind them a more cherished or more honourable memory."

The Daily Telegraph says:—

Dr. Tait may be said to have striven hard to combine the two schools within the Church and to create a sort of Anglican Methodism of his own. Some day, perhaps, this kind of eclectic Christianity may in its turn temporarily conquer. At any rate Dr. Tait did all in his power to hasten its advent.

IMMORTALITY WITHOUT GOD.

The Spectator comments on the theory, "which invents for sceptics a new horror," that while there is the most convincing proof that human beings survive death, the belief in a spiritually perfect God is not only a guess in the dark, but is a guess decidedly inconsistent with all the convergent lines of our actual knowledge:—

As well might the inhabitants of Pompeii, just before the eruption which destroyed the town, have talked of the "law of progress" as securing them a great future for Pompeii, as we poor creatures, just because death had not ended our existence, count upon "the law of progress" to secure us a great future in the spiritual life. Apart from faith in God, immortal life should be the most fearful of terrors to us all, should be what Shelley makes Beatrice Cenci conceive as "the wide, grey, lampless, deep, unpeopled world," in which we might meet with any destiny, however fearful, because a destiny controlled neither by wisdom nor love. It is awful enough to think of seventy years without God; but to think of eternity passed not only without God, but subject to the caprice of laws of the origin and end of which you know nothing, except that they will yield you, in all probability, no escape from your conscious existence, no such possibility even as death, is a conception of too grotesque a horror to be permanently consistent with the reason of mankind. To us, at least, it suggests a spiritual Bedlam or Earlswood, from which their could be no release, since the steady expectation of an endless existence to be lived under the absolute despotism of a soulless, purposeless, and enigmatic fate, would inevitably drive all beings whose minds could by any possibility be unhinged to either insanity or idiocy; or, if that be impossible in spiritual existence, then to chill, grey, hopeless melancholy.

PROFESSOR KOVACS IN AMERICA.

The Rev. C. W. Wendte, writing to the Newport (Rhode Island) News, gives the following interesting account of our friend Professor Kovacs's recent visit to Channing's birthplace:—

"Professor John Kovacs, president of the college at Kolosvar (Clausenburg), Hungary, yesterday morning, October 22, addressed a deeply interested audience, at the Channing Memorial Church, on the subject of general education and Unitarian church life in his own country. He began with a remark made to him by Louis Kossuth last year, and which is striking enough to quote, whether it come true or not:—'I rejoice over your connection with the English and American Unitarians. Spread their ideas and faith as widely as you can in Hungary. Their faith is the only faith which has a future; the only one that can influence the intelligent and interest the indifferent.'"

"Professor Kovacs related how in 1557 complete religious freedom had been proclaimed in Transylvania, which is a province of Hungary about the size of Scotland, and enjoyed at that time a similar independence.

"In 1566 the great preacher and reformer, Francis David, by his powerful address converted King, Court, and country to the Socinian view, and two years later Unitarianism was recognized by law as the religion of the State. David, however, progressed too far for that day. He taught the pure humanity of Christ, and was cast into prison for heresy, where he died a martyr to his convictions. For three hundred years Unitarianism has maintained itself in that country, though undergoing great persecution and suffering at the hands of the Jesuit and illiberal Austrian and Hungarian rulers. The large-hearted and noble Emperor Joseph II. again granted them their religious rights, but could not restore their endowments. With the restitution of the Hungarian constitution the cause of liberalism in religion also gained a great victory. At present there are 109 churches of this faith in Hungary, many of them quite large, and holding from one to four thousand people. Each church has also a school attached, and the professor holds a commission from the ministry of education to visit and report concerning our American public schools and colleges. He is also deeply interested in securing the endowment of two American professorships in his own college, one of which is to bear the name of Dr. Channing, whose entire works have been translated into the Hungarian tongue, and whose catechism every Unitarian child in that country can repeat by heart. The ladies of the Unitarian Church in Newport meditate an entertainment towards this object.

"Perhaps no American is so well and widely known in Hungary as Channing, whose works are found in Calvinistic and Lutheran households as well as in Unitarian homes. He is revered as a prophet in that country.

"Professor Kovacs visited yesterday (October 22), with an enthusiasm and reverence which was really touching to behold, the scenes identified with the early life of this noble son of Newport. He also lunched with Herbert Spencer and other visitors and residents of our town, and is full of delight at its beauty and interest."

Mr. W. ROSSITER, of the South London Free Library and Art School in Kennington-lane, is delivering a course of free lectures this month on "F. D. Maurice and Eternal Punishment," "Third Class Through Spain," and "Darwinism and Immortality."

Correspondence.

THE REV. J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Your inquiry about Mr. J. M. Cobban and his recent appointment to the Blackley pulpit reminds me of Punch's old joke: "Who's this comin' down the road?" "A stranger." "Eave 'arf a brick at 'im."

Mr. Cobban originally intended to enter the Congregational Ministry. He was a student of New College, and matriculated in honours at the University of London in 1869. In consequence of changed opinions, and for other reasons which did him no discredit, he left college before his course was completed, and was for a considerable time engaged in teaching. Of late years he has been occupied in literary work of various kinds. He is not unknown at the offices of some of your chief contemporaries, and of his novel, "The Cure of Souls," published three years ago, papers differing as widely as the Saturday Review and the Nonconformist spoke in terms of high praise.

I have known Mr. Cobban intimately for more than four years. He joined my congregation in Scarborough, and left it only when he returned to London. His recent residence in London has not been a long one, and for sufficient reasons he has not obtruded himself on the notice of the Unitarian community. His resolve—if some post of quiet usefulness should offer—to engage in the work to which he had originally dedicated himself is not a hasty one, though it has taken practical shape rather rapidly at last. I had the pleasure of making him and his congregation at Blackley known to each other. He is largely a stranger to Unitarians yet; but I believe that he will do sound work among us.

Now, Sir, that I have given you the information for which you asked, you must allow me a final word of protest against the way in which you asked for it. The form of your question about Mr. Cobban makes it anything but a welcome to a stranger; it is not even a courteous inquiry; it is simply "arf a brick." But I hope my friend will survive it.

DENDY AGATE.

Brookfield Parsonage, Gorton, Dec. 3.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—First let me confess my sins, and withdraw the statement I made about the Assurance Companies, and only express my regret for their sake that they do not make a difference between moderate drinkers and total abstainers. In time they will come to do so; and a good deal of difference is, I expect, already made, not publicly, but by the reports of the doctors. Gout, rheumatism, and many other ills that are heirs of alcohol taken in moderate quantities do influence the rates of insurance. The results given in "R. S.'s" letter of last week speak pretty plainly also, and that letter obviates the necessity of further words on this point.

Nor do I think that I need answer the other replies the writer of your article has made to me in the Inquirer of November 25. I may leave to Sir Wm. Gull, Dr. Andrew Clark, Sir H. Thompson, and a number of others, the support of Dr. Richardson's carefully conducted experiments on the question as to whether alcohol is a food or not. Science has made a few steps further on this matter since the "Symposium" was written in the Contemporary Review; and when Dr. Clark says that in his opinion perfectly good health will always be injured even by small doses of alcohol, and that it is capable of proof beyond all possibility of question that alcohol in ordinary circumstances not only does not help work, but is a serious hinderer of work; and that speaking solemnly and carefully in the presence of truth, seven cases out of ten in his hospital owed their ill health to alcohol, and that certainly more than three fourths of the disorders in what we call "fashionable life" arise from the use of this drug—beyond the exceedingly minute doses which may be taken without any obvious influence on the human frame; when this is said in that way, and when physician after physician are now coming to say the same thing, more or less strongly, I can scarcely be blamed for saying that the statement that alcohol is a poison is not to be controverted. Of course, I did not mean that there were none who denied that it was a poison. There are multitudes whom no proof will convince that anything they like is poison. But the proof is there, nevertheless. As to Dr. Rayner's letter, it is of such a kind that I would earnestly beg him, in the interest of the cause I plead for, to write a great number of letters which shall make similar assertions. I hope some of the scientific men will get hold of his letter. Without being an expert, I think I could even tackle him myself.

The point I most wished to speak to in the first article of your writer is an important one. Whether the interference of the law is justifiable? Your writer objects to Local Option, or further restraint of the free sale and purchase of alcohol. I spoke of that subject on Sunday in the hope, among other hopes, that you would allow a portion of the sermon to appear in your "Liberal Pulpit." I send it to you in that hope, and will be grateful if you will insert it.

Meanwhile I congratulate the writer of your article that he has ceased to be a moderate drinker, and has become a total abstainer. I wish I knew why, for the reason might help my argument for total abstinence. I did think his article cold, and I did not think that he cared enough about the misery, crime, poverty and disease that alcohol has brought on England. I do think still that he must be ignorant of the full extent of the evil done by this enemy of the human race, or else he could not look upon its work with the "calm gaze" with which he considers the rest of the question. "Calm gazes will not do; and it is better to have the fervour of a recent convert"—though I have not observed that very ancient converts lose fervour, but the contrary—than to throw cold water on any effort, legal or otherwise, to redeem the country from this plague. I know there are thousands who agree with him, who would be glad to get drunkenness done away with, but who dislike and even hate heroic measures, and who want to convert the devil while he is in full and triumphant career by telling him quietly how very ill he is behaving; even perhaps, as many do, by having one or two glasses with him while he is taking twenty. It won't do. No man who cares for his country ought to be ignorant of what alcohol is really doing; and once he knows, his gaze is no longer calm. When Chicago was on fire from end to end, those who, at home in their rooms, only saw the red light in the sky and thought that a warehouse or two were on fire, were quiet enough—but the others who saw and knew—

STOFFORD BROOKE.

1, Manchester-square, Dec. 4.

WAS CHRIST UNIQUE?

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—If I had time, and you would afford me the space, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to answer, to the best of my ability, the series of eleven questions propounded by "H.C." I was not, however, desirous so much to give information on this subject as to elicit it. I am seeking for the fact which (assuming that we reject the legendary view) may be urged to prevent our placing Christ in the same moral category with other pre-eminently good and wise men, and in the same historical category with founders of other religions. Christ occupies a remarkable place in history, as having given the name and a starting-point to a religion which, with all its strange varieties and singular departures from the spirit of the Teacher whose name it bears, is yet the religion established among the most energetic races of to-day.

I say that Mohammed also occupies a remarkable place in history as having organised and successfully established in his own lifetime a new religion which has systematically preserved its essential solidarity and is still a great political factor. I do not thereby invite a comparison of the merits of the two religions. That is the very thing which I deprecate. All religions represent, in a more or less mixed state, the efforts of the human mind to attain and formulate divine truth; but if, like Brahmanism and Mohammedanism, they have not lent themselves to human progress, changing with the changing spirit of the time, they cannot be the religions of the races which are intellectually the most advanced. There are many religions, although Religion itself is one. So Beauty is one; but, because the beauty of the hyacinth is not that of the rose, need we trouble ourselves as to which is absolutely the most beautiful?

"No creature of this earthly ball Is like another, all in all."

And so, in a sense, every individual is unique. And each great religion is unique in the sense of having elements which are peculiar to it.

I fear, therefore, that, apart from other considerations, it would only complicate this interesting inquiry if I were to attempt to answer seriatim the questions of "H. C." having reference to the comparative merits of Buddhism and Christianity.

I would rather hear of the positive merits of both; but unfortunately each ethnographical group is too much affected by the idola specus to look for merit outside its own historical limits. The few remarks which I have to add will partly comply with "H. C.'s" wish.

I do not know that Christ established an "economy," an "organisation," or a "political conception."

It is a somewhat probable opinion that Christ favoured a community of goods and a life of mendicancy. The Christian monastic orders appear to have regarded Christ as their Exemplar.

As one who thinks religion is best served by reverent free-thought, I should not wish to call either Christ or Buddha master. There need be no more rivalry between the great teachers of the world than between the great poets. Their utterances alike come from the great heart of humanity, and are God-inspired.

What may be the cause of Buddhist formalism I do not know. It is easy to see that Christian formalism has arisen from the failure to recognise that the work of the teachers in the past does not relieve us from the duty at all times of actively recruiting over our own spiritual and rational functions.

It is an extremely interesting point to consider what would have been the result if Buddhism had been presented to the Western races, either instead of or only with Christianity. As a matter of fact Christianity, representing amongst other things the comparative culture of the South of Europe, was the only religion presented to the Northern races as the alternative to a rude heathenism.

In the acceptance of Christianity by those races I fail to see a unique historic marvel. Turning to Buddhism, I believe it does not appear, but as far as we know at present the followers of Buddha have never used persecution or forcible means for the propagation of their religion. On the other hand the propagation of Christianity after the first three centuries was too frequently accomplished by means from which the tender soul of Christ would have shrunk in horror. Allow me to substantiate this by a few condensed extracts. From Giese's "Ecclesiastical History" I take the following:—

"Theodosius forbade apostasy to paganism. . . Gratian took away all privileges from the pagan worship. . . The heathen were forbidden by imperial laws (of Theodosius) even to repair to the temples, and the destruction of the splendid temple of Serapis (391) by the violent Theophilus, bishop of Alexandria, after a bloody contest, announced the total overthrow of paganism in the East. . .

"The new Platonic philosophers at Athens, and among them even the celebrated Proclus (485) were forced to conceal themselves most carefully, because they rejected Christianity.

"In Norway Christianity was obliged in the beginning to encounter very severe struggles, till Olaf Trygvessen (995-1000) undertook the conversion of his countrymen by force, which work was completed by Olaf the Holy in the same mode.

"The severe measures of Boleslaus the Pious secured the triumph of Christianity in Bohemia."

The following is from Mosheim's "Ecclesiastical History":—

"To Stephen the son of Geysa belongs the chief honour of converting the Hungarians.

"By his menaces, punishments, and rewards he compelled nearly the whole nation to renounce the idolatry of their ancestors. His persevering zeal in establishing Christian worship among the Hungarians procured him the title and the honours of a Saint in succeeding times."

I may add that the church of St. Olave, in Southwark, still perpetuates the memory of one of these saints.

Whether Buddhism would have fared better than Christianity under all the circumstances it is impossible to say. One is inclined to think that, if in addition to the strong practical tendency of Christianity and the emphasis which it laid on the Divine Fatherhood, the characteristic elements of Buddhism had been also present—its rationalism, its philosophy of the consequences of acts, and its all-embracing tenderness—religion and humanity would have largely gained by the result.

From what might have been, we have to descend to the prosaic level of fact; but with considerations of this kind before us it is difficult to see how we can consistently relegate the history of Christianity to the sphere of the miraculous or exceptionally marvellous, and so derive therefrom an argument for anything preterhuman or unique in the character of Christ.

S.

POPULAR SERVICES IN LONDON.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—It is intended to hold popular services in the Bermondsey Town Hall, which is in the centre of a large working-class population, the first meeting being on Sunday evening, January 7, 1883. In order to ensure the meetings being well known, it is considered indispensable that bills of invitation should be left by friends at every house in the neighbourhood, and we earnestly ask for the help of volunteers for this duty. Names may be sent either to myself here, or to J. D. Van der Straaten, Esq., 7, Sussex-terrace, Alpha-road, New Cross.

It will be necessary also to secure a numerous choir. Ladies or gentlemen who are willing to give assistance in the choir will oblige by communicating with W. Tate, Esq., 29, Mincing-lane, with information as to the parts they offer to take. In both instances the kind service will be doubly welcome if offered at once.

HENRY IERSON.

37, Norfolk-street, Strand, Dec. 8.

CHICHESTER.—At the request of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association the Rev. R. E. Birks, late of Tamworth, has removed to Chichester, in order to resuscitate the congregation in Baffin's-lane Chapel, which has been closed for upwards of twenty years.

WORKING MEN'S CLUB AND INSTITUTE UNION.—The annual soirée of this society was held on Monday evening at Exeter Hall, Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., presiding, and among those present being the Dean of Westminster, Captain Verney, R.N., Rev. Thornhill Webber, Mr. Mark H. Judge, and Mr. Hastings Sands. After a number of prizes for swimming, rowing, and rifle shooting had been presented by Mrs. Sands to the successful members of the various clubs, Mr. Fishbourne, on behalf of the members of the Union, presented to Mr. Hodgson Pratt a testimonial, consisting of a handsome clock and candelabra in bronze, subscribed for by 15,000 working men in recognition of his patient and unselfish labours.—Mr. Pratt, in acknowledging the compliment, said it had been his desire from boyhood to do something for those whose lives were lives of toil and anxiety, and who derived so little pleasure or advantage from the civilization of which they were all so proud; and he was grateful to God and to his fellow workers that he had been able to do something, as this presentation showed, towards that end. He thought that men possessed of leisure and social position should utilise those benefits, not for their own advantage, but for that of their fellow men. There were many such men who were anxious to break down the un-Christian barriers that existed, and bring about the unity between men of every class that was growing daily more necessary as the government of the country became, as it was right it should, more popular, and the society furnished a great and wide field for their efforts. Working men's clubs might seem humble affairs, but he believed there was something divine in trying to make men's lives purer and nobler, and it was a duty to assist in such a work. An excellent concert followed the more formal business of the evening.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER IN AMERICA.

At a complimentary banquet given Nov. 9 to Mr. Herbert Spencer at New York, the Hon. W. M. Evarts in the chair, and a distinguished selected company of two hundred present, Mr. Herbert Spencer in the course of returning thanks for the toast of the evening is reported to have said:—

"The savage only thinks of the present satisfactions, and leaves the future uncared for. Contrariwise the American, eagerly pursuing a future good, almost ignores what good the passing day offers him, and when the future good is gained, he neglects that while striving for some still remoter good. What I have seen and heard has forced on me the belief that this slow change from habitual inactivity to persistent activity has reached the extreme, from which must begin the reaction. Everywhere I have been struck with the number of faces which told in strong lines of the burdens to be borne. I have been struck, too, with the large proportion of grey-haired men, and inquiries have brought out the fact that with you hair commonly begins to turn some ten years earlier than with us. Moreover, in every circle, I have met men who had themselves suffered from nervous collapse, due to stress of business, or named friends who either killed themselves by overwork or had been permanently incapacitated, or wasted long periods in endeavours to recover health. I do but echo the opinion of all observant persons I have spoken to that immense injury is being done by this high-pressure life, the physique is being undermined. It extends to the man, father, citizen. We hear a good deal about the 'vile body,' and many are encouraged by the phrase to transgress the laws of health. But nature quietly suppresses those who treat thus disrespectfully one of her highest products, and leaves the world to be peopled by the descendants of those who are not so foolish. Beyond these immediate mischiefs are remoter mischiefs. Exclusive devotion to work has the result that amusements cease to please, and when relaxation becomes imperative, life becomes dreary from the lack of its sole interest, the interest in business."

Mr. Spencer before concluding his remarks on the occasion relieved the picture he had drawn by throwing on it the light of a hopeful future:—

"The truth is, there needs to be a revised ideal of truth. Look back through the past or abroad through the present, and we find that the ideal of life is variable, and depends on social conditions. Everyone knows that to be a successful warrior was the highest aim among all the ancient peoples of note, as it is still among many barbarous peoples. We have changed all that in modern civilised societies, and especially in England and still more in America. With the decline of militant activity and the growth of industrial activity, occupations once disgraced have become honourable. The duty to work has taken the place of the duty to fight, and in the one case, as in the other, the ideal of life has become so well established that scarcely any dream of questioning it. Practically business has been substituted for war as the purpose of existence. Is this modern ideal to survive through the future? I think not. While all other things undergo continuous change it is impossible that ideals should remain fixed. The ancient ideal was appropriate to the age of the conquest by man over man and the spread of the strongest races. The modern ideal is appropriate to ages to which the conquest of earth and subjection of the powers of nature to human use is the predominant need. But, hereafter, when both these ends have in the main been achieved, the ideal formed will probably differ considerably from the present one."

CANTERBURY.—A discussion took place in Canterbury Town Council on Wednesday on a motion made by Alderman Hart that the Museum, Library, and Reading Room should be opened every Sunday after 2 P.M. The motion was eventually lost by 12 votes to 4.

THE CONGREGATIONAL JUBILEE FUND.—At a meeting of the committee of this Fund, held at the Memorial-hall, it was reported that the promises now exceed £210,000, exclusive of what is being raised by the Welsh churches in England and Wales. During the meeting a cheque for £1,000 was received from an anonymous donor, who described himself as "A friend to the removal of chapel debts."

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary
Newspaper, and Record of Reverent
Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price
of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following
terms, post free :—

Yearly (52 weeks)	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid)	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks)	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid)	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks)	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid)	2s. 6d.

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to Mr.
WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH
AND SON.

The Inquirer

IN

MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL.

In addition to the ordinary channels through which the INQUIRER may be obtained, Messrs.
Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street, Manchester, will deliver the paper every Saturday without extra charge, within a radius of a mile from the Exchange, if prepaid for three or six months. Mr. Henry Young, Bookseller, of 12,
South Castle-street, Liverpool, will supply the INQUIRER on similar terms. At both places
the paper will also be on sale at the counter.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1882.

WRITING on the subject of the decline of clerical authority, a contributor to the North American Review, having given an historical sketch of the changes which have taken place and have brought clerical authority into its present discredit, points out that it is not to be inferred "that the proper function of the Christian ministry is likely to cease, or their legiti-mate agency to become insignificant." The born preacher, teacher, and ecclesiastical administrator—men, at least, in whom these native faculties are duly trained, developed, and exercised—will still have great power, and command a following; indeed, the relinquishment by the clergy of "attributes which they ought not to exercise, to which they have no peculiar claim, may be for their own advantage, and may serve to augment their rightful influence." There is some truth in this, adds the Christian World, although it is doubtless the case also that the superstition which regards the official, rather than or even apart from the personal claims to reverence, will long linger. The more conven-tionalism gives place to reality in the clerical profession, the more will strong and healthy-minded men be disposed to enter it; and in this profession, as in all others, "there is always room at the top."

LADY BLOOMFIELD, in her recently published "Reminiscences of Court and Diplomatic Life," gives the following stories as told to her by the Queen, who is represented as fond of a joke.
One was that the mother of a girl who was going into a duke's establishment gave her daughter strict injunctions to say "Your grace" if ever the Duke spoke to her. The girl promised to pay attention to this, and departed. A few days after the duke met her in a passage and asked her some question, which, instead of answering, the poor girl immediately began, "For what I have received," &c. On another occasion an inspector was examining the children in the duke's school. Among other questions, he asked the meaning of the word "grace," upon which all the children, with one accord, exclaimed that it meant the Duke of Rutland.

It will be seen from an advertisement in another column that the new Unitarian church in Avondale-road, Peckham, will be opened on Wednesday afternoon next by the Rev. Dr.
Sadler. After the service there will be a public meeting in the evening, under the genial presidency of Mr. Edwin Lawrence, LL.B., in which several well known ministers and others will take part. The church is a handsome and commodious structure, and we hope that Mr.
Carter and his zealous congregation will be encouraged by a large attendance on so interesting an occasion.

It is stated in one of the daily papers that Archbishop Tait's generosity is exemplified by a fact known to very few of his friends. After it had cost him £4,000 to deprive a clergyman for a serious ecclesiastical offence which he could not overlook, he continued for from twelve to fifteen years contributing money towards the support of the man who had involved him in this expense. This story is one of many of a like character, though happily in few instances was so much personal sacrifice involved.

AMONG the most important deaths this week are those of Professor Challis, the eminent mathematical scholar of Cambridge; Anthony Trollope, the genial novelist, who, although by no means in the highest rank, charmed many a weary hour in a busy life with his readable and graceful sketches of social and political character, and, more than most men, knew the inmost recesses of the clerical character; and, lastly, Louis Blanc, the chosen leader of the Parisian working-classes, a Communist and Socialist in theory, but a moralist and a philosopher rather than a revolutionary actor. "He was a propagandist of the pen and not of the sword." The Editor of the Inquirer calls to mind with pleasure an interview with Louis Blanc in Paris the year after the Franco-German war, when he was actively engaged in establishing the second Republic. We first met him on the platform at the great meeting at St. James's Hall, where he was a deeply interested spectator of the reception given to Keshub Chunder Sen. He received us in one of the ante-chambers at Versailles with great courtesy, and introduced us into a Chamber of Deputies, then presided over by M. Grévy, now the President of the Republic. He was brought up by a Catholic priest, but utterly broke with the Roman Catholic Church after 1848. His wife, whom he lost early in life, was a liberal Protestant, a member of our friend Pasteur Dide's congregation. The Paris correspondent of the Daily News records the interesting incident that one night in walking from the Institute to the Rue Royale, where he lived, he said: "I am a Freethinker, impelled by sentiment to clutch at the doctrine of immortality.
I could not bear to think that I am never again to meet Christina." In his latter years he found much pleasure in conversing with Pasteur Dide, who was with his wife in her dying hours.

THE Rev. Dendy Agate in the singular letter we publish in another column takes exception to "the form" of a question we asked last week respecting a gentleman whom he appears to have taken under his patronage, and on his sole responsibility recommended to the ministry of the old Presbyterian Church at Blackley, near Manchester. Our precise words were, "Can anyone inform us who Mr. J. Maclaren Cobban, of London, is, and what claim he has had to be regarded as a Unitarian minister?" Now we respectfully submit that the introduction of a hitherto unknown gentleman into our ministry is a public matter that concerns not only the congregation who invite him but the general body of ministers and others with whom he is supposed to enter into religious communion and fraternal relations. Now "Mr.
Cobban, of London," was unknown to the omniscient Secretary of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, unknown to the Secretary of the Presbyterian Board, unknown to the Secretary of the Sunday School Association, or to the editors of any of our denominational journals. He is equally unknown, it appears, to the professors in either of our colleges, or to the principal ministers and laymen in the district in which he is now settled. He appears to be introduced solely on the responsibility of Mr. Dendy Agate, himself the most recent arrival, if not the youngest minister in the district. We submit that our queries were natural and reasonable, and Mr. Dendy Agate would have been wiser if he had answered them in a more courteous tone and without a gratuitous sneer. With all possible respect for Mr. Dendy Agate and his unknown friend we take the liberty of doubting whether a very short course of study at a Congregational college, and the authorship of a novel, the very title of which we have never heard before, are altogether adequate qualifications for entrance upon the Unitarian ministry in these times of active intellectual inquiry.

WE see accounts from time to time of a Unitarian Club in Boston, U.S., whose meetings seem to be unusually interesting. At a recent meeting the Rev. Dr. G. E. Ellis read a valuable address on the Bible, of which we shall give some account next week. President Eliot, of Harvard College, followed with a plea for candour and sincerity in theological study. Dr. W. B. Carpenter gave an interesting account of the progress Liberalism is making in Scotland. The Revs. Pitt Dillingham, Joseph May, and C. W. Wendt made stirring speeches, which brought forth echoes of applause. General Grant, being in the hotel, was brought into the club and introduced by Governor Long as "the latest Unitarian convert." He was received with great warmth, and in a speech of sixty seconds returned thanks for the welcome he received.

THE Council of the National Unitarian Conference recently held at Saratoga has just issued an address on the work of the Conference, in which it is stated that two hundred and twenty churches in New England raise and expend annually 800,000 dols. for "ecclesiastical, missionary, and philanthropic purposes." More than 250,000 dols. of this amount is expended on enterprises outside the churches themselves.
The address also states that a committee has been appointed to raise half a million dollars for a theological school in Cleveland, Mr. Wade having agreed to give by far the largest share.
Of the endowment fund of 50,000 dols. proposed in 1880 for the Meadville Theological School 30,000 dols. has been raised, and a committee has been appointed to collect 10,000 dols. for a church in the university town of Madison, Wisconsin. The Council expresses the belief that the American Unitarian Association should have, at least, 50,000 dols. a year, and it makes an apportionment of this amount to the various Unitarian Conferences, the largest single amount being that allotted to the Suffolk Conference, in Massachusetts—13,000 dols. The address says, further:—

"The Council would be glad to report, a year hence, that twenty new churches had been added to our register. They believe that there are so many places where churches are needed and where, before many years, most of them could sustain themselves. But the first step costs. If for ten years the existing churches will enable the missionary board to take such steps, we shall not be obliged ten years hence to look upon our work as that simply of those who infuse a little pure life into other churches, in the hope that it may freshen stagnant pools of mediæval falsehood. We shall be able to call a Conference really representing the whole nation, and we shall do justice to the vast area where now we have no established congregations."

The mission of the Rev. Mr. Mayo, in the South, "a mission with the single purpose of establishing on a better basis the American common schools," needs 1,500 dols. to continue it another year.

STATUES are multiplying in London, and it is gratifying to see that poets, philosophers and philanthropists are at last receiving their due meed of public homage. Most of our great towns now have statues to their local benefactors and celebrities. It is time that in the metropolis we should render the same honour to men whose fame is not merely local, but world-wide. Of the greatest genius of Scotland there is, as far as we know, no statue in England, although there are several across the border; and it is hardly necessary to say that most Englishmen are as proud of the genius of Robert Burns as are his more immediate countrymen. We are glad to see that our friend and correspondent, Mr. J. G. Crawford, proposes to supply the omission at his own sole cost, and has with that view addressed the following letter to the Metropolitan Board of Works:—

To the Chairman and Members of the Metropolitan Board of Works.

Gentlemen,—I am anxious, should a suitable public site be obtained, to erect at my own cost a statue in London of Robert Burns, the poet of Scotland.

I have arranged that it shall be executed by Sir John Steel, of Edinburgh, sculptor to Her Majesty, and that the pedestal shall be entrusted to Messrs. Macdonald, Field and Co., of Aberdeen.

The figure of the poet will be in bronze, and the monument altogether be about 16 to 17 feet high, say 7 to 8 feet for the pedestal, and 9 to 10 feet for the figure.

It has been suggested to me, and that suggestion I, with greatest respect, beg to submit to you, that an appropriate site would be found in the West-most garden, which is between Charing-cross Railway Bridge and Westminster Bridge, of the Thames Embankment.

Sir John Steel, I believe, thinks that he could complete this work of art within six or seven months from this time.

Should I receive the sanction of your honourable Board, the statue would in all probability be ready about midsummer next.—I am, gentlemen, your most obedient servant,

JOHN GORDON CRAWFORD.

London: 38, Mornington-road,
Regent's-park, Nov. 21.

We imagine that the Board of Works will hardly for a moment hesitate to accept so generous an offer, and we may hope to have one more appropriate ornament added to our open-air Walhalla.

Religious Intelligence.

THE LONDON AUXILIARY SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

THIRTY-FOURTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting of this Association was held on Wednesday evening, in the new spacious schoolroom of Stamford-street Chapel; W. BLAKE ODGERS, Esq., LL.D., in the chair. There were also present Mr. I. M. Wade, secretary, Mr. Howard Clarke, assistant-secretary, the Revs. T. W. Freckelton, T. L. Marshall, J. D. Van der Straaten, W. C. Bowie, R. Spears, C. H. Waid, F. Summers, C. Wooller; Mrs. Hall, Miss Preston, Miss Pritchard ("Aunt Amy"), Miss Ellis (Maidstone), Miss Howe; Messrs. Drummond, Anthony, H. Tayler, Tarrant, F. Taylor, Robinson, Whitehead, P. Moore, of Manchester New College, J. E. Mace (Penterden), R. Bartram, S. S. Tayler, W. Plimpton, H. Jeffery, E. Plimpton, F. W. Turner, N. M. Tayler, F. Allen, Ion Pritchard, &c.

The CHAIRMAN congratulated Mr. Bowie and the Stamford-street congregation on the possession of the capital room in which they were assembled, and hoped that it would soon be out of debt. It was very desirable that the teachers should often meet for the purpose of interchanging thoughts on different methods of teaching. There was even more need of this society now than there was twenty years ago, because in former days part of the Sunday-school work was secular, and now all that is changed, and the true object of the Sunday-school can be realised in teaching religion and endeavouring to form a religious character. It was very difficult to teach religion or give a Bible lesson without preparation. Unitarians are not taught their religion as definitely as they should be, and they sometimes feel a difficulty in exactly defining their faith to a person who is not a Unitarian. The belief, too, which a teacher wishes to teach is not always precisely the same which he was taught in youth. It was essential that the teachers should prepare themselves by getting a clear, definite idea of what their own religion is, and what religious principles they intended to teach. Then there is the difficulty of expressing our religious views, because we are not accustomed to teach our faith in the form of a catechism. A young and inexperienced teacher might do well to sit by some older and experienced teacher, and watching how he teaches. In orthodox Sunday-schools there are often model teaching lessons, which might be introduced with advantage into our own schools. The Sunday-school has only of late years got into its true province of doing its own proper work. But it is no use for teachers to attempt to teach religion without preparing for their work, and the exact use of these meetings is to compare various modes of teaching in order to gain experience of different styles and systems, and to ascertain which is the best way of instilling religious truth into the minds of children and forming a religious character—(applause).

Mr. WADE (Secretary) then read the following COMMITTEE'S REPORT:—

The increasing interest manifested by the congregations in the Sunday-school work, noticed with so much satisfaction in previous reports, happily still continues. The number of schools, as well as scholars, show a steady advance upon previous returns, and there could hardly be a healthier sign of the growth of these institutions than the efforts which have of late been made, and are still making, to secure better building accommodation for the number of children that press in upon many of the schools in various parts of London. Within the last few years Stepney has twice had to enlarge its borders. Kentish-town has followed not far behind it, and is still asking for more room and more help. Avondale-road has so fine a school-room that, but for the great generosity of its friends, it might almost have dispensed with the new church which is next week to be opened there. Blackfriars Mission has preserved its steady growth, until it has filled every room in the house not very long ago taken for it. George's-row has recently gained a considerable extension of premises, which bid fair to be speedily filled; and one of the last new and successful efforts to secure sufficient space to labour in, is the commodious building in which you are now assembled.

The opening of the new branch of the Domestic Mission at Kentish-town has been attended with remarkable success up to the present. As soon as the school was commenced the children crowded into it, and on the second Sunday over fifty children attended in the morning, and eighty-four in the afternoon; a large number of them also attended the evening service. It is perhaps premature to speak of the school as already formed, for it may be fairly anticipated that there will be a slight falling off in attendance after the novelty is somewhat worn off; but with a good staff of teachers, home visiting and careful management, it is impossible not to entertain a lively hope of its permanent success.

At Bethnal-green also a Sunday-school is just on the eve of commencement at the new place of worship taken by the London District Unitarian Association. The Rev. Robert Spears and his most active congregation having promised to lend it their fostering aid, this in itself is a sufficient guarantee that the school will get well established.

The Deptford school, which has been revived within the last twelve or eighteen months, is making a steady advance, both as regards numbers and in the efficiency of its work, and the revival of the school is helping to a great extent the vitality of the congregation which had previously sunk to a very low ebb. The number of children now on the books is ninety-six—the average attendance sixty-five.

The old Worship-street Chapel, now removed to Shoreditch, has constructed under its fine new building such spacious accommodation and well-formed appliances as would gladden the hearts of some scores of our teachers could they but see anywhere in the near future a chance of labouring in such light, airy, and comfortable rooms.

There are three or four other schools that sound as if they were on the point of asking aid for such a purpose, and amongst those which urgently need better rooms are Newington-green, Notting-hill, Hackney, and East Surrey-grove. It will be remembered, too, with pleasure that this very day Mr. David Ainsworth, M.P., is announced to preside at the opening of a sale of work which has for its object the raising a fund for building a new schoolroom at the back of the chapel at Stratford, a venture in which you will, the committee feel sure, desire to wish them every success.

Side by side with these healthy indications of progress is to be observed the increasing vitality on the part of the teachers. A greater desire is now evinced to meet oftener to take counsel together, and mutually aid each other in promoting the good work which seems more and more to ask their help.

The value of the special religious service suggested by the Rev. Dr. Drummond, and held for the first time at Hampstead in the autumn of last year, was found to be so great that your committee not only thought it well to institute a similar one in the spring, but from many encouraging expressions which reached them they resolved to risk the holding of another in the fall of the present year, and were rewarded by finding it quite as successful as the two previous ones. They invite from you this evening an expression of your opinion as to whether two other such services may not with equal advantage be held during the ensuing year.

The service in the spring was held at Portland-street Chapel, and the conference which followed took place at the schoolroom in Little Titchfield-street. The Rev. Dr. Drummond conducted the service, and Miss Anna Swanwick read an admirable paper at the conference which gave rise to a very interesting and animated discussion. The Rev. P. H. Wicksteed presided at this meeting.

The autumn service was held at Islington on the 16th October last. It was conducted by the Rev. T. W. Freckelton, and the Rev. Dr. Drummond presided at the conference. Mr. Frederick Allen, of the Clarence-road school, read a very practical and most useful paper on "The Aids and Hindrances to Sunday-school Work," which also gave rise to valuable discussion.

In addition to these gatherings there was a very successful and delightful "Service of Song," held at Essex-street Chapel in the early part of the year. The subject chosen was "Elijah" (not Mendelssohn's), the text of which was impressively read by the Rev. J. Panton Ham, and was musically illustrated by a choir formed and led by Mr. George Callow, of Stamford-street School. The talented organist, Mr. F. W. Noakes, and the choir gave their services most cheerfully and wholly gratuitously, and to Mr. Noakes especially the Committee feel they are much indebted, not only for the help so willingly rendered on that occasion, but at all other times whenever any meeting of your Association has required his aid.

For several years past an aggregate meeting of the schools has been held annually at Midsummer. The great increase in the number of scholars and the by no means diminishing difficulty of getting them safely through the street, suggested to your committee the expedient of dividing the schools into three groups; one to meet at Hampstead, another at Stepney, and the third at Essex-street Chapel. This plan was accordingly carried out, and as the chapels used were all not only well filled, but crowded with children, parents, teachers, and friends, it becomes a matter for serious consideration whether, until better accommodation than any which our existing chapels afford can be provided for such purposes, these divided but simultaneous meetings may not with advantage be continued.

The Provident Society which was formed a year or to ago in connection with your Association has still much way to make before it can be said to be well and satisfactorily established. Some of the schools preferred to form similar institutions after their own plans, and independently of the Central Society or the local guilds in connection with it. Others have not yet seen their way to commencing a movement of this kind at all. If they could once get over this initial difficulty, and all could unite upon some good working plan by which the desired end could be accomplished, it is impossible to believe but that such an institution would be a most valuable adjunct to the practical operations of the school purposes.

It was stated last year, you may remember, that the expenses attending the raising of the centenary memorial in the forecourt of Essex-street Chapel had exceeded the subscriptions collected for that purpose by a considerable amount, but that whatever remained unpaid was due only to the newspapers for advertisements and to the managing committee for printing and postages. You will be glad to learn that further efforts have now been made to clear off the deficit, and that the matter now rests entirely with the treasurer and secretary.

The Returns as to the number of children, and teachers on the rolls of the schools in union, as taken from the statistics supplied to the Sunday-school Association in the early part of the present year, are as follows:—

Schools.	No. on the Books.	Average Morning Attendance.	Average Afternoon Attend.	Total No. of Teachers.
Avondale-road—
1882 ...	82 ...	— ...	51 ...	8
1881 ...	72 ...	— ...	38 ...	5
Blackfriars' Mission—
1882 ...	— ...	26 ...	118 ...	15
1881 ...	85 ...	26 ...	54 ...	10
George's-row Mission—
1882 ...	261 ...	136 ...	207 ...	—
1881 ...	262 ...	110 ...	190 ...	37
Hackney—
1882 ...	140 ...	20 ...	102 ...	14
1881 ...	138 ...	21 ...	91 ...	14
Hampstead—
1882 ...	33 ...	22 ...	26 ...	16
1881 ...	42 ...	23 ...	25 ...	15
Islington—
1882 ...	99 ...	23 ...	73 ...	17
1881 ...	84 ...	— ...	62 ...	10
Kentish Town, Clarence-road—
1882 ...	203 ...	89 ...	131 ...	34
1881 ...	180 ...	71 ...	114 ...	24
Notting Hill—
1882 ...	201 ...	31 ...	130 ...	19
1881 ...	213 ...	34 ...	124 ...	20
Peckham General Baptist—
1882 ...	175 ...	45 ...	110 ...	14
1881 ...	120 ...	35 ...	80 ...	9
Portland British Sunday School—
1882 ...	198 ...	87 ...	142 ...	23
1881 ...	223 ...	89 ...	142 ...	23
Spicer-street Mission—
1882 ...	115 ...	66 ...	106 ...	22
1881 ...	147 ...	63 ...	89 ...	22
Stamford-street—
1882 ...	200 ...	26 ...	186 ...	19
1881 ...	205 ...	30 ...	186 ...	20
Stepney Green—
1882 ...	410 ...	110 ...	332 ...	41
1881 ...	350 ...	80 ...	290 ...	35
Stoke Newington—
1882 ...	153 ...	87 ...	115 ...	20
1881 ...	140 ...	91 ...	112 ...	21
Stratford—
1882 ...	100 ...	35 ...	46 ...	10
1881 ...	93 ...	32 ...	37 ...	8
Worship-street (now Bethnal Green)—
1882 ...	61 ...	— ...	44 ...	8
1881 ...	59 ...	— ...	41 ...	10
1882 ...	2503 ...	803 ...	1974 ...	328
1881 ...	2413 ...	705 ...	1680 ...	280
Increase	90 ...	98 ...	294 ...	48

So far as numbers are concerned these returns indicate a very satisfactory advance in one year. Next year's returns, it is hoped, will include at least two new schools. Bethnal Green and Rhyl-street Mission. Whether the new place of worship recently opened at Wandsworth intends commencing a school shortly your committee are at present without information. It is hoped that when the congregation there gets settled with a minister the establishment of a Sunday-school will not long remain an open question.

The receipts of your Society from all sources have been £14 12s. during the year; the expenditure has been £15 11s. 8d., which, with the balance of £2 12s. 11d., due from last year's accounts, make the total expenditure £18 4s. 7d., and leaves a present balance due of £3 12s. 7d.

The school visiting this year has been exclusively undertaken by Mr. Richard Bartram, and the committee, equally with yourselves, are anxious to hear what the opinion he has formed of the present condition of the schools is. He will bring such fresh observation and wide experience to the duty he has so kindly engaged in that his report cannot fail to be alike interesting and profitable to the teachers who desire to know how their schools appear to one standing outside their labours, and who is only a casual onlooker.

If the schools have advanced in their moral and religious tone as much as they appear to have done in their numerical strength it will be a matter for no little gratification, as showing that your labours are bearing in richer abundance the good fruit you desire.

To increase in the children an ever firmer faith in the providence of God, an unswerving fealty to the divine principles of Christianity, a loving pursuit of goodness, a fearless adherence to truth, and a fixed hope of an eternal life are the high aims you have in view, and if side by side with the intellectual and other educational objects the daily schools are calculated to promote the two institutions can work in harmony, the one fairly supplementing the efforts of the other, it may be hoped that the advent of that happy time which the song of the angels so joyously heralded, "Glory to God in the Highest, on earth peace and good will amongst men" may be more speedily and universally realised.

Mr. BARTRAM next read the following

VISITOR'S REPORT:—

In presenting this my first report as Visitor to your schools I am under this disadvantage, that I am unable to make any comparison between the work being done this year at any particular school and that heretofore done at the same school. Nor is it possible rightly to institute a comparison between one school and another, seeing that the circumstances differ so widely in each case. My report must therefore be largely one of first impressions only, and it is these which I proceed to give.

My visits have been made to sixteen schools. With two exceptions I have had to content myself with one visit to each, and with one exception all my visits have been paid in the afternoon. I do not share the views of some of our friends, who think that the morning is so much superior as a time for teaching to the afternoon, and certainly I think that in visiting I ought to try and see the schools at their best, and so far as attendance, at any rate, goes, the afternoon is the best time. In almost every case my visit was unexpected, and it may therefore be assumed that the schools were in their ordinary working trim.

Accommodation.—Leaving out of calculation for the moment the three Mission Schools, there were at the beginning of the year schoolrooms attached to all the various chapels except five, viz., Deptford, Notting-hill, Peckham General Baptist, Stamford-street, and Stratford. This deficiency has now been supplied at Stamford-street, and at Stratford steps are being taken to set matters right in this respect. But although there are schoolrooms in connection with the other chapels, still those at Hackney and Stoke Newington are wholly inadequate for the work that has to be carried on there. I was told at the former place that an enlargement was in contemplation, and at the latter it has been hinted that the good example set by Stamford-street might be followed at a smaller cost. When the new chapel is built at Notting-hill it is to be hoped that accommodation will not be wanting for the school that is flourishing there. The two stations in connection with the London Domestic Mission are admirably supplied with schoolrooms, but the Blackfriars Mission rooms are not large enough for the children attending. It is not often that a good word can nowadays be said for the old-fashioned square pews, but curiously enough those at Deptford lend themselves to the adoption of the suggestion often made, that the use of separate class-rooms in our schools is much to be desired. On the occasion of my recent visit there on entering the chapel the hum of teaching and reading could be heard, but with the exception of the Superintendent no one was visible. On peeping over the high pews, however, I found that many of them were filled with young scholars sitting round their teachers. The little chapel and vestry at East Surrey Grove, Peckham, are quite insufficient to accommodate the numbers gathering there every Sunday; but there does not seem much chance of the deficiency being supplied. At the other Peckham chapel the schoolroom was built before the chapel, an inversion of the usual order of things, but by no means an improper one.

Attendance.—The lowest number in attendance at any of the schools I visited was twenty-five, the highest 315. I have not been able to discover the reason why, in the former case, with teaching power of very high order, and with ample school accommodation, the attendance should be so small. I can only record the fact. The case of the highest attendance is Stepney, where I found not only the schoolroom at the back of the chapel, but that at the top of it, and the chapel gallery well filled with children. In ten other cases the numbers exceeded 100 present, and in six others they were below that figure. The attendance of course varies somewhat, according to the season of the year, and the proximity of a school treat has a stimulating effect upon it, which, however, like other stimulants, is not always of a lasting character. It is a matter for regret that so few of those attending the schools should be above the age of fourteen. Leaving the purely infant classes out of consideration, the bulk of the scholars are under that age. It is still more to be regretted that in many cases where some elder scholars are to be found it is not so much attachment to the school as a personal fondness for some particular teacher that induces them to remain. The result of this is that if anything befalls those teachers, compelling them to cease to identify themselves with the school, the whole class disperses. Nor is this the only drawback; where there is but little attachment to the school, there is little or no chance of being able to recruit the teaching staff either permanently or on an emergency. I am not ignorant of the advantages there may be to the members of those elder classes in having some one whom they can regard as their personal friend, but there is a danger, not only of the class, but of the teachers, losing sight of the fact that they are part of an organisation, which can only work effectively by each member of it acting in cordial loyalty towards it.

Order.—It may be that upon this subject I hold views which are not altogether consonant with modern ideas of what our Sunday-schools should be. It is said by some that our Sunday-schools should aim at being as little like an ordinary day-school as possible, and some would try to get rid of the name, and call it a "chureh," though I doubt whether there is anything more attractive to the child mind in the idea of a church than there is in that of a school. With both there is associated the feeling of restraint, and not only is there the feeling, but the fact of wholesome restraint. I desire to raise my protest, however, against fostering the notion that school is an objectionable place; by all means get rid of objectionable features, but do not let us stamp the place itself with the faintest notion of disagreeableness. It is a place of discipline, I admit, but young people cannot be taught too early that discipline, so far from being a thing to be avoided, is one of the best things to be sought after. I am led to say this much because in some of the schools I visited this question of order and discipline does not, as it seems to me, receive the attention it deserves. I have seen teachers reading to their classes when scarcely one of the scholars was paying attention to them; children engaged in cultivating the art of conversation, when that of listening was what was especially wanted; some children listlessly lolling on their seats, some playing with their caps, some kneeling about on the forms, and all more or less engaged in those numerous arts and devices in which the child mind is so fertile, when its attention is not being absorbed on one particular subject. Again, the changing from place to place, as has frequently to be done when the whole school meets together for the purpose of listening to a collective address, is a fruitful source of disorder. As a rule, the opportunity is seized for indulging in a race or competition for some coveted seat, and time after time have I seen this done without the slightest attempt on the part of the teacher of the class to stop it. This naturally leads to a continuation of the same kind of disorder, when the short service, with which most of our schools are closed, takes place, and the solemn act of prayer is marred by behaviour, that does much to destroy the good effect of the service. Now, it must not be said that this kind of thing is unavoidable, that boys will be boys, that you ought not to crush the animal spirits of young children. No one wants to do the latter, least of all do I; but I do want to train them, and I do know that this can be done, because I have seen it done. I was particularly struck in one school I visited, namely, that at Avondale-road, Peckham, with the very excellent order that prevailed, not only during the time that the teaching was going on, but when it became necessary for the children to shift their places. And I saw no signs of crushed life among the children that were there. A teacher may rest assured of this, that if he allows his class to be inattentive, or restless, or talkative, while he is teaching, he is to a very large extent wasting his time; he will do far better to try and bring order out of chaos than to attempt to get through the lesson he may have taken much pains to prepare. The first symptom of disorder should at once be checked; it is a disease which requires to be taken in its first stages, for it is very rapid in its development, and apt to prove infectious. And the teacher must do this himself, and not rely upon the superintendent, whose eyes and ears cannot be everywhere.

Teaching Power.—On the whole, the supply of teachers, so far as numbers are concerned, may be deemed commensurate with the demand; but in many cases the teachers were far too young. I hope that what I may say will not discourage teachers who have early learned the sacred duty of doing good, and who set an example which cannot be too highly commended. At the same time, it would be a neglect of duty on my part were I not to point out, that it is putting too great a burden on young shoulders to allow a teacher of about thirteen or fourteen to have the sole charge of about thirty or forty infants. Even where the number is not quite so large as this it is not by any means a desirable thing, that teachers so young should have the care of a class of little children whose ideas are just beginning to develop. So large a proportion of our scholars are under seven years of age that better means should be adopted to look after their wants. It seems to be thought that any teacher will do for them; but this I think is a mistake. In one school I visited the infants were under the care of four lads, a doubtful provision. What is really wanted is, that the superintendence should be given to some elder teacher, with what I may almost call motherly sympathies, who will try to make her little charges feel that they are not so much in a school as in a well regulated nursery. It is to be regretted that, comparatively speaking, so few gentlemen take part in the work of teaching. In one school I visited there was only one gentleman teacher, who not only acted as superintendent, but taught a class of elder boys; in another school there were but two of such teachers, and in another but three, the number of classes being eighteen. I have heard plenty of excuses for this state of things, but never any good reasons; it is, therefore, difficult to suggest a remedy. Including our Mission schools, seven of the ministers of the congregations take an active part in the schools connected with them. I am not prepared to say that this active interest is to be expected of all our ministers; indeed, I am rather disposed to think that it is one of the first duties of the congregation to relieve him of all anxiety on that score, and that it is almost a reproach to them when they allow their ministers to superintend the school work. At the same time it is a great improvement upon that state of things which has sometimes existed, when the minister's interest has manifested itself in such a way that it might almost be said to be nil.

Instruction.—I have left what has to be said on this subject to the last, not because I deem it to be least in importance, but because it calls for sufficient attention in itself to make me wish not to overlay it with subsequent considerations. I need not here go into the question of what is religious instruction; my belief is that our schools have largely settled that matter for themselves, and that they have determined that the instruction in our schools shall be religious, without giving that term any strictly defined significance. But I do not feel satisfied that the intention is always strictly carried out, and I should say that it is least carried out in some of those schools where apparently the intention is most strongly manifest. In nearly all of our schools the Bible is used, in some it is exclusively used, and I should imagine that in the latter the impression prevails that a strictly religious education is being given. But very rarely have I found that the Bible is being used intelligently. Of course, in some cases it is, and I observed that the teacher not only had taken pains to prepare the lesson for the class, but that the study of some particular portion of it was being systematically carried out. But these cases were rare; in the majority of instances the chapter or chapters were being read through, verse by verse, without the slightest attempt at explanation, or at bringing out the spiritual significance of the passage. Now if any teachers suppose that that is religious instruction they make a great mistake. It is not even a substitute for it; it does not even open the mind of the child, let alone quicken its spiritual growth; it is the sowing of husks instead of the good grain. The result will be that we shall be either helping to perpetuate that unintelligent idolatry of the Bible, or to create a feeling of irrational dislike for it, both of which are so mischievous at the present day. I have no wish to see the Bible entirely discarded in our schools, or to see it superseded by Manuals of Botany, or Science Primers, but I do think that a teacher who, in a spirit of enthusiasm or real love for his subject and for his class, tries to enlarge their minds in regard to some of those matters which are sometimes looked upon as secular does far more service to the cause of religion than he who makes use of the Bible in the way I have just indicated. It is a mistake, I think, to use the Bible simply as the class book of our schools; it is a grand book of religious literature, but it is not the only volume adapted to impart religious instruction to our young charges. I cannot say that it is a matter of surprise, but it is a matter of regret to know that so few of the very excellent manuals published by the Sunday School Association are used in our schools. One young teacher told me when I suggested the use of some of these that he preferred to teach "the pure Bible." Whether he meant to infer that there was an element of impurity in the books issued from Norfolk-street I do not know, but I submit that no great harm would be done by the substitution of some of these manuals for the fetish-like use of the Bible to which I have before alluded. Before I finish this report I should like to say that think it would be a good thing if the instruction in our schools could be brought to the test of an informal examination by some duly qualified person—say the minister or some person in the congregation. This need not interfere with the individual liberty of the teacher, who should still be permitted to choose his own subjects for teaching; but it is important to ascertain whether that subject is well taught. I am no advocate for competitive examinations in our Sunday-schools, but the instruction ought to bear the test of investigation, and no right-minded teacher ought to object to it.

I cannot conclude this report without bearing testimony to the zeal and self-devotion that is infused into the work by the teachers in our schools. I do not think I ever fully realised this until I ceased to be actively engaged in the work itself, and learned the pleasure of Sunday rest. But the feeling grows upon me more and more that those who have devoted themselves to the work, and who, Sunday after Sunday, give up their well earned rest to their noble task, often under circumstances of much difficulty, and under conditions of considerable discomfort, deserve the warmest gratitude of all those who desire to see the cause of religion flourish.

The Rev. T. W. FRECKELTON proposed that the Reports of the Committee and School Visitor be received and adopted. He characterised the Visitor's Report as fresh and discriminating, and going to the very heart of the matter with its sound and practical suggestions. He agreed with the recommendation that there should be a periodical examination by the minister or some competent person. Referring to the results of his own experience, the best Sunday-school he ever saw was one with which he had been connected for about five years. It was in a large manufacturing district, and contained from three to four hundred children. It had grave disadvantages to contend with in the way of school premises, for the school was held in a country theatre built of wood, and on rainy days they had to shift the children to get them out of the rain—(laughter). The seats were narrow and high, the floor honest mother earth, with a large hole here and there. There they taught year after year, kept up their scholars and did good honest work. The great key-note of success was its simultaneousness, that the same lesson was taught in every class, as arranged by the teachers in conference, for thirteen successive Sundays, every teacher adapting it to the capacity of each class. In the morning the lesson was taught in relation to other things; in the afternoon the same lesson was taught in its religious bearings, and its relation to the development of the religious life of the children. The teachers without exception belonged to the working class. They met every week for a teachers' class, and the subject for the coming Sunday was taken up. Each person had his particular department, and was expected to come to the teachers' meeting primed in his own department. The children were grouped in grades, and each grade was examined by the superintendent for ten minutes, rapidly running over the whole lesson, ending with the religious bearings of the whole lesson. A better and more harmonious Sunday School he was never in, and one that did more good in waking up the children's minds. This was an Orthodox school, and it produced excellent results. He did not say go and model their own schools in that way, but he did say that that Sunday-school could do no good work that had not some continual link going through it all, uniting teachers and scholars in a common interest, and in doing a common work—(loud applause).

Mr. S. S. TAYLER, in seconding the resolution, expressed his pleasure in seeing the Sunday-school teachers there, because practically the new school-room was a gift from the Unitarian public. The Association was managed for a very small sum. Every year they were getting more schools in London, and the instruction was becoming more thorough in developing the religious life. He thought it a great advantage that we had free arrangements in our schools, because we were not anxious to train up children after a stereotyped form or system of belief, but rather to develop the religious life. He regretted that the Provident Society had not been taken up more generally by the teachers and schools.

Mr. P. MOORE, referring to the desirableness of giving model lessons to teachers, said that that had been done in some of our schools by Mr. George Smith, of Lower Mosley-street School, Manchester, and Mr. Reynolds, at Hyde, and they were most instructive. He thought that it was an unfortunate thing that the recent Aggregate Sunday-school meeting had been held in three different places, as its interest and usefulness lay in the power of numbers, and the consequent influence on the minds of the teachers and children. He suggested the desirableness of getting some large central hall where all could be brought together and all effort concentrated on that event; and some minister be invited to come up from the country to deliver the address. He suggested that there should be an annual collection for the Association in all our schools and churches on one particular Sunday.

Mr. H. TAYLER asked if the Worship-street School is still affiliated with the Association. Mr. WADE said that it still subscribed.

Mr. DRUMMOND took exception to the Hampstead School being selected for criticism in the Visitor's Report, and said that the average attendance was more than forty. They had eleven scholars over seventeen years of age. They had great difficulties, owing to strong Church influences, but the school was decidedly increasing, and very excellent work was being done there, and the religious tone and influence were admirable.

Mr. BARTRAM said that in some of our smaller schools a much better work was being done than in the larger schools. He thought it desirable to maintain the independence of the Visitor's Report, and his remark was that it was surprising that with such able teaching there was so small an attendance at the Hampstead school when he visited it.

The Report was then carried.

On the motion of Mr. TURNER, seconded by Mr. SPEARS, it was agreed that the accounts of the Essex-street Sunday-school Memorial be audited, printed and published.

The Rev. R. SPEARS moved that the special religious services which have been held during the past year be repeated during spring and autumn of next year. He greatly valued such opportunities of meeting together, and strengthening each other in the great work of the religious education of the young. He thought it desirable that in our religious teaching we should refer to the position we occupied as Unitarians. He would blend our theology with our religion.

Mr. HENRY JEFFERY, in seconding the motion, referred to the paragraph in the report to the effort made at Stratford to provide a new school. It was proposed to raise £200, which sum would be sufficient, as they had ground provided for them. He drew attention to the bazaar held during this week for the purpose. The demand everywhere was for more teachers, and he regretted that so few of the more cultured young people among us took part in the work, and he hoped that these meetings would arouse the religious sentiment.

Mr. TURNER expressed his preference for one meeting instead of two, while Mr. F. ALLEN thought that there should be sufficient enthusiasm to have three or four meetings. Mr. DRUMMOND proposed as an amendment that there should be only one meeting in the spring. Mr. HOWARD CLARKE thought that a meeting every six months would be of great advantage to the teachers. After other remarks from Mr. P. MOORE, the CHAIRMAN, Mr. TARRANT, and FELIX TAYLOR, Mr. ION PRITCHARD seconded the amendment, which was put, and lost by a large majority, and the original motion was carried nem. con.

The Rev. W. C. BOWIE moved, and Mr. N. M. TAYLER seconded, the list of officers and Committee for the ensuing year, the Rev. Dr. Drummond being the President and Mr. Wade the Secretary, and Mr. Bartram the Visitor; and both speakers expressed a hope that more work would be done during the next year.

Mr. WADE announced that Mr. Vizard, author of "Sacred Similes," was prepared to give model lessons to teachers.

Mr. BISS proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Bartram for his services, and admirable report, which was seconded by Mr. F. ALLEN, and carried unanimously.

A cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman was carried unanimously, on the motion of Mr. ALAN WHITEHEAD, seconded by Mr. S. S. TAYLER, and acknowledged by Dr. BLAKE ODGERS. This brought to a close the proceedings of a very interesting meeting.

BIRMINGHAM: CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH MINISTRY TO THE POOR.

The annual meeting of the subscribers was held on Monday evening, in the schoolroom of the Church of the Messiah, Birmingham. Mr. LAKIN SMITH presided, and among those present were the Revs. Dr. Crosskey and E. T. Russell (missionary), Dr. Russell, Councillor R. F. Martineau, Messrs. T. H. Russell, H. S. Smith, P. Smith, D. Heap, E. H. Lee, H. Nettlefold, G. H. Kenrick, S. Greenway, W. Simpson, and J. Wilson, and a number of ladies.

The CHAIRMAN in opening the proceedings said that the work of the Mission lay almost entirely amongst the very poorest classes of the community, and its objects were perhaps as noble as anyone could conceive of. Its objects were, in fact, to alleviate human want and misery, strengthen the feeble, raise the fallen, and offer assistance to all in distress who came within its scope, and to impart moral and religious instruction by means of its chapel and schools, and by the aid of the societies connected with it to offer every encouragement to a virtuous life. He then alluded to the death of the Rev. John Wilson, the missionary, and in conclusion made an urgent appeal for additional funds with which to carry on the useful work of the Mission—(applause).

In the unavoidable absence of Mr. W. Wills, the Secretary, Mr. T. H. RUSSELL presented the report of the Committee of Management, which alluded to the irreparable loss sustained by the Mission in the death of the Rev. J. Wilson, in January last, and stated that the Rev. E. T. Russell, of Leicester, had been appointed as his successor. The report also stated that all parts of the Mission were in healthy activity, and the committee urged the subscribers to give the institution greater material and personal help.

Mr. S. GREENWAY (the retiring treasurer) reported that the income for the year had been £269 4s. 4d., and the expenditure £270 18s. 6d. The balance now due to the treasurer is £26 18s. 9d. £50 having been withdrawn from capital to reduce the indebtedness of the previous year. Mr. Greenway added that, after acting as treasurer for nine years, he relinquished that office, and in doing so wished to make an appeal for increased support to the Mission. It was necessary, in order to carry on the work of the Mission efficiently, that the subscription list should be increased to £250 annually. Never, as far as the books showed, had the subscriptions in any year been equal to the salary of the Missionary, Superintendent, and Chapel-keeper, and the annual collections, with special appeals, had from time to time been relied upon to make up the deficiency, and he therefore hoped that efforts would be made in the future to increase the annual subscription list.

The Rev. E. T. RUSSELL (the missionary) also brought up a satisfactory report on the work of the Mission during the time he had had charge of it.

On the motion of Dr. RUSSELL, seconded by Mr. R. F. MARTINEAU, the reports were adopted.

Votes of thanks were passed to the Ladies' Committee and those who had assisted in the work of the institution, and especially to the members of Mr. Wilson's family and others who, during the period intervening between that gentleman's death and Mr. Russell's appointment, had carried on the work with so much energy and success.

Dr. RUSSELL, in moving the adoption of the reports, took the opportunity of reviewing the history of the Mission from its commencement, upwards of thirty years ago, when its philanthropic founders resolved to try what could be done to reclaim the wanton, depraved and ignorant that were known to exist in the district, where they first determined to try the effort; picturing the ineffectual labour of the first missionary, owing to the close proximity of its first meeting room with the dens of iniquity which at that time existed in the locality, all of which were now happily swept away by the improvement scheme. The missionary nearly broke down with despair, so great were the obstacles with which he had to contend. However, the labour of love went on, but it was not till after the founders had secured the present chapel and schools in Lawrence-street that anything approaching satisfactory results accrued from the efforts made. That success had attended the Mission there was abundant evidence to testify, not only in the improved condition of the locality but the class of people who attached themselves to the place. Sunday-schools, Provident Society, Savings Bank, Temperance Society, Band of Hope, Teachers' Mutual Improvement Society, have been in active operation for years; still there would always be necessity for such philanthropic labours as are being carried on at Lawrence-street. As long as human nature is subject to depravity, disease and death; when the bread winner is stricken down and the widow and children left to struggle with hard fate to obtain the meanest subsistence, there would remain opportunities for the missionary to render the kindly, Christ-like help depicted with so much simplicity in the reports they had heard read.

The Rev. Dr. CROSSKEY moved a hearty vote of thanks to the Rev. E. T. Russell for the instructive discourses delivered at the Church of the Messiah on Sunday last, more particularly that of the morning, which treated upon mission work, Mr. RUSSELL evincing a thorough knowledge of the subject, which he treated in an able, comprehensive manner, indicating clearly that his heart and feelings are in harmony with the duties he has undertaken, and which he (Mr. Crosskey) was glad to find was appreciated by those who had the pleasure of listening to the morning's discourse.

On the motion of Mr. E. H. LEE (the newly appointed Treasurer) it was resolved that the morning address be printed and circulated, as embodying so clearly what is the aim and purpose of the Unitarian Domestic Mission.

On the motion of Dr. RUSSELL a vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. S. Greenway for his services as Treasurer for the past nine years, to Mr. H. Lakin Smith and Mr. A. W. Wills, Chairman and Secretary, and the members of the Committee for their services during the past year.

On the motion of Mr. PRIESTLEY SMITH, seconded by Mr. G. H. KENRICK, the officers and committee for the ensuing year were appointed.

The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

LEEDS: HOLBECK BAZAAR.

Our friends at Holbeck, a densely-populated suburb of Leeds, have thrown themselves heartily into the work of endeavouring to raise funds with the object of defraying the balance and the cost of erecting the new Unitarian Chapel and school on the site of the old one. As is well-known to many of our Unitarian friends, a mission station has existed in this district for some years; but as the congregation became dissatisfied with the old and inconspicuous premises, and feeling that if they could raise sufficient funds, with the assistance of friends outside, they might possibly become a self-supporting and independent congregation, the present effort was finally determined upon. Additional land was purchased and buildings devised, the cost of which will be about £4,500. The congregation at Mill Hill has generously contributed £2,000, and £1,000 by dint of perseverance and hard work in various ways has been raised by the friends and congregation at Holbeck. The present bazaar and other efforts yet to be made, it is hoped, will result in the remaining £1,500 being raised. The existing buildings include six class-rooms, an infant's school, and a magnificent school hall (about the largest in Leeds), which is being used at present as a chapel until the new structure is completed. The whole design and the building is unique, and reflects the highest possible credit on the architects—Mr. J. W. Connon and Mr. F. Wilkinson (son of a former minister, the Rev. R. Wilkinson, of Ainsworth). In the large hall a three-days' bazaar commenced on Tuesday, November 28, when an unusually large and varied assortment of useful and ornamental work was exhibited for sale on stalls presided over by the following ladies:—No. 1 (Mill Hill Stall): Mrs. F. W. Kitson, Mrs. Grosvenor Talbot, Miss Talbot, Mrs. John Lupton, Mrs. Councillor Ward, Mrs. John Craven, and Miss Nellie Kitson. No. 2: Miss Payne. No. 3: Mrs. Knight and Miss Moss. No. 4: Mrs. Dixon. No. 5: Mrs. Westerman. No. 6: Mrs. Billington. No. 7: Mrs. Mann. No. 8: Mrs. G. Craven and Mrs. Coulter. Nos. 9 and 10 (Sunday-school Stall): Mrs. Pearson, Mrs. Richardson, and the Misses Knight. No. 11: Miss Scholefield and Miss Lucy Liley. Refreshment-stall: Mrs. J. S. Mathers. There was also a provision stall, which was presided over by Mr. Joseph Winpenny and others. There were numerous other objects of interest to entertain, interest, and instruct both old and young, including microscopical views, telegraphic apparatus, telephones, representations of ventriloquism, &c. At intervals during each evening the proceedings were enlivened by the Mill-hill string band, under the able leadership of Mr. F. Mason, performing selections of operatic and other popular music in a highly creditable and meritorious style. There were present at the opening of the bazaar Mr. John Barran, M.P., the Revs. Chas. Hargrove, M.A., A. Chalmers (Wakefield), W. Blazebey, B.A., (Rotherham), Iden Payne, M. S. Dunbar, M.A., and C. D. Badland (Dewsbury); Mr. Joseph Lupton, J.P., W. D. Clift, J.P., Alderman Gaust, Councillors John Ward, Wainman, Lenty; and Messrs. John D. Mathers, G. Talbot, Joseph Craven, Joseph Winpenny, and numerous other friends from the surrounding district.

Mr. J. S. MATHERS, who has been a staunch and firm friend to the Unitarian cause at Holbeck, occupied the chair, and, in the course of a few brief but appropriate words, welcomed Mr. Barran amongst them for the purpose of opening the bazaar, at the same time briefly stating the object which they as a body had in view.

Mr. BARRAN, M.P., who was cordially received, observed that as the principal business of the Parliamentary Autumn Session was nearly concluded, he considered it his duty to be with them to-day to assist in a movement which had for its object the well-being of humanity. Although he held different theological views from those by whom he was surrounded, yet he was ever ready, as all persons should be, to give others credit for the sincerity of their motives, in promoting the spread of truths which they conscientiously believed were productive of best results to their fellow-men—(applause). Alluding to the necessity which existed for distinctions of class in every country, he remarked that it was equally necessary that there should be a perfect understanding between the two classes of wealthy and poor, since the happiness and welfare of the rich were not less dependent upon the happiness and well-being of the poor than were the happiness and prosperity of the rich dependent upon those of the poor. No reasonable person could gainsay the fact that if the wealth of the land were charitably distributed among the people they would be worse off than they were at present—(hear, hear). The acknowledgment of mutual responsibility among all classes would therefore be more likely to promote national well-being than any amount of charity, which would degrade the one class and lower the other in the estimation of the class degraded—(hear, hear). Any attempt, then, such as the one the promoters of the bazaar had on foot, that was calculated to improve the tone of the lower class, to instruct and educate them, was worthy of the support and attention of all right-minded men. After advertising to the rapid growth of the manufacturing interests, and all open spaces in large towns being covered with buildings for commercial purposes, thus rendering the atmosphere impure, Mr. Barran said that the consequence was that well-to-do people ceased, if possible, to reside within the town's limits, leaving them to the occupation of the poorer inhabitants. Nevertheless, he considered it to be the duty of the wealthy to see that the poor were not left without the necessary comforts of healthy exercise and instruction. The Unitarians did not appear to have overlooked that fact, for not only were they building a chapel to beautify the neighbourhood, but they offered ready means for the development of the economical side of Christian life. It was important that not only religion alone should be taught, but its bearing upon practical every-day life. He had, therefore, great pleasure in aiding such an object by declaring the bazaar open—(applause).

The CHAIRMAN moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Barran, and expressed the satisfaction which he experienced to perceive in society a diminution of that suspicion and opposition with which Unitarians were wont to be regarded by their orthodox friends.

Mr. J. WINPENNY seconded the proposition, which, on being ably supported by Mr. JOSEPH LUTON and Alderman GAUNT, was carried unanimously.

We may add that the total receipts for the three days was £650; and, as there was a quantity of goods undisposed of, a request was made (which was acceded to) that the bazaar should be opened on Saturday last. The bazaar has, therefore, been a success.

The Liberal Pulpit.

LIBERTY FACE TO FACE WITH ALCOHOL.

BY THE REV. STOPFORD A. BROOKE, M.A.

The attainment of true freedom in the State is the end of all our effort as citizens, the goal of all the labour of society. We do not mean by freedom that an individual citizen, or a class of citizens may do as they like at the cost of any loss of freedom to the other citizens; therefore freedom, in our sense of it, does not mean that everyone in a free State is freed from restraint. But we do mean by freedom that every citizen is granted full powers to do and enjoy the things which are worth doing and enjoying in common with the other citizens, that is, in such a way as will not hinder the excellent doing and enjoying of the other citizens. We do mean by it that each member of the State is secured in this free action by the help his fellow citizens give him; and that he himself helps them in return towards this security. The measure of that freedom is the increase of the power of every citizen to make the most and the best of themselves; and the end of that freedom is the liberation of every power each citizen possesses; not in order that they may follow their individual fancies to the hurt of the rest, but in contribution to the common good. If that be the end, this idea of freedom includes the notion of restraint, even of compulsion, exercised by the voice of the State, on any men or class of men who claim to do what they like in such a way as will interfere with the freedom of others to make the best of themselves, in such a way, that is, as will contravene the general good. No one has a right to do what he will with himself, or with his own property, or with the labour he buys or sells, or with his own children, if what he does injures or impedes general freedom; that equal and free development of the powers and faculties of all, which is the highest good of the whole State.

In some instances that principle is now granted by everyone in England. Everyone is agreed that men cannot rightly be the property of other men. The whole State intervenes to prevent such a contract. If a man possessing such a "chattel" comes to England, he loses the property. If a man should voluntarily contract himself in this country into a slave, the contract would not be valid in law. Individual freedom of contract is here limited for the sake of universal freedom.

The principle then and there accepted was not for some time carried further. After the Reform Bill of 1832 it was not the restraint of individual freedom of contract which was dwelt on, but the establishing of freedom of contract. That was a work of the greatest importance, and it was well done. The rights of the individual were secured. But when they were secured, the other side of the problem rose into prominence; and, when these individual rights were used so as to injure or impede the growth of general freedom, it became necessary to limit the exercise of those rights. How, when, and where the State may limit individual freedom of contract is a question at the root of a third at least of the questions of home politics.

At two special points it confronts us at this moment. One is whether the State—in the interests of public freedom—can allow the individual to do what he likes with his land to the same extent as it allows him to do what he likes with other commodities. May he, for example, lay the "dead hand" upon it?

That question is being answered day by day in the negative. The State has interfered already with freedom of contract in the matter of the land.

The other question, that on which I dwell to-day—for it specially interests me—is the question of the buying and selling of intoxicating drink. It seems to very many that it is necessary—in the interest of general freedom—to limit still further freedom of contract in this matter.

It is useless to say that this further limitation would be without precedent. Freedom of contract has been limited during the last fifteen years in England, again and again; and the principles of which this has been done are those I have laid before you. The State has the right to interfere with the action of men, when that is an injury to the general well-being of the State.

The Factory Acts directly interfered with the freedom of contract. The hirer of labour was forbid to hire it on terms to which the seller of labour would have readily agreed. Why? Because women and children, working too long, or too young, would suffer mentally and physically, and in such numbers as to damage the whole of society.

Again, grown up men and women are prohibited by law from contracting to labour in factories, or from living in houses which the sanitary inspector declares to be unwholesome. The free sale of a certain commodity is thus forbidden. Why? On precisely the same grounds as those mentioned above.

Again, the Education Act of 1870 established the principle, afterwards steadily carried out, that parents were not to be allowed to do as they liked with their children, neither to set them to work, nor to let them run wild, until the children had elementary education. Freedom of contract in respect of all dealings with the labour of children was so far limited. Why? On precisely the same principles. The child has not proper power to develop himself without education, and the State protects, nay forces him into possession of that power, in order that his want of power may not injure the freedom of the whole State.

This is modern legislation interfering with individual freedom, not to promote moral goodness which is not the business of the State, but to keep up the conditions without which a free exercise of the faculties of all is impossible.

And, on the whole, England has agreed that this legislation is justifiable and advisable. There are few who now wish to repeal the above Acts. But they were all opposed at the time of their debate, first, on the ground that they were an interference with individual liberty; secondly, that the evils they were passed to meet ought to be left to the people themselves to cure, and that this cure, growing out of an improved condition of public sentiment, would be the best and most lasting cure; and thirdly, that such protection by the State injured the self reliance and independence of the people.

These, also, are the main arguments used against those who advocate a further limitation of freedom of contract in the matter of the sale of intoxicating drink. We are quite accustomed to them now, and let us hope that they will prove as useless in this matter as they formerly did in the case of the Factory, Education, and Public Health Acts.

Already, by the licensing system, men are not at liberty to buy and sell strong drink when, and where, and how they will. But that system, for well known reasons, has scarcely lessened the sale of drink, and while it has freed well-to-do districts, has crowded the poorer and more easily tempted districts with drink shops, where seventy-five per cent. of the crime, disease, madness, poverty, and violence of the districts are generated. The whole State suffers, and suffers more than I can stay to say by the vast sale and purchase of this poison; and we think we have the strongest case possible, a case much stronger than any previous one, for the interference of the law. Whatever means the law may take, those means are sure to involve a large interference with the liberty of the individual in the matter of buying and selling alcohol. That interference has to be justified, and I justify it on the same grounds as before. Society may prevent men from doing as they like if what they like to do is of great and widespread damage to the general freedom. There is no right to absolute freedom in the purchase and sale of a particular commodity if the general result of allowing such a freedom is to do wrong to the highest freedom of the community—that is, to take away a great deal from the general power of men to make the best of themselves. It is this wrong which the but slightly restricted sale of alcohol is now doing England. No man who has looked into the subject can deny that the present habits of drinking in this country lay a heavier burden on the free development of man's powers for social good and freedom than arises from all other preventable causes put together. I will not now expand upon its evils. They are in the power of you all to discover. Most of us, like myself, pass years without looking into the matter. But to know the real state of things is enough to appal the stoutest heart, and convince the coldest. And once known, it is impossible to be quiet any longer. We join in all the means we can in order to rescue men, women, and children from this reign of terror.

On only one way I speak to day, the way of the law. We want either more stringent rules of licensing, or a power given to the householders in each district of altogether shutting out from among them the sale of intoxicating liquor. These methods may be used separately, or in combination, and to promote their use when the power has been given to use them, or to urge forward the giving of that power, is work many of you may well assist in doing.

The majority of citizens in a district may not desire to make such an effort as is supposed in "Local Option." Then it will not be made. But when they do desire it, they should, in the interests of general freedom, be allowed to make it. I have no wish to have laws enacted which are in advance of the social sentiment necessary to give them effect, but when that social sentiment is in a majority in the council of the nation, or in a district in a town, or in the country, I do think that the argument that such a law wrongly interferes with individual liberty is, in this case especially, a weak, even a false argument. Precedent in the cases I have mentioned, cases not so strong as this case, has already put the argument aside. Above all, it is an argument which ignores the essential condition under which any individual can be allowed to indulge his particular will—the condition that this freedom of his does not, as a rule, and on the whole, impede the general freedom and well being of the State.

As to the other argument which urges us to wait and let men improve themselves, let me answer it in wiser words than I can use:—

"But here again we reply that it is dangerous to wait. The slower remedy might be preferable if we were sure that it was a remedy at all, but we have no such assurance. There is strong reason to think the contrary. Every year that the evil is left to itself it becomes greater. The vested interest in the encouragement of the vice becomes larger, and the persons affected by it more numerous. If any abatement of it has already taken place, we may fairly argue that this is because it has not been altogether left to itself; for the licensing law, as it is, is much more stringent and more stringently administered than it was ten years ago. A drunken population naturally perpetuates, and increases itself. Many families, it is true, keep emerging from the conditions which render them specially liable to the evil habit, but on the other hand, descent through drunkenness from respectability to squalor is constantly going on. The families of drunkards do not seem to be smaller than those of sober men, though they are shorter-lived; and that the children of a drunkard should escape from drunkenness is what we call almost a miracle. Better education, better housing, more healthy rules of labour, no doubt lessen the temptations to drink for those who have the benefit of these advantages; but, meanwhile, drunkenness is constantly recruiting the ranks of those who cannot be really educated, who will not be better housed, who make their employments dangerous and unhealthy. An effectual liquor law, in short, is the necessary complement of our Factory Acts, our Education Acts, our Public Health Acts. Without it the full measure of their usefulness will never be attained. They were all opposed in their turn by the same arguments that are now used against a restraint of the facilities for drinking. Sometimes it was the argument that the State had no business to interfere with the liberties of the individual. Sometimes it was the dilatory plea that the better nature of man would in time assert itself, and that meanwhile it would be lowered by compulsion. Happily a sense of the facts and necessities of the case got the better of the delusive cry of liberty. Act after Act was passed preventing master and workman, parent and child, house-builder and householder from doing as they pleased, with the result of a great addition to the real freedom of society. The spirit of self-reliance and independence was not weakened by those Acts. Rather it received a new development. The dead weight of ignorance and unhealthy surroundings, with which it would otherwise have had to struggle, being partially removed by law, it was more free to exert itself for higher objects. When we ask for a stringent liquor law, which should even go to the length of allowing the householders of a district to exclude the drink traffic altogether, we are only asking for a continuation of the same work—a continuation necessary to its complete success. It is a poor sophistry to tell us that it is moral cowardice to seek to remove by law a temptation which every one ought to be able to resist for himself. It is not the part of a considerate self-reliance to remain in the presence of a temptation merely for the sake of being tempted. When all temptations are removed which law can remove there will be still room enough, nay, much more room for the play of our moral energies. The temptation to excessive drinking is one which, upon sufficient evidence, we hold that the law can at least greatly diminish. If it can, it ought to do so. This, then, along with the effectual liberation of the soil, is the next great conquest which our democracy, on behalf of its own freedom, has to make. The danger of legislation, either in the interests of a privileged class or for the promotion of particular religious opinions, we may fairly assume to be over. The popular jealousy of law, once justifiable enough, is therefore out of date. The citizens of England now make its law. We ask them by law to put a restraint on themselves in the matter of strong drink. We ask them further to limit, or even altogether to give up, the not very precious liberty of buying and selling alcohol, in order that they may become more free to exercise the faculties and improve the talents which God has given them."

* They are taken from a pamphlet of Professor Green, of Balliol, entitled, "Liberal Legislation and Freedom of Contract," a wise and weighty pamphlet all should read who care for its subject, and one to which this sermon is largely indebted.

TENNYSON'S NEW PLAY.

On Sunday night the Rev. W. Sharman, F.G.S., Unitarian Minister, lectured at Treville-street Chapel, Plymouth on the Poet Laureate's rustic drama "The Promise of May." The reverend gentleman took as his text 1st Corinthians xv. 32—"Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." The following is an abstract of the discourse:—After a graphic narration of the plot of the play, the speaker said it was neither purpose nor province of his to assume the office of a dramatic critic. Personally all he had to say as to the adaptation of the play for the uses of the stage, or the manner in which it was produced, was that he was interested by the performance, and that his interest appeared to be shared by a crowded house. The play appeared to him to succeed in doing one of the most important duties of the dramatic teacher. To-day many persons who are concerned in the inculcation of moral principles were looking with an ever-increasing dismay at the state of the streets of our great cities. They saw there a degradation and slavery the foulest and cruelest the moon shines on. Preachers, teachers, and parents were asking how they could best perform the duty laid on them. The efforts of all three required supplement. He knew not whence aid was to come, unless they sought the assistance of the poet, the novelist, and the actor. They must ask Scott to tell to their households the story of Effie Deans, and George Eliot that of Hetty, and the dramatist and actor that of Eva and Dora Steer.

Mr. Tennyson had told with purity and pathos a story all young people ought to hear, and he regarded the presentation of that story on the stage as a valuable service to morality. Fewer tears would be shed, fewer homes would suffer blight in the next-coming years, if the elder scholars in all their Sunday-schools could see the drama of which he spoke. The awful crowds that make the sight of our great cities like a vision of hell are recruited year by year, with streams as constant as those that feed the sea, from school, and church, and home. The old ways had failed; others must be tried, or they must confess that while they talked about Egyptian slavery, and subscribed to Zenana missions they themselves needed foreign reproof and foreign missionaries. It was charged against the play that it grossly misrepresents the Freethinkers of England by making the villain of the piece a Freethinker. He (Mr. Sharman) did not regard Edgar as intended to represent a thinker of any sort. He was a mere human parrot repeating the jargon he found in fashion, and making a somewhat incoherent mixture, as is the custom of parrots. He was a sort of creature known to all the sects. But it was further objected that Edgar was represented not only as a shallow man, but also as a wicked one, who attempted to excuse his wickedness by his philosophy. Before the long night and the eternal silence closed over him he would enjoy what pleasant sensation might be possible, though others suffered.

It would not be right to inquire how far Mr. Tennyson's ideas of the moral tendencies of certain opinions were expressed in Edgar's utterances. In considering a drama the critic's business was with the characters, not with the dramatist. If Edgar must be given a descriptive name, though Mr. Tennyson had not given him one, he was a freethinking hypocrite. Surely there was nothing for the Marquis of Queensberry to complain of in that. Hypocrites were of all sects. Hypocrites of other sorts were common on the stage, and no sensible Secularist would object to an addition to the number. Freethought, if it had any substance and courage, ought to care nothing for people who do not think, and ought to be grateful to any person who could set folk thinking. The theatre-goers of London had been so long enjoying gorgeous spectacles, laughing at burlesques, and getting thrilled by sensations that a play which arouses thought is as needed as it is novel. The speaker, for his part, was grateful alike for the moral lesson and the theological problem.

BIRMINGHAM.—The centenary celebration of the establishment of the "Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and the Neighbouring Counties" is to take place on Wednesday next, when the Rev. D. Maginnis, secretary, will read a sketch of the history of the Society, to be followed by a luncheon at the Grand Hotel, Dr. Russell, J.P., presiding. In the evening a sermon will be delivered in the Church of the Messiah, by the Rev. Professor Estlin Carpenter, the Rev. John Robbards of Cheltenham conducting the devotional, not the "introductory," service as it is styled in the advertisement. N.B.—The prayers are not intended to introduce the preacher and his sermon to the congregation.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in Packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS & Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

Obituary.

WILLIAM TITFORD.

One of the oldest and most steadfast supporters of Unitarianism in the metropolis has recently gone from us. Mr. William Titford could always be relied upon for help in every good cause, and the encouragement of his kindly and thoughtful countenance will long be missed at our meetings. He was born in 1810 in the city of London, where his father had carried on business as a silk manufacturer. He received the early part of his education at Mr. Gilchrist's school on Newington-green, within a few doors of the old chapel, in connection with which the last twenty-five years of his life were passed. He had strong literary tastes, and was the author of several works, and of some poems which were printed for private circulation, but never published. When a young man he was amongst the earliest members of the well known Aldersgate-street Institution, and frequently contributed to the Institution magazine, being awarded the prize medal in August, 1834, for the best poetical composition published therein. He was for many years a member of the congregation under the Rev. W. J. Fox, first at Parliament-court and afterwards at South-place Chapel, of which his father had been one of the most active supporters. He afterwards attended at Essex-street Chapel under the ministry of the late Rev. Thomas Madge, and more recently became a member of the congregation of Newington-green Chapel, serving on its committee for over twenty years.

In his younger days he was an active Sunday-school teacher, and he retained to the time of his death his strong interest in this work, having been for many years one of the auditors of the Sunday-School Association.

He was for upwards of forty years the head of the firm of Vandome, Titfords and Co., scale makers. In politics he had been all his life an active supporter of the Liberal party, and was from the first a member of the Anti-Corn Law League. He married in 1838 his cousin Jane, a daughter of the late Mr. W. Wilkinson, also a member of Mr. Fox's congregation, who survives him, and he had a family of eleven children, nine of whom are still living. Although for many years taking a great interest in and attending the meetings of the various Unitarian Societies in London, he was, from his retiring disposition, but little known outside his immediate circle of friends, but was beloved and respected by all who were acquainted with him and knew his sterling worth. He died on the 14th ult., after a short illness, at the age of seventy-two, and was buried in Abney Park Cemetery, the Rev. W. Wooding officiating, the earlier portion of the service being conducted in the old chapel, Newington-green.

Those who knew and honoured and loved our departed friend may well feel the consolation of the assurance that a good man's life is never lost, and they may gladly remember, to use the language of one of his own poems—

"He shall never taste of sorrow more,
But evermore he liveth, and shall live
In the Eternal City of his Lord."

DEATH OF PROFESSOR CHALLIS.—We regret to announce the death, at the advanced age of seventy-eight, of Professor Challis, Plumian Professor of Astronomy and Experimental Philosophy in the University of Cambridge. The deceased professor expired at his residence at Cambridge, after a long illness, on Sunday last. Professor Challis, than whom no living man had rendered more service to astronomical science, graduated at Trinity College as Senior Wrangler, and first Smith's prizeman in 1825. He was appointed to the Plumian Professorship in 1836, in succession to Professor Airy, late Astronomer Royal.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—In general debility, mental depression, and nervous irritability there is no medicine which operates so like a charm as these famous Pills. A disordered stomach and a torpid liver are fertile sources of gloomy thoughts and dismal forebodings. These Pills elevate the spirits, and in fact make the patient sensible of a most delightful revolution in his whole system. They may be commended most unreservedly as the very best family medicine in existence. Though so powerfully efficacious, they are singularly mild in their operation, and may be given with perfect confidence to delicate women and young children. They contain no mercury, or any other noxious substance, and cannot do harm. Delicate females and all persons of sedentary habits will find these Pills a blessing.

University Intelligence.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

The following are Lists of the Candidates who have passed the recent examinations:—

EXAMINATIONS IN THE HEBREW TEXT OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, IN THE GREEK TEXT OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, IN THE EVIDENCES OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION, AND IN SCRIPTURE HISTORY.

FIRST EXAMINATION.—Pass List.—First Class: Alfred W. Lockyer, M.A. (prize), private study; James Ross Murray (prize), Lancaster Independent College and St. John's College, Cambridge. Second Class: H. H. B. Ayles, private study and St. John's College, Cambridge; E. E. Cannington, Non-collegiate, Cambridge; G. A. Smith, University and New Church Colleges; J. Telford, Didsbury College and private study; F. B. Whitmore, Private study.

B.A. AND B.Sc. EXAMINATIONS.

B.A. AND B.Sc. CONJOINTLY.

MATHEMATICS.—First Class—R.A. Herman, B.A. (scholarship), Trinity, Cambridge, and Charlotte Angas Scott, B.Sc., Girton, Cambridge. Third Class—R. M. Walsley, B.Sc., private study.

MENTAL AND MORAL SCIENCE.—First Class—J. Tyson, B.A., private study. Second Class—Henrietta Elizabeth Clay, B.A., Ladies' College, Cheltenham, and private tuition, and Mary Louisa Georgina Petrie, B.A., University, equal. Third Class—Margaret Rachel Topham, B.A., and Edith Mary Thompson, B.A., Queen's and University.

B.A. (ONLY.)

CLASSICS.—First Class—M. T. Quinn (disqualified by age for the scholarship), St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw; A. W. Dawson, private study, and F. W. Kellett, Kingswood School and Sidney College, Cambridge (equal); W. J. Selby, private study. Second Class—C. M. M. Coupe, Stonyhurst College; F. P. Shipham, New Kingswood School and Wesley College; J. H. Pollen, Stonyhurst College, and Annie Townsend, Bedford College, London (equal). Third Class—Mary L. G. Petrie, University College; H. H. B. Ayles, private study and St. John's College, Cambridge; F. S. Wood, Wesley College, Sheffield.

FRENCH.—First Class—F. Caldecott (disqualified by age for the prize), private study and tuition; R. A. Germaine (disqualified by age for prize), private study; Mary Louisa Heppel, private tuition; Annie Townsend, Bedford College, London. Third Class—Mary Collin, Notting-hill High School and Bedford College; Sylvain Mayer, University College; A. J. Wyatt, Regent's-park College and private study.

GERMAN.—First Class—Mary Louisa Heppel (disqualified by age for the prize), private tuition; Selina Dorman Bostock (prize), Ladies' College, Cheltenham; Second Class—Annie Page, Ladies' College, Cheltenham, and J. Wertheimer, University College, Liverpool, equal; Annie Townsend, Bedford College, London; Mary Collin, Notting-hill High School and Bedford College. Third Class—F. S. Wood, Wesley College, Sheffield; E. G. Jones, New College.

(B.Sc. ONLY.)

CHEMISTRY.—First Class—W. Stroud (Scholarship), Balliol College, Oxford, and Owens College. Second Class, W. C. Williams, Mason College, Birmingham; T. M. Morgan, private study.

EXPERIMENTAL PHYSICS.—First Class—J. T. Riley, Mason College, Birmingham; J. Ryan, King's College, Cambridge. Second Class—W. Stroud, Balliol College, Oxford, and Owens College. Third Class—W. C. Williams, Mason College, Birmingham; R. M. Walsley, private study; T. H. Beare, University College.

PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY AND GEOLOGY.—First Class—J. Ryan, King's College, Cambridge; and E. W. Small, Christ's College, Cambridge.

BOTANY.—First Class—R. N. Goodman, St. John's College, Cambridge. Third Class—J. A. Voelcker, B.A., University College and private study.

ZOOLOGY.—Second Class—F. S. Kipping, Owens College. Third Class—W. M. Bayliss, University College.

PHYSIOLOGY.—First Class—W. B. Ransom (scholarship) Trinity College, Cambridge. Second Class—W. M. Bayliss, University College. Third Class—F. Lever, Guy's Hospital.

M.B. EXAMINATION.

MEDICINE.—First Class—D. A. King (scholarship and gold medal), St. Bartholomew's Hospital; L. C. Woodrudge, D.Sc. (gold medal), Guy's Hospital; T. Harris (obtained the number of marks qualifying for a gold medal), Owens College; D. Collingwood, University College; E. L. Adeney, Guy's Hospital; W. C. Wilkinson, B. A. Sydney, University College; R. Honeyburne, Liverpool Royal Infirmary and University College; M. Webb, Owens College. Second Class—D. W. Buxton, University College, and L. E. Shaw, Guy's Hospital (equal); W. E. Fielden, Guy's Hospital, and Mary A. Dacomb Scharlieb, Madras Medical College and Royal Free Hospital (equal). Third Class—R. Pratt, University College; J. W. Batterham, Westminster Hos-

WRIGHT'S

For Toilet, Bathroom and Nursery. In purchasing, demand Wright's, and see that tablet is branded "Sapo Carbonis Detergens."

"The only true Antiseptic Soap."—British Medical Journal.

Recommended by the entire Medical faculty USED BY THE PUBLIC FOR A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

PROPRIETORS:
W. V. WRIGHT & Co.,
SOUTHWARK, LONDON.

To be had of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Medicine Vendors, &c. throughout the civilized world.

Tablets, 6d. and 1s.

THE ORIGINAL & ONLY DISINFECTING SOAP.
Never wash without it, and thus ensure protection from infectious disease.
"In our hands it has proved most effective in Skin Diseases."—Lancet.

Unrivalled for the complexion, for it cleanses the skin, removes all impurities and ensures its healthy action.

COAL TAR

SOAP

BIRTH.

MAWER—On the 3rd inst., at Wood Green, the wife of W. Mawer, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

FIELD—BURT—On the 2nd inst., at St. Stephen's Church, Hampstead, A. Field, Esq., of Leam, Leamington, to Margaret Elizabeth Burt (of Guy's Hospital), daughter of the Rev. J. T. Burt, Rector of Stoke Doyle, Oundle, Northamptonshire.

NORTHEY—BATTAMS—On the 5th inst., at the parish church, Tavistock, G. W. Northey, son of W. Northey, of Tavistock, to Lilie Maria, daughter of G. B. Battams, Kilworthy, Tavistock

DEATHS.

LONG—On the 6th inst., at Woodlands, Knutsford, Henry Long, aged 75. No cards.

WOOLNOUGH—On the 1st inst., at 17, Harold-street, Camberwell, Walter Con Woolnough, aged 19, deeply regretted.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," Inquirer Office.

WANTED, immediately, a Care-Taker for Chapel and Day Schools. Must be a married man who has had experience in similar work.—Apply to the Rev. L. Scott, Denton, near Manchester.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest

Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S

CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY

FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM, AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 10.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., Sir ARTHUR HOBBHOUSE, K.C.S.I., Vice-Pres. S.L.S., on "The Struggle for Land. Land free and fettered."

BOURNEMOUTH.

Rev. ALFRED HOOD, at the Town Hall Buildings, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Bruce's (A. B.) The Galilean Gospel, 3/6
Charteris's (A. H.) The New Testament Scriptures, 7/6 (Croall Lectures, 1882.)

Dewar's (D.) New Theory of Nature, 5/
Encyclopædia of Biblical, &c., Theology, ed. by P. Schaff, Vol. 1, 24/

Hopley's (C. C.) Snakes, Curiosities and Wonders of Serpent Life, 16/

Lieber (F.) Life and Letter of, ed. by T. S. Perry, 14/

McAlpine's (D.) Botanical Atlas, Vol. 1, 15/

Marshall's (E.) Dayspring, a Story of the Time of William Tyndale, 5/

Nichol's (J.) American Literature, an Historical sketch, 1620-1880, 15/

Phillips's (L. F. M.) Lectures on Cumulative Evidence of Divine Revelation, 7/6

Raleigh's (A.) Thoughts for the Weary and the Sorrowful, 2/6

Rousseau, by H. G. Graham, 2/6 (Foreign Classics.)

Skelton's (J.) Essays in History and Biography, 10/6

Smith's (T. R.) Architecture, Classic, Gothic, and Renaissance, 10/6

Towards the Sunset, by Author of 'Recreations of a Country Parson,' 3/6

Tuckerman's (B.) History of English Prose Fiction, 8/6

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

Just Published, price 6d.
A FULL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN, LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, FREE CHRISTIAN, PRESBYTERIAN, and other NON-SUBSCRIBING or KINDRED CONGREGATIONS, held at LIVERPOOL, APRIL, 1882.

London and Edinburgh: WILLIAMS and NORGATE, Manchester: JOHNSON and RAWSON; also at the Unitarian Association, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, and Midland Christian Union, 40, High street, Birmingham.

New Edition, the Ninth Thousand, Revised and Enlarged, 100 pages, 8vo., price 1s., post free.

THOUGHTS ON THEISM,

WITH

SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN HARMONY WITH MODERN SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

"Dealing with religious progress and advance, it contains matter and suggestions which should be read especially by members of Assemblies and all interested in the foundations of religion."—GLASGOW HERALD.

"Its pages are enriched with numerous extracts from the most eminent divines, metaphysicians, and scientists of modern times."—SURRESBURY FREE PRESS.

London: TRUENER and Co., Ludgate hill.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS:

Minority Report of the late Select Committee of the House of Commons. With Introduction and copious References to the Evidence on which it is founded.

EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange, E.C., and all Booksellers. Price 7d., post free.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,
THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING
AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or S, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHARING-CROSS LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

SUNDAY LECTURE SOCIETY.

PRESIDENT.

W. B. Carpenter, Esq., C.B., LL.D., M.D., F.R.S.

VICE PRESIDENTS.

Professor Alexander Bain.

Edward Frankland, Esq., D.C.L., Ph.D., F.R.S.

James Heywood Esq., F.R.S., F.S.A.

Right Hon. Sir Arthur Hobhouse, K.C.S.I.

Thomas Henry Huxley, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S., F.L.S.

Benjamin Ward Richardson, Esq., M.D., F.R.S.

Charles Siemens, Esq., D.C.L., F.R.S.

Herbert Spencer, Esq.

W. Spottiswoode, Esq., LL.D., Pres.R.S.

John Tyndall, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S.

The LECTURES at ST. GEORGE'S HALL, LANGHAM-PLACE, on Sundays, commencing each Afternoon at Four o'clock precisely.

Twenty-one Lectures (in three series), ending 18th March, 1883, will be given.

The second Series of Seven Lectures will be as follows:—

Dec. 10, 1882.—Sir ARTHUR HOBHOUSE, K.C.S.I., Vice-Pres. S.L.S., on "The Struggle for Land. Land use and fettered."

Dec. 17.—JAMES GOW, Esq., M.A. Cantab., on "Socrates; the founder of Moral Philosophy."

Dec. 31.—Dr. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., F.L.S., on "The Brain and its Work." (With Illustrations.)

Jan. 7, 1883.—R. A. PROCTOR, Esq., B.A., F.R.A.S. (Editor of "Knowledge"), on "Star Depths; or, other Suns than Ours."

Jan. 14.—ARTHUR NICOLS, Esq., F.G.S., F.R.G.S., on "The Arts of Personal Adornment among Savage and Civilized People." (With Illustrations.)

Jan. 21.—Professor G. S. BOULGER, F.L.S., F.G.S., on "How Living beings Change. The Origin of Variation."

Jan. 28.—A. ELLIS FISCH, Esq., on "An Hour in a Library in search of Natural Knowledge. Its relation to Literature, to Culture, and to Conduct."

Members' Annual Subscription, £1, due 1st of October in each year, entitles them to a ticket (transferable, and admitting to the Reserved Seats), and to fourteen single Reserved Seat tickets available for any lecture.

Tickets for this Series (one for each lecture) to the Sixpenny Seats, 2s.

For Tickets and Lists of the Published Lectures apply (by letter) to the Hon. Treasurer, Wm. Henry Donville, Esq., 15, Gloucester-crescent, Hyde-park, W. (remittances to be made by cheque, by post-office order, payable at the Post-office, Porchester-road, W., or by postage stamps).

Payment at the Door:—One Shilling (Reserved Seats); Sixpence, and One Penny.

The entrance in Mortimer-street is exclusively to the Reserved Seats.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—Nothing is so highly appreciated as a case of GRANT'S MORELLA CHERRY BRANDY, which can be ordered of any Wine Merchant. Queen's quality, as supplied to Her Majesty, 42s. per dozen; Sportsman's special quality, 50s. per dozen.—Manufacturer, T. GRANT, Distillery, Maidstone.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabuck, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady (daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French (two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A. Lond.); Music (piano, forte, violin, singing, harmony); Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Mariette.

UNITARIAN CHURCH, AVONDALE-ROAD, PECKHAM (within ten minutes' walk of Rye-lane Railway Station).

OPENING SERVICES.

The new Church will be opened on Wednesday Evening, December 13, at 6.30, when the Rev. T. SADLER, Ph.D., of Hampstead, will preach. A Collection will be made at the close in aid of the Building Fund, which is still deficient £150.

A PUBLIC MEETING will be held in the Schoolroom at 8 o'clock, presided over by EDWIN LAWRENCE, Esq., LL.B.

The following, among other friends, will be present:—Miss Muller, M.L.S.B., Messrs. D. Martineau, J. T. Preston, F. Nettlefold, S. S. Taylor, R. Bartram, E. T. Hall, A.R.I.B.A., Revs. J. B. Ryley (Congregationalist), H. Ierson, T. W. Frelkelton, P. H. Wickstead, R. Spears, T. L. Marshall, &c.

SPECIAL SERVICES.

On Sunday, December 17, the Services will be conducted, in the Morning, at 11 o'clock, by the Rev. R. SPEARS, and in the Evening, at 6.30, by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTEAD, M.A.

Donations will be thankfully received by

GEORGE CARTER, Minister,
 83, Chadwick-road, Peckham, S.E.

HAHNEMANN EPPS, Sec. and Treasurer,
 9, Eliot Bank, Sydenham-hill, S.E.

CENTENARY CELEBRATION.

The MONTHLY MEETING OF PROTESTANT DISSENTING MINISTERS OF WARWICKSHIRE and the NEIGHBOURING COUNTIES, Established 1782, will celebrate its Centenary by a Series of Meetings to be held in BIRMINGHAM, on Wednesday, December 13.

1.—The Members and Friends will meet in the Lecture Room of the Church of the Messiah, when the Secretary will read a Sketch of the History of the Society, supplemented by members' remarks.

2.—To be followed by a Luncheon-Dinner at 1.30 for 2 o'clock punctually, at the Grand Hotel, Dr. RUSSELL, J.P., presiding. After dinner there will be a Conference, in which several Laymen and Ministers will take part.

3.—In the Evening, at 7 o'clock, there will be Public Worship in the Church of the Messiah, when the introductory service will be conducted by the Rev. JOHN ROBERTS, and the Rev. Professor ESTLIN CARPENTER will preach.

Tickets for the Dinner, Three Shillings each; can be had from the Hon. Secretary before December 4.

D. MAGINNIS, Hon. Sec.
 Old Parsonage, Stourbridge, Nov. 8, 1882.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE FOR WOMEN
 STUDENTS OF THE LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatton, C.B., Member of the Council of University College; C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dicey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

BRENTWOOD, WORSLEY,
 Near MANCHESTER.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Principal ... MRS. F. SHAWCROSS, late of Brook House, Kautsford.—For prospectus, apply to the Principal, or to Messrs. J. GALT and Co., Manchester.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HRAVIDSE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certificate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by correspondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials.—Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

A CERTIFICATED TEACHER OF MUSIC (Harrow System) is seeking a re-engagement for next Term.—For further particulars, apply to Mrs. TUNIS, Sherwood-street, Nottingham.

AN experienced TEACHER, holding the St. Andrew's LL.A. Degree for Women, wishes to meet with a morning engagement. Subjects:—English, Music, French, German, and Elementary Latin.—Address, E. N., INQUIRER Office.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday December 9, 1882

EDWARD T. WHITFIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 178, STRAND, W.C.

E. T. WHITFIELD begs to inform his Friends and Customers that he now keeps a very large stock of GENERAL and FANCY STATIONERY, and that he executes orders for every kind of Die-Sinking, Stamping, and Engraving. Parcels amounting to £1 sent Carriage Free.

Card Plate Engraved, and Fifty Cards with name only, Gentlemen's or Ladies' size, 2s. 6d.; Addresses, 9d. per line extra.

Five Quires of Note Paper and 100 Envelopes, stamped with Monogram or Lady's Name, 4s.

Rubber Stamps, both for marking Linen and for Business Purposes, at very low prices.

Christmas, New Year, and Birthday Cards, in great variety.

E. T. W. continues to supply UNITARIAN and all other Books, post-free, at the Publishers' Prices, from One Shilling upwards.

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought.

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2112.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

Spiritual Theism	805
Renan's Autobiography.—II.	806
Defunct Churches	807
Avondale Church, Peckham	808
Discussion at Padliham on the Foundation of the Christian Religion	809

CORRESPONDENCE:—

The Rev. J. Maclaren Cobban	810
Provisions for Ministers' Families... ..	810

OUR CONTEMPORARIES

OCCASIONAL NOTES

REVIEWS:—

Religion in the Light of Philosophy	813
Life and Letters of St. Paul	813
Short Notices	814
Literary Notes	814

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

Avondale-road, Peckham	815
Blackley Unitarian Chapel... ..	816

THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—

Job and his Friends	817
----------------------------	-----

UNIVERSITY INTELLIGENCE

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the beginning of the New Year the price of the INQUIRER will be reduced from 5d. to 2d. weekly. See detailed notice in another column.

SPIRITUAL THEISM.

In the Yearly Theistic Record, just published by the Branch Brahmo Somaj of India, there is an interesting article on what is called "The New Dispensation." Our readers will remember that this is the name given to the new religious movement started by KESHUB CHUNDER SEN. It is a name involving an important claim—the claim to be a new revelation of religious truth to mankind. The article before us is written expressly for the purpose of justifying this pretentious name. It is ably written, and contains the best statement we have seen of the leading ideas of the new faith. The writer sets out with the view that the New Dispensation is the last link of the chain of Dispensations that have been given to mankind from time to time for their redemption. He enumerates the Vedic, the Jewish, the Christian, the Mahomedan dispensations and "the dispensation of Chaitanya, which initiated mankind in such a faith in GOD as made its followers to really love GOD with the whole mind, heart, soul, and strength, even as a faithful wife loves her husband."

These systems of faith, which appeared at different times, and in different climes, are not isolated facts, having no connection with each other. They would, on the contrary, appear to be essential parts of a great whole, in which each has a distinct and definite function assigned to itself, and which, without the complementary help from the others, would be partial and incomplete. Thus the Jewish dispensation was a further development of the Vedic, and the Christian a further development of the Jewish; while "the Mahomedan brought down such a faith to the world as taught its followers to recognise GOD, neither as the Jehovah nor as the Father in Heaven, but as the One without a second, the All-powerful Captain, under whose banners Mahomed fought with the doubting as well as the idolatrous sons of men in this sinful world of ours." The last revelation is that which revealed GOD as "Hari—the Being who manifests himself within and without as All-in-All."

These dispensations had one object in view, viz., the perfecting of humanity as regards its relations to the Divine Author of our being and bringing it into closer intimacy with Him. Taken separately, each represents only a practical idea, which however needful to the stage of progress to which humanity had attained at the time, was by no means adequate to satisfy the growing demands of humanity at a subsequent stage. Hence the necessity of a succession of dispensations. Progressing independently—independent in a limited sense only—each of these had to do its own appointed work. At length, in the fulness of time, it became necessary to fuse all these together and form one grand dispensation. Thus the new dispensation of the nineteenth century is a necessity of the times, and is as much the offspring of the previous ones as each of these had been the outcome of the others preceding it. The business of this last, however, is not simply to bring these partial dispensations into a synthetic union, but likewise to give to the age something new. Accordingly, our author proceeds to enumerate certain religious ideas which he says give a new and distinctive character to this Brahmo Somaj movement.

The first is that it blends together the leading conceptions of GOD formed by the other religions. He is not only the Infinite Being, the King or Jehovah, the Father, the One without a second, or the loving Hari, taken separately, but all these taken together. We do not see anything new in this, anything which goes beyond Christianity, which unites all perfections in the One GOD and Father of all. We now come to the more spiritual part of this teaching—"The second new idea is the Personality of GOD." When we say that the new dispensation of this century has given us the idea of the Personality of GOD, we do not mean that the other dispensations had altogether no idea of this; but what we mean is, that those dispensations did not busy themselves so much with GOD's present living personality as with his different attributes separately—the Infinitude, Justice, Mercy, Unity and Perfect Love were respectively the central ideas of these dispensations in regard to GOD and his relations with us. In the present dispensation a different arrangement obtains—in it GOD must be adored as a living Person possessing these attributes. In one sense this may be said to form the grand, central idea of this dispensation. GOD with us is a Person, one with whom we can exchange ideas and feelings. In communion with Him we can not only contemplate his attributes, but likewise feel, see, and hear Him—all this spiritually of course.

Our author goes on to say that this communion may be "enjoyed alike by the pure and the impure, the devout and the undevout, provided only that he has simple faith in the present living Personality." We cannot agree with him. The impure and the undevout can have no true faith. The mere assent to GOD's personality cannot alone entitle any one to such communion; the essential condition on which it can be realised is the pure heart and the devout nature.

The direct and immediate manifestation of the Personal GOD to every one who seeks him is the next feature mentioned of the Brahmo religion. It brings GOD in direct contact with the human soul. It sanctifies all life and thought by the inspiration and presence of GOD.

Hence it is that mere contemplation of the divine attributes, without a vivid conception of his personality, is not communion with GOD. Hence also mediators and book revelations, that hide the face of GOD from us, have found no favour with the Brahmo Somaj. It is, moreover, for this reason that we consider those who lay so much stress on the doing of external acts of virtue and the carrying out of rules and precepts as committing fatal errors in respect to a healthy growth of religion in them. Indeed, people who perform virtuous acts in mere conformity to rules and formulas, without caring to see the hand of GOD in them; in other words, without feeling that GOD himself is present to dictate these rules to us can by no means be said to be alive to their religious interests. If they do at all deceive themselves with the thought that their so-called meritorious acts carry them towards heaven or bring them nearer to GOD, sadly must they be lacking in a true knowledge of their spiritual needs and wants." There is much truth in this view; and it deserves specially the attention of all who identify religion with outward formal acts of piety.

The fourth novel feature of the New Dispensation is the new sense in which many old words are used—such as Soul, Life, Immortality, Heaven, Hell, Repentance, Prayer, Revelation, Inspiration, Atonement, and Salvation. Soul or spirit is in the old phraseology said to be that faculty of the mind by which it comes in contact with GOD; but in our language Soul is the real created personality—the true man. It cannot exist happily without feeling GOD's living presence. It has no light but the vision of GOD; it has no heart but the love of GOD; it has no conscience but the living voice of the Divine Being; it has no freedom but the guiding influence of the Omnipotent will; it has, in short, no existence but to live, move, and have its being in Him, and Him alone. Life, again, is not simply to eat, drink, and be merry, neither is it doing all the good works which Western civilisation teaches; nor even religious exercises. To have spiritual life is to realise the vivifying influence of the Divine Presence to sustain it. Immortality is the continuance to eternity of the life in GOD which begins in this world with conscious existence in GOD. Heaven and Hell have lost their old signification. Instead of being imaginary places of reward and punishment, or even states of reward and punishment, they represent the different attitudes of the soul towards GOD, it being heaven when GOD is with us; and hell when we live without Him. Repentance is not the remorse which man expresses for the commission of acts which are said to be sinful and omission of others which are supposed to be virtuous, but that which he feels for his conscious disobedience to the Supreme Will. Prayer is not the mere asking for spiritual blessings from GOD—He being the means and the blessings the end, as if these were more valuable and dearer than he himself is! Prayer is that attitude of the soul in which it feels a hungering for the blessed company of GOD, and if we ask for any blessing from Him, it is not as an end but as a means to attain Him. Revelation is the direct communication of divine wisdom and truth. Inspiration is the communion of the soul with the living personal GOD, and the receiving from Him counsel, wisdom, and might in our times of need. Atonement is the beginning and salvation, the completion of a sinner's reunion with GOD. When man sins he alienates himself from GOD; as long as that alienation continues there is disunion between himself and his Maker. In the removal of this alienation by the act of returning to GOD and doing His will consists Brahmic Atonement. It is true we do not in this atonement have to appease the wrath of an offended GOD; yet we are required to make a sacrifice of the proud self which led us astray in the path of unrighteousness. When the wearied soul thus returns to its place of rest GOD himself becomes its light, life, and guide. Man, thus accepted, is said to have got his salvation.

The fifth idea is that of paying homage to the Prophets and Saints of other religions. "When we speak of paying homage to these, we do not say we consider them to stand to us in any other relation than that of man to man—they are simply our elder brothers and exemplars; and not Avatars, Mediators, or Saviours. By honouring them we simply honour GOD, who inspired them." In regard to the apostles of any Dispensation, we are told that "people in these days are apt to think that because the Apostles, as bearers of Heaven's peculiar messages to mankind, are entitled to our gratitude and respect, they must, therefore, be looked upon as belonging to a different order of beings; they must, in short, be mediators between the sinful world and GOD. But they should remember that these men can claim no credit for what they teach us; they are instruments in the hand of GOD." In regard to the sacred books of the old religions the writer says:—"These venerable books, in which are recorded the religious experiences of the ages long gone by, are a rich mine of wealth. As to errors, there are, no doubt, a heap of those in them; but the business of the discriminating critic is not with errors, he has simply to see if there is any with the faintest trace of truth in them. Viewed in this light the "Vedas" will be found pre-eminently and consistently inculcating the idea of the Absolute Existence. The Mosaic and the Christian writings in the same way will be found to teach us peculiar ideas about the Godhead and His dealings with mankind. When dealt with in this way those writings will moreover be found not only not to contradict each other, but the later writings will supplement what is wanting in the earlier."

Such are the leading ideas of this Brahmo writer; we need not point out to our readers how nearly they approach to our own views of things. In some respects the two are identical, and in others the difference is in the form of expression, not in the actual thought. We cannot admit the claim that the above ideas are really new. Most of them are our own sentiments, and we think that spiritual Unitarian writings are the chief source from which they have been derived. But come whence they may, we rejoice in their diffusion, and trust that the time will come when the idolatries of India will be superseded by this noble Theistic faith.

RENAN'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.—II.

THE religious crisis to which M. RENAN'S Autobiographical Sketches chiefly refer he called, he says, Naphtali, or the Period of Wrestling, making a pedantic use of his Hebrew. It was to him lucta mea, a time of personal struggle and wrestling with the highest within him; and no wonder that he often found himself repeating the phrase—"J'ai lutté des luttés de Dieu." The transition from authority to consciousness is always a struggling, a wrestling between our clinging affections and our reason, between our interests and the dangers and uncertainties of the path to which duty points. It is customary among ecclesiastics, says M. RENAN, to hasten rather than defer the fulfilment of any sacerdotal engagement, in case of an avowal of doubt. Hence his spiritual adviser, an able and fairly enlightened man, urged him resolutely to take the position of a sub-deacon, the first step in the Catholic hierarchy, telling him he must go on courageously with the duties that lay before him, and pay no attention to what was merely a form of temptation against the truth of religion and the power of faith. But he flatly refused, he tells us, to forge the first link in the chain of an ecclesiastical career; and in the state of mental tension and spiritual unrest which had led to his seeking sympathy, and being proffered the advice he had to refuse, he went as usual into Brittany, to spend his holidays with his mother. This was in the summer of 1845. While staying amid the solitudes of this his native province, he had abundant opportunities for reflection. Hence, as he says, the sand-grains of doubt soon grew into a massive block. His ecclesiastical friends were no longer near him, and he had ceased to take part in the sacraments of the Church, though he still possessed his old love and enjoyment of the prayers. His words on this subject are:—"Christianity appeared to me greater than ever; but I no longer retained any belief in the miraculous, except as a matter of habit, and by the play of a sort of fiction with regard to myself. Logic had done its work; that of personal loyalty had now to be carried on. For about two months I was a Protestant; I could not resolve upon wholly breaking with the great Christian tradition upon which I had hitherto satisfied my spiritual wants; I dreamed rather of comprehensive reforms in which the philosophy of Christianity, freed from all the excrescences of superstition and possessed of its moral efficacy, should remain the great school of humanity and be its guide along future ages. My German readings nourished these ideas. HERDER was the German writer with whom I was best acquainted. His wide-ranging views delighted me, and I said to myself at times with a feeling of keen regret—"Ah! why cannot I accept all this and yet remain a minister, a preacher of Christianity!" But with the clear and respectful ideas I had of Catholicism I could not conceive it possible for me to honestly become a Catholic priest with the opinions I held. A secret voice seemed to say to me: "You are no longer a Catholic; your coat is a lie, cast it aside."

Still, in spite of these doubts as to the claims and doctrines of Orthodoxy, our author experienced no violent break with Christianity, as we have seen. He was not sceptical as to the power and beauty of religion; felt at that time, at least, no terrible misgivings as to the possibility of the spiritual in the universe, and passed through no gross darkness of sceptical revolt, as many do when they first break with the past. His philosophical scepticism was of later growth. He was, he tells his readers, still a Christian, and he adds:—"All the papers I possess, which relate to this period, are pervaded with the sentiment I tried to express later on in the 'Vie de Jesus.' What I mean is, that I had a high appreciation of the Gospel ideal of life and of the character of the Founder of Christianity. The thought that in leaving the Church I should still remain faithful to JESUS took strong possession of my mind, and if I had been capable of believing in apparitions I should certainly have seen, or seemed to see, JESUS, and heard Him saying to me:—"You must deny me in order to become really my disciple." This idea sustained me, emboldened me. From that time the 'Vie de Jesus' was written in my mind. The belief in the mighty personality of JESUS, which is the soul of that work, was my strength and stay in my struggle with Orthodoxy. JESUS has, in a very real sense, always been my Master. In following truth at the price of sacrifice I have been convinced that I was following Him and obeying the highest of His teachings." With regard to his old masters, the priests, who had charge of the school in his native town, he was now, he says, so far removed from them in ideas, objects of study, and intellectual culture, that he could scarcely converse with them. They seem, however, to have been somewhat proud of their former pupil, for one of them said: "I always thought you would reach very advanced studies." At the same time they were puzzled at his constant recital of the Psalms in Hebrew, and were tempted to ask him, he tells us, whether he wished to make a Jew of himself. Meanwhile his mother divined a change in him, though she could not understand it or fathom its cause. He continues, it appears, to take long walks with her as he had done in his childhood. One day they went out as usual and sat down by the side of a stream in a certain valley, where he read for a long time without even raising his eyes. The book, which was the "Recherches Philosophiques," by M. BONALD, a very harmless work we are told, greatly displeased his mother, who at last snatched it from his hands and would not allow him to read it any longer. This may have been due to a species of maternal jealousy caused by the thought that the book was more to her son than she was. Such, however, is not his opinion. She felt, he says, that if it was not the author of the book it was such as he who were her enemies, who were turning him from that career in life upon which she had set her heart.

At length the decisive moment came. On the 6th of September he wrote to his spiritual adviser at St. Sulpice a letter, which he reproduces in full, without, as he says, softening down anything that may be contradictory or too fervid in its utterances. After a few introductory words he writes:—"Since I came here I have acquired important data for the solution of the great problem which has absorbed my thoughts. Several circumstances have led me to reflect upon the magnitude of the sacrifice which God demands from me, and I see into what an abyss I shall fall if I obey the promptings of my conscience. To give up a course of life which has been a source of delight to me from childhood, and which was leading me steadily on to the pure and noble end I had in view, in order to enter upon another path in which I foresee but uncertainties and repulses; and to run counter to opinions which will have nothing but censure for me for a good action—all this would have been a small matter if it had not been necessary at the same time to tear away the half of my heart, or, speaking more to the point, to pierce another heart to which mine was closely united. Filial love has grown up in my nature at the expense of so many other affections. And yet it is just here, in the deepest fibre of my being, that duty exacts from me the most painful sacrifice. My leaving the Seminary will be an altogether inexplicable enigma to my mother; she will think that I have caused her death from mere caprice." This cry of pain, so to speak, shows us our author in his affectional nature, and affords a splendid illustration of the teaching of the Gospel where a man is enjoined to sacrifice the dearest earthly relationship for the sake of truth.

The following passage indicates a state of revolt and seems to clash somewhat with statements found elsewhere:—"When I look closely at the intricate network in which God has entangled me during the sleep of my reason and liberty, and whilst I was docilely following the course He had laid down for me, desolating thoughts rise up in my soul. God knows I was simple-hearted and pure in my motives; He knows that I did not intermeddle with what had been determined on my account; indeed, I freely and even eagerly entered the path which was opened before me, and now that path has led me to an abyss. . . . God has betrayed me. I have never doubted that a wise and beneficent Providence governed the universe, and would order my course and lead me to my destination in life. Still it is not without much effort that I have been able to give in this way a formal denial to apparent facts. An isolated consideration of facts scarcely leads to Optimism. We need courage to concede such generosity to God in the face of experience." Having spoken thus, he goes on to say he has been advised to pass a year or so of free study in Paris, during which he might reflect on his future. And he adds that he is disposed to follow that advice, for though he means to call at St. Sulpice to confer with his superiors, in consequence of his present state of mind, he cannot take up his abode there any more, though he looks forward to separation with a feeling of horror:—"My God!" he cries, "how cruel it is to be thus compelled to swim against a stream one has so long and so pleasantly followed! In truth I am fain to regret the wretched share of liberty God has given to us; we have not enough to grapple with our difficulties; not sufficient to dominate destiny; but merely enough to fit us to suffer. . . . Happy the children who do nothing but sleep and dream, and who never think of engaging in this struggle of thought with God Himself. I see around me people who are pure in their lives and simple-hearted, and who find Christianity sufficient for virtue and happiness. Ah! may God keep them from ever awaking to a consciousness of that unfortunate faculty, that fatal critical tendency which so imperatively demands satisfaction." To this wail of sorrow at the possession of what he has since found a source of joy, our author adds that he feels he can never return to Orthodoxy, that up to the present he has hoped to get back to the starting point of belief, after completing the circle of doubt. That hope, he continues, is totally gone now; the return to Catholicism has become impossible, except by a denial of reason, and by declaring it once for all null and void, and condemning it to respectful silence. "Those who know me will be aware," he says, "that it is not self-interest which is removing me from the Church, since all my most cherished purposes tended to make me faithful to it." If he had been born in a Protestant country it might have been different, he thinks; but Catholicism is a bar of iron, and with this a man can hold no argument:—"Who will found among us," he asks, "a rational and critical form of Christianity? I cannot help saying that I think I have found in the pages of several German authors the kind of Christianity we need. May I live to see the day when this kind of Christianity shall assume a form capable of fully satisfying the needs of our age! May I myself co-operate in this great work!" Towards the close of his letter he says:—"I recite the Psalms by heart, and I could pass hours together in the Church if I yielded to my inclinations; a gentle, simple and pure form of piety stirs my heart to its centre. . . . Still I have come to a fixed determination as to the future; I have broken away indeed from the unfortunate yoke of consequences, at least provisionally. . . . There are moments in which I succeed in being both a Catholic and a Rationalist, but a priest I cannot be; one is not such for a few moments at a time, but always." There is thus a secret hope of moral union with the Church in our author's mind, though he feels he can never again accept her dogmas.

The answer to this letter was sympathetic, and his views and intentions were but feebly combated, he says. His sister, too, writing from Poland, gave him great encouragement in the step he had taken, but his mother's sorrow made his heart bleed. It also cost him much pain to sadden his old teachers by letting them see that something was wrong, though he knew it would be useless to try to make them understand his motives. Hence he did not tell them all. It was different, however, with the authorities at St. Sulpice, who were men of larger views. But we must leave our author's reference to them, as well as his general estimate of their teaching, for a third and last article.

MR. SAMUEL SMITH, who has been elected for Liverpool, thus wresting a seat from the Conservatives, is a merchant of that city, and well-known for his philanthropy. He is the son of a farmer of Robertson, N.B., where his grandfather was the parish minister.

DEFUNCT CHURCHES.

MR. ALLEN's book (which we reviewed last week) is regarded by an Orthodox critic as a funeral discourse on Unitarianism. If it were, it would give a wrong impression of our denomination in America; the great gatherings at Saratoga evince an amount of zeal and energy which are not the signs of a moribund, much less of a deceased body; and "Our Liberal Movement in Theology" is extending in all directions. If, however, we turn from the Unitarian movement to that Church in Massachusetts on which our fathers looked with so much love and pride, we feel that the place that once knew it knows it no more. There are, indeed, more Unitarian congregations there than there were fifty years ago; but their relative position and actual condition are changed. The population of the State is far larger, but this increase arises from a foreign element which has no sympathy with our views, while the sons of the Puritans are dispersed over the Union. Boston has become a much greater city; but its intellectual pre-eminence has declined. The New England States are losing their comparative importance in the immense growth of the Republic; and what was once the most conspicuous church in a small district in New England is no longer "the observed of all observers." Perhaps this is as it should be. "Salt is good"; but it is good for little, while kept in the salt-cellar, however bright the crystal or precious the metal which holds it. Leaven is only of use when we see it no more—for it is leavening the lump! So far as Unitarianism is a "movement," we must not expect to find it settled in its old place.

Mr. ALLEN writes tenderly and reverently of the Church of CHANNING and WARE—of Judge STORY and President ADAMS—as of that which has ceased to be; for in his childhood it was most closely bound up with the State. The Congregationalists in New England had founded a Theocracy, and their clergy, whether Unitarian or Orthodox, were supported out of the town taxes; and from prescriptive right exercised great social authority. They had definite and recognised functions, beside those of public worship. The churches were established not only by law, but by habit and tradition: and there was an amount of church-life, such as was seldom witnessed in our English congregations. It seemed just such a Broad Church Establishment as that for which many are now yearning. It had, however, the characteristic faults of an Establishment. It was conservative and timid, even after its legal status was changed. It left outsiders—"Come-outers"—to take the lead in the Anti-slavery struggle, and other important reforms. The church of the Unitarian fathers in America has passed away: the church which has succeeded to it, with less outward authority and with ordinances that have lost their unquestioned obligation, may be better adapted to these times.

The denomination has undergone a more fundamental change in its theological than in its ecclesiastical condition; though this is not self-evident, for the doctrinal expression of the National Conference would have been accepted by the founders of the American Unitarian Association; yet the basis of the doctrine is altered. Those Unitarian founders accepted the Bible as "a revelation of absolute authority, to declare the law of life, or to instruct the mind in the highest conceivable truth. To their strong and sober sense, Christianity without a supernatural revelation of truth, without miracles, without the divine authority of JESUS, was a weak delusion, if not a wicked and hypocritical pretence." The American Unitarians were, as a rule, less heterodox than their brethren in England. So late as 1859, influential ministers regarded the "denying school of PRIESTLEY and BELSHAM as the very worst form of Christianity."* They tried to ban PARKER as an unbeliever, and EMERSON as a blasphemer; but with all the veneration still felt for CHANNING, PARKER and EMERSON seem to have had most influence on the religious opinions which now prevail. Indeed, when we note the tendency of what is styled a "scientific theology," those seem to be "defenders of the faith" who maintain a belief in a personal GOD and personal immortality with the positiveness of PARKER, to say nothing of the intense sympathy with JESUS which he often manifested. It is not surprising that those who love to rest on external authority often prefer the Episcopal Church to the Liberal Movement: in the United States it is not cursed with the Athanasian Creed, nor with the absurd anomalies of the Church of the Tudors and Stuarts. No doubt a large conservative element still abides among the Unitarians, but we can scarcely deny that Mr. ALLEN'S description of the faith of his childhood bears some tokens of a funeral eulogy. If the "Body which has been" is changed, we cherish the hope of the "Body which shall be," in which its spirit shall be renewed and perfected.

In England, the Presbyterian Church from which we are descended, and whose title deeds we hold, is no more; it had become defunct before Unitarianism was preached. We are, what we are, owing to the ruin of Presbyterianism between the Restoration and the Revolution. The Church government which flourished in the Commonwealth could not be retained, and was not restored; and therefore the churches of Presbyterian origin actually became more free from any government whatever, than those which had not relied on the support of the State. There is no Nonconformist denomination more anti-Presbyterian than our own, or more jealous of independence—not to say individualism. "New Presbyter," wrote MILTON, "is but Old Priest writ large"; and we are intolerant of priestly usurpations; though we long cherished a conventional dislike to the usages of other Dissenting Churches which admitted laymen to their pulpits. There is no vestige of genuine Presbyterianism among us, although our "Presbyterian" ministers still address the throne, and "the Provincial Assembly" still flourishes. Many of us have clung to the name, because the meaning had gone out of it; it tied us neither to the Westminster Confession nor to the tyranny of Church Courts; it no more bound us to a Presbytery, than do the surnames Green or Brown, or Black or White to the assumption of those colours! At the close of the last century most of the Presbyterian congregations which survived in England were more or less rationalistic; but they were not disposed to assume the Unitarian name. The members of the Unitarian "Societies" were few; till 1813, the avowal of Anti-Trinitarianism was attended with severe penalties. In more recent times the objection to the name "Unitarian" has been strengthened by the feeling that a Church should not be designated by a doctrine. But the time has passed in which we could call ourselves by our hereditary title, without being misunderstood; for it cannot be denied that the name "Presbyterian" is strictly appropriate to those churches of Scottish origin which of late years have multiplied in England. The "English Presbyterian" Church of our forefathers is extinct.

As regards our theological position the change is less marked than in the United States, because our fathers were more radical. From the titles of last year's "Unitarian Affirmations," it might seem that we have not departed from their faith, yet we hold it on so different a tenure that we are not surprised at those who question our right to it. The Unitarians of half a century ago claimed to be the Protestants of the Protestants: they believed in the authority and sufficiency of Scripture as well as in the right of free inquiry: they maintained that when the bondage of creeds was broken, and men read the Bible for themselves, it was not the Trinity but the unity of GOD which they could find there, and it was to the Bible that they appealed. About the year 1836 (the date which Mr. ALLEN gives for the second epoch of American Unitarianism) Mr. MARTINEAU published his "Rationale of Religious Enquiry." He quoted, from leading Unitarian writers, assertions of the unquestionable divine authority of the declarations and precepts of CHRIST and his Apostles; but he maintained, "that no apparent inspiration whatever can establish anything contrary to reason; that reason is the ultimate appeal, the supreme tribunal, to the test of whichever Scripture must be brought." It did not, however, seem to him contrary to reason that there should be a supernatural revelation, and as he regarded the religion of CHRIST as "essentially historical," he then felt that Anti-supernaturalists could not strictly and logically be called Christians.

There is much the same difference between us and our fathers as between Orthodox Protestants and Catholics. They hold most of the same doctrines, but rest them on a different authority. The Church is the authority for Catholics—Scripture for Protestants. Our fathers rested on Scripture; we on reason. As Protestants are told that they would not have found their orthodox doctrines in Scripture, unless the Church had shown them, so Scripturalists affirm that when Scripture is forsaken, the doctrines which it revealed to reason may be forsaken too! Certainly some of the fundamentals of Christianity, in which our fathers agreed with the other churches, seem to be held loosely, if held at all, by those whose Christianity is as shadowy as their Presbyterianism!

We have described as "defunct churches," those to which we are nearly related; but it is obvious that they are not solitary instances. LUTHER and CALVIN would not have approved the churches that now bear their name. The change is most striking in the Church which claims to be unchangeable; what can be more unlike the "Holy Catholic Apostolic Church" than the Papacy which assumes the exclusive right to the title? Whenever that which is "in part" is succeeded by that which is more perfect, we must not bewail its decease. PAUL rejoiced to believe that the Law in which he had gloried was dead—nailed as it were to the cross; for the "ministration of death" gave place to that of the spirit. The Israel of his fathers was dear to him; but dearer still was "the Israel of GOD."

We are not afraid for the future, so long as we cherish the spirit of truth that leadeth unto all truth. Scripture speaks of the removal of things that are shaken, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. But much which has been shaken, time after time, still endures. The living tree which is shaken spreads its roots! So far as our religion is merely a structure, it must be endangered when it is moved from its foundations, or they are undermined; but if our religion is a life, it would pine without movement; whilst with it it reaches on to its true end and aim. While we are really pressing on to that which is before, we can afford to forget the things behind. The sacred treasures of our hearts we do not leave behind.

R. L. C.

AVONDALE CHURCH, PECKHAM.

The addition of another handsome building to the Unitarian churches of the metropolis is an event which calls for general congratulation. Our readers in all parts of the country will be interested in the full report we give this week of the opening of the new church in Avondale-road, Peckham, which, like all our other new churches, has an open religious trust, and upholds the standard of Liberal Christianity in its simplest and most comprehensive form. We offer our most cordial congratulations to the Rev. George Carter and his little band of indefatigable co-workers, who have proved so faithful to their cause during long years of weakness and frequent discouragement, until they now see the fruition of their ardent hopes and strenuous labours in the erection of a handsome and commodious church, standing side by side with the spacious school-room—one of the best in the metropolis—which they previously owed to the munificence of the late ever-to-be revered Samuel Sharpe. The congregation, as we have good reason to know, is united and increasing, and under Mr. Carter's ministrations has, we doubt not, a prosperous future before it.

The opening services on Wednesday were all that could be desired. Dr. Sadler's sermon, as will be seen from the brief outline we give, struck exactly the right note for the occasion, and wisely pointed out the duty of the hour, besides clearly indicating the new hopes that brighten our immediate future. When the preacher exhorted his hearers to pass on from Unitarian Theology to Unitarian Religion, the passing thought may have occurred that while Theology is more or less denominational and inevitably disuniting, Religion is neither Unitarian nor Trinitarian, but the divine and uniting element that constitutes the common faith and hope of all Churches. But further reflection will show that there are fundamental differences between even the religious conceptions of the dogmatic sects and the Free Churches, and that Religion needs the consecrating light of a true Theology in order to elevate it into the pure and reasonable service which we all desire to offer. Dr. Sadler's wise and thoughtful words on the relations of Liberty and Religion deserve careful attention. He is not to be misunderstood as in any way disparaging the liberty which we hold as the most precious inheritance from the struggles of the past, but simply as pointing out that through the right exercise of our unlimited freedom of thought and inquiry we come to the knowledge of the great truths and principles which constitute our real religious life.

The proceedings of the evening meeting were characterised by a spirit of enthusiasm, and indicated that this rising congregation and their friends are thoroughly in earnest in their work, and well deserve the generous support they have received from the Unitarian public. There seems to be no reason why—supposing the right men can be found—a similar work should not be done in other flourishing suburbs where there are now no Unitarian Churches.

THE LONDON SCHOOL BOARD held its weekly meeting on Thursday. The question of higher elementary education was again discussed, and once more adjourned without any progress being made. The names of the new chairmen of the standing committees were announced. Some of the recommendations of the special committee on the constitution and powers of local managers were disposed of, and a variety of other routine business transacted. The Board adjourned till the 11th of next month.

* Memoirs of Dr. P. P. Carpenter, p. 199.

DISCUSSION AT PADIHAM ON THE FOUNDATION OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

A new Independent school chapel has just been opened here by the Rev. George Sexton, M.A., LL.D., Editor of The Shield of Faith. During the doctor's visit he delivered four theological lectures of a controversial character, the subjects being (1):—"Prayer: its Relation to Science, Natural Law and Modern Thought"; (2) "Science and Scripture"; (3) "The Resurrection of Christ an Established Fact, and the Foundation of the Christian Religion"; (4) "History's Testimony to Christ." The Rev. Christopher J. Street, M.A., Unitarian minister, having expressed to several members of his congregation a desire to deal with the subject of the third lecture, the wish was made known to friends connected with the Independent cause, with the result that a letter was sent to Mr. Street, inviting him to be present at the lecture on "The Resurrection," and ask questions or offer remarks if he chose. In the same friendly spirit Mr. Street accepted the invitation, and occupied a seat on the platform during the delivery of the lecture.

The Rev. E. EVANS, Methodist Free Church minister at Burnley, presided. There was only a small attendance. Dr. SEXTON proceeded to deliver his lecture, which occupied over an hour and a-half. At the close, the Rev. C. J. STREET, M.A., proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Dr. Sexton, and characterised the lecture in high terms; but he ventured to object to the latter part of the title, which proclaimed the Resurrection of Christ to be "The Foundation of the Christian Religion." Had it not been for those words he would not have felt it his duty to be present that night. Such an assertion meant that he and his congregation generally were not entitled to call themselves Christians, because they could not see their way to accept the doctrine of the bodily resurrection. Yet he for one would yield to no man in reverence for the life and character and teachings of Jesus Christ, to whom he looked as the great founder of the religion which he held dear. Surely it was a huge mistake to attempt to found the eternal verities of religion upon the so-called supernatural or miraculous. Nothing in his estimation did more to damage the cause of Christianity than such an attempt, which was far too generally made. The doctrine of Immortality must have a firmer basis than the Resurrection of Christ; if it were not grounded in the human soul, mind and heart, it would never win its way to real acceptance. The foundation of the Christian faith must surely be in the teachings and spirit of Jesus Christ himself, and not in any supposed marvellous event in his history. Mr. Street proceeded to quote words attributed to Jesus, in order to show the spirit of the teacher and the work which he set himself to do for humanity, showing that religion, according to Christ; was summed up in love to God and love to man, and concerned itself infinitely more about purity of life than about correctness of creed. In conclusion, Mr. Street asked whether Dr. Sexton would deny to him the name of Christian after the statement which he had made.

The Rev. J. RHODES, Wesleyan Superintendent minister of the Padiham circuit, seconded the vote of thanks. While he would be glad to co-operate as far as possible with Mr. Street and the Unitarians in all good works, he would be compelled to withhold such co-operation where loyalty to his Master was involved. He had been put into this awkward position; either Mr. Street was wrong, or the apostle Paul was. Of the two he preferred to follow Paul, who said, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith also is vain; ye are yet in your sins." He was sorry to think that these words would apply to Mr. Street.

In responding to the cordial vote of thanks Dr. SEXTON said Mr. Street had asked whether he would allow him the Christian name. Far be it from him to un-Christianise anyone. To his own master let each man stand or fall. At the same time, he could not for the life of him understand how men, occupying the anti-supernaturalist position, could claim to be Christians at all. He agreed that love to God and man summed up Christianity, and that Immortality had a basis independent of the resurrection doctrine. Still for him that doctrine remained the foundation of the Christian faith, and he saw no reason for changing the title of his lecture.

Last Sunday evening, according to announcement, the Rev. C. J. STREET delivered a lecture in reply to Dr. Sexton, on "The Resurrection of Christ not the Foundation of the Christian Religion." There was a very large congregation, including many belonging to other congregations in the town, and many belonging to none. Deep interest was manifested in the subject. Mr. Street began by briefly referring to the many phases of faith through which Dr. Sexton had passed, and the special qualification he had thereby gained for dealing with positions which were once his own, though he held them no longer. He then pointed out how inconsistently Dr. Sexton had escaped from the dilemma which had been presented to him. If it were true, as the doctor said, that "Christianity must stand or fall by the resurrection of Christ," and if someone came forward denying that resurrection, and yet claiming to be a Christian, the only logical answer which Dr. Sexton could give must be, You have no right to assume that name, since you deny the very foundation of the faith for which it stands. But, instead, his answer was that he would un-Christianise none. Either he (Mr. Street) was a Christian, or he was not. If the bodily resurrection was the foundation of Christianity, he was not, and he failed to see why the claim was allowed under the circumstances. It was a piece of glaring inconsistency. True, the resurrection might be the foundation of the common Christian theology. Dr. Sexton had said, "If the supernatural element be removed, the Christian religion, as presented in the Bible, will be at an end." This he ventured utterly to deny. The Orthodox theory of Christianity no doubt would be at an end, and that end was rapidly approaching; but the question of the decay of a theology did not touch the fundamental truths of Christ's religion. Dr. Sexton had contended that the resurrection of Lazarus was quite different from the resurrection of Jesus Christ, inasmuch as Lazarus was restored to "a new term of natural life," whereas the resurrection of Jesus was to "a new and a higher life." He failed to see the proof, or, indeed, the meaning of such a distinction. According to the gospels, Jesus came back after his death with the old body containing the old wounds, and stated that he had not yet ascended to his Father. The two resurrections seemed to him to be in precisely the same category, and of the two that of Lazarus should be treated as more important because first in time. It would be more consistent to treat the raising of Lazarus as the foundation of the Christian religion. Mr. Street proceeded to show how shaky was the foundation of Christianity according to Dr. Sexton. Many things tended to make it so; the unreliability of the historians, the utter discrepancy in their statements, the unconscious testimony on their part that he did not die on the Cross at all. Dr. Sexton said that "the apostle proclaimed the resurrection as a great truth," and Paul especially had been called to witness; but the doctor also had made a remarkable confession, that "Paul's epistles do not refer to miracles." Now the earliest complete writings in the New Testament were from the hand of Paul, and it was significant that he should make no reference to the miraculous in Christianity. Paul certainly did not treat the resurrection of Christ in the way that Dr. Sexton did. He distinctly makes known his confident belief that "flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven;" he draws the distinction between the natural and the spiritual body; and the reason that he makes the resurrection the foundation of his faith was that he believed Jesus was the first to rise in the spiritual body in exactly the same way as all the faithful will rise afterwards. Suppose it were granted that the bodily resurrection was true, what did it prove? Miracles were no proof of spiritual truth. They might have influence with the weak and unscientific and illogical, but not with those who exercised the right of private judgment in regard to every question of truth. The resurrection would be a wonderful and unaccountable event; but that was all. It could not prove that Jesus was right when he said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

That lesson must be delivered from the spiritual nature of Jesus to that of the disciple; no miracle could either prove or confirm it. If Christ's resurrection was the foundation of the Christian religion, there was no Christianity till he died and rose from the dead. Christ was not a Christian during his life, evidently. This seemed like beginning with the conclusion. Mr. Street proceeded to ask, "Why do I claim to be a Christian?" and said, though he was utterly careless whether men gave him liberty to use the name or not, his earnest desire was to keep clear the truth of Christ as it was revealed to him. He did not ask for or want fellowship with any crude theology; he, however, claimed fellowship with the religious spirit wherever he found it manifested. The author of "Natural Religion" had felt it necessary to express surprise that his critics persisted in asserting that he had found his way outside of Christianity, and he had very truly said in the preface to his second edition, "The essential nature of religion is popularly misconceived, and an accident of it, viz., Supernaturalism, is mistaken for its essence." Orthodoxy cannot conceive of Christianity apart from the supernatural. Mr. Street, on the other hand, maintained that Christianity could not be fairly understood and appreciated till one had got rid of the supernatural. Without meaning to be bigoted or boastful, he believed that Unitarianism was Christianity pure and simple. Certainly its religion was the same, and, he believed, its theology also. What, then, was the Foundation of Christianity? Christianity, he presumed, meant religion according to Christ—Jesus himself was the founder of Christianity. From his lips, then, we surely should find what he meant by religion. When asked, "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" his answer was, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments;" and when his questioner asserted that he had done so much, Jesus called for the manifestation of self-sacrifice. On another occasion, when a similar question was asked of him, he referred to the love of God and man, and illustrated his meaning by the parable of the Good Samaritan. The key-note and commencement of his preaching was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." They that hungered and thirsted after righteousness were blessed; so, too, were the pure in heart, without reference to creed or race. By their fruits should men be known. Not everyone that called him "Lord! Lord!" should enter the kingdom of heaven, but "he that doeth the will of my Father." The golden rule was laid down by Jesus, who also held up the purity of little children as a pattern to be copied by those who would enter the heavenly kingdom. Feeding the hungry and clothing the naked were practical ways of manifesting the religious spirit; and, like Jesus, each one should feel "my meat and drink is to do the will of him that sent me." In such teachings as these Christianity was displayed, and its foundation was found to be the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. If all the Bible were for ever destroyed with the exception of the Beatitudes and the parables of the Good Samaritan and the Prodigal Son, the essence of all true religion would remain unharmed. Jesus Christ was the most faithful follower of his own religion. Though he lived quite unconscious of the fact that his life would be held up to the gaze of the world, he had left a precious example for us, that we should follow in his steps. Mr. Street concluded by saying:—"If, then, when you talk of Christianity, you mean a system of dogmas about Christ's Resurrection or his Atoning Work, or his Godhead, I am no Christian, nor do I intend to become one. If by a Christian you mean a believer in the miraculous or falsely-called 'supernatural' elements of the Bible, I am no Christian, nor do I intend to become one. If by a Christian you mean a believer in the man-made creeds of any of the Churches which are in fashion to-day and will all be gone into obscurity in a generation or two hence, I am no Christian, nor do I intend to become one. If, when you speak of Christianity, you are referring to any theological notions whatever, as distinguished from simple religion, I am no Christian, nor do I intend to become one. Christianity is the simplest of all religions. It can be reduced to the little terms—God our Father and man our brother; and yet these little terms embrace more than any other religious system under the sun. If, then, when you speak of Christianity, you mean religion founded on the teachings and spirit of Jesus Christ, I am indeed a Christian, and glory in the name. If by a Christian you mean one who looks to Jesus as his surest guide in trouble or temptation, I am a Christian, and am proud of the fact. If by a Christian you mean one who sees the whole meaning of life summed up in the spirit of self-sacrifice and devotion to the service of God, I stand humbly at the feet of the Teacher, and strive to be worthy of the honourable name by which I wish to be called."

Correspondence.

THE REV. J. MACLAREN COBBAN.
TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I am content to leave it to your readers to decide whether I have shown less courtesy than you in our unfortunate controversy about Mr. Cobban. Even if the protest which I felt bound to make offended against good manners, you have, in my humble opinion, more than squared the account by your comment on my letter. But I will say frankly that if I expressed myself as I ought not to have done, I am very sorry.

Your references to me I can dismiss very briefly. As a matter of fact, I am not—so far as pulpit occupancy is concerned—the latest arrival in the district; and, within a radius of twenty miles from Manchester, there are at least four ministers younger than I. In your editorial indignation, Sir, you were, I fear, too ready to discredit my position and my judgment in the eyes of your readers to be accurate upon such points of detail. That is of the less importance, as my youth or the time I have been in this neighbourhood have little or nothing to do with the question between us. I am old enough, and I have been in the ministry long enough, not to be guilty of the gross folly and impertinence of recommending, on my sole responsibility, an unsuitable and incompetent man to a vacant pulpit.

If I were at liberty (which I am not) to tell you the chief reason for Mr. Cobban's recent seclusion in London, you would feel both sympathy and respect for him. I regret now that, to secure Mr. Cobban against what has befallen him at your hands, I did not suggest his making Mr. Ierson's acquaintance before he left London for Blackley. The idea did enter my mind, but I knew that Mr. Cobban was very much occupied; and I thought it would be best to reserve his introduction to "the pillars" in London until he had made friends among those with whom he would be brought first into fellowship. Before Mr. Cobban was invited to Blackley, and while he was my guest, I took an opportunity (which was most courteously afforded me) of introducing him to several of the ministers of the district, and to some laymen. By all he was kindly received.

The Blackley Chapel has a long and honourable history. But it is a very small building; and the congregation is neither large nor wealthy. Hence, the salary is not large. I believe the members of the congregation are fortunate in having secured as their minister a gentleman of Mr. Cobban's culture, ability, and earnestness. However that may be, they have acted with deliberation, and in the exercise of their undoubted right as an independent and self-governing church. You speak, Sir, as if I had thrust Mr. Cobban upon them. It should be needless to say that I did nothing of the kind, and that I should have been deservedly unsuccessful if I had tried. The pulpit was vacant either in prospect or actually for some months. It was quite open to the congregation to consult "the principal ministers and laymen in the district" about filling it. Knowing something of the condition and needs of the congregation, I made my suggestion to them, and gave them—in response to further inquiries—the full information I was able to give. After having seen and heard Mr. Cobban more than once, they elected him.

I notice that your issue of Saturday last has no report of the induction service and welcome meeting at Blackley on December 2. If it had, your readers would have learnt that Mr. Cobban received a sufficiently hearty and representative welcome into the district on that occasion. Several of the ministers present, and some others who were unable to attend, had previously been good enough to say to me that, though they had not known Mr. Cobban personally, they were entirely satisfied with my recommendation of him.

This letter is already quite long enough. I will add only that, since I have acted in this particular case with a full sense of the responsibility I incurred, I should under similar circumstances act in precisely the same way again. But I do not know that I should write to the Inquirer about it, and run the risk of bringing on myself and my friend an unjustifiable castigation.

DENDY AGATE.
Brookfield Parsonage, Gorton, Dec. 11.

[There would have been no "castigation"—such as it was—if Mr. Dendy Agate had contented himself in the first instance with answering in a courteous tone a very simple and natural question. In his closing paragraph our correspondent poses admirably on the naughty boy who cries out, "I don't care for you, and will do it again." But we are strongly inclined to think that he will not do it again, and will see the unwisdom of introducing untried men into our pulpits.—Ed. of Inq.]

PROVISION FOR MINISTERS' FAMILIES.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—An accident prevented me from seeing the Inquirer of Nov. 4 until to-day, and I hope, therefore, that you will permit me to say a few words in reference to an article upon the above subject which appeared on that date.

Of the 363 ministers whose names appear in the Unitarian Almanac less than 200 belong to the societies named by you. It should be remarked that of those who are not connected with the Widows' Fund and the Ministers' Benevolent a considerable proportion are members of the Widows' Fund in connection with the Irish General Assembly. Neither of the societies mentioned by you applies to Ireland; but the Irish Ministers are not, therefore, without some kind of provision. Those who are connected with Presbyteries are provided for in this way. When they become old they have an assistant and probable successor appointed, and continue to receive a portion of the congregational income. When they die their widows are recipients of the bounty of the Widows' Fund. But there are a few ministers in Ireland not connected with Presbyteries, and these, unless they were attached to the Lancashire and Cheshire Widows' Fund or the Ministers' Benevolent before they entered the ministry in Ireland are absolutely precluded from making any provision for their old age or for their wives and families. Now it so happens that many of our Irish congregations are quite unable to support two ministers, and the result is that in several cases old ministers remain at their posts much longer than they otherwise would by reason of the fact that their congregations are unable to make provision for them. Would it not be well that the Liverpool Conference Committee, or some other authority, should make an effort to consolidate the funds and constitute them afresh in such a manner that all our ministers should be able to obtain their advantages? On the general question of making special provision for our ministers no reasonable man can entertain a doubt, because when a man abandons commerce to enter the ministry it is admitted that he leaves behind him all chance of "making a fortune" in the ordinary way. And as to the desirability of consolidating the funds there can scarcely be a doubt; for it is well known that one of the chief reasons why men make great efforts to settle in Lancashire or Cheshire is that they may qualify for the Widows' Fund; and if this fund were of general application many men would be content to remain at their present posts.

Suppose, now, that we had 400 ministers, and, on an average, 50 of them out of harness for reasonable cause, a general insurance fund ought not to be impossible of establishment, such as would have an annual income of at least £4,000 to distribute amongst these, either for permanent or temporary benefit. For example, the payment annually of £5 by every minister in harness in the United Kingdom would produce about £1,500. This amount might be levied as income-tax is, for ministers in the enjoyment of large incomes would readily subscribe larger sums. Congregations, indeed, might be induced to subscribe the amount. Our wealthy laity might easily make up the £1,500 to £3,000, or even £5,000. The united capital of the Widows' Fund and the Ministers' Benevolent amounts to something like £75,000. If this were increased to £100,000 there would be a chance for everybody. I see the Widows' Fund disbursed over £1,600 and the Ministers' Benevolent £1,415 last year—that is, £3,000. It surely, therefore, ought not to be a difficult business to increase this by another £1,000, and enable all our ministers to take advantage of it. Ordinary providence, as you point out, is all very well, but the incomes of minister do not permit of their making adequate investments in this direction. £100 is as nothing to a minister's widow. What would it have been worth to Mrs. Pope, for example? Yet very few men can spare as much from their annual income as will give them more; whereas, probably, no one would hesitate to pay £5 per annum if he knew that at his death his wife would receive £50 per annum and his children have some provision too; while if he became infirm he would also receive the £50 during his lifetime. I hope this matter will be taken up as it should be.

ALPHA.
Dec. 2.

Our Contemporaries.

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP.

The Spectator writes:—

There can be no doubt that the Archbishop has left his mark on the Church, and that excluding the error of the Public Worship Regulation Act the impression which he has produced has been almost purely good. Without the literary power of Baxter, Dr. Tait administered the Church very much as a nineteenth century Baxter would have administered it, and the result has certainly been that he set over against the Puseyite type of Christian excellence a type of a very different kind, which recommended itself to the laity of England as one which deserved their utmost reverence. If that means that he was the Archbishop of the laity rather than of the clergy, we admit it, but deny that the clergy have any monopoly in the head of their Church. We hold that, in the choice of prelates, their relation to the clergy has been far too exclusively regarded, and that in the case of a National Church like ours it is of even higher importance that the chiefs of it should impress the laity with reverence for the type of character which their Christian faith has generated in them than that they should understand minutely the hearts and consciences of their clergy. The late Archbishop, doubtless, succeeded more conspicuously in the former field of duty than in the latter; but that can be said of so few of his colleagues and of so few of his predecessors that we regard it as distinguishing him from the crowd of prelates in a way that is likely to be unusually beneficial to the Church of England. We want more bishops in whom the laity can find something of an ideal, not fewer.

The Church Times writes:—

It was his misfortune—a very serious one in times like these—to have absolutely no power of understanding theology. His relation to the Queen of Sciences was that of a man without ear to music, or of a colour-blind man to painting. Whenever he gave his opinion on any question even indirectly bearing on theological problems he at once betrayed to all experts the fact that he was talking, not in mere absolute ignorance, so as to make himself ridiculous in the way the Bishop of Manchester incessantly does, but after he had honestly worked at the matter, and had failed from lack of the needful mental faculty, not from want of diligence in trying to master it. This must be taken into account when considering the attitude he adopted after quitting the Presbyterianism of his early years for the Anglican Church. It may be laid down, as an all but invariable rule, that a man who changes his communion binds himself thereby to the acceptance of just those tenets and usages that mark the difference between his old and his new belief. For, so far as they are agreed, he can have no satisfactory reason for changing at all; and he must, therefore, be assumed to change for the sake of the unlikeliness. But the points of difference between Presbyterianism and Anglicanism are virtually those which distinguish Low from High Church; and yet the High Church school was precisely that which Archbishop Tait was never able to treat with justice, not to say sympathy. The fact is that his mind, clear within a certain range, was not a broad one, and he could not take wide and statesmanlike views. He showed this in his primary charge as Bishop of London, wherein he proclaimed war against the High Church clergy, and as clearly threw in his lot with the Latitudinarians. His notion was to make the Church of England acceptable to the largest number possible of Englishmen—in itself no undignified aim—but he was quite unable to see this fact: that in the long run it is only moral influence that tells, and that a Church which ostracises enthusiasm and alters its standards to please the popular taste of the hour must of necessity repel all its best members, and be made up at last of those who cannot exercise moral influence upon anyone, and who will surely and swiftly pull it down.

The Jewish Chronicle writes:—

As a body, Jews hold a peculiar relationship towards the Church of England. Almost alone among Nonconformist bodies, they have never, as a community, joined in the agitation for Disestablishment. Though it is probable that if the Church were disestablished Jewish worship would receive some State aid [?], as in France, and in some of the colonies, yet the merely material consideration is outweighed by the far higher consideration of the spiritual harm that would probably be done by the struggle for aggrandisement among the different sects. A State Church is by its secure position and by its historic memories more tolerant than any dissenting sect. Besides, the very fact of these historic memories forms a bond of sympathy with a religious body like the Jews, who live and move and have their being in memories of a glorious past. Further, a State Church cannot be indifferent to public opinion, and no danger would be anticipated of any severe conversionist movement in the Church in a country like England, where public opinion is so strongly pronounced on the side of fair play. Archbishop Tait was a model Englishman in this regard, and his name was never prominently identified with any such movement, though his official position obliged him to act as patron to one of the conversionist societies, in which, however, he never took an active part. In his official capacity, therefore, the Jews of England have to acknowledge with gratitude the moderation of his counsel to the Church, the stability he gave to the Establishment, the extension of spiritual advantages to the metropolis, and the spread of a feeling of wide brotherhood in Anglicanism. Again, in his official dealings as Bishop of London he showed himself at all times ready to act with friendly spirit towards the Jews. Wherever any case occurred within his jurisdiction by which his right might have pressed heavily upon Jews he would invariably stretch a point to meet the peculiar circumstances of the case when applied to by the Jewish authorities.

THE FUTURE OF RITUALISM.

The Times says:—

Ritualism, like everything else, is subject to the great law of evolution. The Ritualism of to-day becomes the common practice of to-morrow, and there is hardly a parish church in the country whose services would not give a shock to the worshippers of fifty years ago. Indeed, it is not fifty years since the introduction of the surplice into the pulpit was almost universally regarded as a dangerous innovation, and now there is hardly a black gown to be found in any pulpit in the land. Symbolism is after all a fleeting thing. The surplice forty years ago was held to be almost as dangerously symbolical as the eastward position is to-day, and the best way to give a symbol vitality is to persecute it and forbid it. As soon as it is tolerated it becomes harmless. It has been the fatal blunder of the opponents of Ritualism to identify the symbol with the doctrine, and to try to oust the one by persecuting the other. Hence the bitterness and strife which the Archbishop strove to appease, almost with his dying breath. One quarrel, at any rate, has been composed by his mediation, and we can only hope that his example will bear good and lasting fruit in the time to come.

MR. GLADSTONE'S JUBILEE.

The Times, commenting on the fiftieth anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's entrance into public life as Member for Newark, writes:—

It is for the next generation to examine calmly the results of a career more remarkable, perhaps, than that of any other English Prime Minister. Mr. Gladstone's contemporaries stand too near him to see him as he is. His energy of will, his fire of passion, leave his adherents no room for a questioning and calculating obedience; no leader has been followed with more enthusiastic faith than the chief of the party delivered from despondency and raised to power mainly by his efforts two years ago. But the ascendancy thus won, like the predominance of a Napoleon, who, when idolized by his soldiery, was to Englishmen the Corsican ogre, drives Mr. Gladstone's opponents into an attitude of uncompromising hostility and unappeasable distrust. Foes, however, will join with friends in recognising the extraordinary powers of the statesman whose parliamentary position is not a matter of controversy. Some statesmen have surpassed him in the higher regions of oratory, many in the art of managing men, a few in the practical conduct of public business. But where shall we and for any to match his readiness, his adroitness, look his vast stores of knowledge in debate, his ingenuity and versatility as a financier, his faculty of infusing passion into the commonplaces of controversy, and his unquestioned dominion over a majority resting on a democratic basis?

The Pall Mall Gazette writes:—

Though he had been bred a High Churchman and a Tory, and if he had been anybody else would have been saturated to his marrow with the benumbing traditions and habits of thirty-five years of officialism and parliamentarism, he seized the aspirations of the new democracy, and became filled by its sentiments, as if he had been a young revolutionary chief instead of a veteran Minister. When he let fall the expression about the workmen being "our own flesh and blood," cynics smiled and logicians protested. But the phrase showed our new masters that his sympathies were with them, and they have not been mistaken. Mr. Gladstone suffused politics with what enemies call sentimentalism, but what we shall call morality, justice, humanity, the passion for improvement. And the new democracy have seen that this in his case went with experience, with a hard-headed faculty for figures, and money, and business, and with unrivalled powers of expression and argument. The spectacle which has now lasted fourteen years has given them firmer confidence in themselves as well as in their leader. Mr. Gladstone's commanding influence has been the means of saving us from the crudity and hurry of the innovations that usually follow the transfer of power to wider classes in the community.

IMMORTALITY WITHOUT GOD.

The Spectator, in a second article on this subject, considers "the profound incoherence" which is involved in this paradox—which, by the way is an inversion of Mr. F. W. Newman's paradox of God without Immortality":—

If we suppose that an infinite system of law and order, after an infinite career of blind creativeness, opens for itself fragmentary gleams of self-consciousness, dawning, like the streamers of the aurora, on the universal night, and that these, when they have thus dawned, prove to be no flickering temporary lights, but permanent spiritual beings, who cannot divest themselves again, so long as the universe lasts, of the intelligence, emotion, and will which their organisation has developed, even though that organisation is itself soon dissolved in ruin, we make by far the most irrational of all extant conceptions of the Universe. What can be more irrational than to suppose that in a universe of determinate forces, in which up to a certain era there has been no understanding, no preparation, no foresight, no love, no hate, no consciousness, and no resolve, these blind determinate forces should all converge on the evolution of a perfectly new class of realities, which it is impossible even to describe in terms of the old material things, and which are yet so durable, that when the physical scaffolding on which they are built gives way, the spiritual product remains undestroyed, and perhaps indestructible? Immortality for finite minds of quite recent development can only be conceived as a purely monstrous incident in the structure of a hitherto mindless universe. If minds such as we know them survive death, while the physical frame crumbles to pieces almost at a touch, it is in the highest degree irrational to deny that mind is more deeply rooted in the structure of the universe than the material organisation itself. Immortal life in any form must be sustained from something of its own kindred which is intrinsically eternal. The mind that can outlive the stars can never be a mere bubble on the surface of a universe of which the stars are the most characteristic centres. If he who, though weak in power, yet numbers the stars and calls them by their names, outlasts them, he must derive his life from a source even more durable than theirs,—in other words, from him who is so strong in power that of the stars themselves "not one faileth." That that power can develop into mind, without having been mind from the beginning, that its creative strength can have been blind from everlasting, and should have then attained to a dim, purblind vision only through the eyes of a host of immortal insects like ourselves, seems to us by far the wildest of all the visionary theories of our day. The materialist, who thinks mind a transient phenomenon of nervous tissue, is comparatively coherent in denying to the Universe the thought which, in his opinion, only flashes, flickers, and vanishes, like human hopes and passions. But for one who believes that mind, once produced, persists, and becomes the highest thing in Nature, surviving its temporary home in the body just as a great State survives the institutions it has outgrown,—to hold seriously that this mind, with what he would think its terrible illusion of moral freedom, is a capricious blossom on the stem of blind, unconscious fate, is to us quite the most astounding of all the vagaries of human creed. The Pantheist's belief in God without human immortality is conceivable enough, though not half as reasonable in the highest sense as the Christian's. But the spirit-rapper's belief in human immortality without God is the most irrational as well as the most ghastly fruit of the laboratory of experiment and the philosophy of experience.

MR. MACKONOCHE'S RESIGNATION.

The Nonconformist severely criticises the "extraordinary arrangements" for the transfer of Mr. Mackonochie to St. Peter's, London Docks, and of Mr. Suckling, the Ritualist incumbent of St. Peter's, to St. Albans, and regards the last act of Dr. Tait's administration as his greatest blunder.

The bearing of the whole procedure upon the status of the Church is a matter of public concern. Here is a Church established by law, and enjoying no small benefit in virtue of that establishment, and yet the law is absolutely set aside by a clergyman who resolves to be a law to himself, and by the connivance of an Archbishop and a Bishop he is able to enjoy impunity. He has to exchange a parish in Baldwin's Gardens for a parish in London Docks, and then he is able to snap his fingers at the Court whose authority he denies and the judge whose monitions he has disregarded. If the Protestants who are still to be found in the ranks of the clergy are content to put up with this mockery of law, they must, indeed, have made up their minds to utter effacement. The Church Association is not only defeated, but defeated in such a way as to make the recovery of its position hopeless. It is useless to spend effort on passing Acts of Parliament, and thousands of pounds on the endeavour to enforce them, when their authors and administrators themselves devise expedients for setting them aside. What effect this is likely to exert upon the classes among whom it is most desirable to maintain the sanctity of the law is too obvious to require that it should be dwelt upon by us. The humiliating spectacle which is presented by the Church in this arrangement will not soon be forgotten by thoughtful men, who say little, but register such facts as data on which to base conclusions for future action. Those who plead that the wishes of the congregations are satisfied, ignore the essential conditions of the problem. The Establishment is a national, not a Congregational Church, and it is required of it that it obey the law of the nation. To put that aside is to ensure its own destruction.

CHATHAM.—The Rev. Henry Wheaton, of Deptford, has accepted an invitation from the Hamond-hill congregation.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary
Newspaper, and Record of Reverent
Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price
of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following
terms, post free:—

Yearly (52 weeks)	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid)	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks)	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid)	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks)	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid)	2s. 6d.

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to Mr.
WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH
AND SON.

The Inquirer

IN

MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL.

In addition to the ordinary channels through which the INQUIRER may be obtained, Messrs.
Johnson and Rawson, 89, Market-street, Manchester, will deliver the paper every Saturday
without extra charge, within a radius of a mile from the Exchange, if prepaid for three or six months. Mr. Henry Young, Bookseller, of 12,
South Castle-street, Liverpool, will supply the INQUIRER on similar terms. At both places
the paper will also be on sale at the counter.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1882.

GREAT excitement has been created both in sporting and ecclesiastical circles by the announcement of the conversion to the Roman Catholic Church of Sir Tatton Sykes, a well-known Yorkshire landowner, sporting character, and personal friend of the Prince of Wales. Sir Tatton is already showing all the zeal of a new convert. We learn from a Roman Catholic contemporary that no sooner had he made up his mind to abandon the Anglican Church than he formed the munificent intention of building, solely at his own cost, a cathedral for the Catholic Arch-Diocese of Westminster. A site already secured by Cardinal Manning, close to Archbishop's House, will be utilised by Sir Tatton, whose cathedral will resemble, in its architecture, the cathedral at Cologne, but we presume will not take quite so many centuries before it is completed. We should not be surprised at hearing of many more such conversions. It does not require the proverbial penetration of a Yorkshireman and a sportsman to perceive that Romanism is a much more logical and consistent system than the bastard Ritual-ism which mimics its stately ceremonial, and whenever it dares attempts to wield its thunderbolts.

THE following note from the Jewish Chronicle, in reference to the choice of a minister, applies exactly to our own loose, haphazard way of electing ministers:—"In choosing a minister a congregation ought to look a little beyond their own immediate requirements. It is easy to imagine a congregation in this country or even in the metropolis itself whose ideas are such as to make a pleasing voice the sole qualification they look for in a minister. Chazonuth by itself has the power to move their hearts, and that is enough. But they must not forget that there are those growing up around them who will not be so easily satisfied. Their children will need other agents than Chazonuth to impress them when engaged in worship. They will come to look beyond the synagogue for a part of the minister's sphere of action. They will learn to require that even a "reader" shall minister in the homes of his congregants as well as on the Almemar, and be a worthy representative of the synagogue in the eyes of other denominations. The old order changeth and giveth place to the new, even in Jewish congregations. The religious ideas and wants of one generation are not always identical with those of its immediate predecessor. If congregations would bear this in mind they would show more discrimination in the choice of their ministers."

ALTHOUGH the prorogation prevented Mr.
Richard putting an intended question to the Home Secretary relative to the recent stupid action of the vicar of Harlow in obstructing a Nonconformist funeral, Mr. Williams has received an intimation from the Home Office that the Home Secretary is in communication with the bishop of the diocese on the subject; and upon hearing from him he will consider what further measures should be taken. We learn also that the bishop has expressed his strong disapproval of the vicar's conduct.

OUR readers are probably not aware that the practice of drinking wine and then breaking the glass, which prevails at the solemnisation of Jewish weddings, likewise forms part of the marriage rites of the Greek Church. The other day at the marriage in Paris of a daughter of
M. Renan with a Greek gentleman, the Archimandrite, after having given the bridal pair his benediction, handed them a cup filled with wine, of which they drank half, and the bridegroom
then, as in the Jewish ceremony, broke the cup.
The origin of this custom is not quite clear, but the Rev. A. Löwy in the paper which he read in May last at a meeting of the Society of Biblical Archaeology expressed the opinion that, like many other Jewish usages, it was derived from the long intercourse of the Jews with the Romans.

PROFESSOR PARK, one of the most prominent advocates in America of the orthodox theology, is greatly alarmed at the new movement in Congregationalism, as indicated by the works of Dr. Newman Smyth, of Andover College, and other heretics of the same school. He writes:—"At the beginning of the present century our Unitarian friends preached more orthodoxy on some of our doctrines than is preached in some orthodox pulpits at the present day. I have in my possession at least one sermon of a Unitarian divine, which was delivered about seventy years ago; and if that sermon were preached to some of our congregations called orthodox, it would confound and terrify them: they would think that one of those old 'superannuated,' 'dilapated' bigots had risen from the dead. This is a melancholy fact: and the fact shows, brethren, that we must stop somewhere, we must have some dividing line, we must insist on some doctrines; for, unless we do, our denomination is in ruins." It will thus be seen that Prof. Park thinks the new Congregationalism to be more dangerous than old-fashioned Unitarianism. The Christian Register, commenting on this passage, well observes: "Professor Park's alarm comes too late. Congregationalism has received a forward impetus, and will go on until it reaches the next station."

THE popular religious services for the people which were proposed at the last Council Meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association are to be commenced early in the year at Bermondsey; and we understand that the Revs.
J. Page Hopps, Dr. Crosskey, T. W. Freckelton, and R. A. Armstrong will conduct the first series. A better selection could not be made, and we hope they will be as successful as similar services at Leicester, Kidderminster, and Sheffield. In the meantime we observe, from a report in the Southwark Advertiser of the last meeting of the Bermondsey Vestry, under the presidency of the rector, that some objection was raised to the action of the Law Clerk in granting the use of the Town Hall for these Sunday evening services. Two gentlemen endeavoured to rouse the odium theologicum, but received no support, the chairman very properly ruling that it was out of order to allude to the denominational tenets of any applicant. It is gratifying to notice the very strong feeling manifested in favour of placing all religious denominations on a footing of perfect equality in the use of the Town Hall.

Punch has the following In Memoriam:—
TWO LATE LOSSES.

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT—ANTHONY TROLLOPE.

Two men whose loss all Englishmen must rue,
True servants of the Studio and the State;
No manlier Churchman Trollope's fancy drew
Than History will portray in gentle Tait.

THE following sayings from the Talmud, some of which are new to us, are worth printing over and over again, and they show that "the service of humanity" is no new doctrine:—

He gives much who gives a little with kindness.
It is better to lend without interest than to give alms.

He who is hospitable shall be himself God's guest.

He who wrongs his fellow-man commits a greater sin than he who robs a temple.

Pray for the good of the commonwealth, for without that men would devour one another.

Who deserves honour? He who honours humanity.

Let thy neighbour's honour be dearer than thine own.

In Palestine they say that he who first becomes silent in a quarrel springs from a good family.

Make of wisdom neither a crown with which to adorn thyself nor a spade with which to bury thyself.

Much have I learned from my teachers, more from my comrades, most of all from my pupils.

Who is rich? He who has a wife beautiful in character.

WE learn from the Christian World that a strikingly interesting addition to the books of the Liturgical form, which are more and more finding favour in Congregational Churches, has been made in a small volume of "Evening Prayers, Arranged for each Sunday in the Month," and published by Messrs. Isbister and Co. The service for an evening consists of the General Confession and General Thanksgiving of the Book of Common Prayer, and of petitions and sentences for chanting and responsive reading. The selection and arrangement of these sentences under such headings as "The Creed of the Cross," "The Way of Peace," "The Light of Life," is an impressive and beautiful feature of the services. We can well suppose that the devout recitation, by minister and people alternately, of the passages and responses grouped under the title of "The Creed of the Cross" would be singularly touching and helpful. In some brief but thoughtful prefatory remarks on the Worship of God and the Use of Forms, the compiler observes:—"All language employed in public worship is a form of worship.
But the momentous question is, whether the form, be it spoken or printed, is to the people a mere form. It is the use we make of it, the heart and soul we put into it, which renders it simple, real, true in God's sight, and a joy and a blessing to ourselves."

THE deaths are announced this week of Sir Hugh Allan, of Montreal, founder of the famous line of steamers, aged 72; Mr. Anthony Trollope, the novelist, 68; Miss Frances Maria Kelley, the last survivor of the great school of actors, 92; M. Louis Blanc, the French Republican leader, 69; Mr. Lambert, formerly M.P. for Bucks; Mr. George Clement, of Hastings, after a life of usefulness, who began his career without a penny, and leaves a fortune of £200,000; M. Lachaud, the famous French advocate, 64; Sir Thomas Watson, the celebrated physician, 90; Sir Joseph Napier, 78; Samuel Revington, the inventor of the rifle bearing his name; M. Galignani, the last of the family connected with Galignani's Messenger, 87.

THE Glasgow United Presbyterian Presbytery on Wednesday discussed a report by a joint-committee of several religious denominations formed to procure trustworthy information as to the extent to which neglect of the "public Christian ordinances prevailed in Glasgow." The returns from the various districts of the city showed that in several cases there were great numbers "practically living outside the Church of Christ," and that the number of families not going to church formed a half or a third of the whole population. This state of matters showed, in the opinion of the committee, "that there was a mass of heathenism around them that it would require all the collective wisdom and energy of all the Churches to deal with." A draft scheme called the "Glasgow Home Mission Union" had been prepared in order to secure the co-operation of missions in Glasgow, and which it was agreed to discuss at next meeting of Presbytery.

WE are glad to observe that the learned and liberal-minded Bishop of Durham takes that more favourable view of the Salvation Army to which we have always inclined, regarding even its extravagancies with lenient judgment for the sake of its good work. In his triennial charge to the diocesan clergy on Thursday, Bishop Lightfoot said that if the Church had not succeeded in evangelising the masses, neither had the Nonconformists. The Church would not be satisfied with picking up one here and there, gathering together a more or less select congregation, and forgetting the Master's commands to "Go into the highways and compel them to come in." The Salvation Army had taught them a higher lesson. Whatever might be the faults of the Salvation Army, it had at least recalled them to the lost ideal of the work of the Church. We quite agree with the Bishop that the Salvation Army is teaching us a good lesson on the duty of the Churches towards the neglected masses and the way to reach them, although it is not exactly our way, or perhaps the best way.

Reviews.

Religion in the Light of Philosophy. London: Williams and Norgate. 1882.

"Religion in the Light of Philosophy!" But what religion? A conglomerate of ideas of the author's own gathering in order to make piety ridiculous. And what Philosophy? If a superficial acquaintance with the mythologies of the three great races of the ancient world constitutes a philosopher, and enables him to call his knowledge philosophy, and gives him a license to scoff at whatever is held sacred by others, then is he fully equipped for his task. Religion with him is made up of the fictions of the ignorant fancy of the past. The myth maker and the poet, with their figures of speech, are answerable for the production of all that men reverence and bow before to-day as facts of the spiritual life. Men in the far past, before science was born, used their fancy on the phenomena of nature and invented gods and heavens. Not for a moment will he allow any genuineness to the consciousness of the prophets and seers, or to the spiritual experience of the men of to-day. It has been and is all fancy—that and nothing more. Because men have had to express their spiritual recognitions in certain forms, he takes the forms, and while denying the realities of which they are symbols, he tries to show that they are altogether empty of meaning beyond a phenomenal one. It is true he does not look into them in order to see what they contain, or beyond them to what they suggest. He is as superficial in his survey as he is in his thinking, and he cheats himself into the delusion that there is nothing because he does not see it. To be plain in the statement of our opinion, after reading it carefully through, we can see no use for this book, unless it is to show how far wrong a sincere man can go who lacks sympathy, reverence, and insight into the subject matter with which he deals.

The author is of opinion that "all science is virtually a supersession of religion, religion being a fancy, a pretence of poets that they know something, when in reality they know nothing." (P. 1.) And "in proof of the fact that poets are the creators of the gods, we have, first, the internal necessity of having persons to be the actors in the fable." (P. 17.) He further asserts that "faith is the root of all tyranny; knowledge the only sure foundation of freedom" (p. 27); but then he uses faith as a synonym for belief in the phantasies of fancy. And this is the way he speaks of the religion that is the soul of the highest civilisation in the world to-day:—"We know very well that the Christians are by no means destitute of genuinely Oriental fictions in which asses speak, pigs perform feats, and birds descend from heaven with messages." (P. 44.) And this precious sneer is given in italics. Indeed, we may say that the author is so fond of italics and small capitals that he produces in us the suspicion that he imagines he will have few readers who are capable enough of finding out his points unless he lets them know which they are by change of type. The fact is our author only sees the outside of things, and in the way in which he writes he betrays the cause of philosophy that he professes to side with. The figures of speech used by the poets, the prophets, and the seers of the past were used by them as symbols of the realities, and the inward experiences they could in no other way express; and if by the ignorant and foolish they have been accepted as the realities themselves, the true action of a philosopher would be to go behind the material symbol in order to bring out the real meaning as clearly as human language will permit. But what that author has done is to first assert with the foolish and ignorant that the symbols are all the realities that exist, and then to show that it is ridiculous to worship them. Thus he is doubly wrong. But one thing he does not attempt to show, that is, with his views of nature and human nature, how it comes about that there has been a persistence through all ages and races, savage and civilised alike, in one form or another, in attributing purpose, will, personality, to the powers that rule and uphold the universe; and as the grasp of mind increases, the powers gradually are seen to be the agents of one all-controlling mind. A philosophy that cannot deal with that fact is only philosophy falsely so-called. For there can be no philosophy unless there is thought in the universe besides that of man's; for unless there is meaning in nature there is none for man's mind to make out; and this there cannot be if there be no Supreme Mind who is its Creator and Controller. Science may count sequences, and tabulate the order in which they follow one another, and teach men how to utilise its energies; but philosophy there can be none. And, as it seems to us, to the true thinker the fact that men have personified the phenomena of nature only proves this, that while they have made the mistake of applying the fact to wrong objects, yet they have had knowledge of the real fact that there is mind at the head and heart of the universe. As mental perception becomes more clear, this mistake passes away, and the life, the soul of all, the one true God, is seen to be the Personal Intelligence, and not the energies which issue from His creature will, which we call the forces and laws of the universe. But does the author understand the meaning of the ancients to whom he refers so often? He certainly does not understand the modern writers to whom he refers. We will give one instance, and have done with him. On page 69 he refers to Lecky's History of Rationalism, though he names neither volume nor page. He refers to Lecky's "great admission" that "the French Revolution of 1789 carried out in earnest the ethical humanism of Christianity, and that human rights and humanity have been more and more realised ever since, pious Spaniards having been prevented from burning one another for Christianity's sake." "This," he says, "is a great admission from a pious Englishman. He believes that he believes, whereas he really puts an end to all superstition. Without science—that is to say, the Freethinkers—Christian ethics remained fantastic—that is to say religious, not realised in this world." Let the reader turn to vol. i. page 185 of Lecky, and he will find that Lecky is not making any "admission" whatever, or at all representing things in the light in which the anonymous author of this book represents; but that he is insisting on the influence of the spirit of the age on the minds of thinkers of all grades. To illustrate this he takes the Freethinkers of even Roman Catholic countries, and shows that Christianity has penetrated the very fibre of their minds, and influenced them in spite of themselves. Speaking of those of the present time he says:—"It is widely removed from the old Voltairian spirit. It is no longer exclusively negative and destructive, but is on the contrary intensely positive, and in its moral aspect intensely Christian." Thus we see that Christianity has compelled its old opponents to yield to its rule, as they accept all that is really and truly essential to it.

We trust that before our author writes another book he will become a wiser, larger minded, reverent, and clearer-headed man. We imagine that he is young; and perhaps with growing years, though he may not come to see, with the great majority of his fellow-men, that religion is a precious heritage and boon from the past, as well as the present inspiration of Heaven, yet he will cease to believe that the world is made up of a few knaves and many fools; but rather are we all yearning and striving after something better than we have at present, though it may often be in a clumsy and futile manner.

W. M.

Life and Letters of St. Paul. By Alfred Dawes, M.A., LL.D., D.D. London: Longmans, Green and Co. 1882.

Dr. Dawes was advised by Dr. Prince Lee, the late Bishop of Manchester, that he would be culpably neglecting the gifts God had given him if he did not present the world with a translation of the Epistles of St. Paul. Under the impulse of this high episcopal counsel, he accordingly adds to the existing mass of Pauline literature not only a version of the thirteen letters ascribed to the great apostle, but a very substantial preface, a short "Life" of his hero, and a brief specific introduction to each several document.

We cannot pretend to set any high value on the book thus made up. "It must be well known," says Dr. Dawes, "to all, or almost all, who are at all likely to read what he has written, that modern criticism has called in question the genuineness of many of the letters that pass under the name of St. Paul, and the historical value of the 'Acts of the Apostles.' All such criticism in the present work has been ignored. . . . Notwithstanding all that criticism may effect, the mass of English people, to whom the Word of God is precious, are likely for long years to come to believe still that St. Paul did write all the Letters that bear his name; and to turn to the 'Acts of the Apostles' for a picture of his life." (P. xxv.) Of course they are, so long as the reverend D.D.'s and M.A.'s of the chartered theology of England launch books upon the world which take these things for granted, and complacently "ignore" the overwhelming evidence advanced by the trained scholarship of Europe that such a belief rests on no reason and is contradicted by innumerable facts. So Dr. Dawes elects to play the part, not of a teacher dealing with the knowledge accumulated by the army of modern students, but rather that of a nurse lulling to security once more a view of the Christian Scriptures which becomes every day more impossible for waking men. This attitude alone deprives all Dr. Dawes's work of any real value, and renders it simply obstructive and mischievous, so far as it may exercise any influence at all.

But though Dr. Dawes "ignores" all other critics, he indulges in some remarkable exercises of the critical art himself. The difficulties that lie about the path of one who is going to reconcile the Paul of Acts with the Paul of the four great Epistles cannot be "ignored." Dr. Dawes finds Paul coming up to Jerusalem laden with the alms which he had collected in Asia and Europe for the poor Christians of Jerusalem, but there is no account of the disbursement of the sum! Again, Dr. Dawes finds in Paul a man who had to work night and day at his trade, that he might not be a burden to those to whom he preached, yet paying apparently without difficulty the enormous temple fees of the four men who had taken a vow! Here is a problem for the critic! But Dr. Dawes is equal to the occasion. His solution is that Paul devoted the large sums gathered for purposes of charity to defraying the temple charges—in other words, that St. Paul, the man whose life and death were one enthusiastic martyrdom for righteousness and truth, misappropriated moneys entrusted to his care, and stole the alms of the poor to buy for himself a popularity founded on a swindle! (P. 44.)

After this all things are possible to Dr. Dewes. We shall not be surprised to find that while fully alive to the glaring inconsistency of the Judaizing policy of the Apostle at Jerusalem in the narrative with the reiterated anti-Judaic sentiment of the letters, our commentator cheerfully accepts the authenticity of both. He allows to the full that the conduct of Paul before the Council, as represented in Acts, is in the highest degree disingenuous. But he turns round upon us with "Who shall blame him? Let those who, in like circumstances, have never done the same thing, cast the first stone." What, then, because we may have been weak and false ourselves, are we to be denied any protest against the ascription of weakness and falsehood to St. Paul? We have not written a letter to the Galatians, glowing and thrilling with the divinest inspiration of the spirit of courage and truth. We have not given up health and strength and life to the preaching by word and deed of "Christ crucified." We are not Pauls; and we refuse to drag down the greatest of Apostles to the level of the conduct which Dr. Dewes chooses to attribute to his readers. We would ask, who shows the more reverence for the origins and the originators of Christianity, he who repudiates altogether the authenticity of a work which, like the Book of Acts, robs Paul of all that makes him Paul, or he who, with Dr. Dewes, admits his disingenuousness, his evasion, his cowardice, and then tries to set things straight by asking his reader, "Should you have shown any more pluck yourself?"

Dr. Dewes's canons of translation are by no means ours. He professes at the outset to have made it his first object so to turn the Epistles into English "that any thoughtful reader, however unlearned and ignorant, might understand them." "It often happens," he says, "that a link in the chain of St. Paul's reasoning is but faintly indicated, or is missing altogether. In such cases the missing link has been supplied, that his meaning may be clear to all." (p. xxiii.) This is undoubtedly very useful work when he who undertakes it is competent to so difficult a task. But it is the work, not of a translator, but of a commentator; and Dr. Dewes misconceives the translator's duty when he charges himself with the office of making so plain that he who runs may read passages in the Epistles to the Romans, which in the original itself are profoundly obscure.

It is with real reluctance that we have spoken with severity of a book which has evidently been a work of piety and love. But in spite of the excellent intentions of its author, we cannot but deem his performance ill-advised. He shows himself in many an earnest and pious paragraph too true a man to desire praise which cannot be conscientiously given, or even, we hope, to be angered by an adverse criticism which issues only from a sense of duty. R. A. A.

Short Notices.

Historical Sketch of the Rise and Progress of Unitarianism in Heywood. (Bury: Henry Hall.)—This is a most encouraging and instructive sketch by Mr. Charles Hardman of the prosperous congregation at Heywood, near Bury, chiefly composed of working men and women, which owes its origin to "that spirit of missionary enterprise which some twenty-seven years ago came over our churches in the North of England like some new breath of spring." The congregation arose out of the energetic missionary efforts of the Rev. John Wright, of Bury, and the Rev. B. Glover, of Lydgate, the latter gentleman, then a lay preacher, residing in Bury. It has had only two ministers during the quarter of a century of its existence—the Rev. John Fox, now of Newark, and the Rev. William Bennett, who died early in this year. Mr. Hardman gives a very interesting account of the energy and self-sacrificing devotion of the congregation, and as a natural consequence its rapid growth in prosperity. It is a bright page in the history of our home missionary efforts.

The Adventures of Mrs. Wishing-To-Be, and other Stories. By Alice Corkran, Illustrated. (Blackie and Son.)—This little book is not only well suited for a Christmas present, but is fitted to take a permanent place amongst the favourite story books of children. It reads exactly as if it were being told to a group of juveniles ranging from five to ten, in their own homely, vivid, and picturesque way of conversing and uttering their thoughts about the things—say the toys and books—that seem so real to their imagination and fancies. The Adventures are a kind of unacted pantomime, in which the famous characters of the dear old story books, which are neither "goody" nor didactic, appear and play their respective parts over again. They utter the same delightful nonsense, and do the same improbable deeds in a curiously realistic fashion, to the delight of the juvenile readers and hearers. By a happy stroke of ingenuity the famous giant-killer, "Jack," becomes the equally famous builder of the house, with all the usual characters and accompaniments—human and animal—of that admirable rhyme without reason. Fun and humour run through the story, which has also its graver touches. The descriptive parts are marked by much delicacy and beauty. The other shorter stories have already appeared in print, and add not a little to the attractiveness of the "Adventures of Mrs. Wishing-To-Be."

Lanhydrock, an elegy by Henry Sewell Stokes (Longman, 1882), is inscribed to the memory of Lord and Lady Robartes, of Truro. Everyone remembers the destruction by fire of the greater part of Lanhydrock House some eighteen months ago, and how, only a few days after, the Lady Robartes died from the shock. Very recently her husband followed her to the house appointed for all living, leaving to his family unpurchasable and precious memories. Lord Robartes was greater than his title (created in 1869) could make him. He took such a vital interest in benevolent schemes that it would be strange if his name were not honoured in Cornwall. From its very character, of course, this little poem is removed from the category of ordinary poetic productions. The verse, however, is pleasing, and fairly tells the story of its noble subject. As a tribute to departed worth its language of the heart is all that could be desired. It is rather a dangerous exploit to compose an elegy and publish it, but Mr. Stokes has no occasion to blush, either on account of the living or the dead. The friends of Lord Robartes will esteem it highly. The note on the Robartes family is exceedingly interesting, and makes us desire to know more of that old race. Of the quality of the verse our readers can judge from one stanza.

"Before that sad and fatal year roll'd round,
The mourner sicken'd—sicken'd as for death,
And then in her a ministering angel found,
Who not long since came with her bridal wreath,
Still fresh in her fair brow, that sunny day,
When with festoons the battlements were gay."

Literary Notes.

MR. MARK PATTISON is engaged upon a biography of Joseph Scaliger, a companion volume to his "Isaac Causabon," published in 1875. Much additional information concerning Scaliger's personal life has come to light since Professor Bernays wrote his well-known monograph. A whole series of Scaliger's letters to Claude Du Puy has been printed at Agen by M. Tamizey de Lorroque—a series which illustrate that part of Scaliger's life during which he was resident in Anjou.

HAVING founded his Celtic chair at Edinburgh, emeritus Professor Blackie is now advocating the provision of a Celtic travelling fellowship of the value of not less than £100 a year.

THE second volume of Mr. R. Bosworth Smith's "Life of Lord Lawrence" is now in the press, and the publication of the whole work may be expected by the middle of February. It will consist of two large volumes of five or six hundred pages each, and it will be published by Messrs. Scribners in America on the same day as by Messrs. Smith, Elder and Co. here. The writer has spared no pains to make it not only a complete biography, but also an epitome of Anglo-Indian history. Many burning questions with regard to our rule in India will be fearlessly discussed.

MR. J. CHALLONER SMITH, the learned superintendent of the Department for Literary Enquiry at the Probate Registry, Somerset House, has been lucky enough to clear up one hitherto unknown point in George Washington's pedigree. The great American's paternal grandmother, after she had remarried one George Gale, came over to England to prove her first husband's, L. Washington, will. From that time nothing was known of her. Mr. Challoner Smith, in the course of his grubblings among the dirty papers in the strong-room of the Registry, has found out when Mrs. Gale died, and where she was buried. His short paper on the subject will appear in next month's Genealogist.

"THE New Crusades: a Vision and a Warning," is the title of a brochure which, under the nom de plume of "Saladin," will be published immediately by Mr. W. Satchell. It deals with what the writer regards as the socially and politically dangerous tendencies of the "Salvation Army" movement, and foreshadows the State of England under salvationist domination in the year 1,000.

MESSRS. T. AND T. CLARK, of Edinburgh, announce a valuable work as in preparation—"An Encyclopedia of Biblical, Historical, Doctrinal and Practical Theology" (based on Herzog's "Real Encyclopädie"), edited by Professor Schaff, D.D. Herzog's "Encyclopädie" is well-known and highly valued by all students of the Bible. Many of the ablest scholars have contributed to it, each writer being an acknowledged authority in his own sphere of learning. This work is not a mere translation of "Herzog," but an adaptation of the most important German articles, with a large number of new articles, prepared by British and American scholars. It will be completed in three handsome volumes, the first of which is just published.

CANON DR. BOCK, the antiquary, who has been making an examination of the relics belonging to the Cathedral of Berne, declares it to be richer in archæologic treasures than almost any other Protestant Church in Christendom, Canterbury Cathedral included. The money worth of the treasures he estimates at upwards of 4,000,000f. He has found many interesting objects, hidden away in cases which had not been opened since the Reformation, and which the guardians of the collection looked upon as so much lumber.

AN Early Scottish Text Society is being formed. The initiative was taken by the Rev. Walter Gregor, minister of Pitsligo, and a meeting has been held in Edinburgh. From a report submitted it appeared that if 300 gentlemen subscribed a guinea each a society would be enabled to publish yearly from 300 to 400 pages of carefully-edited matter. It was stated that the object aimed at was to bring the fine old Scottish literature within the reach of Scotsmen of limited means.

THE first volume of the Old Testament Commentary, edited by Bishop Ellicott, has just been published by Messrs. Cassell and Co., and the second volume will be ready for issue in January. The contributors to the Commentary will include the Dean of Canterbury; the Dean of Wells, Dr. Plumptre; Canons Barry, Farrar, and Rawlinson; the Revs. A. S. Aglen, C. J. Ball, F. Gardiner, W. B. Pope, and C. H. Waller; Dr. Ginsburg, Dr. Reynolds, and Professor Stanley Leathes.

AS many as six different translations of Mr. Jenkins's "Paladin of Finance" have appeared in Russia.

THE new and cheaper edition of Mr. Lewis Morris's poems, issued last month, is already exhausted. Another will be ready immediately.

MR. ALFRED AUSTIN is to be the editor of the new Conservative monthly. It is to be a half-crown magazine, and the articles are to be signed.

MR. H. F. MORLEY has been authorised by the Council of University College, London, to give a course of advanced lectures on Organic Chemistry.

THE volume of fac-similes of Anglo-Saxon charters belonging to the Deans and Chapters of Westminster, Exeter, and Wells, which is being prepared by photozincography at the Ordnance Survey Office, Southampton, will be supplemented by fac-similes of a few other charters existing in private collections, the owners of which have kindly lent them to the Ordnance Office for the purpose.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.—Mr. Gunion has accepted the office of lecturer on Sanskrit. Mr. Rhys Davids has accepted the Professorship of Pali and Bhuddist Literature.

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d., tins 1s. 1½d., labelled, "JAMES EPPS AND CO., Homœopathic Chemists, London." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

Religious Intelligence.

AVONDALE ROAD, PECKHAM.

OPENING OF NEW CHURCH.

On Wednesday evening the new Unitarian church at Avondale-road, Peckham, was opened with a religious service at 6.30 P.M., followed by a public meeting at 8 P.M.

The church, which is situated on the slope of a good thoroughfare in a rapidly increasing district, presents a very attractive appearance, and is one of the principal ornaments of the neighbourhood.

The new church, of which a detailed architectural description appeared in our columns a few weeks ago, is in the perpendicular style of Gothic architecture, the main entrance façade being faced with red bricks, while the other elevations are of white gault bricks, relieved by stone and real quoins, &c. The building is lighted at the entrance end of the nave, at the back by a large traceried window, with a small window on each side of the aisles. There are two large windows in the transepts, and seven other windows, all divided with mullions and transoms, the heads of the upper compartments being traceried. The main entrance is to be by a battlemented porch, 9 ft. by 10 ft. 6 in., having an external door at each side, the road front containing a window filled with richly coloured glass, visible from the interior of the chapel—from which the porch will be separated by a wooden screen, filled with plate glass. Internally, the building consists of a nave or aisles, separated by an arcade of four arches on each side, and at the east end there is a semi-octagonal apse, designed to contain the organ, which will be presented by Mr. Henry Tate. The arch opening to the apse has on each side a blue pennant-shaft, with capital and base, while the arch itself is of white and blue stone. The walls of the building, which are of white brick, are relieved by bands of stone. Over the apse arch there is a traceried window filled with rich coloured glass, all the windows having pale tinted glass in various shades, in lead quarries with ruby borders. In front of the organ, on a raised platform, stands the pulpit of American walnut, richly carved, with panels of crimson cloth, and on either side are arranged chair stalls, with twenty-four seats. The sitting accommodation in the church is for 300. All the seats are covered uniformly with red cloth. The general effect is light and cheerful.

At the hour for beginning the service the church was well filled with a congregation comprising several ministers and representatives of other congregations in the metropolis. The devotional service—which people will mistakingly call the introductory service—began with an introit by the choir,

"The Lord is in His holy temple;
Let all the earth keep silence before Him."

The Rev. GEORGE CARTER, minister of the church, offered up a short prayer. A hymn followed, "The perfect world by Adam trod." Mr. Carter then read the first lesson, taken from 1 Kings viii., containing Solomon's beautiful prayer at the dedication of the Temple. The second hymn followed—"O Thou to Whom in ancient time." The second lesson was read from John xiii., and was followed by the grand hymn,

"Four blessed Gospel glorious news for man."

Dr. SADLER then ascended the pulpit and offered an impressive dedication prayer. The choir next rendered in admirable style an anthem by George Young, "The Lord is King." Dr. Sadler then delivered an admirable and most appropriate sermon, of which the following is a brief analysis.

DR. SADLER'S SERMON.

Dr. Sadler commenced with a few impressive words of dedication. This church was not built in any hostility to the other churches already existing, but with the same great object in view, in hope of providing a worship with which the congregation are more completely in harmony. Taking as his text Hebrews vi. 1—"Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on with perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God," the preacher said, go on from dead works to living works, go on from Unitarian theology, to Unitarian religion. Unitarian theology comprised the views held by Unitarians on the nature of God, and the doctrine connected therewith is distinguished from those commonly called orthodox. Unitarian religion depends, not on the views we hold, but on the life and spirit revailing in our churches. Our faith is eminently adapted to foster the devotional spirit, according to Channing's well-known sermon, "Unitarianism most favourable to Piety." We give prominence to the fatherhood of God and to the brotherhood of Christ, which brings us into fellowship with each other. If Unitarian religion is to do good Unitarian theology must be preached affirmatively. It is not by exposing the errors of others that our own inward life can be built up. Unitarian theology should make our service in the house of prayer eminently religious. The Unitarian name does not stand merely for the search after truth. While we maintain the principle of religious liberty, it is religious sympathy which draws us together and keeps us together. So far from freedom being a proper bond of union, it may be only disuniting. The true purpose of religious liberty is to remove every hindrance to union on the religious basis. A denomination should have something homogeneous, its characteristic faith; otherwise it is a name without meaning. Liberty, great and good as it is, is not faith, not love, not righteousness, not life. There is nothing in the name of liberty which should prevent us from holding definite religious convictions and going on to religious faith. There have been changes in our administration in the past, and so there may be in the future. We acknowledge no hierarchy, no creed, no impediments to progress. We value our liberty for the convictions we have attained through it, and we value our convictions all the more because they are not fenced in by articles and creeds, and because our service and sympathy are entirely voluntary, and our doors are ever open to come in or go out. Adverting to the present tendencies of thought in the religious world, the preacher said he was astonished at the changes during his own experience; many of various denominations have given up the old orthodoxy. Those who study the Bible have come to the conclusion that the account of creation in the book of Genesis is a Hebrew tradition. And those who on scientific grounds have accepted Evolution have subverted from the foundation what used to be called the "Scheme of Salvation." The old dogmas are giving place to other views of Divine Providence and Redemption, and the ultimate salvation of mankind. We find ourselves in a somewhat new position in the religious world. There are large numbers of men whose views closely resemble our own, or who hold the old doctrines in such a modified form that our former objections to them are no longer valid. But if we do not offer them a religion to meet their devotional wants, and if we trust to intellectual agencies alone, we shall fail, and deserve to fail. Let us go on from Unitarian theology to Unitarian religion, and we shall meet one of the great wants of the present time. Referring to those things in which all Churches are agreed, Dr. Sadler quoted Dr. Martineau's remark expressing his unabated confidence in the Christian congregation as the most beneficent of all institutions, and concluded a very impressive discourse by tendering his heartfelt sympathy with the minister and congregation, and invoking the blessing of God upon this Church of the Divine Father.

An offertory was then taken, which amounted to £22 7s.

The service was brought to a conclusion with hymn, "The Lord will come and not be slow," Lord's Prayer, and Benediction.

THE PUBLIC MEETING.

Immediately after the service the congregation and others adjourned to Avondale Hall, the handsome and commodious building immediately adjoining, which is used for the Sunday-school, and also for week-day lectures and concerts, and social meetings. The room was crowded in every part. After tea EDWIN LAWRENCE, Esq., LL.B., was called to the chair, and was supported on the platform by the Revs. G. Carter, H. Ierson, R. Spears, T. W. Freckelton, J. Worthington, Buchanan Ryley (Congregationalist); Mr. Hall, the architect of the church, Mr. Hahnemann Epps, Secretary of the congregation, Messrs. J. T. Preston, D. Martineau, S. S. Taylor, I. M. Wade, R. Bartram, F. Nettlefold and S. W. Preston. In other parts of the hall we observed the Revs. T. L. Marshall, W. C. Bowie, Mrs. Ravenstein, Misses Sharpe, Miss Preston, Dr. Johnston, Messrs. H. Taylor, E. S. Anthony and P. Moore, of Manchester New College, Messrs. A. Preston, H. Jeffery, J. Terry, N. M. Tayler, D. Watson, LL.B., W. Cox, E. Plimpton, W. Warren, &c.

The CHAIRMAN, in commencing, called upon Mr. Epps, the Secretary, who read letters from Messrs. D. Ainsworth, M.P., W. Rathbone M.P., R. N. Phillips, M.P., Sir J. C. Lawrence, M.P., all expressing interest in the occasion, but expressing inability to attend on account of absence from home. Mr. Henry Tate, who had promised a handsome organ, would have been present had he been in town. Letters had also been received from the Revs. W. H. Channing, J. Estlin Carpenter, P. W. Clayden, Mr. J. Hoggood, and Mr. T. Chatefield Clarke. Miss Müller, of the London School Board, who had been expected to attend, was prevented by her health and the state of the weather.

The CHAIRMAN said they were assembled there to inaugurate the opening of a Unitarian Christian church, the handsomest new building in that neighbourhood. He had just been reading Canon Farrar's "Early Days of Christianity." The picture he drew of the state of the world at that time was most appalling, and had never so forcibly come home to his mind before reading his burning words. The state of the Jewish world, as they knew from the graphic pages of Josephus, was not better than that of the Roman world, as described by Juvenal. This was the time when the Christian Church was established, and we are only now beginning to understand what the world owes to Christianity in reforming the whole face of society. This church was founded in allegiance to Christianity and to Christ, the head of the Church, whom we know to be the best and grandest of all teachers. Nowhere else but in the words of the Great Master are the same divine truths to be found without admixture of error. He had lately returned from Italy. There he witnessed a fresh outburst of idolatry, an increasing tawdriness in the churches and their ceremonial, and growing devotion to the Virgin Mary, but little or no real practical Christianity. He had passed through France on his return, and was glad to hear from a Protestant pastor whom he visited that the liberal Protestant party had made very great progress during the last twelve months. Christianity in its Protestant form was beginning to win the heart, and we cannot have real liberalism without Christianity—(applause). The greatest men the world knew recognised Christ as their master, and through the discovery of ancient manuscripts and the results of the labours of Biblical critics we are getting ever nearer to the words of life. He regarded Unitarian Christianity as the noblest and grandest religion. Their object was to make men live nobler lives, but if a man gives up faith in a Heavenly Father and communion with Him, he cannot lead a true and noble life in the highest sense of the terms. He trusted they would light the fire of enthusiasm and enable the worshippers in that church to rise to a purer and diviner life. Therefore he rejoiced to assist in the inauguration of their new church, and wished it all prosperity—(loud applause).

The Rev. H. IERSON referred to the early history of the church, which was largely indebted to the Unitarian Association of which he was the secretary, and that Society was simply the almoner of the kindly help and sympathy of the whole body of its supporters. The money had been economically and well spent; and their whole history had been that of a people's church, embodying the true democratic spirit. It was a congregational Church, and in it all were equal, not depending upon the patronage of a few families, and so they had a good future before them. It was also a religious Church, unlike some which were no longer homes of religious feeling and were bound to die. It will continue to be a Christian Church and a Unitarian Church, which they regarded as identical, their theology and religion pulling together. The speaker referred to the meeting that day of the venerable Warwickshire Ministers' Society, founded at a time when the state of things in regard to Unitarianism was very different from what it is now. It brought home to us the conviction that the world is rapidly moving in the Unitarian and Catholic direction, and while working in our own direction we could embrace in our sympathies all the churches around, and acting in such a spirit they had a noble future before them—(applause).

Mr. D. MARTINEAU said that the London District Society, of which he was treasurer, had contributed with great pleasure to the erection of this church, and he recalled with pleasure the honour he had had of laying the foundation stone. He was well acquainted with their struggles, and congratulated them heartily on the progress of their beautiful Church. Their minister would find his work very greatly assisted. They had been largely indebted to the donations of one family, that of their benefactor, the late Mr. S. Sharpe. They had done their duty well for themselves, they must now do their duty to their minister—(loud applause).

The CHAIRMAN then put the resolution, "Hearty success to this Church," which was unanimously carried.

The Rev. GEORGE CARTER, who was enthusiastically received, in responding, said that he owed what success had been achieved to the cordial support of friends who had stood by him from the first, and had helped him in every way in their power. He had received most fortunate recognition from leading men of the denomination, especially his brother ministers in London. He had also received great material help as well as sympathy, and especially referred to the deeply-venerated name of Mr. Samuel Sharpe, who had helped him with princely munificence and personal sympathy, and as long as this church exists his name would be held sacred among them.

Mr. H. ERS proposed a resolution of thanks to the donors to the building fund for the erection of the schoolroom and the church. Their principal obligation was to the late Mr. Sharpe, to whose generosity he was quite unable to do justice. The sums he had given considerably exceeded £1,000, and there had been other considerable donors. Their chairman also represented a band of brothers who were always ready to help forward every good cause. Mr. Henry Tate, besides contributing to the building fund, had presented them with a handsome organ. The two Societies represented by Mr. Jerson and Mr. D. Martineau had also given valuable contributions; and the three denominational journals had given them useful notices. Their own congregation had not been backward in assisting with their purses. Mr. S. S. Tayler, the Treasurer of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, had always given them most valuable help from their earliest days; and they wished to couple his name with the resolution. They had paid £1,300 for the church, and the building altogether cost £1,550. They were indebted to the skill of the architect for the result, and the faithful work of the builders. They were actually in debt about £200.

The resolution was seconded by Mr. J. T. Preston, who said that the widow's mite contributed by the poor was greater in the sight of God than the larger donations, which made no difference in the ordinary comforts of the donors. What was given out of small means was often greater than large sums. What was given by the donors was a trust for the erection of a building devoted to Unitarian Christianity.

Mr. S. S. TAYLER, in acknowledging the resolution, said the chairman's picture of the state of the world before Christianity showed that they were doing the right thing in raising up a church for the pure and simple worship of God in the exercise of the right of private judgment. Their Church was not bound by creeds, dogmas or ceremonies, but consecrated to a higher and purer faith. He had long watched the effort here, and it had been characterised by a large amount of unity of purpose, and by the disinterested spirit of their pastor. Both minister and people had proved themselves thoroughly worthy of help.

Mr. BARTRAM added his congratulation to Mr. Carter and his congregation on the consummation of their wishes and hopes. The story of this church has been one of quiet, persistent effort from the day of small things to the result they witnessed that evening. He proposed a resolution of welcome to their visitors, and expressed regret that Miss Müller, in whose educational work they had so much sympathy, was not able to be present. It was gratifying to see how much broader people were getting in their religious views, and that they were laying more stress upon their agreement than their differences. They had as a visitor that evening a Congregational minister of the neighbourhood, and they always gladly welcomed men who cannot see with us in all points of religion. There are various points of view in religious matters, and all we asked is that people should recognise that there are views, and be faithful to their own convictions. He coupled with the sentiment the name of the Rev. Mr. Ryley.

Mr. H. JEFFERY, in seconding the resolution, said he had occupied their pulpit in all the various stages through which they had passed. He tendered his tribute of high respect to Mr. Carter for the work he had done, who set an example to all of them of self-sacrificing devotion to the Unitarian cause.

The resolution was carried with acclamation.

The Rev. G. BUCHANAN RYLEY, minister of Hanover Chapel, Rye-lane, in acknowledging the resolution, said that although many of them were in extreme theological difference, deep as the abyss was they could stretch friendly hands across it. He had deep reverence for their pastor, who was a very hard worker. He felt they all owed a great deal to the Unitarian section of the church for rescuing some truths and principles which other sections had let fall into oblivion, and although he differed from them intellectually his heart was with them.

Mr. BEGG moved a resolution respecting the architect, Mr. Hall, who had shown great ability and devoted great attention and care to his work.

Mr. WARREN briefly seconded the vote of thanks, also expressing his hearty appreciation of the handsome building. The architect had kept well to the amount agreed upon, although some alterations had been suggested.

The resolution was carried with acclamation and acknowledged in appropriate terms by Mr. HALL, who expressed his thanks to the builders and workmen for carrying out the instructions given to them.

The Rev. R. SPEARS moved a vote of thanks to the chairman, which was seconded by the Rev. W. C. BOWIE, and carried with acclamation, and suitably acknowledged by Mr. LAWRENCE.

The proceedings were brought to a close with an anthem by the choir, "I will lift up mine eyes." In the course of the evening Mrs. Coggin gave a solo, "He giveth his beloved sleep," in admirable style, Miss Warren accompanying on the harmonium.

BLACKLEY UNITARIAN CHAPEL.

On Saturday week the Induction of the Rev. J. Maclaren Cobban to the ministry of the above chapel took place, the Rev. JOSEPH FREESTON conducting the devotional portion of the service.

The Rev. DENDY AGATE, B.A., gave the charge to the minister.

The Rev. C. C. COE then delivered the charge to the congregation, in which he urged how desirable it was that there should be cordial co-operation, and at the close sought to impress upon all the solemn nature of the contract into which both minister and people were that day entering. The congregation might do much to brighten or sadden the life of their new minister, and he could wish for him that he might receive as much encouragement—as much plain speaking, as much friendship and sympathy as he himself had received from the two congregations to which he had ministered.

In the evening a welcome party was held in the school, at which Mr. J. J. Brown presided, and among those present were the Revs. C. C. Coe (Bolton), Dendy Agate (Gorton), Joseph Freeston (Stalybridge), J. Towle Marriott (Strangeways), William Mitchell (Ardwick), W. G. Cadman (Miles Platting), B. Walker (Willert-street Domestic Mission), J. McDowell (Pendleton), and Messrs. G. W. Rayner Wood, Thomas Cooke, James Bennett, Henry Coffey, John Johnson, Charles Johnson, J. Duncan, C. Scholes, George Taylor, T. Tonge, &c. The Secretary having read letters regretting inability to be present from the Rev. William Gaskell (who had preached the anniversary sermons of the chapel nearly forty times), the Rev. S. A. Steinthal, James Harwood and J. G. Slater, and two local Church of England clergymen.

The CHAIRMAN said they were there to welcome Mr. Cobban as their new minister, and he trusted they would all work together harmoniously—(applause)—the welfare of the chapel depending on it, and in assisting their minister in all his efforts to fulfil his duties in a manner that would do credit both to himself and the congregation—(applause), and help to build up a good Unitarian Church at Blackley—(applause). There was very great scope for him there, and there would be still more when they had got the new chapel—(applause). Subscriptions were coming in fairly well, but they wanted a lot of money yet; probably about £2,500, and he should like himself to commence building next year. He had no doubt also the Sunday-school would improve very much under Mr. Cobban's leadership. They had wanted a leader for some months past, and now they had one he hoped they would make the best use of him—(applause).

Mr. JAMES BENNETT, in welcoming the new minister on behalf of the congregation, gave a very interesting account of the Blackley congregation and the old chapel from the Act of Uniformity in 1662, shortly after which some of the Nonconformist ministers took refuge in Blackley with a Mrs. Travis, among whom was a Mr. Pyke, the ejected rector of Radcliff. The first man who resuscitated the congregation was James C. Street—(applause). He blew the slumbering embers of Unitarianism into life, and his efforts were followed by the Rev. Joseph Freeston—(applause). Since that time they had taken a more definite shape, and though as a congregation they could not count upon much grandeur or wealth, there were parents there who had seen their children in consequence of their connection with that congregation growing up respectable and prosperous—(applause). One great benefactor of the chapel in recent years was Mr. Eckersley, and his memory was held in great affection. Mr. Cobban, he trusted, would find all the congregation doing their best to work pleasantly together, and in finding in him a faithful minister he would find them a loyal and attentive congregation—(applause).

Mr. WALTER JOHNSON welcomed the new minister on behalf of the Sunday-school, and the Rev. W. G. CADMAN gave Mr. Cobban the right hand of fellowship on behalf of the ministers of the district.

The Rev. J. T. MARRIOTT having also addressed the meeting,

The Rev. J. MACLAREN COBBAN said the first time he heard of Unitarianism was when he was at school in Aberdeen, the Unitarian minister in the town having been stoned by the rabid Presbyterians on the occasion of an open air meeting. That would give them an idea of the way in which Unitarianism was viewed by those among whom he was brought up. As he grew older he thought more for himself. He went to college in London to be trained for the Independent ministry, and while there he was sent down to supply the pulpit of a little church not far distant. A few days afterwards the secretary of the college called him aside and showed him a letter from the chief deacon of the church, in which were the words, "Don't send the young man any more, he is not sound." Soon after that he left college, and had since been engaged in teaching or literary work. The warm welcome he had received that night not only left him with very little to say, but perplexed him how to say that little. There was a great work before them there. The one engrossing prospect was of course the building of a new chapel, but before all that was the building up of the spirit of sympathy and enthusiasm among the congregation. Not that there was not much of that already, for he believed there was. His opinion of what a minister ought to be was that he ought to be not only the preacher to a certain congregation, but to be in every conceivable way the leader of its religious life, its social life, introducing them as truly as might be to all forms of higher culture. Those ideas he should endeavour to make the ruling spirit of all his teachings and work among them, and he was sure each one, old and young, would try to assist him. At to the Sunday-school, which should be the nursery of the church, he had a great sense of its importance. He should do his best to aid the teachers and superintendents and take charge of the higher class—(applause).

The Rev. WILLIAM MITCHELL and Mr. G. W. RAYNER WOOD having also addressed the meeting, Mr. JOHN JOHNSON proposed a vote of thanks to the Revs. Jos. Freeston, C. C. Coe, and Dendy Agate for their services, which, having been seconded by Mr. THOMAS COOKE (the oldest member of the congregation), was carried with acclamation.

Votes of thanks to the ladies who had arranged and presided at the tea tables and to the Chairman were also passed in a very hearty manner, and the evening hymn and benediction closed the proceedings.

During the course of the evening a selection of music was admirably rendered by the members of the choir.

LEICESTER.—The Liberals here have gained one seat at the School Board Election, nine Liberals having been returned and six Churchmen.

CAMBRIDGE.—Dr. W. Blake Odgers, of Trinity Hall; Mr. H. M. Mozley, of King's; and Mr. Courtney Kenny, of Downing; are appointed examiners in the Law Tripos for 1883.

THE LONDON DOMESTIC MISSION.—The Rev. F. Summers acknowledges with thanks the sum of £3 from W.E.L. for division between George's-row and Spicer-street Missions.

Mr. PROCTOR, the astronomer, lecturing at Glasgow, mentioned that the observations taken during the transit of Venus appeared to show not only that the planet had a vaporous atmosphere, but that its surface is partly covered by oceans, and presumably, therefore, that it is inhabited.

The Liberal Pulpit.

JOB AND HIS FRIENDS.

Notwithstanding the fog and frost that prevailed without, and which sensibly made themselves felt within, a large congregation again assembled in Westminster Abbey on Saturday week, to hear the third of Dean Bradley's discourses on Job.

The main and substantial part of the book was, he said, separated from all that went before. The change was not confined to Job, but was shared equally by his friends. The words of Eliphaz were at first not unkindly. They were words well weighed and dignified, and almost apologetic in tone. He handled tenderly the barbed arrows that were soon to rankle in the heart of his friend. Who, he asked, ever perished, being innocent? His own experience of Arab life told him that he who sowed wickedness would reap the same. A shapeless spirit had passed before him, and rebuked the supposition that man would be more just than his Maker. Job had been saying, Eliphaz hints, harsh things of the Ruler of Mankind, who disappoints the devices of the crafty, and sets upon high those that be low. Happy, he maintains, is the man whom God correcteth, for the correction is chastening which is not to be despised. And then, in a series of Eastern images, he promises that Job shall come to his grave in a full age, like a shock of corn in his season.

In the sixth and seventh chapter, however, Job returns to a prolonged moan of sorrow, and gives fresh utterance to his deep sense of agony. From his friends he turns to his Maker, and sighs for death as the wages of the labourer. He would vanish away as a cloud, and be known no more in his place. With the passion of a mountain torrent that hastens to be dried up in the sultry desert, he yearns for the removal of his weary pains by death. There is nothing in all this of Mohammedan resignation, nothing of Christian hope.

The Shuhite, in the eighth chapter, continued the Dean, stands forward to rebuke this want of faith, and suggests that Job is suffering for the sins of his children. A perfect man, he declares, God will not cast away. But scant comfort do these words bring to Job, who, as it were, asks, How shall I speak out to God the thoughts that burn within me? Yet will he cry, Wherefore contendest Thou with me? Why didst Thou give me the gift of this weary life in which the light is as darkness? Not a word of resignation or of patience does Job utter, not a word expressive of the hope of redress beyond the grave. The third friend, Zophar, speaks in the same key as his companions, although the language is sharper and sterner. He taxes Job with profanity, and bids him put his iniquity far from him if he would be restored to the dignity of God's favour. This is too much for Job to bear. What you tell me of God, he exclaims, all creation tells me. His friends, who represent many in the Church of to-day, were but poor pleaders for God. Job's faith in God is strong enough to make him say, "Though he slay me yet will I trust Him." Nevertheless he will maintain his ways before God, and charge him with writing better things against him. In the fourteenth chapter occurs the most mournful utterance, said the Dean, to be found in any literature, with the exception, perhaps, of a chorus in Sophocles. "Man that is born of woman," wails Job, "is of few days and full of trouble." Why cannot he be allowed to rest till his short day is over? There is hope of a tree, for if it is cut down it will bud afresh. But man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? God is the great destroyer. The words of the Arab patriarch were in sad accordance with some of the utterances of modern science.

The climax is, however, not yet reached. Each of the three friends speak, and each is followed by Job. Two, Eliphaz and Bildad, return to the argument, and each is answered by Job. These comforters, said the Dean in closing, stand for a class of God-fearing people who only mislead when attempting to explain the spiritual problems of life. Shocked at what Job says, they utter much that is true as well as striking. They were devout and orthodox, yet utterly mistaken, and Christian controversialists were too often ready to follow their example. They were in possession of certain undoubted truths, but it did not matter to them how they applied them, and so wholesome medicines became poison. All they said was tainted with one fundamental error. It was very hard for them to realise that the hand of God could be heavy on any whom he approved, just as the men of a later age could not understand that those who were crushed by the tower of Siloam were not greater sinners than themselves. Their narrow ideas were in conflict with the Divine light, which was shining above them like the dawn on Alpine heights.

Dean Bradley delivered the fourth of his interesting series of lectures on the Book of Job on Saturday afternoon in Westminster Abbey to a large congregation. The subject was the effect produced on Job by the words spoken to him in his affliction by his three friends, as indicated by the replies made by the Patriarch at various points, the record of which closes at the end of the thirty-first chapter. Generally speaking, the effect on Job's mind was to convince him that he must not look to man for help and consolation in his trouble. "Miserable comforters are ye all," he said, and he reproachfully suggested that had the circumstances of himself and his friends been reversed, he would have adopted a very different method of consolation: "I would strengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips should assuage your grief." He felt that he could but turn his back on his illjudging friends, and plead for his life with God. The first thing to be noted was that his language contained a long wail of sorrow. His thoughts were expressed in many strange and curious figures; and, indeed, the Book was full of vivid touches, having reference to the life and ways of the early world, although these allusions were, unfortunately, sometimes obscured by the English version. In his utterances, too, were included psalms of pain and suffering, in which, as for example in the ninth chapter, from verse 6th to 22nd, there were references which appeared to point onward to One whose sorrow was above all sorrow. In chapter thirty there was a reference evidently to surrounding circumstances, to the existence, habits and semi-inarticulate speech of some lower, conquered, aboriginal race of men. In the midst, however, of all these varied utterances, indicative of habits of natural observation and of powers of spiritual insight, there was throughout a quivering sense of pain, the cry of complaint, the breathing of unspoken agony. For, secondly, it was to be remarked that that which gave poignancy to his suffering, adding to it another and a deeper pang, was the moral problem which it forced upon him, the spiritual torture with which his distresses were associated. There was the miserable sense that these woes from God—and Job never doubted that they were from God—were unaccountable, according to all ordinary rules of judgment. He was not conscious of deserving such a fate. He was conscious of general integrity, and he could appeal to God whether he had not esteemed the words of His mouth better than his daily bread. He recalls, in his bitterness, the happy days of the golden past, and is able to say with a clear conscience that those were days of well-doing as well as of well-being; he had kept himself innocent from sins of the flesh, from oppression of his bondsmen and bondswomen, from avarice and niggardliness and dishonest dealing; he had not neglected the duties of charity and hospitality, nor been betrayed into the common idolatry when he had looked upon the moon and stars in those Eastern heavens. Glancing over these remarkable utterances, and giving here and there a luminous word of explanation, the Dean went on to say that we, who had been lifted by the slow processes of God's Spirit to a higher level in our conception of a perfect religious character, might be startled by some of these broad and unflinching assertions of human innocence and integrity; still it must be admitted that they were true, although indeed they were not without an element of error and of defective knowledge. His keenest trial arose out of his consciousness of innocence. His successive losses—of wealth, of children, of health, the accumulation of woes upon his head—all these he bore with absolute submission; for when all had gone, something inestimable yet remained; "he walked with inward glory crowned," in the sense that he had approved himself to his Maker. But now the hard and ready dogmatism of his friends had forced upon him the question, "Was God, after all, indeed righteous and just? Powerful He was, no doubt, but what if, after all, this power was wielded by One who looked with indifference on right and wrong, good and evil, who distributed pain and pleasure at random, or wrongly?" In face of this awful question, the wise saws of his friends only aggravated his misery. Conscious that their charges against him were false, their words only gave point and emphasis to his doubt, and pressed upon him questions, to which he hardly dared give utterance, with regard to the most fundamental of all moral truths. Considering the prosperity of the wicked, he attempts to find a solution of the puzzle by the supposition of retribution coming upon their posterity, but the sense of the real inequalities of life again returns; he saw the opening scene of the story of Dives and Lazarus, but not the sequel. How much darker and more cruel did this problem of human life seem to Job than to us; for his friends could say nothing to him of an unseen world, of a recompense beyond the grave, or of Christ the Example and Sympathiser for all sufferers. There were, indeed, in Job's words some shadowy references to the idea of immortality, a looking forward to a vision of God when the destruction of the body should be complete, but the accents were faint and low, and the difficulty was made greater by the limited range of his vision. "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him," is his sorrowful cry, and although for a moment he lays his finger on the greath truth, "these are parts of His ways," the path is hidden from him, and he finds no answer to his doubt. Still, he could not believe that to do justice and to love mercy could alienate from God, and so he comes to the piteous appeal to the record of his own conduct and integrity contained in the 31st chapter. His friends were pained and shocked because he was righteous in his own eyes. His words were to them the upheaval of a new stratum of ideas, which disturbed their conception of the scheme of the government of the world and of the order of things, and it seemed to them that Job was not to be argued with any longer. Their feeling was natural. There was something lacking, too, in his conception of religion, and they at any rate were convinced of the necessity of maintaining their own creed. They were in the wrong, however, and this is not by any means the only instance in which the majority of religious professors have been in the wrong, and one solitary suffering spirit has had to set itself against them, in the conviction that truth was not always to be found on the side of numbers. A higher obedience than that of mere submission had yet to be taught to Job, something of that which was meant when it was said "If ye have faith, ye shall remove mountains."—Christian World.

THE REV. DR. ELLIS ON THE BIBLE.

[At a recent meeting of the Unitarian Club, at Boston, U.S., the Rev. Dr. E. E. Ellis delivered a remarkable address on the Bible, of which the following is the chief portion.]

I have carefully considered the words and thoughts which I am about to express, fully apprehending their serious bearings, and that they may startle or grieve some others, if not you. Fifty years of study, thought and reading, given largely to the Bible and to the literature which peculiarly relates to it, have brought me to this conclusion, that the book—taken with the special divine quality and character claimed for it, and so extensively assigned to it as inspired and infallible as a whole, and in all its contents—is an orthodox book. It yields what is called the orthodox creed. The vast majority of its readers, following its letter, its obvious sense, its natural meaning, and yielding to the impression which some of its emphatic texts make upon them, find in it Orthodoxy. Only that kind of ingenious, special, discriminative, and, in candour, I must add, forced treatment which it received from us liberals can make the book teach anything but Orthodoxy. The evangelical sects, so-called, are clearly right in maintaining that their view of Scripture and of its doctrines draws a deep and wide division of creed between them and ourselves.

In that earnest controversy by pamphlet warfare between Drs. Channing and Ware on the one side, and Drs. Worcester and Woods and Professor Stuart on the other—a controversy which wrought up the people of our community, sixty years ago, more than did our recent political campaign—I am fully convinced that the liberal contestants were worsted. Scripture exegesis, logic and argument were clearly on the side of the orthodox contestants. And this was so, mainly because the liberal party put themselves upon the same plane with the orthodox in their way of regarding and dealing with Scripture texts in their bearing upon the controversy. Liberalism cannot vanquish Orthodoxy, if it yields to the latter in its own way of regarding and treating the whole Bible.

Martin Luther said that the Papists burnt the Bible because it was not on their side. Now, I am not about to attack the Bible because it is not on my side. But I am about to object as emphatically as I can against a character and quality assigned to the Bible which it does not claim for itself, which cannot be certified for it; and the origin and growth and intensity of the fond and superstitious influences resulting in that view we can trace distinctly to agencies accounting for, but not warranting, the current belief. Orthodoxy cannot readjust its creed till it readjusts its estimate of the Scriptures. The only belief which one who professes the orthodox creed can find is either by forcing his ingenuity into the proof-texts or indulging his liberty outside of them. All the most vital and searching forces now at work in their bearing upon themes of loftiest import to man demand, and are working toward the intelligent and fearless reconsideration of the accepted view of the Bible, which opens the most teasing controversies, which deals with them all in a most unsatisfactory way, and leaves them all unsettled, if not more perplexed.

Here is a volume of miscellaneous and heterogeneous contents, some of them written we know not when, where, or by whom, all of which are unified as from one divine source and authority. In that volume is matter, instruction, warning, precept, and promise of priceless and transcendent value for the life and the hope of man. For that, it is consecrated and bedewed with the most sacred human affections. Because of such, its contents, that book has become to Christendom a gracious gift of God. We refer to its influence, with that of the steady progress of material and physical science which it has helped to quicken and guide, all the most elevating, refining, beneficent, and regenerating agencies which are advancing and redeeming humanity.

Now look at that book from the other side, as what is called church history centres around it. There are matters in that book which, if they have not been the cause, have been the occasion, the agency, the instrumentality, backed by an assumed divine warrant, of strifes, feuds, superstitions, persecutions, barbarities, and atrocities of every stain and hue which have strewn the world for ages with wrecks of woe and agony. I will not fill up that outline. I shudder over the summary; and I cannot challenge the charge which assigns all this to the estimate and use of the less lovely, the less benedictive lessons of the Bible. President Mather of our young college, for many years the most eminent and honoured man, citizen, and divine in this colony, expressly taught that the divine command to the Israelites to exterminate the Canaanites was a full warrant for the desolation of our Indian tribes. Search to the bottom the history of that delirium of dread and frenzy and outrage which we call the witchcraft delusion here, nearly two centuries ago. You will find but a single palliation for the agency of good and upright men in those horrors. Judges, witnesses, yes, even the victims, read in a book which they had all been taught to believe, and did believe, was written by the finger of God, this sentence:—"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live."

But this is not the time or place for following further in this strain. I come to utter the constraining thought that is burdening my mind. If the parties in that threatened schism among our orthodox Congregationalists will kindly indulge me in a sincere utterance made in all deference and courtesy,—and yet I cannot add, with diffidence,—I will speak my mind. Certain facts claim their notice as they engage with the mere surface of deep and serious questions which their peers in scholarship, in ability, in candour, and in religious earnestness, are trying to search thoroughly and fairly. Those questions largely concern the contents, character, and authority of a book which is positively called the "Word of God." It is not alleged by any one that there is a single sentence in that book which was written with intent to deceive or mislead. But there is much in it, with the authority and purpose claimed for it, which has grievously misled many of the best of our race, and which does so now. A steadily increasing number of persons of all grades and classes in intelligence, sincerity, and devoutness, leave that book from year to year through a long life unopened. Not as preachers complacently say, because of their sin-hardened hearts, for very many of them are seeking and longing for some blessed religious guidance. It is because what they remember and hear said about the book as coming direct from God perplexes, astounds, and shocks them. There are those who continue to be readers, and who share those feelings, publishing their doubts and denials, often with ridicule and scorn. They find in the book commands, purposes, and acts assigned to God at which they would shudder, if ascribed to heathen deities. Standing on this modern earth and beneath these ancient heavens, men boldly, sometimes sadly, say that there are assertions and statements in that book which they know positively to be untrue,—untrue to fact, to history, to the verities of nature and life, to the attributes and rule of the Being to whom their loftiest and most devout convictions rise as the God over all. A clerical discussion upon the point whether Scripture texts can be interpreted so as to allow a hope for idiots, infants, and heathen, who have had an "imperfect probation" here, does not reach to their relief. When a few of those texts are alleged as certifying that the vast majority of the human race are to be the victims of endless woe, the questions cannot be silenced: "Who wrote those words, and with what authority? Were they correctly reported and duly certified?"

That divine authority and warrant for all that is included in the Bible cannot be proved by any tests or methods by which we estimate proof in all other matters. There is enough in that priceless volume which certifies its inspiration, proved because it inspires its readers. But that claim can never be certified for any assertion that shocks and falsifies the primary instincts and affections, by which alone we apprehend God. There cannot be two kinds of justice for God and man, any more than there can be two kinds of mathematics for measuring the fields of the earth and spaces of the sky. That the sanctities of that book may be retained, the assumptions and superstitions associated with it must be surrendered.

I can conceive of no more earnest and cogent appeal which all Christendom with the urgency of fit and favouring occasion may make to Christian divines, scholars, and professors with all the apparatus for theological instruction than this: reconsider to the very bottom, divested of all professional proclivities and partialities, the estimate that you put upon the Bible, as a whole and in its parts. Try to relieve those who look to you from these harrowing perplexities and these tortures of thought and feeling. May we press this earnest request upon those close by us here who are agitating a merely surface question? Your exalted profession, the confidence and support given to you by the little fellowships around you, while the great mass is drifting by you, distrustful of your sincerity or ability, demand of you an effort for this service for the whole community. Probably there is not a single occupant of a Congregationalist pulpit in this State who believes literally the account of the first pair of our race in the book of Genesis, which is the turning pivot of the whole orthodox creed. If he makes the slightest variation from the strictness of the letter in its interpretation, then he opens the whole question of more or less in such dealing with the Bible.

It is indeed a tremendous demand to make upon those who profess to believe, and who positively teach to others, that the whole Bible is of divine authorship and authority that they will seek to rectify and clear up a fond superstition which has been strengthening itself for the last three hundred years. My own thoughts at once suggest the various protests of reason and dread, the pleas, arrests and remonstrances, as well as all the bugbears provoked by the suggestion that those—a very slender minority in the more intelligent classes of Christendom—who so designate the Bible will in their fellowships reopen, reconsider and readjust the whole foundation of positive and certified fact involved in that belief. The insensate alarm and protest raised by the enterprise for rectifying the admitted errors in the text of our English version warns us as to the average intelligence which is exercised, when fond and misleading beliefs are threatened. To intelligent Protestants the whole institution of the Roman Catholic Church, in its organisation, doctrine and discipline, presents a similar combination of divine and human elements—of what is of heaven and what is of men—to that which the Bible does to liberal theologians. The "evangelicals" have put to exercise some of that ingenuity with which they discriminate between the truth and the error in that Church. The assumption of a divine vice-gerency and infallibility for the Pope is a match for a similar claim for a book, the contents of which present so many problems and perplexities. While orthodox divines assert for that book an authorship and sanction wholly divine, not allowing for the human element in it, many, perhaps the most, of those who cannot accept this belief, may adopt the extreme alternative that the volume can be accounted for within the resources of the earth as the product of the soarings and the gropings of man.

LEWES.—The Rev. A. Macdonald, M.A., has retired from the ministry on account of advanced age, and the church here is now vacant.

RAVARA.—On Friday night, December 1, an entertainment, consisting of a limelight exhibition and sacred song illustrative of the "Pilgrim's Progress," was given in Ravara Meeting House. "There was a large attendance, the house being well filled in almost every part. The Revs. T. Dunkerley (Comber), and J. McCaw (Killinchy) were present. Mr. McCaw presided, he being the first pastor of the church. The programme, creditably executed, gave general satisfaction. A vote of thanks was moved by the Rev. W. O. McGowan (pastor loci), seconded by Mr. W. J. Scott, and supported by the Rev. H. A. McGowan, to all who contributed in rendering the entertainment a success. A vote of thanks having been passed to the chairman, the proceedings were brought to a close by the choir singing the Evening Hymn, and by the chairman giving prayer and benediction. Thanks are due and hereby accorded Comber and Killinchy congregations for their pecuniary aid, encouragement, and sympathy rendered through their several pastors, the Revs. T. Dunkerley and J. McCaw, and also to some members of the Moneyrea congregation who kindly assisted the choir. Proceeds are devoted to Improvement Fund.

POOLE.—The fourteenth anniversary sermons since the erection of the new Unitarian Church were preached at this place on Sunday last by the Rev. T. L. Marshall, of London. The congregations, although good, were not so large as they would have been but for the inclement weather. The services were appropriate to the occasion, the subject of the morning discourse being "Worship," that of the evening "The Eleventh or New Commandment." On the following Monday evening there was a pleasant social meeting of the congregation and their friends, including a few from Bournemouth, in the school-room. After tea the numbers were considerably augmented. The proceedings chiefly consisted of an organ recital by Mr. J. Whitehead Smith, R.A.M., organist of Wimbourn Minster, followed by an attractive programme of music comprising solos and duets by Misses Jenkins, Miss Reed, Miss Pecket, and Messrs. Sedgfield, Belben, Perston and Guest, all of which were received with much applause.

STRATFORD.—A sale of useful and fancy articles was held at Rokeby House, Stratford, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday (the 6th, 7th, and 8th inst.) to establish a fund for building a school-room on the spare ground behind the chapel, a work that is much needed. A large quantity of useful and ornamental articles had been collected, and the first day's sale was fairly satisfactory, but the inclement weather of Thursday and Friday had a very depressing effect, and a large proportion of the goods is still unsold. The stalls were under the superintendence of Mrs. Stead, Miss Taylor, and Mrs. Macellan, Stratford; Mrs. de Brent, Avely; Miss Dean, Wanstead; Mrs. Starke, Wanstead; Mrs. Harwood, Forest Gate; Mrs. Rix, Wood Green, assisted by other ladies. The choir from College Chapel, Stepney, Mr. Dean, and others enlivened the proceedings with vocal and instrumental music. The "fine art gallery" was well patronised, and on the last evening Mr. C. Watt, junr., of Edmonton, gave a very clever ventriloquist entertainment, entitled "The Little Old Lady."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Liver, Lungs, and Kidneys.—Most diseases of these depravative organs arise from obstructions, over the removal of which these celebrated Pills exercise the most perfect control. A course of them is strongly recommended as a remedy for such chronic affections as liver enlargements, congestion of the lungs, torpidity of the kidneys, and other functional disorders which cause much present suffering, and if neglected lay the foundation of organic diseases. Holloway's Pills are specially adapted for the young and delicate; their gentle and purifying action ranks them above all other medicines. In indigestion, nervous affections, gout and rheumatism these Pills have achieved for themselves universal fame. They expel all impurities from the blood, and thus restore cheerfulness and vigour.

University Intelligence.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

The following are Lists of the Candidates who have passed the recent examinations:—

B.S. EXAMINATION.

FIRST DIVISION.—D. Collingwood, University College; C. J. Pike, University College; W. J. Roeckel, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; S. W. Sutton, St. Thomas's Hospital; F. R. Walters, St. Thomas's Hospital.

SECOND DIVISION.—J. W. Batterham, Westminster Hospital; D. W. Buxton, University College; H. Campbell, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; E. Clarke, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; W. R. Dakin, Guy's Hospital; Mary A. Dacomb Scharlieb, Madras Medical College, London School of Medicine, and Royal Free Hospital.

M.S. EXAMINATION.

C. A. Ballance (Gold Medal), St. Thomas's Hospital; M. P. M. Collier, St. Thomas's Hospital.

M.D. EXAMINATION.

A. E. Buckell, University College (obtained the number of marks qualifying for the medal); W. J. Collins, B.S., B.Sc., St. Bartholomew's Hospital; N. Dalton, King's College; H. Davy, Guy's Hospital; T. V. Dickinson, St. George's Hospital; R. J. Edwardes, St. Mary's Hospital; C. Firth, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; J. P. A. Gabb, University College; L. J. Hobson, B.S., University College; G. M. MacDonald, King's College; R. Maguire (gold medal), Owens College and Manch. R. Infirmary; W. J. Nutley, B.A., Royal Infirmary, Edinburgh; E. H. Paddison, Guy's Hospital; L. C. Parkes, University College; E. Penny, Guy's Hospital; R. Petch, King's College; S. T. Plumble, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; T. C. Ranton, St. Bartholomew's Hospital and Owens College; B. N. Rake, Guy's Hospital (obtained the number of marks qualifying for the medal); A. J. M'C. Routh, B.S., University College; G. H. Russell, Guy's Hospital; G. J. S. Saunders, King's College; T. D. Savill, St. Thomas's Hospital; M. F. Sayer, University College; J. E. Squire, University College; T. G. Stonham, London Hospital; C. W. Suckling, Queen's College, Birmingham; E. G. Whittle, University College.

LOGIC AND PSYCHOLOGY ONLY.—G. F. Barnes, St. Bartholomew's Hospital; S. Buckley, Manchester Royal School of Medicine; J. D. Hayward, University College; W. H. Neale, B.S., University College; J. F. W. Silk, King's College; H. G. Taylor, King's College.

BOURNEMOUTH.—On Sunday, the 3rd of December the Rev. Alfred Hood commenced the first of a series of Special Musical Services for the People. Although the weather was very unfavourable there was an attendance of over 100.

WALSALL.—The anniversary services of the Unitarian Free Church were held on Sunday week, the minister, the Rev. P. Dean, preaching both morning and evening. At the evening service the attendance was so large that some had to go away for want of seats. There was a suitable musical service of praise.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—The anniversary sermons for the Victoria-street Chapel were preached on the 10th inst. to good congregations by the Rev. H. Enfield Dowson, of Gee Cross. Collections amounting to about £16 were made on account of expenses in connection with the building fund. Mr. Dowson's services were very highly appreciated.

OXFORD.—The electors (the Heads of Colleges and Halls) have elected the Rev. W. Sanday, of Trinity College, to the Ireland Professorship, vacant by the resignation of Canon Liddon. Mr. Sanday, who is principal of Hatfield Hall, Durham, is well-known by his work on the "Authorship and Historical Character of the Fourth Gospel," and he has also published "Second Century Gospels; or Supernatural Religion."

BRISTON.—The annual meeting of the Brixton Branch of the Charity Organisation Society was held at the Gresham-hall, Brixton-road, on Thursday afternoon, Mr. W. H. Garrett, in the chair. A very satisfactory report was read by the Rev. E. Lockyer, secretary, showing a good amount of work done by the very energetic committee. Among those who took part in the proceedings were several of the local clergy, and our friends the Revs. J. Worthington, T. L. Marshall, and Mr. E. G. Ravenstein.

THE SUNDAY OPENING OF MUSEUMS.—A meeting of delegates from Working Men's Clubs and Societies in London, convened by the Workmen's Sunday Committee, was held on Monday last at the St. James's Minor Hall, to express the opinion of the working classes of the metropolis on the Sunday opening question, especially in reference to the speech of Mr. Broadhurst in the House of

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

COUGHS,
COLDS, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE, and the word CHLORODYNE coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness, and as being the same thing. Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD, STATED PUBLICLY IN COURT that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a LIQUID MEDICINE which ASSUAGES PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITH-OUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the NERVOUS SYSTEM when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

The GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "TWO DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC.

PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

From W. VESALIUS PETTIGREW, M.D., formerly Lecturer at St. George's Hospital, LONDON.

"I have no hesitation in stating that I have never met with any medicine so efficacious as an Anti-Spasmotic and Sedative. I have used it in Consumption, Asthma, Diarrhœa, and other diseases, and am perfectly satisfied with the results."

From W. C. WILKINSON, Esq. F.R.C.S., Spalding.

"I consider it invaluable in Phthisis and Spasmodic Cough; the benefit is very marked indeed."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

From Dr. B. J. BOULTON and Co., Horncastle.

"We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct Sedative and Anti-Spasmotic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other Sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after effects."

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

THE IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS.

N.B.—EVERY BOTTLE OF GENUINE CHLORODYNE BEARS on the GOVERNMENT STAMP the NAME of the INVENTOR.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

SOLD IN BOTTLES, rs. 1½d., 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., by all Chemists.

SOLE MANUFACTURER,

J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"W. L." next week.

"H. B."—We cannot afford space for so full a discussion of the Temperance question.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 17.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.

Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., JAMES GOW, Esq., M.A. Cantab., on "Socrates; the founder of Moral Philosophy."

BOURNEMOUTH.

Rev. ALFRED HOOD, at the Town Hall Buildings, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Arnold's (E.) Pearls of the Faith, or Islam's Rosary, 7/6

Benn's (A. W.) The Greek Philosophers, 2 Vols., 28/

Bovet's (F.) Egypt, Palestine, and Phenicia, trans. by W. H. Lyttelton, 9/

Bowler's (J.) Goblin Tales of Lancashire, 4/6

Essays in Philosophical Criticism, ed. by A. Seth and R. B. Haldane, with preface by E. Caird, 9/

Evolution (The) of Christianity, 12/

Gardiner's (B. M.) French Revolution, 1789-1795, 2/6

Gospel of the Secular Life, Sermons at Oxford, 5/

Hawthorne's (N.) Dr. Grimshawe's Secret, 6/

Jubilee Lectures of the Congregational Union, Vol. 1, 5/; Vol. 2, 4/

Martin's (E. M.) A Visit to the Holy Land, Syria, and Constantinople, 5/

Problems and Exercises in Political Economy, by A. Milnes, 4/6

Pitman's (E. R.) Central Africa, Japan, and Fiji, a Story of Missionary Enterprise and Triumph, 5/

Simcox's (G. A.) History of Latin Literature from Ennius to Boethius, 2 Vols., 32/

Skelton's (J.) Essays in History and Biography, 12/6

Swift (Jonathan), Life of, by H. Craik, 18/

Thom's (J. H.) Laws of Life after the Mind of Christ, Discourses, 7/6

Wentworth Papers (The), 1705-1739, by J. J. Cartwright, 21/

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

BIRTH.

RAYNER—On the 12th inst., at the County Asylum, Hanwell, the wife of H. Rayner, M.D. of a daughter.

DEATHS.

ATKINS—On the 6th inst., at Oxford-street, Leicester, George Beale Atkins, aged 47.

BAKER—On the 11th inst., at Skerton House, Old Trafford, aged 72 years, Helen Darbishire, wife of Alderman Thomas Baker, ex-Mayor of Manchester.

BOWRING—On the 13th inst., at his residence, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone, the Rev. Thos. Bowring, in his 81st year.

MARRIOTT—On the 8th inst., at her residence, The Grange, Hopton, near Mirfield, in her 84th year, Harriet, widow of the late William Marriott, of Wakefield.

NIAS—On the 12th inst., at Westmoreland-place, Bath, Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late William Nias, Esq., aged 83.

TAYLER—At Manchester, on the 6th inst., William Venning Tayler, third son of the late Rev. James Tayler, of Nottingham, aged 80 years.

VENNING—On the 9th inst., at his residence, Redland Hall, near Bristol, William Arthur Venning, Esq., aged 73.

New Edition, the Ninth Thousand, Revised and Enlarged,
100 pages, 8vo., price 1s., post free.

THOUGHTS ON THEISM,

WITH

SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN HARMONY WITH MODERN SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

"Dealing with religious progress and advance, it contains matter and suggestions which should be read especially by members of Assemblies and all interested in the foundations of religion."—GLASGOW HERALD.

Its pages are enriched with numerous extracts from the most eminent divines, metaphysicians, and scientists of modern times."—SHREWSBURY FREE PRESS.

London: TRAUBNER and Co., Ludgate-hill.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN
BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

NOW READY.

LAW OF LIFE AFTER THE MIND
OF CHRIST. By JOHN HAMILTON THOM. Crown
8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND CO.

CLARE STELLAR.

A New Novel in 2 vols. By Mrs. J. CALBRAITH LUNN, Author of "Only Eve," "The Masters of Claythorpe,"
&c., &c.

A Book for Girls.

REMINGTON AND CO., 134, New Bond-street, London, W.

PRIZE ESSAY, AWARDED FIFTY GUINEAS.

"THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGIN OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH."

Bound in cloth, post free for 2s. 6d., or 30 penny stamps.

Address, JOHN TOVE, Christian Life Office, 281, Strand,
London, W.C.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

NOTICE.—A CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE giving full particulars of Messrs. CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN & Co.'s PUBLICATIONS, ranging in price from

SIXPENCE TO TWENTY-FIVE GUINEAS, will be sent on request post free to any address. It will be found of the greatest convenience to those who may be selecting Books for CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GIFTS, BIRTHDAY PRESENTS, PRIZES, &c., as it contains particulars of SEVERAL HUNDRED BOOKS so arranged as to show at a glance the various works in this Valuable Selection, which can be procured at the prices named at all Booksellers' and at the Bookstalls. Request for Catalogue should be addressed to CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN AND CO., Ludgate-hill, London.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—Nothing is so highly appreciated as a case of GRANT'S MORELLA
CHERRY BRANDY, which can be ordered of any Wine
Merchant. Queen's quality, as supplied to Her Majesty, 42s. per dozen; Sportsman's special quality, 50s. per dozen.—Manufacturer, T. GRANT, Distillery, Maidstone.

EDWARD T. WHITFIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 178, STRAND, W.C.

E. T. WHITFIELD begs to inform his Friends and Customers that he now keeps a very large stock of GENERAL AND FANCY STATIONERY, and that he executes orders for every kind of Die-Sinking, Stamping, and Engraving. Parcels amounting to £1 sent Carriage Free.

Card Plate Engraved, and Fifty Cards with name only, Gentlemen's or Ladies' size, 2s. 6d.; Addresses, 9d. per line extra.

Five Quires of Note Paper and 100 Envelopes, stamped with Monogram or Lady's Name, 4s.

Rubber Stamps, both for marking Linen and for Business Purposes, at very low prices.

Christmas, New Year, and Birthday Cards, in great variety.

E. T. W. continues to supply UNITARIAN and all other Books, post-free, at the Publishers'
Prices, from One Shilling upwards.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts
opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge
the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL
RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office
the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE
HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.
ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.
ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.
ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,
THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING
AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or 8, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHARING-CROSS
LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

UNITARIAN CHURCH, AVONDALE-ROAD, PECKHAM (within ten minutes' walk of Peckham Rye Railway Station).

SPECIAL OPENING SERVICES will be held on SUNDAY, December 17, in the Morning at 11 o'clock, by the Rev. R. SPEARS; and in the Evening at 6.30, by the Rev. P. H. WICKSTED, M.A. Collections in aid of the Building Fund.

PRIVATE RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS of the LONDON UNIVERSITY, and other London Colleges, 119, Gower-street, W.C. (nearly opposite the University). Miss SUSAN WOOD, late Head Mistress of the Bath High School, and formerly of Cheltenham College, receives a limited number of ladies to board and study under her direction for the various examinations. For terms, apply till September 29, to Miss S. Wood, 25, Keppel-street, W.C.

References kindly permitted to Captain Douglas Gatten,
C.B., Member of the Council of University College;
C. J. Roundell, Esq., M.P., late Fellow of Merton College, Oxford; Charles Bloxam, Esq., Professor at King's College; Mrs. Albert Dacey, 7, Victoria-street, Westminster, and others.

BRENTWOOD, WORSLEY,
Near MANCHESTER.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Principal ... MRS. F. SHAWCROSS,
late of Brook House, Knutsford.—For prospectus, apply to the Principal, or to Messrs. J. GALT and Co., Manchester.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR
COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev.
HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

CLIFTON.—The Rev. W. HARGRAVE,
M.A. Lond., receives a limited number of BOYS to board and educate. Long experience in teaching;
special attention to delicate or backward boys.—Address,
8, Oakland-road, Redland, Bristol.

SWANSEA, Tremont House.—Miss HIG-GINSO and Miss SCHILD, of Hanover, diplômée, would be glad to receive a LADY BOARDER or a few RESIDENT PUPILS. Home comforts; mild climate.
Seven minutes' walk to the sands, and easy access by tram to the picturesque coast of the neighbourhood.

EDUCATION.—In a select School, where only a few resident Pupils are received, there will be TWO VACANCIES after Christmas. Thorough
English tuition, with preparation for all examinations.
Special advantages in German and French conversation.
The domestic arrangements are on a liberal and homelike scale, and the pupils receive the motherly care of the Principal (Unitarian).—L. Y., care of Mr. Wylie, Stationer, Acers lane, Brixton.

AN experienced TEACHER, holding the St.
Andrew's LL.A. Degree for Women, wishes to meet with a morning engagement. Subjects:—English, Music, French, German, and Elementary Latin.—Address, E. N., INQUIRER Office.

BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.—A Married Lady
(daughter of a late Unitarian Minister) receives Young Ladies to educate. Thorough English, French
(two resident French governesses), German (two resident German governesses); Latin and Mathematics (B.A.
Lond.); Music (piano, forte, violin, singing, harmony);
Drawing, Riding, &c. Experienced English nurse. House situated in best part of town. Highest references given and required. Terms:—above 14, 100 guineas; 10 to 14, 80 guineas; under 10, 60 guineas.—Address, Principal, 63, Boulevard Maricette.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APART-MENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabbe-ck, Lansdowne Lodge, the For Margate.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY
FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM,
AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand
W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER
MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday
December 16, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Reberent Free Thought

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2113.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

Peace at any Price ...	821
Renan's Autobiography.—III. ...	822
Christmas, 1882 ...	822
Free Religious Services in Cambridge ...	823

REVIEWS:—

The State in Relation to Labour ...	824
Lessons in Ethics; or, The Laws of Right Conduct ...	825
The Life of Jean Frederic Oberlin ...	825

CORRESPONDENCE:—

Forms of Worship ...	826
----------------------	-----

OCCASIONAL NOTES ...

828

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

Centenary of the Protestant Dissenting Ministers' Monthly Meeting ..	829
--	-----

THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—

Unitarian Religion ...	833
------------------------	-----

OBITUARY:—

Mr. Henry Long, of Knutsford ...	835
Tue Rev. Thomas Bowring... ..	835
The Rev. James Taplin	835

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the beginning of the New Year the price of the INQUIRER will be reduced from 5d. to 2d. weekly. See detailed notice in another column.

PEACE AT ANY PRICE.

THE compromise with which at last the protracted MACKONCHIE case has come to a close cannot be pronounced satisfactory by any who value consistency more than party and principle more than expediency. Is it not the fact that principle and consistency have been sacrificed for the sake of peace? The wearisome and costly litigation has ended in a surrender which is no surrender, but rather a substantial victory for the party of sacerdotal pretension in the Anglican Church. We wish to speak with the greatest respect of the late Archbishop, but we think the last public act of his life, considered in all its bearings, was a mistaken concession to one who had set all law and authority at defiance. Peace in the Church is precious no doubt, but there are interests more precious than peace, and this the late prelate seems to have overlooked. It is evident that he was very anxious, as he saw the close of his earthly life approaching, that the unseemly strife associated with Mr. MACKONCHIE should come to an end, and not descend as an unfortunate legacy to his successor. The letter with which the Primate opened the correspondence is most considerate and kind. It could not fail to touch the heart of any man who had a spark of feeling in him. He avows that the troubles and strifes within the Church have been much in his thoughts. He sees that anything which at this moment increases bitterness of feeling may do permanent mischief to the Church, while anything that tends to preserve peace now will make a satisfactory solution of their difficulties far easier. On this ground he urgently appeals to Mr. MACKONCHIE, and suggests to him, without wishing to dictate in any way, his course of action, whether, consistently with duty, he could see his way to withdraw voluntarily, by resignation of his benefice, from further conflict with the Courts. Mr. MACKONCHIE at once acknowledged the letter, but declined returning a definite answer until he had taken time to give the matter consideration. Ten days elapse, and then he gets another letter, urgently calling attention to the matter. This letter was written by Mr. DAVIDSON, the Primate's chaplain and son-in-law, unknown to the dying Archbishop. Mr. DAVIDSON believed that the matter was preying upon his mind and causing disquiet and anxiety to him at that trying time. Mr. MACKONCHIE replied, asking for a day or two's further delay before sending a final answer. On the evening of Nov. 23 he wrote again to say that the conclusion at which he had arrived was to acquiesce in the Primate's wish that he should resign his benefice. Now why this delay, adding needless anxiety and disquiet to one at the point of death? It was a question that must have been present to Mr. MACKONCHIE's mind many times during the sixteen years of unseemly conflict between himself and the Church Courts. The delay is all the more extraordinary from what he himself said to his congregation at a meeting announcing his resignation. "From the moment he read the Archbishop's first letter he saw that he could act in no other way than he had done. It did not seem to him possible to refuse the request of the Archbishop in such troubled times." Well, if he saw his way clear from the first, why did he not act according, and relieve the mind of his anxious correspondent instead of keeping the sick man—sick unto death—waiting for a fortnight? There seems a want of feeling in this matter on the part of the contumacious Ritualist. He seems more concerned about his own fancied rights and privileges than about the peace of the Church, or the Archbishop's peace of mind. Himself as vicar of St. Alban's as priest first, all other considerations second.

And now for the subsequent appointments. In his letter to the Primate Mr. MACKONCHIE expresses the hope that "I may depend upon your Grace's good offices with the Bishop of London, so that I may be licensed or instituted at once to whatever work in the diocese may offer itself to me." Accordingly his letter containing this request and one from the Archbishop were sent to the Bishop of London. On Dec. 1 Mr. MACKONCHIE formally resigned his benefice, and wrote to the Archbishop a letter to that effect, which the latter was too ill to read. On Dec. 6 the Rev. ROBERT SUCKLING, vicar of St. Peter's, London Docks, another Ritualist, was presented to St. Alban's, and on the next day instituted by the Bishop of London to the living. On the 9th Mr. MACKONCHIE was both presented and instituted to St. Peter's, the late charge of Mr. SUCKLING—so that these two "priests" simply change places. The cards are shuffled, and the next moment they turn up each in the other's place. The two men belong to the same party in the Church, and precisely the same ritual will be continued at St. Alban's and St. Peter's as before. Such is the lame and impotent conclusion to which the costly litigation of the Church Association has brought matters at last. A conflict which has been carried on, Mr. MACKONCHIE says, for sixteen years, ends at last in a drawn battle—no, for the advantage is clearly on the side of the Ritualists. And to increase the irony of the situation, to make the whole affair ludicrous, if that were possible—both the bishops, who have been the active movers in the business, are opposed to Ritualism, and have therefore concurred in appointments which both on the ground of principle would condemn. And it is all done for the sake of peace, with the conviction that what the Church needs most is peace within its own borders. If this is not peace at any price we think it would be difficult to say what is.

All this while the St. Alban's congregation had been kept in total ignorance of what was going on. When the whole matter was finally settled Mr. MACKONCHIE called together the members of his church and made an elaborate statement, reviewing what had taken place, read the whole correspondence, and making a long speech in justification of the course he had pursued. Evidently he saw plainly enough that the advantage rests with his own party in this strange business. It is the Church Association that is left nowhere at last—a result from which that Association will, we expect, prudently take warning in regard to the future. Towards the close of his address the vicar said, "There was one little matter he must tell them. The Bishop of London on instituting him made no sort or kind of stipulation whatever. But on the first day that he went to speak to Mr. LEE, the Bishop's secretary, the latter said to him, 'There's one thing that sticks in the Bishop's throat a little,' and on his asking, 'What is that?' the reply was, 'That picture.' Here Mr. MACKONCHIE pointed to the picture of the Blessed Virgin and the Infant Saviour which stands against the south side of the chancel arch. If not a fine work of art the picture beautifully represents the Incarnation; but he stated that if the Bishop did not like it he had no objection to take it away with him, and it would go. He hoped they would not miss that picture, and perhaps some day some one would give the Church a better one. He was going to a church where he would find everything he could wish to have, and they would have Mr. SUCKLING here, where he would find everything he could wish for, and so the two parishes would go on just the same, and at the same time the peace and prosperity and work of the Church would be greatly advanced." Such is the issue. The Church Association is checkmated, and Ritualism, at the hands of Anti-ritualist Bishops, has gained the day!

RENAN'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.—III.

THE authorities at St. Sulpice were not much surprised, it appears, at the step their sceptical pupil had felt it his duty to take. The most scholarly among them, M. LE HIR, who had, [we are told, absolute confidence in study, did not dissuade him from prosecuting his studies in Paris on independent ground, but even went so far as to draw up for him a scheme of the lectures it would be desirable for him to attend at the College of France and the School of Oriental Languages, while M. CARBON, the virtual Principal of the establishment, though pained at what had transpired, showed the utmost sympathy with regard to the difficulties our author was likely to encounter, and promised to do all in his power to help him. M. DUPANLOUP, too, one of his earlier masters, and unfortunately a future enemy, as the famous Bishop of ORLEANS, acted at this juncture with that "great and generous comprehension of things which constituted his superiority," and asking our author whether he had need of money, said his poor purse was at his disposal, and that he could only regret he had nothing better to offer him. All this may have sprung from the principle that incipient heresy should be tenderly treated in order that a cure may be speedily effected; anyhow, it is touching and beautiful, and has earned for the good fathers in question the eternal gratitude of their heretical pupil, whose name will live when others would otherwise be consigned to oblivion. With these kindly relations and a feeling of mutual good-will M. RENAN left the Seminary on the 6th of October, 1845, and took up his residence at an hotel in the immediate neighbourhood. Within a few days M. CARBON kept his word, and obtained for him an appointment under a M. GATRY at the Stanislas College, which his friend M. DUPANLOUP urged him to accept. But finding that his new duties involved or implied much from which he had wished to wholly escape in leaving St. Sulpice, and having no intellectual sympathy with the Principal of the College, his stay lasted only a fortnight. He thus broke away, he says, from the last bonds by which the Church sought to hold him.

Shortly afterwards he took a subordinate position in a pension or boarding school which formed a branch or appanage of the Lycée Henri Quatre. He entered this establishment on reciprocal terms. He had a little room for his private use, boarded with the pupils and worked only about two hours a day, which gave him, as he tells us, ample time for study, and was therefore just what he required. Apart from the terrible crisis through which he was passing in regard to matters of thought and duty, and the strangeness of his new relation to the world, this little pension would have been, he says, a veritable paradise for him. As it was, he felt terribly lonely. The universe seemed but a cold and barren desert. Since Christianity could not be accepted as true, all else appeared trivial, indifferent, scarcely worth attention. His life being thus broken in upon he experienced a sense of emptiness like that which follows a fever or a violent love affair. Catholicism had drawn an enchanted circle round his life; this he crossed, and the love and moral beauty that had prevailed therein were gone. The world seemed to have become commonplace, and poor in virtue. His own words are:—"Ce que je voyais me semblait une chute, une decadence; je me crus perdu dans une fourmillement de pygmées." What sceptics and ultra Protestants will think of these statements we are at a loss to conjecture; suffice it to say that they show how unjust it is to confound the moral bearing of Catholicism with its dogmatic pretensions. Meanwhile it was anxiety for his mother which intensified M. RENAN'S grief. Her letters lacerated his heart. She pictured his position as far worse than it was, and having reared him delicately, in spite of their poverty, she feared his health might give way under the comparative hardships involved in the change. She wrote, "How will you, whom a mere mouse would prevent from sleeping, bear such a life?" Her sorrow seems to have been very great for a time, but when she saw that the dear child of her love and imagination remained as full of filial tenderness as ever, she consoled herself, and said there were several ways of being a priest, and that nothing was changed in him but his dress. This, he adds, was certainly the truth. Worthy woman! The voice of nature spoke in her soul, but man has at times to disregard the wail of pain that even affection utters in order to obey the ringing excelsior cry which urges him to ascend higher and ever higher towards the mountain height of truth.

M. RENAN tells us that he was wholly ignorant of the ways of the world when he entered the establishment in question, where he remained for three and a-half years. Hence he made no effort to improve his position. The career he had entered upon was nearest that of an ecclesiastic, and this had determined his choice. His duties were of a humble order, and the position as a whole formed a striking contrast with the one he had enjoyed at St. Sulpice. Still the leisure he had for study and the approval of his conscience bore him up. Nor was this all. Another recompense was in store for him. This he found in the friendship of a senior pupil named BERTHELOT, who was eighteen years old, and who from his advanced studies and great success occupied an exceptional position in the establishment. Possessed even thus early with a spirit of philosophical inquiry, a love of hard work, and a passion for truth, which were destined, we are told, to make his name famous, his friendship proved of the greatest value to our author. Even after the former left the establishment, and went to live with his father, a Paris doctor, the two friends met almost every evening, and with "a feast of reason and a flow of soul" discussed questions ranging through the whole field of human knowledge. Their friendship consisted, M. RENAN tells us, in a kind of common fermentation of thought, which a remarkable conformity of intellectual organisation produced in them respecting the same objects, so much so that what they had both seen appeared thus beyond all questions. Their minds seem to have been analogous to the action of the two eyes when directed to the same object. As the two images in the brain give but one and the same perception, so independent inquiry led them to the same forms of truth. The result of their conversations was a complete abandonment of the miraculous in Christianity and of the special character of Revelation. The doubts each brought to the other were laid to rest, the shreds of Orthodoxy they had mutually retained were cast away for ever. In this friendship, which appears to have lasted with greater or less intimacy up to the present time, our author was not true to the teaching of his old masters, according to which special friendships are a loss and a robbery to the community. Still the spirit of that teaching seems to have remained with him to a large extent, for he adds:—"One of the ideas that I have most frequently had to combat is that friendship, as ordinarily understood, is an injustice, an error which only permits you to appreciate the virtues of one individual, and closes your eyes to the good qualities of other persons, perhaps more worthy of your sympathy. I say to myself sometimes, following out the ideas of my old masters, that friendship is an act of larceny towards society in general, and that in a superior world it can have no existence."

The extreme interest of these autobiographical sketches have led us beyond our anticipated limits, and we must reserve the remainder for a fourth and concluding article.

CHRISTMAS, 1882.

IF humanity has not been very obedient to all the Divine laws it has at any rate been very observant of one of them. There has been no need to repeat the command, "Increase and multiply and replenish the earth." We fear that men have, in that matter, a little overstepped the lines of necessity, and filled up vacancies rather faster than social convenience required. Our brethren in Europe and America have spread over the earth and settled, temporarily or permanently, here, there, and everywhere, and will be keeping this Christmas Day in various climes and in various modes. Some will be grouped round the hearth-stone imbibing warmth and cheerful influence from the flaming log or the sparkling coal; some will be basking in the sunny South, in beautiful orchards or in groves where "orange lamps in a green night" shine with a cheering splendour. Some that are old and ill will have a trying time of it under the shadows of age, infirmity, sickness, and sorrow; and some that are young and healthy will feel in their hearts a bursting forth of the blooms of joy, and "live merrily under the blossom that hangs on the bough." May the blessing of Heaven rest on each extreme and on every intermediate state of humanity! The years roll by so rapidly that it would almost seem as if old Father Time himself, urged by pressure of important business, were moving on with unusual eagerness and hurry. Scarcely has nature planted a rose on the cheek of fair infancy when puberty comes and takes it away, and soon afterwards age, with furrowing fingers of care. Scarcely have the hopes bloomed, the faculties put forth their energy, the affections kindled, and the spirit unfurled its wings, when there cometh a change which withers the blooming hopes, wears the active faculties, pains the sensitive affections and makes them yearn for the warm sympathies of Heaven as those on earth grow cold—a change which reminds the spirit that here there is a Dadalean weakness in its wings, and prompts it to pray for some uplifting power. Nevertheless, with all this light and shade, this blooming and withering, this oscillation between joy and sorrow, this rising and setting of the mental sun, the universe is moving on in quiet beauty; and when we that are old have reached that point of discernment and rested there in faith, let us on anniversaries like Christmas Day forget for a time, if we can, the anxieties of our lives, and give ourselves up to the traditional joyous influences of the season. Let the young have their dances round the holly and their kisses under the mistletoe bough. Let age feel that it is not forgotten or unloved by youth, and let youth feel that it is not frowned upon by age. Let there be ample cheer upon the board and bright lights against the walls. Let there be a little good, sound, sparkling wine for those who are not hurt by the moderate use of it; and if not the wine of the grape let there be at any rate the wine of the heart, the exhilarating affections that bead up to the lips and eyes, and flow over with beautiful smiles, or beautiful words, or beautiful looks of intelligence and love. Ben Jonson sang to a fair lady, "Drink to me only with thine eyes"; and we know of no more delicious drinking than that, provided the eyes have the light and tenderness of Heaven within them.

Seventy-one changeable years have passed over the form that stoops over these lines, and, to the writer, this is probably the last of Christmas Days. Nevertheless, in spite of increasing weakness of body and deepening shadows in the secular outlook of the world, he means to try and be cheerful in this festive season of the year. He hopes that even the "creature comforts" of hospitality will awaken some spiritual fancies and call forth some graceful feelings. Our very food may remind us of "the cattle on a thousand hills," the flocks in a thousand pastures, the birds of the air, the fishes of the sea, and of Him who created all and saw that all was good and adapted for earth and humanity. The varied fruits of the dessert, too, so rich in colour, so agreeable in flavour, might stimulate us to beautiful thoughts and fancies. The orange, the grape, the plum, the almond, and the nut might waft our thoughts away on "the wings of the morning" over the blue Mediterranean, the mountains of Italy, the Isles of Greece, the sunny Adriatic, and the vineyards of Portugal and Spain. And then, when all these material luxuries have been removed, might not memory and hope and yearning love provide us with another kind of feast for the heart and soul? Might we not hear with our minds' ears tones of love and tenderness and whispers of wisdom from lips that were silenced by death long years ago? Might we not hear the foot-fall of those messengers whose "feet, beautiful on the mountains," bore them along on the mission of bringing "glad tidings" to the world? Might we not catch an accent of that sweet voice which spoke so gently in the streets of Nazareth and the villages of Judea? Might we not recall some of the utterances of the mightiest minds of old, of all countries and of all times? Might we not catch a strain from the songs of sweet singers, from the splendours of great poets, from the unselfish deeds of great heroes, and from the quiet influence of that patient and persistent goodness which passed through life as gently, as noiselessly, and as beautifully as a wayside flower? And hope, too; may not that be as active as memory? We may look forward to higher developments and beneficent changes in humanity; to a gradual withering away of the weeds of mental life and a gradual substitution of the flowers; to the distant time when old things that are evil shall pass away, and when all shall become beautifully new. We think that a fine nature may pass through all these experiences on Christmas Day. It may eat and drink; it may romp and play; it may dance and sing; it may laugh and joke; it may tenderly remember and ardently hope; it may quietly muse and secretly pray. All these successive moods and activities in a healthy mind harmonise one with another. In the hope that something like all this, or something better, may be the experience of our readers this Christmas Day we close with the quaint benediction of the old carol, "God bless you, merry gentlemen!" E. A.

FREE RELIGIOUS SERVICES IN CAMBRIDGE.

The term just ended has been marked by the first attempt to hold public Unitarian services in this town since the collapse of the Free Christian Church, now two years and a half ago. In the interval two organisations have been at work, both deriving their origin from that Church—the Religious Conferences Committee and the Cambridge Unitarian Society.

The former, composed mainly of University men, with a few ladies and townspeople, professed "to be united by no form either of religious belief or of scepticism, the sole bond of union being the desire to promote reverent freedom of thought and speech on religious subjects, and mutual understanding and tolerance among persons of different opinions; also to arouse interest among Cambridge students and others in religious and moral questions, and so to contribute to the growth of an intelligent public opinion upon them." The conferences, held on Sunday mornings or afternoons, formed during six terms an interesting and rather conspicuous feature in university life. The quality of the papers read was fully maintained to the last, and it would be unfair to say that the original purpose was ever entirely lost sight of; but the tendency was certainly towards a treatment more literary than argumentative, and the keen interest at first displayed in the conflict of "isms" appeared to have exhausted itself without any very palpable results. The zeal of that particular generation of students was not transmitted to their successors, and the departure of the able and energetic chairman afforded the immediate occasion for dissolution. On the other hand, the Cambridge Unitarian Society, formed "for the cultivation of progressive Unitarian Christianity," and consisting mainly of townspeople, led an almost unnoticed existence down to the autumn of 1881. Then the British and Foreign Unitarian Association came to our aid. The lectures of Mr. Freckleton and Mr. Geldart in December of that year, and those of Mr. Wicksteed in March of 1882, organised at the joint expense of the central and of the local society, were well attended according to the standard of provincial Unitarianism, and the discussion which was in all cases invited was taken up with ability and in a friendly spirit by several University men. One of them at least, who had expected to find among Unitarians a disposition to slur over the most fundamental questions, professed himself very favourably impressed with the simplicity and directness of the answers he received. Both sets of lectures were expressly advertised as Unitarian. It was remarked at the time, and probably with truth, that a larger audience might have been attracted if the denominational title had been suppressed; but the promoters believed then, and still believe, that Unitarian is the most appropriate term to describe the conclusions to which the lectures were directed: that corporate action, and therefore a corporate name, is needed to give practical effect to these conclusions; that the best way to make the name understood and respected is to use it freely, and that large audiences are of little value unless they can be induced to listen with a sense that action of some sort is to depend upon their assent. In this case the immediate result was but small. It was not considered expedient to continue the lectures among the multifarious distractions of the May Term, but six persons gave their names as being willing to join any class for Biblical study that might be formed under Mr. Wicksteed in the ensuing October Term. At the same meeting at which this matter was discussed opinions were expressed by some of those present in favour of the renewal of regular services. It did not seem possible at the time to act upon this suggestion, but various circumstances occurring in the Vacation gave a more hopeful aspect to the situation, and the upshot is that services have been conducted by Mr. Ierson on eight out of the nine Sunday evenings of the term just ended, that Mr. Wicksteed has had a class during the five last Mondays of the term, and that it is intended to continue both the services and the class in the Lent Term. It may be worth mentioning that the best act of the Religious Conferences Committee before its dissolution was to congratulate the Unitarian Society on its renewed activity; but we are unable to add that any individual adhesions have followed this collective expression of goodwill.

The Public Hall in Jesus-lane, which has been taken for the services, is a very convenient one for a moderate sized congregation, and decidedly an improvement upon the old Reform clubroom in Green-street in point of appearance. It is much to be wished that it could be secured permanently for Unitarian purposes; but the means are not at present forthcoming. The subject of each sermon was always advertised, and an abstract of each appeared afterwards in the local papers. The drift of the whole series appeared to be to rest religion and morality on a broad basis of common experience and then to show how much more closely this method was followed in the actual teaching of Christ than in popular Christianity. The average attendance has been about forty, including generally about a dozen University students. The number of subscribers at the end of the term was eighteen. At a meeting held after the last of the services a strong desire for their continuance was expressed by all present, and much regret at the announcement that Mr. Ierson would be unable to continue them during the Lent Term, owing to his presence being required in London for the Bermondsey mission work. We are glad to learn that this difficulty has since been overcome. On the whole, the prospect, though not exactly brilliant, is far from hopeless, and the British and Foreign Unitarian Association has been wise in deciding not to let the movement drop. Uncertainty as to the intention to persevere has doubtless done much to prevent the waverers from joining us.

R. K. W.

LIVERPOOL.—The Rev. S. Fletcher Williams has recently delivered three lectures, the first at the Mechanics' Institute, Wootton (the Rev. Geo. Beaumont in the chair), on "William Caxton, the English Printer," reported at length in the Liverpool Mercury; the second at Hope-street Church Social Union, on "Charles Dickens," and the third at Renshaw-street Chapel Union, on "John Stuart Mill," reported in the Liverpool Mercury.

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.—The Governor-General of Canada has just been informed by despatch from the Secretary of State that the Queen will not be advised to exercise her power of disallowance in respect of the Act legalising marriage with a deceased wife's sister recently passed in that colony. This Act is consequently now in force, and, assuming the total area of Her Majesty's dominions to be, as estimated, 8,982,177 square miles, marriage with a deceased wife's sister is absolutely legal over an extent of 6,678,292 square miles of British territory, conditionally legal over 2,183,124 square miles, and still positively illegal over only 120,761 square miles.

THE SUNDAY EVENING ASSOCIATION.—On Saturday, December 16, the second annual meeting of this association was held at the Langham Hotel, the newly-elected president, Mr. G. J. Romanes, F.R.S., in the chair. The annual report was read by Mr. Edward Marsh Simpson, one of the hon. secretaries, and Mr. Godfrey Shaen, treasurer, read the balance sheet. These having been adopted, the President delivered his address. Mr. Romanes, in the course of his remarks, said there were three great questions which the philosophy of the present day was trying to answer, namely: What can we know? What ought we to do? What may we hope for? Fortunately most persons were fairly unanimous on the first two questions; but with regard to the third, the mental activity of the present day only seemed to leave the matter in greater perplexity than ever. He would at once admit that while religion, by which he meant creed, was a thing apart from conduct or morals, nevertheless there were circumstances in which the two blended or overlapped, and in this category he placed the observance of the Sabbath. Amid all the controversy which this question excited, there was one thing on which we had all agreed, viz., that Sunday must always be a day of rest. Indeed, a deep debt of gratitude was due to those creeds which had given us the Sunday. Proceeding to criticise the words of the commandment which enjoins abstinence from servile labour on the seventh day, Mr. Romanes maintained that the true interpretation of the text pointed more to rest than the performance of any religious ceremony. He quite admitted, however, that Sunday should be a day of prayers, though he strongly maintained that the views of the strict Sabbatarian were not warranted by anything found in Scripture. In conclusion, Mr. Romanes said:—"I think that all reasonably-minded persons must agree that it is only those who belong to the straightest sect of the Pharisees who can find anything to condemn in the aims and the methods of the Sunday Evening Association. Therefore I heartily hope this, the third year of its existence, may prove as useful as the first and second have been, and that it may long survive to bestow on others the benefits which it has already bestowed on us. At the close of the address, which was listened to with much interest, the meeting proceeded to the election of officers for the year, including Mr. Mark Judge, chairman of committee; Mr. Godfrey Shaen, treasurer; and Mr. T. L. Marshall and Mr. J. Goodacre Stafford, honorary secretaries. The committee intimated that arrangements were being made for a series of Sunday evening meetings at the Working Men's College in Great Ormond-street, commencing January 14.

Reviews.

The State in Relation to Labour. By Professor Stanley W. Jevons, M.A., LL.D. Macmillan and Co. 1882.

The grief which all who knew Professor Jevons experienced when the sad intelligence reached them of his premature decease will be intensified by the study of this volume. There is perhaps not much that is positively new in the volume, but there is certainly much that is true, and the truth is presented in such fashion that no thoughtful man can peruse the work without deriving abundant instruction from it. The book is remarkable for that simplicity of style, that comprehensive grasp and masterly grouping of facts, that lucidity of statement, and even for that delicate and refined humour, and that kindly sarcasm which make Mr. Jevons such a valuable and, at the same time, such an enjoyable teacher. The author sets out by frankly disclaiming any idea of being able to say anything new about Labour and Capital and the Legislation in relation to them. There is, he truly observes, an immense literature and a superabundance of facts upon the subject, and what seems now to be needed, and what Mr. Jevons makes a careful and, as we venture to think, a successful attempt to supply, is a statement of "the principles of legislation which emerge when we analyse the action of the Legislature with reference to the conflict of Labour and Capital and the regulation of industry." At a time like this, when attempts, possibly well meaning but certainly anachronistic, are being made to persuade us that free trade is a delusion; and when the State is being called upon to do more in the way of securing monopoly—is asked, in fact, to follow up its acquisition of the postal and telegraphic services, by the purchase of the railways and the nationalisation of the land, it will be generally admitted that Professor Jevons has rendered eminent service if in this volume he has succeeded in explaining the all-important point "why, in general, we uphold the rule of laissez faire, and yet in large classes of cases invoke the interference of local or central authorities." "This question," the author says, "involves the most delicate and complicated considerations, and the outcome of the inquiry is that we can lay down no hard and fast rules, but must treat every case in detail on its merits." Experience, he tells us, is the best guide; but he adds, "the real difficulty often consists in the interpretation of experience." The sagacious and judicial spirit in which Mr. Jevons has performed his task may be gathered from the following sentences, which contain a useful moral, that he who runs may read:—

"Concerning the functions and actions of trade societies I have not hesitated to express approval or blame in the freest way; but I think the time is come when all bitter terms, all class rancour, and all needless reference to former unfortunate occurrences should be laid aside. The economic errors of trade unions after all are not worse than those which pervaded the commercial, if not the governing classes a generation or two ago. One result which clearly emerges from a calm review is that all classes of society are trades unionists at least, and differ chiefly in the boldness, ability and secrecy with which they push their respective interests."

The work consists of eight chapters, in which are treated "Principles of Industrial Legislation," "Direct Interference of the State with Industry," "The Factory Acts and similar Legislation directly Affecting Labourers," "Indirect Interference with Industry—Trades Union Legislation," "The Law of Industrial Conspiracy," "Co-operation and Industrial Partnership," "Arbitration and Conciliation," and the whole matter is summed up in a few "concluding remarks."

The first chapter, in which the author treats of "Principles of Industrial Legislation," is probably the most interesting, as well as the most important in the work. The question arises how are we to distinguish between cases in which individuals should be left at liberty as being the best judges of their own interests, and those cases in which some kind of authority should interfere, in order to ensure or increase their welfare. If it be said that the individual workman should be left to take care of himself, we are met with the fact that he does not; and if it be said that the employer ought to take precautions against injury to his workmen, we are met with the same fact, he does not. There is one method alike, simple and effective, by which the question may be solved. "The law may command that dangerous machinery shall be fenced, and the executive government may appoint inspectors to go round and prosecute such owners as disobey the law." Common sense brushes metaphysics on one side, and adopts this method. Of course, in all such matters, whether affecting workmen or employers, the question presents itself whether, in deference to the principles of liberty, the State ought to interfere. Professor Jevons boldly faces this question, and plainly says:—"If my study of this subject has led to any true results, the first step must be to rid our minds of the idea that there are any such things in social matters as abstract rights, absolute principles, indefeasible laws, inalterable rules, or anything whatever of an eternal and inflexible nature." That may be called clearing the ground. Guarding himself from misapprehension, however, the Professor follows up this sentence by another—one which will be particularly gratifying to that rather large class of people who are so nervously anxious to have the testimony of great minds in regard to the validity of religious faith, and clutch at every expression which favours that validity as eagerly as drowning men clutch at straws. "We deal here, it should be observed," the Professor proceeds, only with a lower class of relations, and have nothing directly to do with those higher questions of ethical science, of moral obligation, of conscience, of religious conviction, in which we may rightly seek a firmer basis." But with regard to social matters every man enjoys the privilege, "in England at least"—note the cautious reservation—"of endeavouring to persuade other people that the law is mistaken." For law has nothing to do with conscience, nor religion, nor even with moral right and wrong, "as estimated by individuals," knows nothing of absolute principles, and is in fact nothing but "a series of arbitrary rules, accumulated or varied from century to century, defining the terms on which people may best live in each other's society. It is a system of adjustments and compromises, founded upon experience and trial." It might be thought that a man could buy and sell as he pleases, but yet law has stepped in, e.g., the Truck Act. Yet the law does not interfere with agricultural labourers or domestic servants. It might be thought that a man had no absolute right to his own property; taxation proves he has not; even a man's property in his own labour has never been absolute. So the first step in social philosophy, or rather in practical legislation, is to throw aside all supposed absolute rights or inflexible principles, for legislation is not a science—"It is a matter of practical work, creating human institutions." Hence "no social transformation would be too great to be commended and attempted if only it could be clearly shown to lead to the greater happiness of the community. . . . No laws, no customs, no rights of property are so sacred that they may not be made way with, if it can be clearly shown that they stand in the way of the greater happiness." Of course, a heavy burden of proof rests upon those who advocate great changes; but Mr. Jevons unhesitatingly says that the State is justified in passing any law or in doing any single act which adds to the sum total of happiness, and this without regard to the liberty of the individual, for, after all, that liberty is only the means towards an end, and not the ending. It will be gathered from all this that Mr. Jevons maintains that the principle of industrial legislation should be that of all other, viz., what may be termed the principle of the highest expediency; and no one will question, probably, that it necessarily follows that the method of legislation should be experimental or Baconian.

The subsequent chapters are simply illustrations of the first—or rather, the application of the principles enunciated to practice. They are highly interesting, and serve to guide us along the thorny path of practical politics, as well as to throw light upon many disputed questions. For example, in regard to the employment of women Mr. Jevons advances excellent reasons why he thinks in accordance with the principles of legislation laid down in his first chapter that still, more stringent restrictive legislation is desirable as regards women. He says, "It has long, indeed, been one of the most frequent and urgent proposals of trade unionists that married women should be 'taken out of the mills.' The so-called labour advocates are often a great deal nearer the truth than the general public believe. But then, unfortunately, they give reasons for their opinions, and these reasons will not always bear examination. Thus, in favour of the summary exclusion of married women, it is argued that the market is over-stocked, and that if married women were taken out the operatives would realise a great social and domestic benefit, whilst 'much of the overplus labour would be reduced.' This, however, is obviously bad political economy. We cannot possibly increase the welfare of the people by lessening labour, the source of wealth." And Mr. Jevons goes on to show that the true justification for restricting the labours of married women is that it is the first duty of a mother to give proper sustenance to her infant; and that in any case the interests of a future generation may not be sacrificed to the apparent good of the present.

Proceeding to deal with Trades Union Legislation, our author speaks some salutary truths, especially in reference to his economics of the Labour question and the theory of wages, the good and evil of strikes, the failure of the Combination Laws. The chapter upon the Law of Industrial Conspiracy is an especially interesting one. The author carefully points out how needful it is to bear in mind that the more delicate and elaborate arrangements of modern society have caused a change in the bearing of social dangers—so much so, indeed, that he does not hesitate to say that a great strike, if carried sufficiently far, might assume the character of social treason. He holds, consequently, that the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act of 1875 was drawn upon the proper lines. Indeed, Prof. Jevons goes still further, and maintains that there should be some legal authority capable in the last resort of obliging citizens to perform certain duties which, upon an emergency, might be essential to the life of the nation. Of course it is impossible, within the limits of a review of this character, to deal exhaustively with a work of the kind now before us. The subject of which it treats is, as our author observes, one in which we need, above all things, discrimination.

"Restrictions on industry are not good nor bad per se, but according as they are imposed wisely and with good intentions, or foolishly, and with sinister intentions. Prima facie, indeed, restriction is bad, because Providence is wiser than the legislator—that is to say, the action of the natural forces of evolution will ensure welfare better than the ill-considered laws of the prejudiced and unskillful legislator. But Reason is a Divine gift, and where upon grounds of clear experience interpreted by logical reasoning we can see our way to a definite improvement in some class of people without injuring others, we are under the obligation of endeavouring to promote that improvement. The greater part of the interference of trade societies is objectionable, because, though directed toward the welfare of a part, it is directed against the welfare of the rest of the community. All other industrial problems must be solved by similar careful estimation of the total utilitarian results."

The concluding paragraphs of the volume contain a lesson which is so eminently desirable that we should all learn in these distracted times that we hesitate not to transcribe them:—

"If such be a true view of the case it is clear that there can be no royal road to legislation in such matters. We cannot expect to agree in our utilitarian estimates, at least without much debate. We must agree to differ, and though we are bound to argue fearlessly, it should be with the consciousness that there is room for wide and bona fide difference of opinion. We must consent to advance cautiously, step by step, feeling our way, adopting no foregone conclusions, trusting no single science, expecting no infallible guide. We must neither maximise the functions of government at the back of quasi military officials, nor minimise them according to the theories of the very best philosophers. We must learn to judge each case upon its merits, interpreting with painful care all experience which can be brought to bear upon the matter.

"Moreover, we must remember that, do what we will, we are not to expect approach to perfection in social affairs. We must recognise the fact clearly that we have to deal with complex aggregates of people and institutions which we cannot usually dissect and treat piecemeal. We must often take 'all in all, or not at all.' Tolerance therefore is indispensable. We may be obliged to bear with evil for a time that we may avoid a worse evil, or that we may not extinguish the beginning of good. In the end we shall not be disappointed if our efforts are really directed towards that good of the people which was long ago pronounced to be the highest law."

We have permitted Mr. Jevons to speak for himself thus fully, from a desire as much to show how great a loss we have sustained as to indicate his particular views upon the question treated in this book. Professor Jevons was probably the least dogmatic of modern philosophers; on the other hand, he was not lacking in clear and decided opinions. In a word, his was the type of mind pre-eminently required in a time of transition such as the present undoubtedly is. Retaining a firm hold of whatever was capable of being firmly held, he yet "without one thought of fear, but very much of hope," looked fearlessly forward. The great questions of the Land and Labour which are pressing for consideration call for the service of cautious and clear intellects, and we venture to think that few intelligent readers will rise from the perusal of this latest of Professor Jevons's published works without feeling that if it had been possible for him to treat of these great questions, as he has dealt with this branch of them, their solution would have been wonderfully facilitated. However, there is one resource still left. Those who would wish to prepare themselves for an intelligent consideration of the larger questions of Land and Labour, and assist legislation in regard to them, should study with great care this little work. H. R.

Lessons in Ethics; or, the Laws of Right Conduct. Part I: Rights and Duties. By Kate Gannett Wells. Boston (U.S.) Unitarian Sunday School Society, 1882. Pp. 48.

It might not have been expected that Unitarians, who have been so zealous for doctrine that for its sake they left other Churches, exposed themselves to severe legal penalties, and (when these were repealed) to social obloquy, would be prominent in their zeal for morality. Yet, as a matter of fact, we have laid (in word at least) so much stress on a good life that we have been stigmatised as "mere moralists." Our essential doctrine is, however, closely connected with righteousness. Christ declared that the commandment—to love our neighbours as ourselves (which is the fulfilling of the law)—is like unto that which enjoins love to the Lord our God, who is ONE. The sacred books of the monotheistic Jews abound in precepts of morality; and the Mahomedans have a higher standard of duty than the worshippers of "Lords many, and Gods many." The sermons most frequently heard in our chapels have been described as "moral essays;" and moral philosophy has been the favourite study of many of our divines. Some who have left our communion have borne testimony to the excellent moral training in many of our families and schools. There are valuable works which aim to carry out into the details of modern life the golden rule of Christ; yet it seems to us that more pains have been taken to discuss and elucidate doctrinal than moral questions; and that the young have been too frequently left to pick up such notions of right as the law of the land, or the unwritten law of their little world—in society or the home—may impart.

The American Unitarian Sunday School Society has resolved to supply this deficiency, and has appointed a committee to prepare a series of manuals on ethics, viz., (1) Rights and Duties; (2) Virtues and Vices; (3) The Conscience; (4) Social and Public Duties; (5) The Will and the Emotions." They are assigned to different writers, but will be revised by other members of the Committee. The first of the series is written by Mrs. Wells, the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Gannett, who inherits his ardour for all that can promote well-being, and has a high place among the able and thoughtful philanthropists of Boston. She had previously prepared for the Western Sunday School Society a series of twelve lessons for younger children, entitled "Corner-stones of Character." This manual contains twelve lessons: "Rights, Claims, Mutual Help, Ought, Rights of Parent and Child, Rights of Brothers and Sisters, Rights of Children and Servants, Rights of Teacher and Scholar, Rights of Friend and Companion, Right to Work and Pleasure, Right to Self-Improvement, The Need of Self-Sacrifice, Right to choose 'The Best.'" Each lesson is divided into paragraphs, e.g.:—"Lesson II., Claims. Right Claims.—What are they? Wrong Claims.—What are they? Source of Wrong Claims.—Why are they made? Mutual Claims.—Are yours the only ones that are allowable? Satisfaction in getting one's Claims.—Is it sure? Conflict in getting one's Claims.—Is it inevitable? Refusal to submit to Claims.—What is its source? Imposition, a source of some Claims.—What does the child mean by the word? Rightful Authority, a Source of Other Claims.—What is the reason for exercising it? The true Source of the Child's Claims.—What is the chief reason the child can make them?"

Each lesson is intended as a basis for conversation; the topic is to be stated to the class, and the scholars are to be invited to say what they think upon it before the teacher makes use of the illustrative paragraphs, which are of a very familiar character, e.g.:—

"Source of Wrong Claims. Why are they made? Are not children sometimes proud, selfish, hard-hearted, or angry? John thinks he is smart, and so people ought to wait on him. Susie wants everything for herself. Joe does not mind hurting people's feelings, if he can only have what he likes. Bessie gets angry about trifles, and is so excited that she does not see that she is insisting upon other people doing as she says" (p. 13).

The American Sunday-schools differ from ours. They were established—not as ours originally; were for those outside the congregation; but for the families which compose it. They comprise children of various social grades, all of whom, however, would probably be in better circumstances than the majority of our scholars; thus one of the chapters relates to the rights of children and servants; though there are also references to the homes where the boys clean the boots, fill the "coal-hods," &c., and the girls help in the house-work. These lessons contain such amusing pictures of child-life, with occasional American peculiarities, that we have found them very entertaining as well as instructive. It is evident that the writer "well understands the ins-and-outs of the child's conscience."

Mrs. Bray's "Elements of Morality in easy lessons, for home and school teaching," recently published by our Sunday School Association, has been very highly commended in our columns. It is an excellent little work, which need not give much trouble to the teacher, who reads the lessons with the class, and is supplied with questions to put to them; while this manual ought to be thoroughly mastered by the teacher who shall make it the basis of oral instruction; it will also make a greater demand on the thoughtfulness of the scholar. We cordially recommend the "Lessons in Ethics" to parents as well as to teachers who wish to train the young to act upon principle, and to have as much sound knowledge of their rights and duties as they usually have respecting matters of comparative insignificance! R. L. C.

The Life of Jean Frederic Oberlin. Pastor of the Ban de la Roche. By Mrs. Josephine E. Butler. London: The Religious Tract Society. 1882.

More than half a-century has passed since the death of Oberlin. He died in 1826, after a ministry of nearly sixty years, in the "Rock Valleys," near Strasbourg. He reclaimed a district from barbarism to Christian civilisation, and was widely known as a public benefactor. In 1795, the National Convention voted to inscribe a record of his labours in their Transactions; and, in 1819, King Louis, to mark the services he had rendered to the State, made him a Knight of the Legion of Honour. Many memoirs of him have appeared in England. (In 1838 our Christian Tract Society published a brief narrative of his life, and that of Neff, 'The Mountain Pastors.') His fame extended to America. In 1834 most of the students of the Presbyterian College in Ohio withdrew, because they were forbidden to discuss slavery. Forty of them founded a new institution, which they called "Oberlin," in honour of that ardent friend of freedom; they underwent great toil and privations, that they might carry out the precepts of the gospel. That College has had, and still has, an honourable record. It was the first in which persons of all complexions and of both sexes studied together. When P. P. Carpenter set up a printing-press for his work among the poor, he remembered that Oberlin had done the same, and he called it "The Oberlin Press."

Another generation has arisen, to whom Oberlin seems but a name. We are very glad therefore that Mrs. Butler has prepared this little book, which is illustrated by pictures of Oberlin, of his home, and his last resting-place, and a map of the "Ban de la Roche." Her memoirs of her father—"John Gray of Dilston," and of "Catherine of Sienna," have established her reputation as a biographer; and she gives an interesting account of a visit which she recently paid to the scene of Oberlin's labours.

Often as we have read memoirs of this good man, we have greatly enjoyed reviving our remembrance of him. Though the pastor of Protestant Churches, he loved to regard himself as a Catholic Christian. Romanists and Lutherans, Jews and Infidels, alike shared his loving-kindness; he took pleasure in discerning good in them all; and he refused to believe that his love was wider than that of his Heavenly Father. He raised, cheered, and ennobled all who came within his influence. He had remarkable tact and skill in improving the condition of the people. Heroic courage and the truest manliness were combined in him with good humour and true Christian humility. Like his Master, he was one who served; and the glad tidings which he proclaimed by word and by life have not ceased to bless. R. L. C.

DUDLEY.—We are glad to learn that the Rev. Matthew Gibson, in response to a numerous signed requisition of his congregation, has consented to withdraw the resignation announced a short time ago, and to remain minister of this place.

THE BISHOP OF DURHAM.—On Saturday last the Bishop of Durham delivered the second portion of his charge to the clergy of the archdeaconry of Auckland. In the course of his address he said the most important recent Act of the Legislature affecting the Church had been the Burials Act of 1880. His vote was given in favour of the measure, and he had seen no cause to regret it. It seemed to him to be a wise and generous concession to a widespread sentiment which deserved to be treated with all respect. It would have been highly perilous to the health of the Church to have kept open that running sore any longer. Referring to the Salvation Army, the Bishop said it had many valuable lessons to teach them if they would only consent to learn them. Its successes could not be denied. Its efforts spoke for themselves. If it had done nothing else, it would have achieved a notable triumph in reclaiming so many thousands of drunkards in the name of Christ. His lordship glanced at the lessons to be learned from the aims and methods of the army, and said that those lessons are neither few nor unimportant. His sympathies were altogether in favour of maintaining friendly relations with the members of the Salvation Army. The Salvation Army repudiated the idea of setting up a church or a sect, but that repudiation was more theoretical than real. He thought, however, it was fast degenerating into a sect.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Gold only in Packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS & Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London." Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

Correspondence.

FORMS OF WORSHIP.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—From time to time in your columns there have appeared articles and letters on the subject of liturgies and forms of worship, a subject in which I take the deepest interest, and upon which if you do not think it exhausted I should like to be permitted to say a few words. I think it will be admitted that the success of our churches largely depends upon the adoption of the best kind of service, for numbers who are drawn into them by our teachings must be affected favourably or otherwise by the mode of worship, which it seems to me is in some cases out of harmony with our principles and beliefs.

A religious service should be such as to quicken into activity the highest emotions in man—worship should be spiritual—that is intelligent, solemn, joyful. The opposite to true worship, therefore, is that which is unintelligent—consisting of more or less meaningless repetitions—or which is mechanical—where repetition has become so much a matter of habit that it is accomplished without emotion, without seriousness or joy. I cannot help thinking that the ordinary use of a liturgy is likely to have this effect upon a congregation. "All repetition is anti-spiritual," as Emerson said; to say the same things day by day or Sunday after Sunday is sure to send the soul to sleep when the hour returns for saying them. This is a general effect, and applies to all liturgical services, but to some more than others. I should like to offer a few remarks on one or two kinds used in our churches.

In the first place, we must remember that liturgies have two sides—the ministerial and the congregational—and the use of a liturgy determines not only what prayers a minister shall offer, but, to some extent, what phrases a congregation shall use, what psalms they shall sing, what responses make.

Take the "Revised Common Prayer," which is used in many Unitarian Churches. Why, as a member of a congregation should I have to sing every Sunday morning a psalm commemorating the ancient temptation in the wilderness, or the unfulfilled prophetic chant of a good old man? or why, every Sunday evening should we say, "Let us sing unto the Lord a new song," when we are never permitted to do so; or why, in no immediate anticipation of death, should men, women and children sing—"Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace"? I do not speak of these venerable hymns with any want of respect; I only wish to call attention to the inappropriateness of their constant use in our churches. On the same part of the subject more might be said with regard to the use of the Psalms for the day, in which there are continual references to circumstances long forgotten, to forms of thought long dead, to ancient events in which we can have no possible interest; yet an interest we are forced to pretend to have, and the harm we suffer is immense.

When we come to the prayers the subject is more solemn, and the consequences are still more serious. The preparation is great, a time is set apart, a building made ready, we meet from distant places, a devout and scholarly man is found to lead our thoughts to the highest regions—and what is done? He is only permitted to read some stereotyped forms of prayer made centuries ago by men who, however good, had no conception of our hopes, and fears, and needs; and let us revise and emendate these compositions as we may, we can never bring them into harmony with our modes of thought, our ideas of God, or our sympathies with man. The men who made these prayers lived on another plane than ours; religiously they were permeated with ideas of mediation and sacrifice, with thoughts of a second advent and of everlasting damnation. If these are not referred to in every prayer, every prayer was written with these in the background, and how can they be the means of lifting our spirits upward to whom these things have become nothing? But, again; socially the writers of these prayers were governed by ideas with which we have no sympathy. King and Constitution, Church and State are always in the foreground; man as man, the human spirit with its deep needs and its awful destinies, impressed them not as it does us today, and how could they give voice to our deep yearnings?

It may fairly be said that most of these objections apply only to this particular liturgy, but that a liturgy is or might be prepared to fit in with our own views and sympathies; and some of the "Ten Services" might be referred to as an illustration of this. I confess I never join in the use of some of those services without a real elevation of mind and joyfulness of spirit, but even that I fear would be dulled by a constant use of the same service. The repetition itself is the source of the loss I grieve over. What is essential to keep the soul awake is freshness, and for freshness change is necessary; at the bottom of it all is freedom. A minister should be free to choose such prayers as the spirit of the time should prompt. A glorious devotional literature is on every minister's shelves; why should he not be permitted to select such prayers and aspirations as seem to him best fitted as a channel for his peoples' thoughts, and such as should give his people thoughts they would not of themselves attain? And to these he might add, as many do, prayers of his own composition, which should be the very echo of his people's hearts.

For the part of the congregation there are hymns and canticles and anthems almost infinite in number and variety, which have been only too little drawn upon by us. To the devout, tender, appropriate prayer of the minister should be added the music of the congregation; but it should be music joined to words, both of which should be fitted to express the highest feelings of which we are susceptible. We have lived to see so-called sacred music degraded to the very lowest depths possible, and jingling tunes sung to the veriest doggerel are only too popular. The inherent dignity of our faith and the culture of our ministers and congregations have rendered such a thing impossible to us, yet we hardly rise to the greatness of our opportunities. Beside the ordinary hymns, of which we have many exceptionally beautiful, we have generally only chanted psalms, and the chant is the most mechanical and least artistic of musical forms. Surely with such a lofty creed as ours our churches should sometimes ring with stately anthems.

I hope the importance and interest of the subject will be some excuse for the length of this letter.

Dec. 11.

W. L.

THE HARLOW BURIAL CASE.—The Home Secretary has transmitted to the Rev. F. Edwards, of Harlow, the communication which he has received from the Bishop of St. Albans relative to the action of the Rev. C. E. Taunton, of St. John's, Harlow, who lately obstructed a Nonconformist funeral by having the churchyard gates closed and compelling the procession to enter by another gate, made for the purpose. The Bishop says that, immediately on hearing what had happened, he wrote to Mr. Edwards, the Nonconformist minister, from whom he had received a letter on the subject. "I most deeply lament the circumstances therein described, especially the refusal to allow the funeral procession to enter by the ordinary entrance, and the position of the grave in the churchyard. I shall express to Mr. Taunton my utter disapproval of these proceedings, and I beg you and the relatives of the deceased to accept my sympathy with them under the painful circumstances which attended this burial. I am greatly concerned that such a proceeding should have taken place in my diocese. I believe that such funerals have been hitherto conducted orderly and peacefully." To the clergyman the Bishop wrote:—"If the account is true—and there seems no reason to doubt its substantial accuracy—you have attempted to evade the law in a manner hitherto unheard of, and, in my opinion, you have outraged all pious Christian feeling." In sending these letters, Mr. Godfrey Lushington writes:—"I am to express the confidence of the Secretary of State that the severe and well-merited rebuke administered by the Bishop to the Rev. C. E. Taunton will have the effect of preventing, for the future, similar attempts to evade the law, which are equally an outrage on civil rights and Christian charity." Nothing has yet transpired to show in what spirit the offending clergyman has received these rebukes, nor whether he admits the illegality of his proceedings, and will refrain from repeating them on a future occasion.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY AND THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY.

On Dec. 10 Mr. Voysey prefaced the delivery of a sermon, "Against Everlasting Hell"—being the sermon verbatim as preached at St. Mark's, Whitechapel, Dec. 7, 1862—with the following interesting remarks:—

I shall depart from the usual order of our service this morning by saying a few words of my own instead of reading a Second Lesson.

The death of Archibald Campbell Tait, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, on Sunday morning last, has deprived our country and our National Church of one who was to both a loyal servant and faithful friend. Excusable as it would be for me to dilate on his rare qualities of mind and temper, and to recount the list of his public services in the interests—I speak advisedly—of truth, of liberty, and of charity, it is not for these that I ask your attention to-day, but for one memorable exercise of his episcopal functions which few are aware of besides myself, and which, if I do not mention it, is likely never to reach the public ear, but to fall into oblivion. Nor should I feel justified in mentioning this merely on personal grounds—whether to eulogise a memory which will ever be dear to myself, or to bring forward any private incident in my own life. But the matter of which I would speak is a revelation of a vast change which has come over the spirit of many of the rulers of our Church; it is a most welcome sign of a coming reformation, which is as inevitable as it is longed-for; and I feel sure when I have told my simple tale my hearers will be glad that such an incident in the late Archbishop's life has been made public.

It was on this second Sunday in Advent exactly twenty years ago that I preached in my parish church of St. Mark's, Whitechapel, a sermon, the purpose of which was to assail and overthrow the dogma of an everlasting hell. On returning to the vestry my incumbent, evidently much excited, said that he agreed with all I had said, but that it was not a sermon which he would like to have preached himself. I thought and heard no more about it till a few days after, when my vicar told me he was very sorry, but that I must leave the curacy that day three months. He regretted it deeply, but the truth was that one of the wealthier parishioners had come to him and said that if he did not get rid of Mr. Voysey he would not attend the church again or support the parochial institutions. My vicar had no alternative. To explain fully what is to follow I must tell you that this dismissal was to me and mine almost a sentence of death. I had been hunted about from one parish to another, always on the ground of heresy, and at last having found a resting-place through Dean Stanley's introduction to one of the kindest and most broad of all possible clergymen, I believed myself to be safe from further molestation; so when the sentence came it was natural that my heart sank within me. Still a chance remained, I thought. Not above six weeks had passed since I had listened to the Bishop of London's charge (from which I have just read you some extracts), with a thrill of delight and new-born hope, and I resolved to appeal to him as my bishop. I sent the sermon to his lordship, and told him the penalty which it had brought down upon my head. He sent for me at once, and then and there carried into action that beautiful and tender advice which he had so lately given to his clergy in St. Paul's Cathedral. He never upbraided me in the least. He admitted that my sermon was true, but that in parts he thought it was needlessly "offensive" or "vigorous." I forget now the exact term. But I am quite certain that the only objection to it at all was to my mode of stating my belief. In the sweetest way he invited my confidence, and soon got easily to the very bottom of my heart. I kept nothing back; I told him all. Still not a word of censure or pharisaical horror at my heresies. He was all patience and kindness. During the two or three hours I was with him the bishop asked me if I could mention any religious book with which I entirely agreed, and which exactly expressed my own religious convictions. I hesitated some moments and then deliberately said "No." I did not know of one such book, but the book of all others that came nearest to my mind and which I agreed with most was Francis W. Newman's "Theism," from which I have so often read to you. (Miss Cobbe had not written on theology, nor had I seen anything then of Theodore Parker's.) His lordship rose and took down from the shelf of his library this very book of Francis Newman's, and we had a long and delightful talk over it; I 'pointing out the chapters I liked best and he reading them, or portions of them. One of these I remember was the celebrated chapter on "The Future of the Wicked;" you all recollect the passage beginning "Never let me believe a frightful dream, deadly to piety," &c. Still not a word of reproach. Yet it would be wrong and ungenerous to infer from all this that he was not orthodox. I believe he remained a Christian to his dying day, but I do not think he believed in everlasting hell. And I am sure that although he was a Christian and believed in Jesus as a God, he was neither blind, nor indifferent, nor unsympathising towards me, in a religious point of view, because I only believed in one God. He was quite sure of that, and that made common ground between us.

The long interview came to an end with his affectionate blessing, and I had almost forgotten my errand thither, since not a word had been said of his help to reinstate me or to rescue me from the ruin staring me in the face.

But as I passed out at the door, his chaplain, the Hon. and Rev. W. H. Fremantle, met me, and with a most cordial greeting, said, "It's all right, Voysey, the Bishop will take care of you; here is the address of a very good man who wants a curate, and you may refer him to us." I rushed home and wrote to the new clergyman as directed; but I could not outrun the bishop and his chaplain. They had written on my behalf before I was able to write on my own; and, after all, I did get another curacy in the diocese of London, where I stayed and worked most happily till I removed to Healaugh. On leaving London I was again indebted to the good, kind Bishop Tait for most favourable commendation to the Archbishop of York.

We never met again till the memorable 10th November, 1870, when I stood before him—now Archbishop of Canterbury—and the other lords of the Privy Council, to appeal against the sentence of deprivation which had issued from the Consistory Court of York. Then once more though he was my judge he came to my side and tried in vain to help me to better my cause. He seized every opportunity of putting a mild construction upon my words, and asking me if such and such was not my meaning; and I feel as if I could see now before me his look of eager hope fade away into sadness and disappointment when in obedience to my conscience I could only reaffirm the incriminated passages in their original and literal sense.

My last interview with the noble friend I loved so much, and to whom I was so much indebted, was at the great meeting in the Chapter House at Westminster Abbey on the death of Dean Stanley. When all was over and we were standing to go, the archbishop fixed his kind and benignant eye upon me inviting me to come to him, and advanced towards me with open hand in the presence of many of the most illustrious people of this realm. This, be it noted, after my ten years' work as a Theist, outside the pale even of Christendom. That was the kind of Christian gentleman that he was; and if all had been like him we should not have heard or said so much against the Christian creed.

This morning I will deliver to you verbatim the sermon to which I have here alluded; for without hearing it, all the point of these remarks will be lost. Antiquated and obsolete phrases in it will perhaps try your patience or excite your opposition; most of all, perhaps, its unusual length. I only ask you to remember the significant facts that twenty years ago, when this sermon was first delivered, the only clerical attempt at heresy on the subject of everlasting hell was that of Maurice, who tried to get rid of it by putting a new and non-natural meaning on the word aitonios, that the "Essays and Reviews" had not been prosecuted, therefore Lord Westbury's famous judgment on this point had not been pronounced. Therefore, both for myself and for the late Archbishop of Canterbury, sympathy on this vital question so long ago speaks volumes, and gives large promise of still further reformation of the orthodox beliefs.

LITERARY UNITARIANS IN AMERICA.

The Rev. W. R. Alger, a well-known Unitarian preacher, formerly of Boston, but more recently of this city, has retired from the pulpit to devote his attention hereafter to literary pursuits, for which he has rare qualifications. In referring to his retirement, one of the secular papers calls attention to the number of Unitarian ministers who have withdrawn from the pulpit for the same purpose. Its list is by no means full, though it is suggestive. The Unitarian movement had a scholarly origin. From the beginning it has been marked by a striking tendency to literature. So many Unitarian ministers have written books of some kind that it is almost taken for granted that to be a Unitarian preacher is to be an author. On one occasion, not long since, a gentleman was introduced to a company as a Unitarian clergyman, whereupon a lady asked him what books he had written. The gravitation of the ministers of that denomination to literature began very early. George Bancroft studied theology, and preached a few times before starting the famous Round Hill School, and beginning the great history with which his name is identified. Edward Everett succeeded the gifted Buckminster as pastor of the old Brattle-square Church in Boston, now demolished, but withdrew to give his attention to literary pursuits in connection with Harvard College. Jared Sparks was settled over the church in Baltimore; and Channing preached one of his great sermons at the ordination of the young man, who soon dropped out of the pulpit to write a series of valuable biographies and edit the correspondence of Washington, and become President of Harvard. John G. Palfrey, whose works on Jewish history and antiquities were of great value twenty years ago, and whose History of New England is a standard work, was a successful minister before he withdrew from the pulpit to become a professor at Harvard. And George Ripley preached in Boston fifteen years before he tried the Brook Farm experiment, and established his fame as the first literary reviewer in America.

Ralph Waldo Emerson was a Boston minister, and retired from the pulpit to write the books which have marked the height to which American thought has reached on literary ground. Charles W. Upham was a successful minister at Salem before entering public life, and writing a history of Salem witchcraft, which is one of the most valuable of our historic monographs. One of our first important works on agriculture was written by Mr. George Coleman, ex-minister of Hingham. The Rev. William Ware, the predecessor of Dr. Bellows in this city, retired from the pulpit to write "Aurelian," "Zenobia," and "Letters from Palmyra," which were very popular twenty-five years ago. William Mountford, an English Unitarian who came here, quitted the pulpit for more congenial literary pursuits. Henry Giles, one of the most eloquent of the early lyceum lecturers, was first a Unitarian preacher, and his books are full of the fire of genius. Samuel Johnson, who wrote two scholarly books on the religions of India and China, was a preacher at Lynn. Colonel T. W. Higginson, who led the first coloured Massachusetts regiment to the war, quitted the pulpit for a literary career, and is regarded by many critics as second only to Emerson as an essayist. O. B. Frothingham, who quitted the pulpit to become an author, and has just written an excellent biography of George Ripley, was a distinguished preacher here for twenty years. John Weiss was a famous preacher before he turned author and Shakespearian lecturer; and Horatio Alger was a minister until he turned story writer. Frederic W. Hedge was a famous preacher for some forty years before he accepted the German professorship at Cambridge, and took his ripest years to gather up the gleanings of a lifetime into weighty sheaves. George E. Ellis, the historical writer, second to hardly any living American in New England history, was a minister at Charlestown; and Charles T. Brooks, whose poems and translations from the German have gained high rank in England as well as here, was styled "the poet preacher of Newport" for a quarter of a century.

Other names could be added to the list, which is long enough to show the remarkable literary tendency of the Unitarian ministry. One reason of it doubtless is the fact that that denomination is so small that its pulpit hardly furnishes a field broad enough for the activity of its superior minds,—they want to address a larger constituency than it furnishes. But it also grows out of the peculiar culture of the Unitarian body. It is less theological and dogmatic than that of any other sect. It deals more in sentiment, in action, in the development of character, in the play of the faculties, in the endless manifestations of human life, than with faith and the wrestling of souls in the agonies of remorse for sin. The standing criticism upon Unitarian preaching is that it is book-like. The typical Unitarian sermon resembles an essay much more than an address. And Unitarian congregations are generally composed very largely of book readers, people of literary taste, if not of liberal culture. And their preaching goes far to explain, the comparative failure of that body to make converts and build up a powerful sect. It is nearly as old as Methodism in this country; yet Methodism, which stands at the other extreme of the Christian field, has comparatively little literature, but a hundred churches where the Unitarians have one. Each has tilled its own field, and must not complain of the harvest it has raised.—Christian at Work.

WHITBY.—The Rev. W. Stoddart, B.A., late of Middlesborough, has accepted an invitation to become the minister of Flowergate Unitarian Chapel, the pulpit of which he has been supplying during the last three months.

THOMAS PARGETER'S (OF FOXCOTE) CHARITY.—The trustees of this charity held their usual quarterly meeting at the offices of Messrs. Harding and Son, 32, Waterloo-street, Birmingham, on Monday last, the 18th inst. The Rev. H. W. Crosskey, LL.D., in the absence of the Rev. W. Carey Walters, occupied the chair. The business was principally of a formal character. The secretary reported that there was no vacancy on the register of annuitants.

THE MORAL REFORM UNION.—On the evening of the 13th inst., under the presidency of J. C. Sherard, Esq., J. P., Mrs. Meredith, of the Prison Mission, Wandsworth-road, well known for his philanthropic but practical work in connection with that institution—delivered an address before the members of the Royal Reform Union and friends of the Movement, at 58, Rochester-terrace, by the invitation of Mrs. Woolcott Browne, Hon. Secretary. The subject was "The Claim of Women to Take the Direction of Women's Work in Institutions of which Women and Children are Inmates." The speaker remarked that this might be supposed to be the usual method, but in point of fact it is not so. It has been practically conceded that the help of women is admitted in two of the great departments of management under the direction of the Home Office, the Educational and Poor Law Departments, to whose Boards women members can now be elected, although their influence is at present greatly restricted by their being represented in them in so small a minority as compared to men. But in the third department, that of Prison Government, which deals with the convict classes, women are not recognised by the law as having a right to any participation in the matter, their possible vocation as helpful coadjutors with men in governing and reforming culprits having yet to be asserted. Her own position was an exceptional one, her authority being held direct from the Home Office. Yet (she contended) there was pressing and absolute need for the softening influence of kindly, womanly sympathy to subdue hardened criminals in our jails, and scarcely less hardened culprits amongst boys and girls in Reformatories and Industrial Schools. In support of the statement she gave interesting instances from her own experience, and her view was strongly supported by the Chairman, who gave a touching illustration of the power of kindness and sympathy, combined with firmness and strict justice, in the case of the Surrey Reformatory for Girls, under his management, now in good working order, but once quite disorganised. Mrs. Meredith adverted to the American system of women's advising boards attached to each Government Institution as worthy of attention in England. Mrs. Charles, who instanced her own work as guardian in Paddington, moved that in institutions of which women and children are inmates, and where women are employed as officers, women should in all cases have a share in the management, whether as governors, trustees, or members of a Board. This was ably seconded by Mrs. Chant, and Mr. Pagliardini moved, that the resolution be sent to certain institutions. Mr. Pfoundes, in seconding, enlarged the motion to include the Colonies and Japan, as he knew the Empress would take an essential interest in the proceedings of the evening. Miss Jessie Craigen urged the great need of women inspectors in workshops and factories where women are employed. After the usual votes of thanks the meeting was brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

THE Rev. R. Spears gratefully acknowledges having received the sum of £10 for the poor of East London in a letter signed "Christmas, 1882."

MR. DAVID BENNING MONRO, M.A., Vice-Provost of Oriel College, was on Wednesday elected Provost in the place of the late Dr. Hawkins. Mr. Monro was formerly scholar of Balliol. He was afterwards elected to a fellowship at Oriel and was appointed Vice-Provost in 1874. Mr. Monro, who is the first lay head of Oriel, is well known as an Homeric scholar.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary
Newspaper, and Record of Reverent
Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price
of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following
terms, post free:—

Yearly (52 weeks) ...	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid) ...	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks) ...	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid) ...	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks) ...	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid) ...	2s. 6d.

ADVERTISEMENT SCALE.

Up to and inclusive of first five lines.	2s. 6d.
Each line afterwards	0s. 4d.
For Six consecutive insertions, 25 per cent. less.
For Thirteen	50

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to Mr.
WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.
The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH
AND SON.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1882.

THE poet Whittier celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday on Sunday, at Boston. He received many callers and letters of congratulation, and was much touched by the fact that several letters came from England. His health is good, and his mental vigour is unimpaired. He says he does little literary work, and that no man ought to write much after seventy, except perhaps Dr. Holmes, who ought to continue writing until he is a hundred.

WE regret to see from the local papers that the question of the disputed possession of the sacramental plate belonging to the Unitarian Chapel at Colyton has again been before the Axminster County Court, in the form of an action brought by the Wardens and Treasurer of the Chapel against Miss Delia Powell, who seems to claim a kind of hereditary right to the trusteeship, or at least maintains that she has been illegally dismissed. The Judge very properly expressed his surprise that litigation about the temporary possession of such articles should be resorted to, and added that in such a dispute as this respecting the trusteeship he had no jurisdiction, and unless there was an imperative demand from the Court of Queen's Bench should decline to interfere in any way whatever. And so we fear matters will go on in the same unsatisfactory way as before. Such petty disputes as these do infinite injury to the liberal cause and religion wherever they occur; and no congregation can expect to flourish while they continue. Why cannot both parties, instead of creating a public scandal, consent to submit the whole matter to friendly arbitration; or why do not the Trustees, if they have power to act, interfere with a strong hand? We really need a little wholesome despotism in matters of this kind.

WE learn from the Daily News that Dr. Colenso, Bishop of Natal, has published the address which he delivered in October last before the Church Council of his diocese on the appeal of the late Bishop Merriman, of Grahamstown, against the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Dean Williams. After pointing out the main features of the recent judgment, which declares that the Church of South Africa is not in connection with the Church of England, the Bishop expresses a hope that at the approaching Provincial Synod of that Church such measures may be adopted as will reunite the two Churches, "under the same wise system of comprehension which characterises the Mother Church." Our readers may remember that it is the High-Church party who wish to make the Church of South Africa a Church independent of the State, while still claiming all the advantage of State support, in order to expel the heretical Bishop of Natal, and maintain the authority of the schismatical Bishop of Maritzburg. Dr. Colenso and the Broad Church party on the other hand wish to establish the principle that the Church of England in South Africa is simply a colonial branch of the Church of England as established by law. The Bishop states that the Registrar of his diocese having written on the subject to the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, who provided the endowment for the See of Capetown as it was originally established, she made the following reply:—"I can have no hesitation in declaring that the object of my endowment was to maintain a Bishopric of the Church of England in the diocese of Capetown. Therefore any attempt to apply that endowment to the establishment of a separate Church is opposed to the views and wishes which I entertained at the time when I provided the funds, and still continue to entertain." In this ecclesiastical controversy our sympathies are entirely with the Bishop of Natal and his movement; but the true solution of the difficulty seems to us to be the disestablishment of all the Colonial Churches. Let them be placed on a footing of perfect equality in the State, and fight out their own battles among themselves as best they can. Possibly there would be no battles at all if it were not for the question of endowments and State recognition. Why should we introduce all the anomalies of an old State Church into our Colonies, which are abundantly able to take care of religion without any external patronage?

MR. NOEL, M.P., addressed his constituents at Kirkcudbright last week. The Scotsman reports that "at the close of his address Mr. Noel was subjected to some heckling by Mr. Samuel Nisbet. 'When ye voted for Mr. Bradlaugh,' said the questioner, 'd'ye think ye were serving God or serving Satan?'—(laughter). Provost Williamson advised Nisbet to sit down. Nisbet: There's just twa. He couldna be serving God, and if he was serving Satan, he kens himsel.—Mr. Noel: Samuel, ye're wrong, for I did not vote for Mr. Bradlaugh; therefore I could not serve either God or Satan.—Nisbet: You wad vote for a man that does not believe in God! The time was when baith o' ye wad have been stane'd tae death.—(laughter). Mr. Nisbet, like many others of his countrymen, evidently regrets the good old times.

The following verses on the Confessional appeared in the Morning Herald for February, 1829:—

"A parent asked a priest his boy to bless,
Who forthwith charged him 'He must first confess';
'Well,' said the boy, 'suppose, sir, I am willing,
What is your charge?' 'To you it is a shilling.'
'Must all men pay, and all men make confession?'
'Yes, every man of Catholic profession.'
'Then whom do you confess to?' 'Why, the dean.'
'And does he charge you?' 'Yes, a whole thirteen.'
'Then do the deans confess?' 'Yes, sure they do, Confess to bishops, and that smartly, too.'
'Do bishops, sir, confess?' 'If so, to whom?'
'Why, they confess, and pay the Church of Rome.'
'Well,' quoth the boy, 'all this is mighty odd;
And does the Pope confess?' 'Oh! yes, to God.'
'And does God charge the Pope?' 'No,' quoth the priest,
'God charges nothing.' 'Oh, then God is best.
God, then, is able to forgive, and always willing;
To him I will confess, and save my shilling.'

WE learn with interest that the new Archbishop of Canterbury is a nephew of Alderman

Baker, ex-Mayor of Manchester, whose eldest sister was Dr. Benson's mother; Mr. Baker's brother was the late Rev. Franklin Baker, of Bolton; so that the archbishop is closely connected with one of our leading Unitarian families in Lancashire. Mr. Baker, we may add, has just received the following letter of sympathy on the loss of his wife from the Duke of Albany:—

"Claremont, Esher, December 17, 1882.

"Dear Mr. Baker,—Having heard to my great regret of the great loss you have just sustained, I cannot resist sending you these few lines to express my heartfelt sympathy with you in the heavy blow which has fallen on you. May the Almighty comfort you in this deep affliction.—Yours very truly,
"LEOPOLD."

WE have pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to Mr. Arnold Toynbee's forthcoming lectures in St. Andrew's Hall, Newman-street, Oxford-street, on Mr. Henry George's "Progress and Poverty," a book which is exciting great attention among the more thoughtful working men, and has many enthusiastic admirers amongst those, in every position in life, who are interested in social questions. Mr. George's sweeping reconstruction of the theory of Political Economy and the revolutionary consequences to which it points certainly deserve and must receive far more serious attention than has yet been given them by economists; and we are glad to learn that so thoroughly competent a lecturer as Mr. Toynbee has consented to undertake a criticism of "Progress and Poverty." It will be seen by the notice that appears in our Advertising columns that, though admission to the lectures is free and Mr. Toynbee is giving his services, a certain number of tickets are being issued for reserved seats to cover the necessary expenses. Those who are willing to contribute towards the cost by taking tickets are requested to communicate without delay with Mr. Philip Wicksteed.

THE deaths are announced of the Bishop of Llandaff, aged 85; Dean Close, aged 85; Thomas Bramley, of Ilkeston, aged 105; Mrs. Birkett, of Kendal, aged 102, who accompanied her husband through the whole of the Peninsular war.—There has just died at Lucca the beautiful Penelope Smyth, who married the Prince of Capua, a brother of the celebrated King Bomba, as far back as 1836.

WE all remember the National Review, which followed the Prospective Review, and was itself in turn followed by the Theological Review, which has been succeeded by the Modern Review. The National Review was at one time edited by Mr. R. H. Hutton and the late Walter Bagehot, and counted Dr. Martineau and other eminent men among its contributors. Well, the National Review is to be revived, only in name, however, for among the signatories to a "private and confidential" circular published to the world in the Times of Wednesday are Lords Carnarvon, Lytton and Cranbrook, and Mr. Alfred Austin, who is to be the editor. The object is to establish a monthly Review of the same size and price as the Fortnightly and the Nineteenth Century, with the view of calling into action the literary and political talent in the Conservative ranks "that at present lies dormant and unemployed," the geniuses that have hitherto blushed unseen. But "first catch your hare," as good Mrs. Glasse says. Not but what there is plenty of ability in the Conservative ranks, but we are not aware that it lies "dormant and unemployed," and has not abundant scope for its exercise.

THE BISHOP OF LLANDAFF died on Saturday last, after a short illness, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. The deceased prelate was the oldest member of the episcopal bench, having been appointed by Lord John Russell in 1849. Dr. Oliphant was formerly vice-president of St. David's College, Lampeter, and Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge. He belonged to the Evangelical party of the Church. The late Bishop, who had an extensive knowledge of Hebrew, was one of the Company of Revisers of the text of the Old Testament. His death will be felt by them as a great loss, as his extensive scholarship and critical acumen were of great value in the laborious task of the Revisers.

Religious Intelligence.

CENTENARY OF THE PROTESTANT DISSSENTING MINISTERS' MONTHLY MEETING, WARWICKSHIRE.

MEETINGS IN BIRMINGHAM.

The centenary of the "Monthly Meeting of the Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and Neighbouring Counties" was celebrated on Wednesday, Dec. 13, by a series of gatherings in Birmingham. In the morning a Conference was held in the Lecture-room of the Church of the Messiah, Broad-street. The Rev. Dr. CROSSKEY presided, and there were also present the Revs. Professor J. Estlin Carpenter (Manchester New College, London), S. Wentworth Brooke (London), E. Myers (Shrewsbury), D. Maginnis (Stourbridge), and A. W. Worthington (Stourbridge), W. Carey Walters (Kidderminster), W. Cochrane (Cradley), J. W. Lake (Warwick), Lindsay Taplin (Kingswood), R. L. Lloyd (Belper), John Robberds (Cheltenham), H. McKean (Oldbury), H. Eachus (Coseley), T. Pipe (Lye), P. Dean (Walsall), J. Harrison (West-bromwich), G. St. Clair, B. Wright, J. B. Gardner, E. T. Russell, J. Allsopp, and Hubert Clarke (Birmingham); Messrs. S. Greenway, T. G. Lee, W. Lowe, T. Ridgway, J. Whitehouse (Tipton), W. P. Greenway (Dudley), and several ladies, &c.

The Hon. SECRETARY (the Rev. D. Maginnis) read a historical narrative of the Monthly Meeting as follows:—He said the Monthly Meeting of Protestant Dissenting Ministers of Warwickshire and the Neighbouring Counties was formed in the year 1782. The records of the earlier years of its existence are very scanty of information. It is considered probable that our meeting grew out of private meetings of three ministers, viz., the Rev. Mr. Clark, a minister of the Old Meeting, Birmingham; Mr. Robins, of West Bromwich; and Mr. Cole, of Wolverhampton, who met once a month at each other's houses for instructive conversation, literary and religious, but without any public service, and they continued to meet till Mr. Clark's death, which occurred in 1769. Mr. Robins afterwards removed to Daventry, and in 1775 succeeded Dr. Ashworth as principal of the Dissenting Academy of that place. The first meeting was held at West Bromwich, at the Old Meeting, of which a Rev. Mr. Brabook was then the minister. At that meeting the brethren resolved that they should meet monthly for the purposes of mutual instruction and edification in some such manner as the following: To meet together for the purposes of public prayer and preaching in the morning at each others' meeting houses respectively. And they further resolved that in the afternoon they would more privately discuss some question of importance agreed upon at the preceding meeting. The next succeeding meetings were held at Coseley, Stourbridge, Dudley, Oldbury, Wolverhampton, West Bromwich; in 1785 met at the Leasowes, not afterwards named as a place of meeting. In 1786 meetings began to be held also in Kidderminster and Walsall; in 1790 Cradley was added to the list, and shortly after Bromsgrove and the Lye. In 1804 Birmingham had its first meeting, and in 1805 Bilston was added to the roll. Of the ministers who preached at the earlier meetings there are several whose names at least are well-known in the district (e.g., the Rev. Benjamin Carpenter, for many years minister at Stourbridge; the Rev. James Scott, minister at Cradley, the evangeliser of the Lye; the Rev. Mr. Wood, minister at Dudley; the Rev. R. Gentleman, at Kidderminster; the Rev. Mr. Procter, at Oldbury; and the Rev. Mr. Brabook. After inquiries made in various quarters I have not been able to learn anything more than that he was minister for a few years at West Bromwich, and that it was at his place the monthly meeting of this Society was formed. Of Mr. Amner I can learn nothing save that he was minister of Coseley, and a member of the meeting, and frequently preached at its monthly meetings. Other preachers were Mr. Wells, of Bromsgrove, Mr. Griffiths, of Wolverhampton, Mr. Beasley, of Walsall, and Mr. Gummer, of Worcester. At their first meeting the question proposed for discussion was, "What are the best methods to be taken in order to prevent the bad influence of those rigid and bigoted principles which some of our neighbouring brethren advance? And the unanimous deliverance of the brethren was that to oppose error is right; and that the proper method of opposing it was to deliver their own sentiments with freedom and without disguise, but at the same time without any direct and formal opposition to others' sentiments. At the second meeting the subject for discussion was: "How may we hope in the most effectual manner to instruct in religious knowledge the younger members of our congregation, and preserve them from bigotry?" The next was in regard to a matter of pastoral duty—"What is the proper course to be adopted by ministers when visiting dying persons who have lived wicked lives?" The next was as to "The Propriety of bringing children to the Lord's Supper before they could understand the nature or comply with the design of the ordinance." Other subjects discussed were "Whether the Historical parts of the Old Testament, excepting the Five Books of Moses, were written by Inspiration," "Whether there is sufficient evidence that the gift of inspiration was given to a person of bad character?" "The Scriptural evidence for an Intermediate State," "Satanical Influences." It would appear that the attendance at the meetings became somewhat irregular, and so small that the services were held in the vestries of the chapels. With a view to increase the attendance at the meetings, they agreed that fines should be imposed. Every member not being present at a quarter before eleven o'clock was required to pay sixpence, and for non-attendance a shilling. It appears that in the early years of its existence the meeting exercised Presbyterian functions, e.g. At a meeting at Cradley in May, 1790, it is recorded that "the Rev. James Scott was solemnly set apart to the work of the ministry by prayer and imposition of hands, that an ordination sermon was preached on the occasion, that the questions were asked of the candidate, and his confession of faith was received. An ordination prayer was then offered, and Mr. Scholefield gave a charge to pastor and people." Again, the minutes state that in 1796 the Rev. Samuel Parker, of Coseley was ordained to the Christian ministry, and that at Walsall Mr. Bowen, of Walsall, and Mr. Procter, of Burton, were solemnly set apart by prayer and other services to the office of the Christian ministry. As we pass on through the next thirty years we find well known names prominent in the proceedings of the Society, as Dr. Toulmin, Kell, Fry, Bransby, Kentish, Davis, Bowen, Lloyd, &c. And in the generation following, which brings us down to a period remembered by most of us, we have, not to mention any who are still living, the names of Alexander Paterson, Hugh Hutton, James Yates, J. R. Wreford, William McKean, Stephenson Hunter, Samuel Bache, and John Gordon. At this time the places at which the meetings were statedly held were Birmingham (Old Meeting and New Meeting), Coseley, Cradley, Dudley, Kidderminster, Lye, Waste, Oldbury, Stourbridge, Walsall, Wolverhampton, and occasionally at Alcester, Coventry, and more lately at Kingswood, Evesham, Shrewsbury, Cheltenham, Tamworth, Newhall Hill, Birmingham, and the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham. If asked, as we have been asked, what has the Monthly Meeting done, we can only say that its members have taken an earnest and active interest in all matters affecting religious liberty and the progress of liberal Christianity, particularly in matters affecting the equal rights of all denominations before the law. They had been active in supporting all those beneficent measures of legislation during the century that were designed to remove the disabilities under which Dissenters from the National Church so long suffered. Coming to a part of the century which many of our friends will remember, the members of our society were active workers for the reform of the Marriage Law, which imposed hardships on Dissenters, and for the passing of that important measure the Dissenters' Chapels Bill; and passing on to a still later time the nation has had no more earnest advocates for an equitable system of national education which would bring education within the reach of the masses than our ranks have contributed. To refer briefly to matters more closely relating to ourselves, the Monthly Meeting was one of the first societies that by a unanimous resolution encouraged the benevolent founders of the Ministers' Benevolent Society to go forward with their good work when discouraged by much coldness, if not opposition. The recent Liverpool Conference, which passed off with so great éclat, and which, it is hoped, will bear valuable fruit in future years for the benefit of our churches, was in fact the offspring of this Society. At one of our meetings here in Birmingham in 1873, in this very church, adjourned to the dining-room of Timothy Kenrick, Esq., a committee was formed, with Dr. Crosskey as chairman, and myself as secretary, for the purpose of preparing a scheme for organising a National Conference of members and friends of Liberal Christian Churches. The committee drafted and printed a scheme which met with much approval, and which in all essential points the Liverpool Conference has carried into effect. It is only proper to mention that the success of the Monthly Meeting was in a great measure owing to the generous sympathy of leading laymen in the congregation in which they statedly met, the whole body of ministers being always hospitably entertained in the houses of the leading families. It will not be out of place to name here some of the families whose houses were always open to the brethren, e.g., the Hunts at Oldbury, the Talbots at Kidderminster, the Pargeters and Evers at Cradley, the Scotts and Akroyd at Stourbridge, and hosts in Birmingham, of whom it must suffice to mention a few names, Kentish, Kenrick, Rogers, Russell, Osler, Beale, Phillips, Thornton, Harding, Harrold, Edwards, &c. The brethren desirous of holding their meetings occasionally in places where it was not practicable to entertain at dinner a party of fifteen or eighteen persons raised a fund by their own subscriptions and contributions of some friends by which they are enabled now to meet at such places and to provide a simple repast for themselves. It would be inexcusable and very unjust to omit to notice, however briefly, a still older institution which a few years ago was merged in the Monthly Meeting; namely, the Double Lecture, which was held at Dudley and Oldbury. This lecture was established by ejected ministers residing in the district, in commemoration of the ejection and with the view of maintaining and extending the principles of dissent, and is regarded as about the oldest institution in the kingdom conducted by Protestant Dissenters. In the Midland District the number of the ejected ministers was very considerable. Several resided in Birmingham. In Stourbridge and within four miles of it, no fewer than twelve of these faithful ministers came to reside, the Foley family of that day befriending the sufferers for conscience's sake; a chaplain of the Foleys, the Rev. Mr. Flower, who was at the same time the first minister of the congregation at Stourbridge, officiating alternately at Stourbridge and Mr. Foley's private chapel, was the first recorded preacher of the Dudley Double Lecture in 1723. It seems that the lecture was preached at the house of a Mr. Joseph Smith, near Gornal, until the removal of the Society to the Meeting House in Dudley. It was usual for the ejected ministers to hold services at private houses, and these private meetings often afterwards grew into organised societies. A traditional account attributes the origin of the Oldbury lecture to the following incident. The Turton family who resided at the Brades narrowly escaped from the falling of a part of their house, invited the neighbouring ministers to assist them in keeping a day of thanksgiving for their delivery, and it has been stated that the ministers from that time annually assembled in the Oldbury Dissenting Chapel. The fact seems to be that the Oldbury lecture though not coeval with the Dudley lecture, was founded for the same object by successors of the ejected ministers, and that the Brades accident occurring about the time of one of the Oldbury lectures was naturally made a prominent subject of thanksgiving by the brethren, the Turtons being an influential and much respected family, with whom the eminent minister of that name of Birmingham and Oldbury was closely related. Among the earlier preachers of the double lecture may be mentioned Dr. Priestley, B. Carpenter, Jas. Scott, Dr. Barnes, H. Worthington Scholefield, Dr. Toulmin, John Corrie, R. Gentleman, J. J. Kenrick, R. Kell, R. Fry, John Kentish, Wm. Turner, S. Fawcett, Coates, Yates, Lloyd, T. Davis, &c. Two ministers preached on each occasion; I believe it was understood that the junior minister was to select some general subject of discourse, and that the senior minister was to treat of some aspect of the principle of Nonconformity. It may be mentioned as one of our few traditional jokes connected with the lecture that a learned doctor whose memory is much respected being invited to preach on one occasion, thought that he was expected to give both discourses himself, preached a sermon, and when he had finished it, coolly produced a second and gave it also to the end, when the second preacher for the day ascended the pulpit and gave a discourse of about an hour's length on the principles of dissent. In 1866 the Double Lecture was discontinued, Dudley and Oldbury taking their place on the rota of the monthly meetings. I have not been able to ascertain the names of the brethren who were the early secretaries of the Double Lecture. But for many years during the latter part of its history the office was held by the late Rev. Wm. McKean, of Oldbury, and lastly by the Rev. Henry McKean, the present minister of Oldbury and the treasurer of our Monthly Meeting. The records give the names of the secretaries of the Monthly Meeting. The first was Mr. Procter, minister of Oldbury, who held the office for thirty years: the next was Mr. Patterson, minister of Stourbridge, who was secretary for twenty-five years. Mr. Patterson was succeeded by Mr. Bowen, minister of Cradley, who held the office for five years, succeeded by Mr. Bache who held the office for eleven years, and whose diligent, zealous and able discharge of his duties, the brethren on his resignation acknowledged by presenting him with a handsome piece of plate. His successor was Mr. Gordon who was secretary for eight years; on his retirement, about seven years ago, the brethren made the poor choice of the present holder of the office [Mr. Maginnis], but who when on account of health he tendered his resignation a year ago, would not be allowed to relinquish the post which he so inadequately occupies. Though the present secretary may claim some little credit for having initiated the idea and plan of this centenary celebration, and no one is more conscious than himself of how much this part of the celebration has suffered by being in his hands, there were in particular two or three things, which if he had been in better health he should have liked to have done in this paper:—1st. Sought out any available information respecting the earlier members of the meeting. 2nd. Traced in their extant writings the development of theological opinion from Calvinistic orthodoxy, down through Arianism to the Liberal views now prevailing among us. It should be mentioned, among unaccomplished intentions, that the Meeting proposed to prepare a history, giving an account of the Rise and Growth of Nonconformity in the Midland Counties, with a monograph of the several congregations included in our Meeting. It was agreed to commit the preparation of the general history to Mr. Gordon, who was to edit the monographs contributed by the members of their respective churches. Mr. Gordon undertook the task con amore, but death overtook him before he had been able to make any progress with it. May the hope be cherished that the work will yet be undertaken and performed; as such a work well done would be a great desideratum for the benefit of young people and the less informed members of our congregations. The secretary should have liked to be able to have shown in conclusion that the Meeting has served a good purpose in its influence on the members themselves. Our congregations, many of them Presbyterian in origin, their ministers have been only Presbyterian in name. Though exercising no authoritative control or ecclesiastical function, the meeting has been a bond of union among its members more unifying than any Presbytery could have effected. And your secretary cannot conclude his imperfect task better than by re-echoing, which he heartily does, the wish of the Saratoga Conference offered to us for this special occasion with "hearty congratulations and God speeds," "that another century may find this liberal organisation still young and thriving."

The CHAIRMAN proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Maginnis for his admirable paper, with a request that he would permit it to be published. He trusted that the practical suggestions which had been made in the paper would be taken up. He could not conceive of anything of greater interest to them than to have the records of that noble line of ancestors whose name had been mentioned. They knew of the struggle that they had had with the besetting bigotry of their day, but they faced the work, and had endeavoured to lead the people to a nobler and better life. The work which remained for them to do now was to keep their children from the indifference that was growing around them, the natural reaction from the bigotry of the old time. Their ancestors had done their work faithfully, and in their dealings with the world around them had not only manifested the strength and power of their convictions, which were critical and antagonistic to the theological ideas of the times, but they had enunciated nobler and deeper ideas of religion that would pervade the life and remould society in the blessings of God—(applause). He noticed in the paper that the ministers had formerly exercised Presbyterian functions, and that the imposition of hands and confession of faith sometimes took place. This was the old system of Presbyterianism, which name some of their Unitarian congregations still bore, though, in fact, they had long departed from the forms and doctrines of Presbyterianism. What had their congregations grown to when left to themselves; when they had no external connection with the State; when they had within themselves no chains of self-imposed bondage? They had developed a freer and nobler faith—(applause). He concurred with the whole tone and tenor of the paper, and he thought the results that had been already achieved were such as to encourage them to go forth into the coming century with greater self devotion and more self forgetful zeal—(applause). There was no ancestry of which he was more proud than that of their predecessors belonging to that Monthly Meeting. There was no line of saints which appeared to be grander and more worthy of admiration than the line of faithful, scholarly, and devoted men who quietly, gently, but firmly, without rude and rough antagonism, without resorting to false and fictitious excitement, celebrated the worship of God in their humble meeting places in many a back street throughout this district. He cherished no better hope than that in the days to come they might be more worthy of their faithfulness, and that they would continue to humbly and reverently honour their memory—(applause).

The Rev. JOHN ROBERTS, in seconding the motion, said he had listened with great interest to the paper read by the secretary, and also to the eloquent words of the chairman. He had been called upon as the senior minister, and he had heard one name read which seemed to give him a claim on antiquity, for Mr. Turner, who was one of the preachers, was his paternal grandfather, which seemed to connect him far back with the history of the century. He was rather surprised not to have heard the name of Dr. Priestley mentioned in connection with the Monthly Meeting. His name had occurred in connection with the Double Lecture, but not as one who had been a member of the Monthly Meeting, though it might be supposed from his residence in Birmingham that he would have belonged to it. Dr. Priestley had removed from Birmingham considerably within the century, for it was after the French Revolution broke out that the riots occurred. He was informed, however, that the Monthly Meeting was not introduced to Birmingham till about 1804. It was stated that the Monthly Meeting was at one time held at Evesham, but there was no reference to the fact that the meetings were held twice at Cheltenham.

The motion was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN then proposed that a hearty welcome be accorded to Professor Carpenter as the representative of Manchester New College, London, with which they were associated by many ties of sympathy. They wished not only to welcome Professor Carpenter but to express their sympathy with the work of the College.

The proposition was carried with much cordiality.

Professor CARPENTER in reply said he could not fail to respond to the very kind welcome they had given him to their Centenary Meeting. He had listened with very great pleasure to the record Mr. Maginnis had placed before them. It appeared to him that they were in great danger at the present day of losing sight of their traditions, and it was exceedingly desirable they should take every possible opportunity of cherishing those traditions, and of really bringing out to view in the clearest possible light the line of principle which had led to the development of their existing congregations—(hear, hear). He could not help earnestly hoping that the hints Mr. Maginnis had thrown out in that direction would be taken up, and that they might see in some form or another something like a real development of the history and the principles of Liberal Nonconformity as they understood it in the Midland Counties—(hear, hear). The roll of names which the list contained proved that such a sketch if worked out into anything like a history with references to character and to literary work, together with an account of the scientific and political movements in which the former ministers took part, would form a very interesting contribution to the general history of our time. He had recently been reading a little book which had done the same kind of thing for the history of liberal theology in America. It was a series of lectures presented by Mr. Joseph Allen to Harvard University, where he acted as temporary lecturer in ecclesiastical history. It presented the transition from the old Calvinistic theology to the movement of Channing and Theodore Parker. Nothing was more striking than the continuity of a great principle connected with a particular theological belief. That seemed to be what they wanted as far as possible illustrated in our own day, and he confessed he shared the feeling of Dr. Crosskey, that the question they had to discuss was the prevention of the loss of their young people, through indifference rather than bigotry. That seemed to him to be the direction which they as ministers might work and endeavour to impress as far as possible by an historical account, which would show how a great principle could be carried through successfully, and become fruitful in new life. If he might be allowed to say a word on behalf of the college which he had the honour to represent, it would be that they could only do their work efficiently at the college by being brought frequently into contact with those who were working on the same lines as themselves in the congregations scattered throughout the country. At the college they could not possibly do more than train the men who were sent up to them. It was not their business to find the men if they "could not go out into the streets and highways and compel them to come in. They had to depend on the ministers of the congregations to supply the material which they would train into their successors; and it therefore seemed to him of the highest possible importance that there should be between their relations of entire confidence—(hear, hear). He was thankful to believe that those relations had never been so firm and cordial as at the present time—(applause). It was the greatest possible support to the professors of the college in London to feel that they were thus working in harmony with the great body of the ministry throughout the country, and that they were doing their part to supply the future of the ministry with a continuation of faithful men—(applause).

Mr. W. LOWE said that the Secretary had stated a good deal in his interesting report with which he (the speaker) was familiar, from the fact that he had been connected with the New Meeting congregation and the Church of the Messiah ever since he saw the light. He had therefore known some of the worthy men referred to in the report. He was surprised that they had not a larger attendance of the laity to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the men who had done such a noble work to bring Unitarianism to its present position.

The Rev. J. W. LAKE (Warwick) said he would speak his own impressions, and convey the general impressions of the ministers as to the valuable aid which the Society had given them in cheering them in their work. When a minister came into that district he did not find himself in an isolated position. He could not too fully express the sense of the strength and support which the Society gave him when he came to Birmingham from Warwick, where he was isolated, and to be immediately and kindly received by his brother ministers. There was no doubt that the Society did a great deal of good in strengthening ministers in their work.

The CHAIRMAN then said he desired to convey to the Rev. Wentworth Brooke the high appreciation with which they recognised the way in which his father, the Rev. Stopford Brooke, had broken away from the past, and had accepted a new and brighter faith. This was one of the great acts of devotion which cheered the heart in the truth of religion.

The Rev. WENTWORTH BROOKE, in reply, said he thanked Dr. Crosskey for the kind mention of his father, and as for himself, all he could do was to prove himself worthy of the way in which Dr. Crosskey had spoken of his father.

The Rev. B. WRIGHT said he had been associated with the Monthly Meeting for twenty-seven years, and he had always found that the sympathy and kind feeling which had been exercised among ministers at the meetings had been most helpful to him in the sphere of labour in which he had been engaged. It occurred to him while Mr. Maginnis was reading his historical sketch that it would have been still more interesting if the originators of the meetings had thought proper to have given a very brief biographical sketch of each minister. He should like to throw this out as a suggestion for the future if it were practicable, and if the Secretary would kindly undertake to insert in the minute book a brief biographical sketch, showing the time a minister came into the district, the places where he ministered, and the length of time he continued to minister in this district.

The Rev. J. HARRISON (Westbromwich) pointed out that the Rev. Brabrook, who was the minister at whose house the first meeting of the Society was held, was the minister of the Presbyterian Church at Westbromwich. That church was now one of the few Presbyterian churches in the country in which the theology taught continued to be Evangelical. It would be interesting to know how many out of all the churches continued in the same condition. It might also be interesting to know that the Rev. W. Foster, late minister at Kentish-town, was one of the ministers of that church. He left West-bromwich for London, and on inquiry the other day amongst some of the members of the Church there he (the speaker) found the impression was that he left not exactly on account of heresy, but he had some difference with his people on matters of doctrine, and thought it better to leave them. He believed the present chapel was on the same site as the old chapel, the exact date of the first chapel being about 1675.

Mr. LAKE asked whether there was any record of Mr. Field, of Warwick, having been a member of the Monthly Meetings. He was minister at Warwick for fifty years, and must have had some association with that society.

The Rev. H. McKean explained that in the old times there was no method of getting to meetings except by going on foot, and in his own recollection the ministers who came to Oldbury from Birmingham walked, and those who went from Wolverhampton to Cradley assembled at Dudley as far as they could by coach, and then walked. The same thing took place with regard to Stourbridge, so that Warwick would be too far away. Among the names and places which might be inserted was that of Whitechurch. In olden times the Old Meeting ministers supplied the pulpit at Oldbury, as the ministers of the New Meeting supplied the pulpit of Coseley. Mr. Procter, one of the founders of the Monthly Meeting, was first minister of Oldbury from 1776 to 1809. Mr. Procter appeared to have been a curious and jolly fellow, for he had left a number of quaint and humorous notes on the school bills. But the great work of his life was the rebuilding of the chapel, which was begun in 1806. He kept an exact account of all the expenses and subscriptions he had received. One circumstance which illustrated his good nature was that during the building of the chapel he almost every day gave ale to the men, and regulated the quantity exactly according to the number—(laughter). In 1862, when the chapel was altered, they retained the walls and roof as left by Mr. Procter, but took out the windows and altered the internal fittings. It was somewhat remarkable that after so long an interval the man to whom they gave the bricklaying contract was one of the men who worked for Mr. Procter in 1806. He believed that Mr. Procter was secretary of the Double Lecture, for the handwriting was unmistakable.

The Rev. R. L. LLOYD said he was much interested with the account which had been given of the proceedings of the early meetings. He thought he was right in saying that Mr. Procter was the secretary of the Double Lecture, the texts of the sermons all being in his exact and beautiful shorthand.

The Rev. E. MYERS said when he looked round the ministers meeting that day he was struck with the fact that he was one of the oldest of the members of the Monthly Meeting. There was only one gentleman present who was a member when he joined the district, and that was the Rev. W. Cochrane. He had been a member of the society thirty years, and he knew many of the ministers mentioned in the report very distinctly. What he rose to speak about, however, was to tell them of a tradition which he heard in the district with respect to the origin of the Double Lecture at Oldbury and Dudley. Reference had been made to it, and some speculation indulged in with regard to its probable origin. What he heard was that the lectures were held once a year, and it was a general gathering of all the congregations throughout the district, and they were so largely attended that it was impossible for the chapel to hold them at one time. At Dudley the congregation on one occasion, it was stated, was so large that the sermon had to be repeated to a different audience, the first one going out and the chapel being refilled—(laughter).

The Rev. D. MAGINNIS, having acknowledged in suitable terms the cordial thanks of the meeting for his paper, and expressed his willingness that it should be published with other proceedings of the centenary, moved a vote of thanks to Dr. Crosskey for presiding.

Mr. S. GREENWAY seconded the proposition, and it was carried.

It the afternoon a luncheon was held at the Grand Hotel, Colemore-row, the company numbering about 130 ladies and gentlemen. Dr. Russell presided, and in addition to those whose names are mentioned above there were present Messrs. Timothy Kenrick, Priestley, Smith, E. L. Tyndall, A. B. Whitfield, White (Dudley), and others.

Grace was said by the Rev. JOHN ROBERTS, and thanks returned by the Rev. D. MAGINNIS.

The CHAIRMAN congratulated the ladies and gentlemen present on the zeal and interest they had displayed in the purposes of that meeting by assembling in such large numbers in the inclement state of the weather. They were met to celebrate the anniversary of the Monthly Meetings which had been continued for 100 years. But it appeared to him that it was not in the length of time and with all its associations that the chief interest of that meeting consisted. It was by continuing without intermission for so long a period these Monthly Meetings that they had given emphatic testimony to the supreme importance of religion as the guiding strength of life, and they had declared their fidelity to the religious opinions which they had formed for themselves. Those opinions they held on the basis of Protestant Nonconformity; but they had never regarded their Nonconformity as the object; they avowed it as a principle, entered largely into its spirit, recognised and understood its fundamental principle, and by keeping that principle prominently forward in their public deliverances and private teachings they gained to their Nonconformity that large and liberal application which was always acceptably received. The fundamental principle of Protestant Nonconformity on which their religious belief rested was the strictly personal character of a religious faith, or speaking perhaps more correctly the personal character of religion. Nonconformity regarded religion as a matter for a man's whole conscience; religion in all its phases and varied opinions as a matter in which a man's right was absolute, in which no body of men could be permitted to interfere. Though so plain to them in this day, this principle had been evolved out of pain, conflict, persecution and strife in former times. It had had many martyrs, and amongst them had been some of the most noble and deeply religious of God's creatures. And yet this principle was no abstract dogma formed to support a church or a sect. It had in fact a very direct and practical application. Upon the fact of a personal religion was founded the great doctrine of toleration. Once this principle was accepted and toleration became a necessary corollary. And yet how strange a chapter in the history of the world had been the history of toleration. It had been fought for as a right, when it ought to have descended as one of nature's own gifts. It had been pleaded for as a favour; it had been made a pledge of State policy; and it had been sternly denied as fraught with the direct danger to man's eternal welfare. Once toleration ceased to be a principle, and great evil resulted. They saw the plain spectacle of one body themselves dissenting from the State-formed religion refusing toleration to their fellows as sectaries and fanatics. This had actually occurred to their Presbyterian ancestors, and the sense of inconsistency was hardly relieved by the knowledge that they were acting from the purest sense of duty. When they read with admiration these noble words with which the high-minded John Robinson, the father of English Independency, began his address to the first detachment of Puritan fathers when they were about to depart to the New World. "Brethren, we are now departing from one another, and whether I may live to see your faces on earth the God of Heaven only knows. But I charge you before God and His blessed angels that you follow me no further than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. If God reveal anything by any instrument of His be as ready to receive it as ever you were to receive any truth from my ministry, for I am truly persuaded that the Lord has more light to break forth out of His holy word"—they turned with much interest to the history of those men, and they saw that they were casting themselves into voluntary banishment for the sake of preserving to themselves their right to think on the subject of religion and worship. In conformity with those opinions they found the Pilgrim Fathers about to try an experiment with the conditions in their own hands. With how much disappointment did they find that these men, so sacrificing for their own religious thought, yet were ignorant of the principles on which they were acting, and were unable when differences took place in their own infant community to extend to their brethren that toleration to obtain which for themselves they had sacrificed all that they held dear—(applause). And the same inconsistency was happening at the time at home. Englishmen looked with pride to the period of our great Civil War as the last occasion on which they had been called to make a stand for their liberties. But in reading the records of those times they had been compelled to admit that there was a vast difference between full comprehension of the principles of civil freedom and an understanding of the grounds on which man claims freedom of thought, and it was this disappointment with the conduct of men whom they highly esteemed which mingled with the pride they felt in recognising that religious questions constituted so large a part in the discussions of those times and influenced so largely the national movement. They remembered with satisfaction that this religious element in the character of their forefathers mainly, perhaps, saved our revolution from those horrors which cast so lurid a light on the revolution in another country, and it added to his respect of that army which Cromwell gathered round him that alone amidst Parliament men, midst Churchmen and politicians they alone recognised fully the true principle of toleration, that amid all their extravagance and fanaticism, and amid the propositions for settling the altered state of Government, the principle of toleration always stood forward—(applause). It was against the excesses and shortcomings of that time that Milton in so many of his works raised his indignant protest, "Dare you with the civil sword to force the consciences of those whom Christ set free." They had always to remember that those occurrences and men were not to be judged by the standard of their own time; but by the standard of the time in which they lived. The belief in the equality of all men before God, the assurance that he was ever ready to receive the pure though imperfect offering did not rise from the ground a complete whole. It had been but one of many streams which had gone to swell the broad flood of human enlightenment. Between unquestioned obedience to authority and absolute unbelief there was not a single permanent resting-place, though temporary halts might be made. A dogma like that had governed many generations, and it accounted for and explained how it was that men who in every other respect were of so noble a nature had yet been guilty of acts which in our present enlightened time we should regard almost with abhorrence. The truth was that the principles of religious freedom had progressed and had been left by Providence no man's own charge. And as conscience was one of the highest of man's endowments so in accordance with universal law it had been long in coming to maturity. It had had its professors, men who upheld their own principles in the face of a popular creed and kept before them the great principle of freedom of thought. It was to the great body of English Presbyterians who first came into prominence at the time of the Commonwealth that they, the members of the Free Churches, looked with chief interest, because, though originally their religious forms were as rigid and unyielding as those which they replaced, and they claimed, like their predecessors, the authority existing by divine right, it was yet the fortune of that body, through the various changes they underwent, in the course of time to afford a typical instance of the progress made by the human mind in advancing from a narrow Conservatism to a broad and vigorous culture. Starting as one of the narrowest of all communions, they had yet furnished us with our Free Churches—(applause). Presenting themselves in the outset as a rigid orthodoxy they were lineal descendants of our own open thought. Those changes were not the result of chance; they were not left to accident. When their Presbyterian ancestors were compelled to lay aside their faith which they did, hoping to retain some portion of it under the form of a modified episcopacy, and when that hope was finally crushed by the Act of Uniformity, they fell under the influence of a persecution of which the celebrated Five Mile Act and Conventicle Act were dreadful instances; a persecution vindictive, cruel, wide-spreading; a persecution of which one of our eminent writers had said, "The prisons were less a place for criminals than a reception for the great proportion of what was bravest and most excellent in the manhood and womanhood of England." Persecution was a hard task master, but it was a powerful teacher, and under the influence of persecution their Presbyterian ancestors learned many things, among others the value of their own religious opinions, and having learned the value of their own opinions they learned the value of the principles of their brethren, and came to trust the progress of divine truth to make its own way in every devout soul without the help of man. Being unfettered by any Church authority or form they left to their descendants the right to judge of themselves unlimited by any conditions, and thus it was that they, their lineal descendants, accepting the responsibility which they had cast upon them, came to entertain opinions differing from those which their ancestors deemed the expression of a saving faith. The last half century recalls the memory of many of those figures which will rise before the mind's eye. How fully they realised this principle of a personal religion, and firmly devoted themselves to their duties as religious teachers. They also combined in their function of religious duties a very refined and eloquent education; they did not limit their sympathies to their religious connections; and they were earnest in every measure which promoted the political welfare of their fellow countrymen—(applause). They had been permitted to place the coping stone on the edifice of Nonconformity, and they had been able to endure difference of opinion upon the part of others. Such were the lessons they had learned from the men whose memories they now so highly honoured—(loud applause).

The Rev. JOHN ROBERDS proposed the sentiment of "Civil and Religious Liberty." He pointed out that he was the descendant on the outside of one of the French refugees whom Louis XIV. drove out of France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and on the other side he was descended from Philip Henry, one of the 2,000 ejected ministers. What great changes had taken place during the last 100 years with the advance of the principles towards which they were devoted? Passing down New-street by the Town Hall he saw a statue erected to the memory of Dr. Priestley—(applause)—whom the whole civilised world held to be worthy of special honour. And to think that little less than 100 years ago Priestley's house and church were burnt by a Church and King mob, his philosophical instruments broken upon the road, and he himself compelled to fly from the town and ultimately from England, and end his days in exile in America, and even there looked coldly upon as a man born before his age, and devoted to principles which the world had not yet learned to recognise. This was the fiftieth anniversary of the entrance to Parliament of the Prime Minister, and also just fifty years since the first Reform Bill was carried. They looked back upon Mr. Gladstone's career with very great interest. Not only had his name been associated with many reforms and many measures conferring rights and privileges which had long been denied, but he was especially to be remembered by Unitarians as having been one of the ablest advocates in Parliament of the Dissenters' Chapels Act—(applause). When their old chapels and endowments were in danger of being taken from them by a harsh and inequitable principle of legislation, though it would not be difficult to point out that there were some things yet to be done both in regard to civil and religious liberty, yet on the whole they had great reason to be thankful, and also to carry out and remember that liberty was rather a condition and a means to an end than an end by itself—(hear, hear). If they did not use their religion so as to make it a condition of human well-being; so long as women who paid taxes were debarred from representation; so long as there was a wealthy and endowed Established Church bound up with a creed which the light of the present day could not but regard as obsolete, founded on antiquated superstitions, with a scholastic theology that was an infringement of religious liberty or equality, and which ought if possible to be done away with they ought not to rest and be satisfied—(applause). Dean Stanley considered that men, even though holding Liberal views, did more good by remaining in the Church and propounding their own views from the pulpit than by going out of the Church and thereby losing the means of influencing the Church. They, however, admired the honesty of those who, when they could not profess the doctrines of the Church, would not hold their offices—(applause). He associated with the toast the Rev. Wentworth Brooke, whose father adopted that manly and noble course—(applause).

The toast was duly honoured.

The Rev. WENTWORTH BROOKE responded, and replying to the opinion of those who affirm that historical facts had nothing to do with the work of a religious teacher, contended that religious impulse was strengthened by an inquiry into the cause and action of religious movements. He thought the Church of England laid too much stress on metaphysical subjects.

Dr. CROSSKEY, referring to the position of their ancestors, said they were outcasts from municipal bodies and from Parliament, almost from the common respect of the community, yet their love of liberty was mingled with the fervour of their religious worship. When their forefathers worshipped they had to defend their right to be heretical, not only from social persecution, but strong and cruel civil penalties—(hear, hear). They were a body of men who themselves hated persecution, and sustained a conflict for the freedom of God's truth. He then proposed the health of Professor Carpenter, one of the ablest professors of Manchester New College.

Professor CARPENTER, in responding, said there was an association between the college he represented and the Ministers' Monthly Meeting in fundamental principle, for the basis of the college was precisely that which Dr. Crosskey had described as the foundation of the ministry in which they delighted to serve. He went on to say that there had been such a development of practical life in the field of ministerial work that it had rendered it difficult for the ministry to keep up with the parallel demands of theological culture. There had been such an enormous extension of activity in other lines, the ramifications of knowledge in every department of history and science, that those who were engaged in the earnestness of practical life in large communities thought that the more practical and the less of the theological culture with which the minister could start the better. He did not wish to undervalue the importance of practical training for the ministry. It seemed of such enormous consequence that they had been endeavouring to do what they could at Manchester New College to develop this side of their training, and to remember that they were not exclusively an institution for theological culture, but also an institution for the training of ministers. In that training the practical life must of necessity occupy a large share, and yet he appeared as the representative of the college in its capacity for promoting theological culture, and he desired earnestly to say that it seemed to him they had yet to recognise that if the practical life was to enter largely into the minister's work and preparation for the life of thought and of culture, the study of history and philosophy ought not to be excluded from the preparation of the layman for his duties.

Mr. TIMOTHY KENRICK referred to the Liverpool Conference and to the establishment of a sustentation fund. He regretted to know that in some cases their ministers and families had been subjected to considerable suffering and privation owing to the meagre stipends they received. These facts showed the great necessity of a sustentation fund being organised in connection with the Unitarian body, and he should have pleasure in contributing £250 towards that object—(applause).

The Rev. W. CARBY WALTERS, one of the secretaries of the Midland Christian Union, also addressed the meeting, advocating the claims of the Union, which embodied the principles of the Ministers' Monthly Meeting, to increased support in an earnest and able speech.

After a cordial vote of thanks to the chairman for his able conduct in the chair, moved by Mr. CHARLES COCHRANE, and seconded by Professor POYNING, the meeting adjourned, on the invitation of Dr. Crosskey, to the lecture-room of the Church of the Messiah, where an ample tea, served by the ladies of the church, was provided for all the numerous party.

At seven o'clock service was held in the church, the Rev. John Roberds being the supporter, and the Rev. Professor Carpenter preaching an able and appropriate sermon, which, it is hoped, will be published along with Mr. Maginn's paper and other proceedings of the Centenary celebration.

MOUNT POTTINGER, BELFAST.—On Sunday, morning and evening, there were large attendances in the above place, including some of the prominent Unitarians of Ulster, when the minister, the Rev. J. J. Wright, conducted special services in celebration of the re-opening of the church after pewing, painting, altering, and enlarging. All the money needed for these objects had been raised beforehand, so that on Sunday the beautiful little church was opened entirely free from debt, but, in aid of the ordinary funds of the church, collections were taken up, which will realise in all close on £50. It is some eight or nine years since Mrs. Ritchie, of the Grove, laid the corner-stone of this neat, substantial edifice, which stands on so central a site in the growing neighbourhood of Mountpottinger. During the last few months the interior of the church had undergone a complete transformation, under the superintendence of Mr. Robert Watt, architect, of whose taste we must speak in high terms. The new pews are of pitch pine, edged with American walnut, and the panelled work behind the pulpit is of an exceedingly pretty design. The enlarged vestibule, the convenient vestry, together with the painting of the roof of the church, add greatly to the accommodation and beauty of the whole. It was stated on Sunday that the painting would not be completed until the spring, when it is intended to put a dado round the walls to the height of the door, and paint the rest in some light tint. One of the chief additions to the comforts of the congregation on Sunday was the warming of the church. This was most successfully accomplished by means of a newly-invented stove by Mr. S. C. Davidson, of this town. At the rear of the church a commodious schoolroom is found. This is the gift of two members of the congregation—Mr. S. C. Davidson, of Belleavon, and Mr. T. H. Ritchie, of the Grove. At their own expense these two gentlemen have so enlarged the original reading room, fitting it up with all conveniences, as to make a fine room for meetings, &c., and especially for Sunday-school work. The room is so arranged that it can easily be made into two smaller rooms, and is well ventilated. Much pleasure was evinced by the congregation on Sunday, that their own minister, who for the past month had been away in broken health, was able to conduct the re-opening services. "Not to tabernacle, but to be transfigured by ascending experience is the mission of the human soul," was the keynote of the sermon which Mr. Wright preached on Sunday morning from the word: "Master, it is good for us to be here, and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias." And the preacher said in conclusion:—"Come, then, my brothers, and we will dedicate this place to Him that made us; to the Love that is more than woman's; to the Wisdom that is more than man's. We would dedicate it to divinest worship and to truest service. Let all holy memories have here a home, and may the largest hopes of man find room. The burdened heart of the weary mother; the dim wonderings of the little child; the remorse and penitence of the young and strong; the fear and trembling of the weak and aged He lifted and lightened here. The command of the Law-giver; the word of the Prophet; the pleading of the Christ, let them here be heard. And all the harvest of our life's experience He hither brought, to be touched by the finger of God and transfigured into holier character. New resolutions be in this place born within the breasts of the young. Yea, to divine pity and human sympathy we dedicate it; to the living Present; to all the good of the past; to the needs of generations yet unborn; to that Unseen Place into which we all must pass, we dedicate this church together to-day. Amen.

DUKINFIELD.—A lecture in connection with the recently formed "Social Union" was delivered on Wednesday evening, the 13th inst., on William Cowper, by the Rev. F. H. Jones, B.A. Owing to the inclemency of the weather there was but a small attendance. Mr. Jones illustrated the lecture by readings from the Poet's works. Mr. Jones defended the Poet against some of the attacks Mr. Goldwin Smith had made on him in his sketch, which forms one of the volumes of "English Men of Letters."

DOVER.—We regret to state that the Rev. T. B. W. Briggs was taken seriously ill just at the close of service on Sunday evening, the 10th inst. Dr. Marshall was sent for, and he administered remedies which allayed the symptoms. Last week the life of the patient was for a time in the greatest danger, but we are glad to hear that Mr. Briggs is now in a more hopeful state, although greatly weakened by successive attacks of illness. The services at Adrian-street Chapel last Sunday were conducted by the Rev. T. L. Marshall.

THE LIBERAL SOCIAL UNION held its monthly meeting on Thursday evening at the Suffolk Gallery, Mr. Granville Layard in the chair. Mr. Carvell Williams, Secretary of the Liberation Society, read a very interesting paper on "Religion and Education in America," founded on observations and impressions during a recent visit to that country. The lecturer described the public school system, the Sunday-schools, and the danger from Romanism and the Irish vote. On the subject of religion the essayist adverted to the religious history of America and the perfect equality of the different denominations as the result of the absence of a dominant establishment. In the discussion that followed Messrs. Jennings, Pfoundes, Kealey, Bromhead, Lock, S. R. McKee, Eiloart, Casson, Housden, Wallaston and Gill took part. The general tone of the discussion was in favour of the free school and secular system, and the dis-establishment theory.

The Liberal Pulpit.

UNITARIAN RELIGION.

[A sermon by the Rev. T. SADLER, Ph.D., of Hampstead; preached at the opening of the new chapel at Peckham, Dec. 13, 1882].

We are here to-day to worship in this place for the first time; and it is natural that the occasion should be with us one of more than ordinary interest, and should call forth our deeper feelings. In dedicating this building to God, and asking his blessing on it, we are profoundly conscious that "except the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it." May this house be the home of genuine piety, and nourish with all goodness the hearts of those who gather together in it. As our feet stand within its gates for the first time, we would say in words of old, "Peace be within thy walls. For my brethren and companions' sakes, I will now say, peace be within thee." May our dedication of this place be accompanied by a new dedication of ourselves to him whom we worship, by the desire for newness of spirit, and by fresh inspirations of devout fervour.

This house of prayer has not been raised in any spirit of hostility to other houses of prayer already existing in the neighbourhood, but as an addition to them, with the same great object in view. It has been raised in the hope, not only of adding to their number, but also of meeting wants which, in some respects, they do not wholly satisfy. This congregation, while providing for themselves a worship in which they are more completely in harmony, and a ministry of what is to them a truer, purer, higher faith, would offer to others the opportunity of joining them.

And now that we have lifted up our hearts to the Most High for his blessing on this house and on us, our thoughts may fittingly turn to the question, what we ourselves should do to render the services in this place effectual for their purpose.

The portion of Scripture which I have taken for my text may be found in the Epistle to the Hebrews vi. 1, 2, 3:—

"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And this will we do, if God permit."

Go on as from seed time to harvest. You have repented of dead works, go on to living works. You have attained your basis of faith, go on to build on it. You have expressed in the most solemn manner your desire to consecrate yourselves to the service of God; go on to learn and do his will, to perfect your religious life as far as possible, to apply the truths and principles of religion to practical godliness and for the benefit of mankind. But this is a subject which would be suited to any time and to any congregation. The occasion which has brought us together this evening demands of us that we should keep our own position and circumstances specially in view. What, therefore, I wish to say to you, my friends, is, go on from Unitarian Theology to Unitarian Religion.

It may be that, at first, the distinction may not strike you; but a very brief consideration will make my meaning clear.

If I were asked what is Unitarian theology, I should mention the views held by Unitarians on the principal questions connected with religion, and I should point out the difference between these views and those which are commonly called orthodox. I should say the Unitarian believes that there is one God, the Father,—that the Holy Spirit is the spirit of the Father and not a separate person of the Trinity—that the grace and truth which came by Jesus Christ are from the Spirit of the Father in him; and I should speak of other doctrinal differences. I should also refer to certain books, explanatory of Unitarian views, and to men who have been looked up to as leading and representative Unitarians, Priestley and Price, Lindsey and Belsham, Channing and Martineau. I should add that Unitarians lay more stress on the life than on opinions; propose what seems to them true, but impose nothing; exclude none from the fold of Christ who wish to belong to it; regard all good and devout men as of the Universal Church of God; and are ready to learn from those who differ from them, to associate with them, to join them in objects of practical benevolence, and in every respect to exercise the widest spirit of liberality.

But suppose one wished to know what is Unitarian religion, he would then not content himself with asking questions or reading dissertations; he would come to our places of worship, and his impression would depend on the life he found there, on whether or not the services were of a kind to express and quicken his religious affections, to awaken his sympathies towards his fellow-worshippers, to call forth and strengthen what is best in his nature, to bring him nearer to God and heaven. It is quite possible that some who approve of Unitarian theology might not be satisfied with Unitarian religion.

Now, my friends, it is manifestly of the utmost importance, both for our own sakes and for the sake of others, that our religious services should be of a kind to do justice, so far as may be, to the faith which we profess.

When I consider what this faith is, it seems to me eminently adapted to foster a devotional spirit. Some of you will remember the subject of one of Dr. Channing's greatest sermons: "Unitarianism Most Favourable to Piety," and those who have read that sermon cannot, I think, fail to have been deeply impressed by it.

Let me briefly remind you of the considerations which appear to me especially to support this view.

First, and above all, there is the divine fatherhood. The infinite Being before whom we bow down in adoration, and to whom we would draw near in communion of spirit, is to us the "Father in heaven." That name appeals directly to our warmest and tenderest affections. We all know how much there is in that name as applied to those to whom we owe most on earth. The ties between parent and children best represent our relation to God. The idea of the greatness of God as the Creator and Ruler of the Universe, and the idea of him as the sole Being whose existence is undivided, may well fill us with feelings of awe and exercise an elevating influence on us; but how much less would there be to win us to the House of Prayer if our chief thought of Him there were of the Almighty, the self-existent, the Infinite Majesty, and not of a being of infinite goodness and infinite love!

It may be said that all Christians acknowledge the fatherhood of God. And this is true. But when, as has been the case with most Christians, redemption and sanctification are ascribed to the second and third persons of the Trinity, and not to the Father as supreme source, the attributes which would most inspire affectionate piety are taken away from Him. In what respect is he so much a Father to us as by breathing into us his own spirit, by weighing our weaknesses and sins in a balance of compassion, and by Himself offering to us the means of return and reconciliation when we have wandered away from Him?

Again: Unitarian views are favourable to human sympathy, and so might be expected to add warmth to our public religious services. The prominence given to the fatherhood of God would be wanting in consistency if it were not accompanied by an equal prominence to the brotherhood of man. What is the use or meaning of all our talk about human brotherhood if it do not dispose us to fellowship in religion, if the presence of our brethren have not a kindling effect on our hearts, and do not increase our joy in drawing near to our Father in heaven? It is a favourite saying of Unitarians, that humanity is religion in practice, that in no way can we so well serve God as by being the instruments of his beneficence to our fellowmen, that a chief provision He has made for the alleviation of suffering and grief, and for softening and smoothing the inequalities in our mortal lot, is by the brotherly compassion which He has planted in the human breast. What is the worth of all such declarations, if when we meet together before the face of the Great Father of our spirits our hearts do not go forth to one another, as we join together in prayer and hymn, in confession and aspiration, and our worship do not gain sweetness and fervour as well as volume from our companionship? Is it conceivable that our human sympathies will be active in the world where we have the diversities of rank, station, ability, condition, constantly before our eyes, if not in the assembly of worshippers where the differences between rich and poor, learned and ignorant, prince and subject, shrink into insignificance in comparison with our common relation to the Universal Father? Is it conceivable that we should feel deeply the ties of brotherhood in circumstances in which there is a great deal to divide us, if not in circumstances in which there is so much to unite us as when we meet together as children of one family of which the Lord of heaven and earth is the head?

There are Christians who hold that some of mankind have forfeited their divine birthright, that indeed it was forfeited for us all by our first parents, though it has been restored to those who have received the grace of a new birth through Christ; but Unitarian Christianity recognises no such limitations. It does not wait for the waters of baptism to behold in the little child a child of God. It sees in God the Father of mankind, and not of a part of our race alone. It regards those who do not know Him, or seek Him, as known by Him, and cared for by Him. And it looks forward to a grand consummation, when those who have been alienated from His life by grievous wrong and ignorance will be brought to themselves, and to Him, and welcomed home by Him whose mercy endureth for ever.

I intended to have said something of the view that religion is rather a divine life than a divine science. This view should give an especially practical tone and character to our worship and preaching. I intended also to say something of that catholicity of spirit which refuses to be separated from the piety of the past, or from piety that has a different clothing from our own, which rejoices to learn from all who can teach, to get good from all who have it to give, and which acknowledges all the light and life of religion in all times and in all parts of the world as from one divine fountain. Both of these are to my mind important elements in the highest kind of religion, and adapted to give warmth to our religious services. But I must go on to say that if Unitarian religion is to do any sort of justice to Unitarian theology, that theology must be preached affirmatively. We must dwell much on what we believe, and little on what seems to us erroneous in the opinions of others. What profit is there in coming away from a sermon which makes us feel that we live in a benighted generation, and that certain doctrines held by people who are not present have been demolished. It may give us a sense of superiority, but will hardly strengthen our piety. It is not by exposing the errors and superstitions of others that our own inward life is fed. It is possible so to harp on controversies and denials as to fill the sanctuary with an atmosphere of doubt and hostility. It was not in such a spirit that the ministry of Christ and his apostles was carried on. Had it been so we should have heard little of their work in these times. He came not to destroy, but to fulfil; and yet how much that was fitted to perish was destroyed by his fulfilment—how much darkness quietly stole away before the light which was shed abroad by him!

Those who with earnest purpose join the congregation of worshippers do so either because they have belief in God, or want it. And those who have it want more of it, or to realise it more. Their prayer is, "We believe; Lord, help thou our unbelief." They want to have their faith strengthened, deepened, to be lifted up as to a higher region of thought and feeling, to have what is best in their nature called forth, to be brought into satisfying relations with the Invisible. They want divine guidance, divine sympathy, divine help, divine comfort, divine inspiration. They want sustaining, purifying, elevating, animating convictions; or, as one has said, "clear belief to serve as aspiritual panoply, with which to meet the practicalities of life," its deep experiences of suffering and sorrow, its mysteries of evil, its powerful and searching temptations to selfishness and worldliness, its calls to higher endeavour.

It follows, moreover, that truth should be presented, not in the naked form in which it appears as a mere intellectual thing, but should be manifested to the conscience and the heart. Truth is but a skeleton till it is clothed with affections. I know that there are some who maintain that in all inquiries we should divest ourselves as far as possible of bias of every kind; but there are questions in regard to which this would be to ignore presumptive evidence and natural wants. If I were a bird I should want space to fly in, and the fact of my having wings would be presumptive evidence that such space is to be found. In like manner as I am a religious being, I want spiritual realms into which my soul may soar, and my capacity for soaring is presumptive evidence of the reality of such realms.

Now, my friends, it does seem to me that Unitarian theology, regarded on its devotional and practical side, should make our services in the house of prayer eminently religious and eminently social. I look in vain for anything in the Orthodox system that appeals more powerfully either to our moral earnestness or to our devout feelings and human sympathies. It would be so if we denied the Holy Spirit; but the Spirit of our Heavenly Father is not less a Holy Spirit than the spirit of a separate divine person. The teachings of Christ are not less divine because they were inspired by the Spirit of the Father than they would be if they came from a separate person in the Trinity speaking from himself. To me nothing could render the Beatitudes, the two great commandments, the teaching that God is a spirit and they who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth—nothing could render these more divine than they are. They bear in themselves the stamp of their own divinity. I look in vain for any theory of the atonement which is more touching and consolatory to the penitent than the parable of the Prodigal Son, than that at-one-ment in which the Heavenly Father welcomes back his contrite child, whether awakened to a consciousness of sin by bitter experiences of his own, or by the love and sacrifices of others who have sought him out in his wanderings and brought him home.

In these latter days there have, indeed, been some who bear the Unitarian name as simply tantamount to a love of truth, and who represent the bond of union among us, not as any affirmative faith, but as religious liberty. I yield to no man in my adherence to the principle of religious liberty, of which all Unitarians whom I have ever known have been upholders; but in its nature it is not a bond of union, for it allows every man to go his own way. It is the ground not of keeping together, but of parting in peace. Agreement and sympathy are what draw us together and keep us together. To force union in any way is a violation of freedom. The more completely our associations are founded on consent of will the better. So far from freedom being a proper bond of union for a sect, it is a spirit which we hope will pervade all sects; and its recent tendency to spread is one of the encouraging signs of our times. The true comprehensiveness is not that which ignores the ties of agreement and sympathy, but that which respects these ties when formed by others, and which would remove every hindrance to their formation, and which refuses to regard them as a cause for alienation. If the pulpit is a place in which the only condition is that its occupant should preach the truth that is in him, whether or not he is in general harmony with those to whom he ministers, why may not a Calvinist preach to a congregation of Arminians, and a Roman Catholic to a congregation of Protestants? Is this a desirable state of things, or one which would be borne? A denomination should have in it something homogeneous, its characteristic faith and life; otherwise it is a name without meaning, and a union without satisfaction or power. Liberty, great and good a thing as it is, is not faith, and it is not hope, and it is not love. It is not righteousness; it is not piety. There is nothing in the claims of freedom that should prevent us from holding and professing earnest Unitarian convictions, and going on to fervent Unitarian religion, providing always we do nothing to restrict the gradual movement of knowledge and thought. The changes that have taken place in our elder churches show that there has been no such restriction in the past; and I venture to say, it will not be otherwise in the future. We are hampered by no Act of Uniformity; we acknowledge no hierarchy pledged to keep us as we are; where we have a liturgy, the congregation using it may give it up at any time if they wish to do so; we do not stereotype our opinions in articles or creeds, or attempt to bind them on those who may come after us. But we value our liberty the more for the convictions we have gained through it, and we value these convictions not the less because we would have them in the open, and not fenced in by articles and creeds; and we value our agreement and sympathy all the more for their being entirely voluntary and without constraint, with the doors ever open to come in or go out.

On such an occasion as the present it is natural that we should turn our eyes for a moment to the tendencies of thought in the great religious world around us; and it is impossible that we should do so without a strong feeling of encouragement. When I look back over the forty years during which the religious movements that have been going on have had for me a primary interest, I am astonished at the changes which have taken place. I am anxious not to exaggerate the significance of such indications as those to which I have referred; but both from what is said in public and from private intercourse we must be struck by finding how many there are of various denominations who have given up the old orthodoxy.

How, indeed, could it be otherwise when with so many its corner-stone is gone—belief in what is termed the fall of man? Those who, from the study of the Bible, have come to the conclusion that the account of the Creation in the Book of Genesis is a Hebrew tradition differing from similar traditions in various nations chiefly in its religious spirit, and not a record of historic facts, and those who on scientific grounds accept the theory of evolution, have abandoned the very foundation on which rests what used to be called “the scheme of salvation.” If the Fall of Adam is not believed in in its literal sense, the doctrine of original sin is gone, and, of course, also that doctrine of atonement which is essentially bound up with it, and the old ideas on these subjects are destined—I will close this sentence in the words of Henry Ward Beecher—“are destined to give place to a nobler view of divine nature and of providence, and of the redemption and elevation of mankind.” And a result of these changes is that we find ourselves in a somewhat new position in the religious world. I am confident that there are large numbers of men whose point of view closely resembles our own.

Many a one who professes to adhere to the doctrines to which I have referred, holds them in such a modified form, and so explains them, that our former objections to them are no longer applicable; and the prejudice which for a long time refused us a hearing, and kept us out in the cold, is rapidly giving way. That, side by side with these liberalising tendencies, there are tendencies widely at work of an opposite kind, is indeed also manifest. Those who want the authority of a priesthood and highly decorative and symbolic religious services are moving in a quite other direction than that of which I have spoken. The success which has attended the Salvation Army shows how many there are among the people who are little prepared for such a quiet and thoughtful worship and ministry as ours. Still, I am persuaded that there is a numerous and increasing portion of the community who are really more in harmony with us than with any other religious body. But, at the same time, I am confident that if what we have to offer is only a theology and not also a religion, if we do not meet the devotional and other wants of the heart, and trust only to intellectual agreement, we shall signally fail; and I must add, we shall deserve to do so. Let us go on from Unitarian theology to Unitarian religion, and I believe we shall meet one of the great wants of our times.

I have felt it to be right to point out certain respects in which this congregation differs from other congregations in the neighbourhood, and therefore has a special work of its own; but before I close this sermon I must ask you to forget all differences and think only of those things in which all churches are agreed. Let our thought be—here is another meeting-place between earth and heaven, where children of God will bring to Him their filial homage, where life and its events will be viewed on their divine side, where the transfigured Christ will be before the mind, and all duties, affections, and hopes will be transfigured with him, where those who labour and are heavy-laden will take his sweet yoke upon them and find rest to their souls.

I should like to add the recent testimony of one to whom we look up with no common reverence, as to the worth of the Churches in general. Dr. Martineau says:—“At a crisis when many heads are dizzy and many hearts alarmed by the rapid changes in thought and in society, it may not be out of place for a veteran, himself not unaffected by them, to avow his unabated confidence in the Christian congregation as the most beneficent of human institutions—the best guardian of the amenities of life, and the asylum of its sweetest affections. Among those who are alienated from it there are, doubtless, some who may sustain themselves in a higher atmosphere, and many who intellectually occupy a level above its average teaching. But upon a wide comparison of the population within the churches and that without, the former I am persuaded will be found to contain, in spite of its minority, by far the greater part of the conscience, the humanity, the purity, the nobleness, which are the cement of society and the backbone of national character.”

To you, my brother, whose office it will be to minister in this place, I can say from experience that I know the anxiety which must have been yours, and the fresh feeling of responsibility which must have come over you as you lifted up your voice here for the first time, and I tender to you my heartfelt sympathy. To you, the members of this congregation, let me say, for to you also I can speak from experience, the welfare, the usefulness, the progress of this Church will depend largely on you, on your earnestness, your attachment, your sympathy, and your co-operation. A minister can do little unless he has the cordial support and fellowship and assistance of those amongst whom he labours. Do not think it matters little whether or not you are in your pews, because you have no part with your voices in conducting the worship. You have part with your hearts, and an essential part. The Church is yours, not your minister's; you are the church; the services are yours, not his. If you were all away at the same time there could be no service. He is but your friend, your companion, your brother, your fellow-worshipper, your leader. There are no more touching words in Paul's Epistles than those in which he throws himself upon the sympathy of those whom he desires to help, and says, “Brethren, pray for us.” Yes, pray for your minister, and help him, that he may help you and your children, and that you may be among the channels through which will come to him the spirit and the grace and the power of God!

Now, may He, from whom cometh all our help, bless this Church of the Divine Fatherhood, and make it in word and life a true witness of divine things. Amen.

PECKHAM.—The opening service at Avondale-road, on the 13th, was followed on Sunday last by special services in the new church. The Rev. R. Spears preached in the morning and the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed, M.A., in the evening, to large congregations. The new organ, promised by Henry Tate, Esq., will not be placed in the building until the spring. On Sunday next the Rev. G. Carter will enter on his duties in the new church.

THE ARCHBISHOPRIC OF CANTERBURY has been offered to Dr. Benson, Bishop of Truro, who, although appointed in 1877, has as yet not been entitled to a seat in the House of Lords. The Bishop, who was born in 1829, was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He was successively an assistant master at Rugby, head master of Wellington College, and Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of Lincoln Cathedral, from which he was appointed by Lord Beaconsfield to the newly-created see of Truro.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Changes of temperature and weather frequently upset persons who are most careful of their health, and particular in their diet. These corrective, purifying, and gentle aperient Pills are the best remedy for all defective action of the digestive organs. They augment the appetite, strengthen the stomach, correct biliousness, and carry off all that is noxious from the system. Holloway's Pills are composed of rare balsams, unminged with baser matter, and on that account are peculiarly well adapted for the young, delicate, and aged. As this peerless medicine has gained fame in the past, so will it preserve it in the future by its renovating and invigorating qualities, and the impossibility of its doing harm.

Obituary.

DEATH OF THE REV. JAMES TAPLIN.

We deeply regret to announce the death on Tuesday last of an old and highly valued friend and former contributor, the Rev. James Taplin, of Kingswood, near Birmingham. Mr. Taplin, who was, we believe, the oldest minister in the Unitarian denomination, if not in years at least in length of service, had attained the advanced age of 83. He commenced preaching more than sixty years ago, and spent a considerable portion of his life in Devonshire. About twelve years ago he entered upon his ministry in the neighbourhood of Birmingham, and was so full of life and energy that he preached twice on Sunday last at his chapel at Kingswood—two days before his death. For many years he interested himself in the education of young men, and as a Liberal in politics was identified with many movements of a progressive and educational character. He was a contributor to several periodicals besides the Inquirer. His hearty and genial nature won for him a great number of friends, by whom his death will be greatly deplored.

MR. HENRY LONG, OF KNUTSFORD.

Our obituary last week contained the name of Mr. Henry Long, of Knutsford, whose death took place on Wednesday, Dec. 6, at the age of seventy-five. Though the deceased had been for several years so completely paralyzed as not to be able to move a limb, he yet retained his mental faculties unimpaired to the end, and continued to take a lively interest in all matters denominational and national. Unitarian objects invariably enlisted his sympathy, and few names appeared more frequently in our lists of subscriptions, and in him our various institutions will lose a willing and generous supporter. His affection for our cause at Knutsford was deep indeed, and has been shared by all the members of his family, who have for several years been the principal workers in connection with the school and the congregation. Mr. Long's kindly, generous and upright character will long be remembered with respect by his fellow-townsmen, and by all who had any acquaintance with him. He was interred in the burial-ground attached to the Brook-street Chapel, Knutsford. Mr. Long has left a widow and several daughters, who are honoured in the several congregations to which they belong, and inherit a large share of their father's generosity and amiability.

THE REV. THOMAS BOWRING.

We announced last week the death, in his eighty-first year, of this excellent and venerable minister, which took place at Maidstone, where he had resided for the last few years, on the 13th inst. Mr. Bowring was born at Exeter in the year 1802, and belonged to the same family as his late distinguished fellow-townsmen, Sir John Bowring. Early in life he was engaged in teaching, and was greatly interested in Sunday-school work, and in conducting occasional Sunday services. He was, we believe, introduced into the ministry by the late Dr. Lant Carpenter, of Bristol, whom he always regarded with great reverence as his religious guide and teacher. For many years he was Domestic Missionary in Birmingham, where he won universal regard among the supporters of the Mission and the members of the congregation he gathered around him by his fidelity to his onerous work. After spending the best years of his life in this post he retired to quiet country pastorates, first at Nantwich and afterwards at Tamworth, in both of which places the congregations were revived from a depressed condition. After spending a few years in this congenial occupation, Mr. Bowring resumed the work of Domestic Missionary for some years at Belfast, and ultimately retired from the ministry on account of advanced age and growing infirmities. The last four years of his life were spent at Maidstone in comparative privacy, interrupted by occasional preaching engagements in the neighbouring congregations. Mr. Bowring published many years ago three useful little works, written in an easy and popular style, which recommended them to wide circulation—"The Church of the Saviour," a brief

WRIGHT'S

For Toilet, Bathroom and Nursery. In purchasing, demand Wright's, and see that tablet is branded "Sapo Carbonis Detergens"

"The only true Antiseptic Soap."—British Medical Journal.
Recommended by the entire Medical faculty

USED BY THE PUBLIC FOR A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.
PROPRIETORS:
W. V. WRIGHT & Co.,
SOUTHWARK, LONDON.

To be had of all Chemists, Perfumers, and Medicine Vendors, &c. throughout the civilized world.

Tablets, 6d. and 1s.

COAL TAR

SOAP

THE ORIGINAL & ONLY DISINFECTING SOAP). Never wash without it, and thus ensure protection from infectious disease.

"In our hands it has proved most effective in Skin Diseases."—Lancet.

"In our hands it has proved most effective in Skin Diseases."—Lancet.

Unrivalled for the complexion, for it cleanses the skin, removes all impurities and ensures its healthy action.

outline of ecclesiastical history; "Natural Theology," and "Footsteps to Sacred Geography." He also wrote several religious tracts, some of which were published in the popular series issued by Brooke Herford, and some elementary works on secular education.

Mr. Bowring belonged to the older school of Unitarianism of the Evangelical type represented by the late Dr. Carpenter, and had little sympathy with modern tendencies of theological thought. As a preacher he was never what could be called popular, but he always gained attention by his reverent and earnest manner, and his evident devotion to his work. His seriousness and weight of character gave him an influence in his successive posts of duty often greater than that obtained by more conspicuous gifts. He was essentially a good man, who deserves lasting veneration for the simplicity and genuineness of his character, and his self-sacrificing devotion in the comparatively humble sphere of duty which he occupied. Mr. Bowring leaves a widow and family to lament his loss.

MERTHYR TYDVIL.—On Sunday afternoon an interesting service was held at the Unitarian Chapel, Merthyr, on the occasion of distributing the money saved by the children of the Sunday-school during this year. Upwards of £41 had been deposited in the savings bank by the children. At two o'clock the children met in the chapel to receive what they had deposited in the bank. At three o'clock there was a children's service, when many friends belonging to the congregation were present. The Rev. Nestor R. Williams conducted the service. Mr. B. T. Williams, Q.C., County Court Judge, then delivered an address, in which he dwelt on the growing necessity of keeping up Sunday-schools by all denominations, inasmuch as the tendency of all day-schools in this country leaned to the omitting of any distinct dogmatic religious teaching; hence the need of all denominations to be more assiduous in the support of Sunday-schools, in order that the children may early receive impressions of religion by being taught to read those fine sentiments of religious faith and practice contained both in the Old and New Testaments. Mr. Williams concluded an impressive address by urging on the children present the great necessity of being truthful in every word and action of their lives. Mr. Chas. Herbert James, M.P., also addressed the children. Mr. James, who was deeply affected at the commencement of his speech, remarked that it was with difficulty he was able to speak to them, as it recalled to him memories of the past which were most touching to him. He went back to the time when he had laboured amongst them for years as a Sunday-school teacher. Looking around him at the boys and girls, he did not know that he could do better than to follow what had been said by Mr. B. T. Williams, by impressing on the children not only to be truthful, but also industrious, sober, and honest. If, remarked Mr. James, everybody possessed these three qualities, what a different world this would be! Gaols and workhouses would be almost extinct. Both addresses were listened to by all present with great attention.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The letters of the Rev. J. McLaren Cobban and "A Manchester Unitarian" came too late for this week.

MARRIAGE.

COBB—WILLIAMS—On October 2, at Stanley, Falkland Islands, George Arthur, third son of Edward Cobb, Esq., of Bath, to Julia Mary Augusta, third daughter of C. H. Williams, Esq., of Port Edgar and Weddell Island, Falkland Islands.

DEATH.

FOX—On the 14th inst., at the Parsonage, Park-lane, near Wigan, Beatrice Jane, the wife of the Rev. George Fox, aged 58 years.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 24.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTED, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
Rev. CHAS. VOYSEY, at Laugham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

BOURNEMOUTH.

Rev. ALFRED HOOD, at the Town Hall Buildings, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

* * Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Adams's (W. H. D.) Celebrated Women Travellers of the Nineteenth Century, 3/6
Allen's (G.) Colin Clout's Calendar, the Record of a Summer, April to October, 6/
Buxton's (Rev. H. J. Wilmot) The Children's Bread, Short Sermons to Children, 3/6
Hefele's (Right Rev. C. J.) History of the Councils of the Church, Vol. 3, 12/
Lang's (L. B.) Geography, edited by Rev. M. Creighton, Vol. 2, 3/
Macmillan's (Rev. H.) The Marriage in Cana, 6/
Mackintosh's (Mrs.) Damascus and its People, Sketches of Modern Life in Syria, 3/6
Momerie's (Rev. A. W.) Defects of Modern Christianity, and other Sermons, 5/
Pelliccia's (A. A.) The Polity of the Christian Church, translated by Rev. J. C. Bellett, 15/
Rossetti (Dante Gabriel), a Record and a Study, by W. Sharp, 10/6
Tippie's (S. A.) Sunday Mornings at Norwood, Prayers and Sermons, 6/
Thomson's (W. M.) The Land and the Book, Central Palestine and Phœnicia, 21/

Mr. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

TO BE LET, furnished, from March next, for twelve or six months, by a lady going abroad, a Small HOUSE, with good fruit and vegetable garden, and flower garden in front. Drawing and dining rooms and well-stocked library; five or six bedrooms and dressing room, also attics; good piano; small conservatory opening from drawing room. The house is well situated on gravel soil, and supplied with good water, and in a pretty village six miles from sea and one from station (Darsham) on main line. From a careful tenant or small family a low rent would be taken.—Terms, &c., on application to Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk.

WANTED, a respectable middle-aged woman as Working Housekeeper to a widow lady with children. Must be a strict teetotaler, and capable at times of undertaking entire management of household.—Apply to M. X., F. Hewitt, Caxton House, Leicester.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S

CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY

FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM,
AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

New Edition, the Ninth Thousand, Revised and Enlarged,
100 pages, 8vo., price 1s., post free.

THOUGHTS ON THEISM,

WITH

SUGGESTIONS TOWARDS A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN HARMONY WITH MODERN
SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

"Dealing with religious progress and advance, it contains matter and suggestions which should be read especially by members of Assemblies and all interested in the foundations of religion."—GLASGOW HERALD.

"Its pages are enriched with numerous extracts from the most eminent divines, metaphysicians, and scientists of modern times."—SHEWSEBURY FREE PRESS.

London: TREUBNER and Co., Ludgate hill.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN
BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band
of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Burnby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

NOW READY.

LAW OF LIFE AFTER THE MIND
OF CHRIST. By JOHN HAMILTON THOM. Crown
8vo. cloth, 7s. 6d.

London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND CO.

CLARE STELLAR.

A New Novel in 2 vols. By Mrs. J. CALBRAITH LUNN, Author of "Only Eve," "The Masters of Claythorpe,"
&c., &c.

A Book for Girls.

REMINGTON AND Co., 134, New Bond-street, London, W.

WORKS BY JOHN STUART MILL.

The Tenth Edition, in 2 vols. 8vo. price 25s.

A SYSTEM OF LOGIC, Ratiocinative and Inductive. By JOHN STUART MILL. By the same:—

PRINCIPLES OF POLITICAL ECONOMY, with some of their Applications to Social Philosophy. People's Edition, crown 8vo. 5s. Library Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 30s.

London, LONGMANS AND Co.

LATEST EDITION OF ROGET'S ENGLISH THESAURUS.

In large crown 8vo. pp. 714, price 10s. 6d. cloth.

THESAURUS OF ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES, classified and arranged so as to Facilitate the Expression of Ideas and Assist in Literary Composition. By P. M. ROGER, M.D., F.R.S., &c. Re-composed throughout, enlarged and improved, partly from the Author's Notes, and with a full Index, by the Author's Son, JOHN LEWIS ROGET.

London, LONGMANS AND Co.

A MINISTER, living within two minutes' walk of Hampstead Heath, desires to take into his house three or four BOYS as Boarders. There are several very good schools in the neighbourhood, and University College School is within easy distance. The district is one of the prettiest and healthiest suburbs of London. Personal attention will be given to the home lessons, and care taken to provide all the comforts of a first-class home.—For list of schools, terms, references, &c., address H., INQUIRER Office.

EDWARD T. WHITFIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 178, STRAND, W.C.

E. T. WHITFIELD begs to inform his Friends and Customers that he now keeps a very large stock of GENERAL AND FANCY STATIONERY, and that he executes orders for every kind of Die-Sinking, Stamping, and Engraving. Parcels amounting to £1 sent Carriage Free.

Card Plate Engraved, and Fifty Cards with name only, Gentlemen's or Ladies' size, 2s. 6d.; Addresses, 9d. per line extra.

Five Quires of Note Paper and 100 Envelopes, stamped with Monogram or Lady's Name, 4s.

Rubber Stamps, both for marking Linen and for Business Purposes, at very low prices.

Christmas, New Year, and Birthday Cards, in great variety.

E. T. W. continues to supply UNITARIAN and all other Books, post-free, at the Publishers'
Prices, from One Shilling upwards.

PRIZE ESSAY, AWARDED FIFTY GUINEAS.

"THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGIN OF THE DOG-TRINE OF THE TRINITY IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH."

Bound in cloth, post free for 2s. 6d., or 30 penny stamps.
Five Copies, carriage free, for 10s.

Address, JOHN TOYE, Christian Life Office, 281, Strand,
London, W.C.

The following are the words of a Barrister (and University Lecturer) on the above work:—

"For more than twenty years past I have been an assiduous reader of both sides of the Trinitarian controversy. That controversy involves so many difficult inquiries, and suggests so many collateral questions, that it is impossible to obtain a comprehensive view of it without reading many different books. But the real pith of the matter may be summed up in a simple issue. . . .
This little book Mr. Spears now offers omits all minor points in the controversy, and wisely limits itself to the discussion of the fundamental question. It discusses it so clearly, so concisely, and yet so exhaustively, as to form an invaluable manual for all busy readers; whilst its courteous tone and reverent spirit will render it acceptable even to those whose views it controverts. I know no other book, large or small, which deals so effectively with this most important subject."

A BARRISTER.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts
opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge
the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL
RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office
the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with
Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE
HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS.—Nothing is so
highly appreciated as a case of GRANT'S MORELLA
CHERRY BRANDY, which can be ordered of any Wine
Merchant. Queen's quality, as supplied to Her Majesty, 42s. per dozen; Sportsman's special quality, 50s. per dozen.—Manufacturer, T. GRANT, Distillery, Maidstone.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION.

NOTICE.—The NEXT MEETING of the COUNCIL will be held at the Office of the Association, on WED-NESDAY, January 17, 1883, at 3 o'clock.

A WELCOME MEETING will be held in the Evening of the same day, to receive Dr. W. B. CARPENTER and the Rev. J. PAGE HOPPS, the deputation to the late American Conference at Saratoga.

HENRY IERSON, Secretary.
37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London.

MINISTERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

President.—TIMOTHY KENRICK.
Treasurer.—J. ARTHUR KENRICK, Berrow-court, Edgbaston, Birmingham.

REPORT OF ADDITIONAL SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS.

	£	s.	d.
An Aged Friend, Exeter (Don.)	...	50	0
Smith, Miss A., Leicester (Don.)	...	10	0
Nettlefold, Hugh, Birmingham (An. Sub.)	1	1	0
New, Herbert, Jun., Birmingham (An. Sub.)	...	1	1
Randall, Jno., Birmingham (An. Sub.)	...	1	1
Smith, Howard S., Birmingham (An. Sub.)	1	1	0

"PROGRESS AND POVERTY." An Answer to Mr. HENRY GEORGE.

TWO LECTURES (of which the dates and subjects are subjoined) will be delivered in St. Andrew's Hall, Newman-street, Oxford-street, W., by ARNOLD TOYNBEE, Esq., M.A. (Senior Bursar and Lecturer on Political Economy at Balliol College, Oxford), in answer to Mr.
Henry George's "Progress and Poverty."

1883, Thursday, Jan. 11th.—Mr. George in California.
Thursday, Jan. 18th.—Mr. George in England.

The Chair will be taken on each Evening by Professor E. S. BRESLY, M.A., at 8 o'clock precisely. Discussion is invited.

Admission Free. A limited number of tickets for Reserved Seats will be issued at 2s. 6d. for each lecture.
Apply (enclosing stamps or postal order) to the Rev.
PHILIP H. WICKSTED, M.A., 7, Regent's Park Villas, Gloucester-gate, N.W.

BRENTWOOD, WORSLEY, Near MANCHESTER.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Principal ... MRS. F. SHAWCROSS,
late of Brook House, Knutsford.—For prospectus, apply to the Principal, or to Messrs. J. GALT and Co., Manchester.

CASTLE HOWELL SCHOOL, LANCASTER.

The FIRST TERM of the New Year will begin on FRIDAY, January 19. Vacancies.

Present Address, Rev. D. DAVIS, care of Miss Davis, Almswood, Evesham.

SOUTHPORT.—MISS LEWIN and MISS HARRIET LEWIN (late Miss Lawford and Miss Lewin) will RE-OPEN their SCHOOL for BOYS on THURSDAY, January 18.

DINGFIELD, WATERLOO-ROAD, BIRKDALE.

They wish to call attention to the change of address.

BRIGHTON.—MISS HODGES (late Miss JANE SMITH and Miss HODGES) will re-open her School for Little BOYS, on WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24.

102, Lansdowne-place.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G.

HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

CLIFTON.—The Rev. W. HARGRAVE, M.A. Lond., receives a limited number of BOYS to board and educate. Long experience in teaching; special attention to delicate or backward boys.—Address, 8, Oakland-road, Redland, Bristol.

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certi- ficate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by corres- pondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials.— Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

AN experienced TEACHER, holding the St. Andrew's LL.A. Degree for Women, wishes to meet with a morning engagement. Subjects:—English, Music, French, German, and Elementary Latin.—Ad- dress, E. N., INQUIRER Office.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APART- MENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.

Address, Mrs. Stabæk, Lansdowne Lodge, the For Margate.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday December 23, 1882

The Inquirer.

A Religious, Political, & Literary Newspaper, & Record of Revereint Free Thought

[REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.]

No. 2114.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1882.

[PRICE 5D.]

CONTENTS.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES:—

On Choosing an Archbishop	837
Bishop Ellicott on the Signs of the Times	837
Renan's Autobiography.—IV.	838
"Progress and Poverty."	839
1882	840

OCCASIONAL NOTES

REVIEWS:—

History of the Egyptian Religion	845
Clare Stellar	845
Short Notices	846
Literary Notes	846

CORRESPONDENCE:—

The Rev. J. MacLaren Cobban	846
------------------------------------	-----

OUR CONTEMPORARIES

THE LIBERAL PULPIT:—

Job and his Comforters	848
-------------------------------	-----

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE:—

East Anglian Association of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches: Annual Meetings... ..	848
--	-----

OBITUARY:—

The Rev. James Taplin	850
------------------------------	-----

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

At the beginning of the New Year the price of the INQUIRER will be reduced from 5d. to 2d. weekly. See detailed notice in another column.

ON CHOOSING AN ARCHBISHOP.

It has been quite amusing to observe how earnestly the question has been discussed as to what are the qualities necessary to make up a suitable Archbishop of Canterbury. Ever since the death of Dr. TAIT was announced the papers—we are not sure some of them did not begin before—have been speculating on this difficult matter. It seems to have presented a problem which each paper claimed to be the only one able to solve. Of course no two were agreed as to which dignity would be the right man in the right place. Political leanings and ecclesiastical leanings biassed more or less the judgment of each. The circle to choose from was small, and the merits and demerits of the eligible candidates have been discussed in a manner that must have been highly edifying to the men themselves. If they believed all that has been said about them they must think themselves wonderfully gifted in some things, and wonderfully lacking in others. Bishop A has learning, but is wanting interest. Bishop B has tact, but is inferior to A in learning. The ecclesiastical leanings of Bishop C are somewhat too high, those of Bishop D decidedly too low, while Bishop F, albeit he is an able and energetic man in his present diocese, must stand aside because he is certainly too broad. The matter of age, too, enters as an important element into the question. This prelate, acceptable in all other respects, is unfortunately a little too old. That one, although an ornament to the Church on account of his superior scholarship, "has not yet won his spurs as an administrator." A Dean, too, whose high accomplishments are acknowledged on all hands, is unfortunately in so feeble a state of health that he would not be equal to the requirements of so trying a post. Some qualities are generally recognised to be indispensable. First of all the Archbishop must be a man of tact. The present critical state of parties in the Church makes this quality more needful perhaps than any other. Whatever else a man might be if he is wanting in tact this defect disqualifies him at once. The clergy are difficult to manage—some of them require to be coaxed and humoured like spoilt children. Party feeling runs very high in certain quarters. It is difficult to deal with eccentric clergymen who have their own benefices and are masters of the situation in their respective localities. All this makes it especially important that the new Primate should be a man of tact. Then he must not be a man of war, but of peace—a man of conciliating speech and manner. He has to endeavour to preserve peace between rival parties. He has to smooth down bitter contentions and animosities, and discourage earnestly whatever may lead to a breach of the peace in the Anglican Church. The paramount importance of all this was recognised by the late Archbishop in his last illness. Further, the new Primate must not be a man of very pronounced views one way or the other. He must not be a Ritualist nor decidedly Evangelical, nor belong to the Broad Church section. He must be a moderate man, sympathising in some degree with all schools of thought in the Church, having something in him that makes him not unacceptable to each party. He has to hold the balance with an even hand, and make himself acceptable at once to the Court, the clergy and the people. Well may the question be asked by the Primate as it was by PAUL, "Who can be sufficient for these things?" It would seem necessary that a man should be made expressly and endowed with all the gifts and graces of perfect manhood in order to satisfy every requirement. It is surprising how little has been said about piety as a necessary qualification for this high office. Intellectual gifts, scholarly attainments, party leanings, these points have been discussed ad nauseam, but the specially religious qualifications have been passed over very lightly.

And now the new Primate has been appointed. It must be left to experience to justify the appointment. We can only say it called forth no enthusiasm. It seems to have been a prudent choice. As safe a man as could well be found has been put in the vacant place. Dr. BENSON is not an extreme man—not a party man in any narrow sense. He has proved himself to be a good organiser, and to possess high administrative capacity. He is credited with liberal leanings in politics, and were it not for one imprudent speech—so imprudent that we expect he will always regret it—we should say he was favourably inclined towards the Dissenters. And he is of an age that leaves him the prospect of many years of usefulness. In the ripeness of his powers, and with a varied experience behind him, he has been raised to the highest position in the Church. Of course he does not realise every body's ideal, and some Church dignitaries who have been passed over will perhaps think themselves aggrieved, but those who had to make the choice think him, all things considered, the best man for the post. We hope that his appointment will tend to promote the interests of religious freedom and liberal Christianity.

BISHOP ELLICOTT ON THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER AND BRISTOL is a convert to the belief that the end of the present dispensation is close at hand. Preaching at St. Werburgh's Church, Bristol, on Sunday morning, from the text—"Your redemption draweth nigh," he said there were not wanting signs in the present day that seemed to point to the event indicated in the text. One sign of the times, serious beyond all words, was that of unbelief, which was present among them in many strange forms, and recalled the saying of JESUS, "When the Son of Man cometh will he find faith on the earth? What did these words seem to say? That there would be plenty of unbelief of all kinds, but that faith would be wanting. And was not this the state of things to-day? The inference then seemed to him pretty clear, that this was the time anticipated by CHRIST as that of his second coming.

The wide-spread unbelief in the traditional Christianity seems to be the one distressing feature of the times ever present to the mind of Bishop ELLICOTT. Repeatedly in this journal we have drawn attention to this marked peculiarity. And his dread of this prevailing unbelief seems to grow upon him. "It was worse now than in the days of Bishop BUTLER. The unbelief which existed in his time was not that which had to be recognised and confronted now. Now it had two serious marks, which it had not had, so far as he knew, in the whole history of the Church. What were these marks? First of all, unbelief now was very often found co-existent with what they were bound to speak of as a moral and in many cases a philanthropic life."

Well, ought it not to be matter of congratulation that unbelief may exist without immorality? that all unbelievers are not immoral people, nay, that some are known by their high moral character? Surely, however unfortunate unbelief in itself may be, it is greatly ameliorated by this circumstance. But the Bishop seems to think it an aggravation of the evil. "What a painful sign it is," he says, "showing that the poor human soul worked out its own kind of dim feelings" of morality, "and that in that place where there should be the Holy Spirit the spirit of anti-Christ was sitting, reigning and ruling. Perhaps this co-existence of unbelief and morality, and often philanthropy, was one of the most serious of present phenomena!" It seems extraordinary that a teacher of religion should speak in this way. To us it seems to reveal an utterly perverted state of feeling. Is it not better that an Atheist and Agnostic should be moral than that he should be immoral? Apparently the Bishop does not think so. It is an aggravation of his unbelief that he can be moral at the same time. It seems to him the saddest thing of all that a man of virtuous character can dispense with religious belief. Besides, if the spirit of a man's life be moral and philanthropic, how can it be said that anti-Christ is sitting and reigning in his heart? Was not CHRIST moral and philanthropic? Was he anything in a higher degree than in this? To be like-minded with him in this respect is surely something in the unbeliever's favour. We differ, then, altogether from the Bishop on this point, and marvel at the unwisdom of his view.

The second novel but terrible feature of modern unbelief was that in certain countries, our own among the number, it was assuming somewhat of a national character. "What strange revelations there had been in the sister country of France! There they had seen the State interposing against religion; the very signs of their blessed Christian faith had been removed from the gateways of cemeteries; the official character of the ministers of religion was not recognised. It was ever a dreadful thing when a nation, as a nation, thus set itself against religion, and the majesty of Almighty God. In their own country there were things that caused them great pain. In their schools, for instance, the State did not recognise religion by any action of inspectors or otherwise. There was a gradual separation of the State from religion; and when their minds dwelt on those things they felt that they were living in anxious times." This is no doubt a striking feature of the age. In times gone by, in all the countries of Europe, the State has been the slave of the national religion. The State has exercised its authority to carry out the decrees of the Church. The interests of the Church have stood first, and those of the State second. A foreign ecclesiastic assuming to speak in the name of GOD was the lord of earthly kings. The Church claimed to be supreme, and all secular rulers were expected to acknowledge its authority, and so the State was not merely united with the Church but held in subjection to it. Such was the state of things all through the Middle Ages. With the Protestant Reformation a great change began—only began. Since that time it has been going on, and in recent times with revolutionary effect, until now the old state of things has passed away. The State has emancipated itself from the thralldom of the Church, and has resolved to manage its own affairs in its own way. On the whole, this is a great change for the better, and however ecclesiastics may deplore it, they may rest assured that a return to the old state of things, or anything like it, is impossible. It seems certain that in the time to come the Church will have to depend on its own merits and efforts, and the State will permit no meddling of the Church in its affairs. It would have been well both for the Church and the State if this had been the understanding—the line of conduct pursued all through.

"Another sign of the times was the distress of nations. If they asked the judgment of any man who stood foremost in the councils of Europe at the present time what would it be as to the condition of the nations that composed the Continent, taken as a whole? Was there peace among them? Was the love of peace developing itself? Let them turn for an answer to their large standing armies, their newly-constructed ironclads, to the silent mustering of troops on the frontiers, and to the signs of unrest and disquietude that were visible here and there." It is true this also is a marked feature of the time; not only Churchmen deplore it, but all thoughtful men. The ascendancy of the warlike spirit is regretted by all except those whose interests it serves, and those who have a passion for military glory. The heads of the Church may well feel grieved at the extravagant popularity of the soldier and his destructive work. But is it not a reproach to the Christian Church that the war spirit should prevail in Christendom as it does to-day, and that the sole ground of trust for security is in the large army which any nation on an emergency can equip and put in the field? Are battalions, cannon, and ironclads the Christian ground of trust? We are not surprised that Bishop ELLICOTT should point to this as an unhappy feature of the times. It is an eminently unsatisfactory result to arrive at after Christianity has been preached in Europe for eighteen centuries, and has had the whole continent to itself for more than a thousand years. Certainly it lends some colour to the statements that the national life of the nations of Europe is as alien almost as possible to the spirit of the Gospel.

But the Bishop finds one sign of the times hopeful after all. The Gospel is being preached more widely than ever, and is winning its way in idolatrous countries all over the globe. Everywhere the native pastorate was developing itself. "There were hundreds of parishes in India, especially in the southern part, which might be favourably contrasted with many of their English parishes, in which there was the loving daily worship of GOD, and the converted ones brought their little offerings of rice to sustain the ministers of the Gospel in their midst." We believe that missionary effort is meeting with more success now than it used to obtain. The fact seems to be that it is losing ground in countries where it has been master of the situation for centuries, and is gaining ground in other countries where it is offered as a new faith. The satisfaction at its increase in one direction is marred by the consideration of its decline in another.

From these features of the time—the prevalence of unbelief, the distress of nations, the political unrest, the warlike tendencies of nations, and the wide diffusion of Christianity—the Bishop comes to the conclusion, "that the blessed sign of the LORD'S coming was in some degree being disclosed and revealed to them, and that when the remotest tribe had heard the blessed message, the text would be completely fulfilled, and the LORD would come." That we must leave; we can only say that the belief in the speedy return of CHRIST has been the faith of the Church since the time of PAUL. And still it is delayed, to the disappointment of millions, who live in the hope that in their time the end would come, and their own eyes behold JESUS as a living presence on the earth. However, let those who can believe it still, and receive such consolation as their faith can give them.

HALE.—The Rev. C. D. Badland, M.A., late of Derby, has received and accepted an invitation to the pulpit at Hale, near Altrincham.

RENAN'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.—IV.

M. RENAN'S admirers, and they are numerous throughout the world, will regret that his autobiographical sketches are confined to his childhood and youth, and that they have to take leave of him so soon after he broke with his teachers. Still, what he adds with regard to the influence of the latter is of great, if not equal interest. Painful as the change really was, his true being remained the same, he says. The moral direction of his life, too, was but slightly altered; his yearning for truth was not diminished. St. Sulpice had made so deep an impression upon his life that he remained for years a St. Sulpician, not from religious belief but from personal habits. Faith was gone, as they understood it, but morality remained; the objective had vanished, the subjective continued to permeate his daily life as much as ever. When he takes a retrospect of his life he sees, he says, that it has been but a manifestation or development of the good qualities and defects of his old masters. The only difference is that these virtues and defects have been alike transferred to the active battle of life, and have led therefore to curious results. "Since I left St. Sulpice I have done nothing but deteriorate (je n'ai fait que baisser), and yet with but the fourth part of the virtues of a St. Sulpician, I think I may claim to be above the average." There are four virtues, he says, which sum up the moral teaching of the good fathers who surrounded him till he was twenty-three, and which they taught "above all by their example":—Disinterestedness or poverty, modesty, politeness and morals. We could wish it were possible for us to translate and transpose to our columns all, or nearly all, M. RENAN has to say here, since by a species of moral anatomy he reviews his life in relation to each of these four virtues, not in order to raise himself, he remarks, in the eyes of the world, "but to furnish those who profess the philosophy of an amiable moral scepticism an occasion for some of their subtle observations in relation to character."

On the first head he says that a man who devotes himself to disinterested work is a minor as regards the affairs of the world and he needs a guardian; that the world, is large enough for all to find their proper place in it; and that poverty is the clerical virtue which he has kept best of all. His dream, he remarks, has always been to be lodged, clothed, fed, and generally cared for without having to think of such things himself, and with the full possession of his liberty. He adds that he never imagined the product of his thought could possess any pecuniary value. He had been impelled to write, but he had no idea it would bring him a sou. He was therefore greatly astonished when a publisher, M. MICHEL LEVY, came to him one day and made him an offer for his works which seemed to him astonishingly generous. M. MICHEL LEVY must have been created, he remarks, by a special decree of Providence to be his publisher, since he not only acted thus generously at the outset, but offered still more favourable terms at a later time. Still, though his own unworldliness had led him to happiness, he would not, he says, have others follow his example. The present condition of society will not admit of this. There is, however, something touchingly beautiful in the following words:—"I shall leave the world without having possessed anything beyond that which passes away in the use of it according to the Franciscan rule. Every time I have contemplated buying a plot of land anywhere a voice within has prevented me. "It has seemed to me gross material, and in opposition to the principle: Non habemus hic manentem civitatem." So far as modesty is concerned it is difficult, we are rightly told, for a man to prove he possesses it, to say that he does is to negative his own affirmation in its utterance. His old masters held that a man should never say either good or bad of himself. So far as authors are concerned, the public are the great corrupter, says M. RENAN, "and, he adds, "A man succeeds chiefly by his defects. When I am thoroughly satisfied with myself I find some ten persons ready to approve of what I have done; when, however, I yield myself up to a perilous course in which my literary conscience hesitates to give its sanction and my hand trembles, thousands urge me to go forward." This statement may be left without comment; our readers will be able to make it for themselves.

With regard to the question of politeness, it is easier to speak of this, says our author, and he goes on to state that the old style of polished manners is only fitted now to make dupes of those who resort to it. You give, but no one gives you anything in return. "First come, first served," is the sad motto of modern selfishness. This necessitates a change all round. "To observe, in a form of society, no longer based upon politeness, the rules of good manners and refined feeling, as they existed in other days, would be to play the part of a veritable simpleton, for which no one would thank you. As soon as a person finds himself pressed forward by anyone who wishes to get in front of him the old rule would be to step back and say with a dignified air, 'Pass on, sir.' But it is certain that he who might act upon this rule in the matter of an omnibus, for instance, would be the victim of his deference, and I doubt whether he would not be regarded as failing to observe the proper rule of precedence in a crowd. In railway travelling, again, how many people are there who feel that rushing forward to get the best places is an act of the grossest rudeness? In short, our democratic doctrines exclude politeness. I have long since given up making use of the omnibuses; the conductors had come to regard me as a man who had no serious intention to travel by their vehicles. In the case of a railway journey I always get the last place, unless I happen to be under the special protection of a station-master." With respect to morals he adds, "A man should never defy the world by entering upon two bold courses at the same time. He who is known to hold liberal principles of thought should be specially careful not to violate the common standard of morals. I know Protestant ministers possessed of broad social ideas who save all by their irreproachably white necktie, and in a similar manner I have escaped reproach, thanks to a moderate style, and 'gravity of manners.'"

As regards those theological beliefs which are still interwoven with the hopes and fears of humanity, our author says, "I have enjoyed the present life so much that I have certainly no right to ask for compensation beyond the tomb; it is from another point of view that I grow angry with death, which is regardless of circumstances to a degree that irritates me, being a democrat who strikes us all with the same sudden and resistless blows. . . . I receive several times a year a letter, always in the same handwriting, and containing these words, 'If, however, there be a hell.' Assuredly the pious person who writes me thus desires my salvation, and I thank him. But hell is an hypothesis which harmonises but little with what we know of the divine goodness in other matters. Besides, in all honesty, if there is one I do not think I have deserved it. A short stay in Purgatory would, perhaps, be just. I should be willing to take my chance since paradise would come afterwards." . . . Then he adds in a more serious tone, "The boundless goodness I have met with in the present world inspires me with the conviction that eternity is pervaded by at least an equal degree (non moindre) of goodness, and in this I have absolute confidence." A disclaimer of anything he may say against his nobler convictions in the hour of possible weakness, and an appeal to "RENAN, healthy in head and heart," brings to a close this deeply interesting autobiography.

"PROGRESS AND POVERTY."

A few months ago we reviewed Mr. George's "Progress and Poverty," and lately noticed the cheap reissue, which has drawn renewed attention to a very remarkable work. We shall now indicate the grounds on which there is good reason to believe that unless it can be answered (and it has not been answered yet) it will soon be acknowledged as by far the most important work in its social consequences that our generation or our century has seen.

Such language may well seem exaggerated and inflated, and yet a little reflection will suffice to show that there is nothing intrinsically improbable in the appearance at this time of a work to which it might be applied in all soberness.

Political Economy has long professed to explain the laws of the production and distribution of "wealth" in a strictly scientific spirit; and all of us who have both hearts and heads have long looked to her, with unspeakable longings and expectations, for the word of guidance and the ray of light which should enable us to see where the industrial sore really is that drains the strength of the labouring masses, while the fortunate few grow ever richer and richer. Which one of us is there who at this Christmas season has not again and again felt a sudden pang shoot through his heart as he sits by his fireside when the vision of gaunt and hungry want outside has started up before him, rendered all the more appalling by its contrast with the warmth and brightness that surround him? Which one of us has not felt as though the shadow of a curse fell across the purity and comfort of his home when he is told that it is the outcome of a "struggle for existence," in which he is the winner, and the pauper and the harlot the losers? Which one of us has not demanded, now with a passionate expostulation, now with a dull aching protest, the reason why England, the wealthiest country in the world, should also be the poorest; why the land in which all the means of life and enjoyment are most abundant should be that in which they are hardest to get and are most unevenly distributed, why the vast accumulations of our wealth bring no relief to our poverty, why our labour-saving inventions have "not lightened the day's toil to a single human being?"

We have looked to Political Economy for an answer to these questions. The remedy may be found when we understand the disease. At present we ask not "how are these things to be removed?" But "why are these things here?" And Political Economy has given no answers which are on the face of them absurd and untrue. She has said "in the nature of things it is not the wealth but the capital, or some part of the capital of a community that determines the remuneration of labour. However much the products of labour are needed, and however willing labour may be to produce them, unless there is capital free to set labour in action nothing can be done. Conversely, inasmuch as the demand for commodities is unlimited, capital can always find suitable directions in which to employ labour. Thus if there is free capital and free labour they must find each other. If there is not free capital, then labour must starve. Want of employment means want of capital." But as a fact we see long periods of "depression," in which capital is going about begging, labour going about idle, and men, women, and children starving for want of the very things that labour and capital could give them. There is the demand in the naked and starving family. There is the supply in the willing hands of the father. There is the means of bringing them into practical connection with each other in the abundant capital seeking exactly such a mission, and the capital and labour lie idle while the children cry for food. Let it not be said that we have pointed to no "effective" or "economic" demand in the wants of children who have nothing to give in return for their satisfaction. Economically, the wants of the children are the wants of the father; and were he at work his "supply" would constitute an "effective demand" for the products of another's labour. We have, therefore, all the conditions of industry actually or potentially present. Wants to supply, power to supply them, and a prospect of remunerative employment of capital in bringing them together, and yet remain divorced.

Or, Political Economy tells us that "population is pressing against the limits of subsistence, and that unless the increase of the population is checked, poverty must still deepen." But we find that where, ceteris paribus, population is thickest wealth per head is often, if not always, highest. We find that, ceteris paribus, where population increases wealth increases at a greater ratio. We find that in Ireland the gradual expatriation of a nation is being executed, and with decreasing population poverty is lightened by no shade.

Or, lastly, we are told that if people are poor it is "their own fault;" and we, in our comfort and happiness, stand with bowed heads in the presence of poverty, struggling, too often in vain, to hold the hand of famine from the very throat with a heroic determination, before which we are absorbed and humbled. Is it "their own fault"? "Eh! mon Dieu, monseigneur, c'est qu'on veut que le pauvre soit sans défaut. . . . Aux vertus qu'on exige dans un domestique, Votre Excellence connaît-elle beaucoup de maitres qui fussent dignes d'être valets?"

In a word, we have looked to Political Economy for the solution of its problem, and hope deferred has made the heart sick. The conviction remains that the problem though unsolved, is not in its nature insoluble.

Now Mr. George professes to have solved it. Clearing away the confusions and false issues that have baulked Political Economy for a century he enables us to draw the natural and immediate deductions from that portion of its theory which is most firmly established and most obviously true—the theory of rent. In this he finds the solution of the problem of "Progress and Poverty." He also believes himself to have discovered the remedy for the evil. To discuss this is premature till we are sure that he has found out the nature of the disease.

His book has been published for several years. It has been read by the economists. It is being spread through the length and breadth of the land by thousands, and it is unanswered. We are far from saying that it is unanswerable. Indeed, we have thought it our first duty in the matter to secure from some competent representative of the science of economics a more serious criticism of the book than has yet appeared; and we are gratified in being able to announce that the eminent economist, Mr. Arnold Toynbee, M.A., has consented to deliver two lectures in answer to Mr. George on January 11 and 18.

If Mr. George's theories pass victoriously through this, as they have done through other ordeals, we shall hope to lay before our readers in a series of communications the main lines of his argument. If on the other hand Mr. Toynbee succeeds in pointing out a radical defect in Mr. George's work, any of us who have been instrumental in bringing about such a result may have the melancholy satisfaction of knowing that, while helping to dash the brightest and noblest hopes that this or any one of many preceding centuries has seen, we have at least helped to drag generous enthusiasm out of a fool's paradise and set it again to its weary work of groping in blindness and wrestling in detail with an evil it cannot comprehend as a whole; but we shall not cease to say that the industrial problem, though still unsolved, is not insoluble. If the answer has not come now it will surely come in God's good time.

P. H. W.

1882.

Among the years of the present reign, we may almost say of the present century, there is hardly one that equals in interest that which is, as we write, just passing away. Viewed either politically or socially it is an annus mirabilis, while from a religious point of view it has, certainly to ourselves, much to mark it out for special notice. We commence our review of the year by first recording what has taken place in regard to

POLITICS.

Whatever hope had been entertained by sanguine politicians that the vigorous measures taken by the Government, combined with the handsome concessions to the Irish tenants, would lead to peace and contentment in that country, had been fully dissipated before Parliament met in February. While a very large number of persons had sought to avail themselves of the provisions of the Land Act, the "No Rent" manifesto, published by the League directly the Government had arrested its leaders, had appealed to the cupidity of others, who entertained the hope that they would be able to set aside the ordinary laws of honesty without having to pay the usual penalty. No doubt there was at the same time much real distress, which gave a colour to the demands made for further concessions. It must, too, be admitted that the coercive policy of the Government, which consisted in arresting and detaining without trial men suspected of crime, had failed; Kilmainham became a sort of half-way house to parliamentary or municipal honours, and crime was almost as rife as ever.

In this state of affairs Parliament met on the 7th of February. The Speech from the Throne made no reference to further legislation with respect to Ireland, but congratulated Parliament on the fact that there was an improvement in the state of affairs there. It also promised the introduction of measures for which both England and Scotland have waited very patiently, but which, as will be seen, still remain to be dealt with. Reference was also made to the question of procedure, which, owing to the obstructive tactics of a small knot of men, had become one of pressing importance. On the first day of the Session Mr. Bradlaugh claimed to take the oath; Sir Stafford Northcote moved that he be not allowed to go through the form, to which the Home Secretary moved the previous question, and, after a short debate, the motion of the Conservative leader was carried by 286 votes to 228. A fortnight later Mr. Labouchere moved that a new writ be issued for Northampton, but this was successfully opposed. Thereupon Mr. Bradlaugh advanced to the table, and taking up a Testament, read the words of the oath from a paper he had with him. This led to a violent scene, and to a motion by Sir Stafford Northcote that Mr. Bradlaugh be expelled the House, which was carried by a majority of 117, and a new writ was issued for a fresh election for Northampton. A close contest took place there between Mr. Bradlaugh and Mr. Corbett, but the former was again elected. Three days afterwards the Conservative leader moved that the resolution previously carried on the 7th of February be affirmed, and this was carried by fifteen votes. With the exception of claiming on a subsequent occasion the right to present a petition, which was rejected by the Speaker, this closed for the Session Mr. Bradlaugh's parliamentary appearances, and as the matter now stands, a constituency is illegally and unconstitutionally deprived of its right of representation, and Mr. Bradlaugh, by his forbearance, has entitled himself to the strongest possible claim for a more righteous treatment.

The debate on the Address, which usually does not occupy more than two days in the Commons, was prolonged for a week, almost entirely by Irish members. Not only was the Address itself debated, but the report thereon was made the subject of discussion. Meanwhile, in the House of Lords, the Earl of Donoughmore moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the working of the Irish Land Act. This motion, though opposed by the Government as being premature, was carried. The Government declared that they would take no part in the Committee, and in the House of Commons Mr. Gladstone moved, and, after a four days' debate, carried a resolution to the effect that the proposed inquiry would defeat the objects of the Act and injure the interests of good government in Ireland. This debate had intervened between the discussions on rules of procedure, which had been proposed by the Government, and which aimed at preventing small minorities obstructing the progress of legislation by diminishing the opportunities of debate. Owing to the pressure of other business, it became necessary to deal with this matter at a special autumn Session. The rule, which was the subject of the keenest struggle, was that which provided for the closing of any debate by a bare majority, a rule which, but for the safeguards surrounding it, might no doubt be a very considerable limitation of the liberty of speech. Amendments aimed at making the necessary majority larger were discussed at much length, but substantially the propositions of the Government were carried in their entirety.

The prolonged debates already alluded to had the effect of postponing until a somewhat late period the Budget proposals. The principal alteration which the Chancellor of the Exchequer suggested was to lighten the highway rates, in conformity with a promise previously made, but as a set off against this he proposed to increase the carriage duties. This part of the scheme was, however, abandoned, and later on, in order to met the expenditure incurred in respect of the Egyptian expedition, an increase of threepence in the pound in the income-tax for a half year was agreed to.

IRISH AFFAIRS.

Notwithstanding the stringent provisions of the Act which had been passed in the previous year it had become clear that the policy with which the name of Mr. Forster was identified was wholly inadequate to meet the state of affairs. Some clamoured for more coercive measures, while others thought that a wholly new policy was required. Even among the Conservatives, who, as a body, were far warmer supporters of Mr. Forster than many who sat on the other side of the House, some had expressed themselves shocked at the condition of affairs, which allowed hundreds of persons to lie in jail simply on suspicion. Besides Mr. Forster himself had declared that he had not been so successful as he had expected. The time was fast approaching when the Government would have to make up their minds as to the course they would adopt on the expiration of the powers given them by the existing Act. In the course of a debate connected with Irish affairs, which took place just before the Easter recess, the Government evinced a willingness to deal with the question of arrears of rent, which pressed very heavily on the Irish tenants. During the recess Mr. Parnell was released from Kilmainham on parole, to attend the funeral of a relative in Paris. In the debate just referred to an indication had been given by some of the Irish members that they were willing to throw their influence on the side of good government, provided the Arrears question was disposed of. All this strengthened very considerably the hands of those who advocated a conciliatory policy. On the 26th of April Mr. Gladstone announced that an Arrears of Rent Bill would be brought forward at an early date, and six days later Messrs. Parnell (who had returned to jail), Dillon and O'Kelly were released from Kilmainham, and, shortly after, Michael Davitt was released from Portland Prison. Mr. Forster strongly objected to this new departure, and he and Earl Cowper resigned. His supporters on the Conservative side of the House seemed to think that he was the victim of some cabal in the Ministry, and that the release of the three Irish members was in accordance with some secret treaty between them and the Government. Mr. Forster by his conduct lent some colour to this; but it was conclusively proved that there was not a shadow of foundation for such a supposition. Unfortunately, an event occurred which completely destroyed the hopes of those bent on conciliatory measures.

Consequent upon the resignation of Mr. Forster and Earl Cowper, the offices of Chief Secretary for Ireland and Lord Lieutenant were filled up by the appointment of Lord Frederick Cavendish, who had been Private Secretary to Mr. Gladstone, and was at the time Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and of Earl Spencer. These appointments were announced on the 4th of May. On the 6th the public entry of Earl Spencer into Dublin took place; the reception by the people was exceptionally enthusiastic, owing doubtless to the fact that the new Viceroy and the new Chief Secretary came as the representatives of a new and less repressive policy. After the ceremony was over Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Thomas Burke, the permanent Under Secretary, were walking in Phoenix Park, when they were attacked by six men armed with knives, and were both killed. The assassins having finished their bloody work jumped on a car, which was in waiting for them, and drove off. From that time to the present nothing has been heard of them, notwithstanding large rewards were offered for their apprehension. It was clear that the attack was premeditated, and it was equally plain that the Government were confronted with a network of crime of a most unscrupulous character. It is no exaggeration to say that the deed shocked the whole civilised world, but it is no small credit to the English people to add that there were but few cries for vengeance. At the same time it was evident that the crime called for urgent and searching methods for combating the conspiracy. Accordingly before a week had elapsed the Home Secretary brought in a measure for the Prevention of Crime in Ireland.

One of the chief difficulties experienced in Ireland had been that of getting local juries to convict in any cases of an agrarian character, even upon the clearest evidence. The new measure sought to grapple with this difficulty, by providing for the partial abolition of trial by jury; by creating a special commission to sit in different parts of Ireland to try prisoners charged with agrarian offences; by giving additional powers to the police in respect of the search for arms and for the arrest of persons found out at night in proscribed districts; by giving power to suppress seditious publications, and by levying compensation on districts where murders and maiming were rife. A few days afterwards Mr. Gladstone, in fulfilment of his pledge, introduced a Bill to deal with the arrears of rent. This provided that when tenants, not being rented above thirty pounds Griffith's valuation, had paid the year's rent from November, 1880, to November, 1881, the State would advance as a free gift the equivalent of one year's rent, and all arrears previous to that were cancelled as between landlord and tenant.

The Irish Members, that is those who had previously distinguished themselves by obstruction, desired that the two measures should proceed contemporaneously, but this the Government declined to assent to, though they were content to deal with the Arrears Bill in precedence of other measures after the Crime Bill had been passed. No direct obstruction was engaged in, and yet it was clear that obstructive tactics were being used. In the course of the discussions in Committee, and during a sitting lasting thirty hours, twenty-five of the Irish members were "named" by the Chairman for wilful obstruction, and were suspended for the rest of the sitting. At last, on the 7th July, just two months after its introduction, the Bill was read a third time in the Commons, and five days later the Royal Assent was given to it. The measure has already proved of service, as under it several persons charged with atrocious crimes of an agrarian character have been tried before special juries in Dublin and Cork, and being found guilty have suffered the extreme penalty of the law. With respect to the other and more ameliorative measure, it passed the House of Commons substantially in the form it was introduced; when it got to the House of Lords no opposition was raised to the second reading, but in committee the Conservative leader moved and carried an amendment requiring the assent of the landlord before the tenant could apply for a settlement of arrears. This would have virtually destroyed the principle of the Bill, and when it came back to the Commons they refused to accept the amendment. To all appearance a serious crisis was imminent; the Government could not agree to allow the mutilated measure to become the law of the land, and Lord Salisbury had declared that this time there was to be no surrender. The conciliatory attitude taken by Mr. Gladstone with regard to other amendments, and the dread lest the whole measure, which was quite as much to the benefit of the landlords as of the tenants should be lost, induced the Conservative Party to give way, and their leader in the Lords found himself without a following, and a considerably lessened prestige.

Owing to the time occupied with these Irish questions and with those of procedure none of the measures foreshadowed in the Queen's Speech had an opportunity of being considered; some were not even introduced; so that the great questions of Bankruptcy Reform, County Government, Corporation Reform, London Water Supply, County Franchise, Prevention of Floods, Corrupt Practices at Elections, and Patents, still remain to be dealt with. No wonder, then, that Mr. Gladstone spoke of the Session as one of "ruin and discomfiture." Still there have been some additions to the Statute Book which are of great social importance; indeed, there has been no Session of late years during which measures of so much importance to the general public have been passed. We do not refer to those for carrying out departmental reforms, such as the Reply Post Cards Bill, or the Conveyance of Parcels, both of which owe their origin to the Postmaster General—Mr. Fawcett, but to those which may be almost regarded as revolutionary in their character, so completely do they alter the positions of persons affected by them. The first of these relates to the Sales, Leases, and other dispositions of Settled Land, and the other to the position and property of Married Women in the eye of the law. Nor can we omit in this connection to refer to the Act dealing with Bills of Sale, which will practically destroy such forms of security; to the Act for consolidating with Amendments all existing enactments relating to Municipal Corporations in England and Wales; to the Act dealing with the supply of Electricity for Lighting purposes; and to the Act for codifying the law relating to Bills of Exchange, which is one of the first, if not the first attempt at codification that has proved successful.

It is now time to pass for awhile from the consideration of Home Politics to those connected with such.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

as closely relate to this country at least. One of the legacies left by the Beaconsfield Ministry to the present Government was an arrangement whereby England had entered into a sort of partnership with France in relation to the financial affairs of Egypt. This arrangement, known as the Joint Control, though infinitely an improvement on the previous state of affairs in that country, was by no means pleasing to a party among the Egyptians, who aspired to the position of Nationalists. Early in January the Governments of England and France, having regard to the state of affairs in Egypt, deemed it expedient to communicate a Collective Note to the Khedive, declaring their determination to maintain his authority under all circumstances. A month later they withdrew from this position, and addressed an identical communication to the Courts at Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg and Rome, inviting the Powers to assist in coming to some understanding for the maintenance of the status quo in Egypt. Among the persons who had come to the front as a leader of the so called National party was a colonel in the Egyptian army, one Arabi Bey. A few days prior to the proposal to the Powers just mentioned he had been called upon to form a new ministry. His first acts were to strengthen his hold upon the army, and it soon became evident that he aimed at a military ascendancy. Matters remained in a very unsettled state for some months, and the position of the Europeans became one of great danger. On the 13th of May it was announced that, owing to the threatening state of affairs, our Government had determined to despatch two ironclads to Alexandria, and five days later the combined English and French squadron left Suda Bay for that port. On the 25th of May the diplomatic agents of England and France presented an ultimatum to the Egyptian Government, demanding Arabi's exile. By way of reply to this the Egyptian officers made a demonstration in favour of their leader, and he was reappointed Minister of War by the Khedive. The Europeans now began to leave Egypt in large numbers, and anarchy increased. A conference of Ambassadors at Constantinople was proposed by the French Cabinet, and was accepted. There can be little doubt now that the whole state of affairs in Egypt owed its origin to the Sultan, who instigated Arabi to take the position he did. The Sultan claimed the right to settle affairs, and he sent Commissioners to Egypt for that purpose; but while these were there an outbreak directed against the Europeans took place at Alexandria, among the persons wounded being several of the foreign consuls. The Khedive and the Chief Commissioner telegraphed to the Porte to send 18,000 troops to put down the rebellion that was rapidly spreading, causing a general exodus of Europeans, and a standstill to all the industries of the country. Meanwhile the Conference of Ambassadors was being held at Constantinople, though nothing came of it. The Egyptian army under Arabi was preparing for a conflict, and while the British and French fleet were lying at anchor in the harbour of Alexandria the forts there were being armed. It was well known that the French Cabinet, who claimed that the English Government should move pieu au pieu with them, were not very anxious to proceed to extremities, and this fact, no doubt, acted as an encouragement to the Egyptian leader and his friends. On the 6th of July the British Admiral sent an ultimatum to the Egyptian Government that if the arming of the forts were not discontinued he should open fire. An assurance was given that no further steps should be taken towards arming the forts, but, notwithstanding this, the work proceeded, and four days later Sir Beauchamp Seymour gave notice that if the forts were not surrendered within twenty-four hours he would attack them. His demand was not complied with, and at seven a.m. on the 11th of July the British Fleet opened fire. The forts returned the fire, but after a bombardment of several hours they were silenced. Directly there was a prospect of hostilities the French Fleet, no doubt acting under orders, left the harbour. Sir Beauchamp Seymour had not a force at his command which would have justified his landing it, and, having practically destroyed the fortifications, it was supposed that the matter would have there ended. But it was not so. Under cover of a flag of truce Arabi withdrew the bulk of his army to Kafr Dowar, having first set free the convicts, and these, joined with the Bedouins, set fire to the European quarter of Alexandria, and pillaged in all directions. Seeing the town in flames, a force of marines was landed, and these found the forts and town almost deserted, the Khedive being a prisoner in the Ramlah Palace. It was now quite evident that Arabi intended an out and out resistance. For the present he remained entrenched at Kafr Dowar. Troops were rapidly despatched from this country and arrangements made for bringing 5,000 from India. The command was given to Sir Garnet Wolseley, who, though in a weak state of health, set off with all due despatch to the seat of war. By a sudden and altogether unexpected move the Suez Canal and Port Said were seized by the British, the object being not only to secure the Canal, but to cut off Arabi's retreat upon Cairo. The suddenness and rapidity of this move caused the advanced portion of the British army to be ahead of the transport, and, in order to make himself sure of this, Sir Garnet delayed proceeding to attack Arabi, who had now entrenched himself at Tel-el-Kebir. It should here be stated that there had been during this time several engagements between the opposing forces, in which the British were invariably successful. The delay in attacking Arabi in his stronghold provoked a good deal of adverse criticism from persons who, sitting at ease in their clubs in London, thought they knew better than the British General, who had the disadvantage of being on the spot. These carpet critics, however, were very soon as utterly discomfited as was the Egyptian army. On the 11th Sept. the latter made a reconnaissance in force, and attacked the British camp at Kassassin, on the road to Tel-el-Kebir. The attack was repulsed. On the night of the 12th the British army, under the direct command of Sir Garnet Wolseley, advanced silently upon the Egyptian position. The march will be regarded as one of the famous ones of history; 13,000 men, with sixty guns, marched across the sands, swiftly and quietly, with no light but that of the stars to guide them, found themselves just before dawn within a few hundred yards of the enemy's entrenchments. As soon as they were discovered the Egyptian's opened fire, but the British troops charged the entrenchments, which they captured at the first assault. The Egyptian army was completely routed; its leader fled to Cairo by train. Zagazig, a place on the road to Cairo, was later in the day occupied by General Macpherson and part of the Indian Contingent, and on the following day Cairo was occupied by the Cavalry Brigade, which had made a forced march of forty miles directly after the taking of Tel-el-Kebir. Sir Garnet Wolseley arrived at Cairo the day after, Arabi surrendered unconditionally, and 10,000 men laid down their arms. The next day Kafr-Dowar and the Aboukir forts surrendered. The war was over.

Opinions may and will differ as to the necessity for our Government taking the hostile action it did, but few will deny that the British army performed some very gallant services in this short campaign. Some, no doubt, have considered that the war was wholly unjustifiable, that it was undertaken for unworthy motives, that it was an attempt to destroy a National uprising, and that those of the Liberal party who approved it were false to their professions. This is not the time to discuss such questions, but notwithstanding all that has been said and written, both in pulpit and in the press, the present writer feels bound to record his entire dissent from these views, which he regards as being in no wise borne out by the facts. It remains to be recorded that Arabi was handed over to the Khedive, and was brought to trial, where he pleaded guilty to the charge of rebellion, and was sentenced by the Court to death, a sentence which was forthwith commuted by the Khedive to perpetual exile. The trial and sentence were a farce, the fact being that Arabi was undoubtedly in a position to prove facts which, while they would have destroyed his character as a disinterested patriot, would have shown that he acted under the secret instructions of men who were openly denouncing him as a rebel. The conduct of the Porte throughout the whole affair was one continued course of double dealing, which, however, it was only too easy to see through. It was not till just a week before the war was over that the Sultan sanctioned a proclamation, which was never issued, declaring Arabi, whom he had previously decorated, a rebel, though there had not only been a promise that this should be done, but that Turkish troops should be sent to put down the rebellion.

With respect to other foreign countries there is not much to record. Early in the year the French Ministry, led by M. Gambetta, suffered a defeat in the Chamber on the question of a revision of the Constitution, and their resignation speedily followed. For a short time M. Freycinet was Prime Minister, but he, in turn, suffered defeat when proposing a vote of credit for military operations in Egypt, and his place was taken by M. Duclerc, who still holds office. In Russia one of the principal events was the retirement of Prince Gortchakoff from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, a post he had held for many years. The Nihilists have been less prominent in their public performances, but they have, at times, given signs of their existence, and the dread they have inspired has caused a postponement of the ceremonies connected with the coronation of the Czar. In the beginning of the year a series of outrages on Jews in various towns took place, evoking much indignation in this country. Austria has had to contend with some difficulties in Herzegovina, but a rising there was put down. Germany has thrown its influence on the side of England in the Egyptian affair, but it has not made itself particularly prominent in Continental politics. Of Italy and Spain there is scarcely aught of special interest to record, save that the former country, by the death of Garibaldi, lost the man who mostly contributed to its present independence. To a large extent he had withdrawn from active political life, but the death of this single-minded patriot made a gap in the history of the Southern peninsula not easy to be filled up. In the United States the trial of Guiteau for the murder of President Garfield ended in a verdict of guilty, and five months later he was executed. The elections in the fall of the year were, in a majority of cases, favourable to the Democratic party, the reason assigned for this change of feeling being that many Republicans were disgusted with the civil service policy of the President.

Returning to the consideration of the past year has witnessed, in connection with the Queen and Royal Family, more than one event that deserves to be recorded. On the 2nd of March an attempt was made on the life of the Queen by a crack-brained youth named Maclean, who fired a pistol at Her Majesty as she was leaving Windsor Station. He was subsequently tried, and being found to be insane, was ordered to be imprisoned during Her Majesty's pleasure. On the 14th of March the Queen, acting under medical advice, left England for Mentone, where she remained for a month. The marriage of Prince Leopold to the Princess of Waldeck-Pyrmont took place about fourteen days after Her Majesty's return. The despatch of some of the troops to Egypt was witnessed by the Queen in person, and throughout the campaign Her Majesty evinced considerable interest in their operations. On their return they were reviewed by her in St. James's-park, and three days subsequently 400 of the officers and men were decorated with medals at Windsor. Passing to demonstrations more peaceful in their character, it is agreeable to record that in the month of May Epping Forest was declared free to the public by the Queen, and in the beginning of December the New Law Courts were opened by a State ceremonial, in which Her Majesty took part.

HOME AFFAIRS

We have already described what changes took place in the Ministry consequent on the resignation of Mr. Forster and Earl Cowper. But other and considerable alterations have taken place since that time. The death of Lord Frederick Cavendish left the post of Chief Secretary for Ireland vacant; it was an unenviable one under any circumstances, but under those then existing it was peculiarly so. It was, however, filled up by Mr. George Otto Trevelyan, who, by his courteous demeanour and marked ability, has done much to soften down the soreness of feeling caused by Mr. Forster's asperity of manner. Mr. Leonard Courtney was appointed Financial Secretary to the Treasury, in succession to Lord Frederick Cavendish, and Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Secretary to the Admiralty, in succession to Mr. Trevelyan. On the day following the bombardment of Alexandria the resignation of Mr. John Bright of the Chancellorship of the Duchy of Lancaster was announced; the office was not filled up for some time, Earl Kimberley, the Colonial Secretary, discharging the duties. A reconstruction of offices has, however, recently taken place. Mr. Gladstone has resigned the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, retaining simply the office of First Lord of the Treasury, and being succeeded in the former by Mr. Childers. Lord Hartington has exchanged the Secretaryship of India for that of War, and Earl Kimberley that of the Colonies for the Secretaryship of India—Earl Derby, a new accession, having succeeded Lord Kimberley. Mr. Dodson has taken the office vacated by Mr. Bright, and Sir Charles Dilke enters the Cabinet as President of the Local Government Board. The effect of these changes is to leave the offices of the Under-Secretaries for Foreign Affairs and for India vacant. A most useful member of the Ministry, Mr. Fawcett, whose department—the Post Office—is one of the most successful of the Government offices, has been seriously ill, but is now apparently on the road to recovery.

There have been several elections in the course of the year. The contests which attracted the largest amount of notice were those in the North Riding of Yorkshire, where Colonel Davnay (G.) and Mr. Rowlandson, a tenant farmer (L.), fought a severe battle, which resulted in the victory of the former by the comparatively narrow majority of 566; in East Cornwall, where Mr. Acland (L.) beat his opponent, Mr. Tremayne (C.) by 201 votes only; in the North-West Riding, where the Liberal, Mr. Isaac Holden, won by a majority of 2,027; Cambridge University, in which Mr. Raikes (C.) was successful, after a four days' poll, over Professor Stuart by a large majority; and Liverpool, where a Liberal, Mr. Smith, succeeded in wresting a seat from the Conservatives. The balance of parties practically remains unchanged. It is abundantly certain that Mr. Gladstone is as strong, if not stronger, at the end of three years in office as he was when he was called to take the reins of power in 1880. He has this year completed his political jubilee, a circumstance which called forth congratulations not only from his friends in this country, but even from abroad. The Liberal party retains its confidence in their great leader, while the divided leadership of the Conservatives, and insubordination in their ranks, have much helped to seriously disorganise the opposition.

RELIGIOUS MATTERS

now claim our attention. The Church of England has suffered a severe loss by the death of the Archbishop of Canterbury, which took place on the first Sunday of December. A gentle, peaceful spirit passed away when Archibald Tait breathed his last, one which saw with a clear insight that religion is not served by party struggles, and that the Church of England, if it aspires to be the Church of the people, must be broader and more tolerant of differences of thought and ritual than either the leaders of the Church Union or those of the Church Association would have it. His love of peace, perhaps, led him to sacrifice some amount of principle, the evidence of which was afforded a few days after his death, when the correspondence with Mr. Mackonochie was published, to which reference was made in the last issue of the Inquirer. His successor, Dr. Benson, Bishop of Truro, one of the youngest of the Bishops, has a responsible task to perform, and it yet remains to be seen whether or not the right man has been chosen for the post. The imprisonment of the Rev. S. F. Green, of Miles Platting notoriety, came to an end by reason of the fact that his living became vacant. This gentleman's friends endeavoured to enlist popular sympathy on his behalf, but they utterly failed, the popular instinct perceiving only too clearly that there was less of principle than of obstinacy in his defiance of the law. The Church Congress was held at Derby, but there was not much worthy of special record done at it; there was the usual sparring between the Ritualist and Evangelical parties, but the Congress itself was not marked with any feature of importance. From time to time at Diocesan Conferences and elsewhere the sayings and doings of the Salvation Army have secured attention, and opinion is much divided about it. There can be little doubt that the Army has largely increased its numbers during the past year, but it may be safely asserted, that the more its methods become known, the less do they commend themselves to those who have the cause of real religion at heart. One myth that had grown up about the Army, that it had been successful in reaching the dregs of the population, has sometime since been exploded, and while we are willing to give Mr. Booth and its leaders credit for good intentions, we can only say that they and their followers are doing much to bring religion into contempt. One thing is certain, they have been very successful in raising large sums of money, and thoroughly understand the expedients to be adopted for doing so.

Passing from these noisy proclaimers of the gospel of hubbub to the quieter work of the older religious bodies there seems to be little to note beyond the fact that the reports of such work justify a belief in its steady progress. At the autumn meeting of the Congregational Union, held at Bristol, the discussions which have distinguished it of late years were conspicuous by their absence. There was one pleasing and novel circumstance connected with it, and that was the attendance of several local clergymen of the Established Church, under the leadership of the Dean, to present an address of welcome to their Nonconforming brethren.

The death of Dr. Pusey, the leader of the Ritualists, whose name had become a nickname for the men of that party, is a notable fact in the history of the year. Though many of these men had gone far beyond their leaders, they still looked to him as pre-eminently their champion, and to the last he retained his position as the advocate, par excellence, of the extreme sacerdotal party in the Church. The appointment of Professor Jowett to the post of Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford elicited much notice at the time, the fact of the strong opposition to his being made Master of Balliol College in 1870, on account of his connection with the famous "Essays and Reviews," being naturally brought to remembrance, caused a comparison to be drawn between the reception accorded to the two appointments. The publication of Professor Seeley's "Natural Religion" is one of the events of the year, but the reception it has met with has been very different from that which befel his previous work, "Ecce Homo." Remarkable as the book is, and misrepresented, as it seems to us, its contents have been, it cannot be denied that it has fallen somewhat flat. It may be that its publication has been ill-timed, and that the author's well-meant endeavour to find a common basis between the rival advocates of religion and science has come too soon. But that such a basis will have to be found sooner or later no one doubts, and we are not disposed to decry as an absolute failure the courageous attempt thus made by Professor Seeley. The Hibbert Lectures were this year delivered by Professor Kuenen, of Leyden University: the subject chosen was "Natural Religions and Universal Religions," and the lectures were delivered in Oxford, contemporaneously with their delivery in London. In this connection must be mentioned the great spread of the temperance movement in all classes of society; so strongly has this movement gained ground, that, for the first time, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his annual estimates, has had to admit the serious effect it has had on one branch at least of the revenue of this country. Passing now to the consideration of

DENOMINATIONAL MATTERS,

we find much to record with satisfaction of the past year's story. First in importance was the Liverpool Conference, or rather the National Conference of Unitarians, which was held at Liverpool in the month of April. The Conference brought together the largest number of Unitarians that had ever met in this country; the proceedings were marked by great earnestness, and a desire to sink differences in the hope of effecting a common good. The papers read were directed to this practical end, and the religious and devotional services, with which the meetings were interspersed, gave a tone to the Conference, which those present at it are not likely to forget. It is a striking testimony to its success that it failed to satisfy but few, those being the extreme men of either side. It was feared by some that the success attained by this Conference would somewhat affect the attendance at the annual meetings of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, but this was not the case. Indeed, it seemed as if the enthusiasm evoked by the Liverpool gathering had induced many to make an effort to be present at the London meetings, which were in every way a success. No doubt the name and the fame of the preacher on the occasion, Dr. James Freeman Clarke, had something to do with the good attendance, but not altogether. The fact is that Unitarians are learning the value of numbers and enthusiasm. There is hardly a meeting we have had to record which does not show an improved state of things in this respect, and the voice of the croaker is either getting feebler, or emits itself in anonymous letters, or in pulpits where the discordant note falls upon the ears of but a few sympathisers. The autumn meeting of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association was held in Glasgow at the same time as the Scottish Unitarian Association held its anniversary. The work here is being done under much difficulty, but it is slowly making its way. The columns of the Inquirer have from time to time recorded certain evidences of growth, as shown in the opening of new chapels, or other buildings adapted to the promotion of denominational activity. Early in the year the opening of the "Channing" Memorial Hall, which had been erected at Sheffield at a cost of £7,000, took place. This was followed by the opening of the Russell-Scott Memorial Schools at Denton, and a similar event at Dukinfield, where a new schoolroom had been erected at a cost of £3,300. Later on a new church, built at an expense of £5,500, was opened at Miles Platting. At Congleton and Ardwick the foundation stones of new churches, to cost respectively £1,200 and £3,000, have been laid, and several chapels, as for instance, at Kendal, Cheltenham, Mansfield, Sunderland, Preston, Sheffield, and Gloucester, have been renovated and improved. There have been signs of activity in the London district also, a new chapel having been opened at Peckham, and the funds subscribed for another about to be begun at Croydon, while at Stamford-street not only has the old chapel been renewed, but a handsome and commodious schoolroom added. A new branch of the Domestic Mission has also been started at Kentish Town. Nor must we omit to record the transfer of University Hall to the Trustees of Manchester New College, an event likely to be of signal service to the denomination, and the holding of a united devotional service in one of our London chapels.

But while we have noted these signs of new life it has been our mournful duty to record from time to time the passing away of some well known veterans of the cause. The ministerial ranks have been thinned by the deaths of J. Wilson, of Birmingham; Wm. Bennett, of Aberdeen; B. L. Green, of Evesham; J. Orr, of Clonmel; J. Taplin, of Kingswood; and Thos. Bowring, formerly of Birmingham and Belfast; while the sad and sudden calamity which caused the death of W. A. Pope will not rapidly pass out of remembrance. The deaths of Dr. Shepherd Fletcher, of Manchester; William Dennis, of Northampton; William Mortimer, of Exeter; James Ellis Mace, of Tenterden; William Brown, of Leeds; Mrs. Rathbone, of Liverpool; Andrew Pritchard, and William Titford, of London; and Henry Long, of Knutsford, have also thinned the ranks of our laity. The deaths of Dr. Bellows and Dr. Orville Dewey, though primarily a loss to our American brethren, have been felt here, the bonds of sympathy between the two countries being drawn closer year by year.

This sympathetic union is much strengthened by the frequent personal intercourse that now takes place between our brethren and ourselves. Not only have we had to welcome Dr. Freeman Clarke to our shores, but the Rev. Dr. Peabody and the Rev. Dr. Everett Hale have this year been our visitors. At the National Conference held at Saratoga in the autumn the Rev. J. Page Hopps and Dr. Carpenter were honoured visitors.

The denominational literature of the year has not been extensive, the principal publications being Mr. Thom's Laws of Life after the Mind of Christ; Mr. Gordon's Christian Doctrine in the Light of New Testament Revision; a cheap edition of the Story of Religion in England, and Professor Drummond's Religion and Liberty.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

It is not always easy to draw a line so as to define what are and what are not political or religious matters, and it may be that some events which we have classified under the Miscellaneous ought to have been placed under some other head. Possibly it would have been better to class the visit of King Cetewayo to this country, and his subsequent restoration to his kingdom, as political events; but we have preferred to let them come in here. There are a large number of persons who care neither for politics nor for religion, who yet mark off the years by some particular event, to them of passing importance. Some will remember the past year by such an event as the departure from these shores of "Jumbo," the Zoological Society's large African elephant; or the fact that the largest bell in England, "Great Paul," after being conveyed by road from Loughborough to London, and having its journey recorded with as much detail as if it had been a royal progress, was hung at St. Paul's Cathedral; others will speak of it as the year when Barnes and Midwinter ran up the remarkable scores of 266 and 187 respectively at Lord's Cricket Ground; others will refer to it as the year when the great Hamilton Palace collection of pictures and works of art, and the Beckford Library were dispersed by the auctioneer's hammer; others will record the strike of police constables at Dublin; others will refer to the fact that in 1882 Consols touched the highest price this century; others will remember the transit of Venus, or will recall the extraordinary destruction of valuable property by fire which has marked the past twelve months. No doubt all these events are notable in the story of the year, though not, perhaps, of transcendent importance. Without assigning to any of those we are about to refer to a pre-eminent position, it may be worth while recording that during the past year the new Eddystone Lighthouse and the St. Gothard Railway were formally opened; that the British Association met at Southampton, much of its time being given to the consideration of the new force—electricity; that early in the year the Senate of London University determined to admit women to Convocation, and that the annual elections for the London, Birmingham, Leeds, and Manchester School Boards took place with a result favourable to the educational future of this country. It should be mentioned that a trial for libel, in which Mr. Scrutton was plaintiff and Miss Helen Taylor was defendant, did much to dissipate the wickedly exaggerated stories that had been spread about concerning the management of one of the industrial schools, favoured by the London School Board. Miss Taylor's attempt to justify her libellous statements completely failed. This is not the only action for libel which has attracted the attention of the public. The case of Belt v. Laves, which has lasted for over forty days, is an action of this kind, as to which it is difficult to say whether the perjury on the one side or the other, the malignity displayed towards the plaintiff, or the feebleness of the presiding judge be the most prominent feature. The only other trial of public importance was that of Dr. Lamson for the murder of his brother-in-law, the circumstances connected with which were of a most extraordinary character.

The literature of the year has not been marked by the publication of any epoch-making book, but among the books issued may be mentioned Mr. Froude's first instalment of the "Life of Thomas Carlyle," Dr. Abbott's "Onesimus," Miss Fox's "Journals and Letters," Miss Kemble's "Records of Later Life," Mr. Mozley's "Reminiscences of the Oxford Movement," Mr. Thomas Hughes's "Memoir of Daniel Macmillan," Canon Farrar's "Early Days of Christianity," Dr. Martineau's "Study of Spinoza," Mr. Leslie Stephen's "Science of Ethics," Mr. O'Donovan's "Merv Oasis," Sir Archibald Alison's "Autobiography," the third volume of Bishop Wilberforce's "Memoirs," and Mrs. Oliphant's "Literary History of England."

The death roll of the past year has been very heavy. The departure of such men as Charles Darwin, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and Henry Wadsworth Longfellow cannot but be regarded as a great, one may almost say an irreparable, loss. Science and the higher literature have had to mourn not only the loss of these great men, but of others less distinguished; the former has lost Dr. J. W. Draper of New York, Sir Charles Wyville Thomson, the well-known naturalist of the Challenger expedition, and Professor Balfour of Cambridge, who lost his life in the Alps; while literature numbers no longer in its ranks William Harrison Ainsworth, the novelist, Richard Henry Dana, Berthold Auerbach, the German novelist, Dora Greenwell, John Francis, for many years the publisher of the Athenaeum, and one of the most ardent advocates for the repeal of all taxes tending to restrict the freedom of the Press, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, W. B. Rands, who wrote under the nommes de plume "Matthew Browne" and "Henry Holbeach," James Rice, novelist; Dr. John Brown, author of "Rab and his Friends," and Anthony Trollope. In addition to the deaths referred to in a previous portion of this article Theology has to record the loss of the Bishops of Llandaff, Sydney, Grahamstowne, and Central Africa, the Rev. Gervase Smith, President of the Wesleyan Conference, Dr. Wellesley, Dean of Windsor, Dr. Adolph Sydow, the Rev. Augustus Clissold, a well-known Swedenborgian, Dr. Hawkins, Provost of Oriel College, Oxford, and William George Ward, one of the prime movers in the Oxford movement. Art has lost John Linnell, Cecil G. Lawson, Hablot K. Browne (Phiz), W. B. C. Fyfe, and E. B. Stephens. Law no longer numbers in its ranks ex-Vice Chancellor Malins, Lord Justice Holker, Sir John Smale, and Professor Mountague Bernard. Music mourns the loss of the Dowager Countess of Essex, who, as Miss Stephens, was once known as a celebrated singer and actress, James Turle, and Wm. Hutchins Calcott; while among the other notabilities whose deaths have been recorded are Ralph Bernal-Osborne, John Muir, the celebrated Sanscrit scholar, Thomas Hill Green, Professor of Moral Philosophy, Wm. Bence Jones, General Skobelev, Benjamin Webster, Sir George Grey, Lord Tenterden, and Louis Blanc.

Our task is done; once more the story of the year is written—once more we look forward to the coming year. Is it with hope or despondency? with joy or sorrow? It need not be with gloomy feelings if we have but faith in God, and, what is sometimes more difficult, faith in man.

"From death to life we ever turn;

The bright sun gathers up the dew

That lingers on the forest fern.

Fair hopes allay uneasy fears,

A calm succeeds each troubled wave."

R. B.

ABERDEEN.—Dr. Bain, Emeritus Professor of Logic, and Lord Rector of the University of Aberdeen, was on Wednesday presented with his portrait, painted by Mr. George Reid, R.A., and subscribed for by old pupils and other friends throughout the country. The ceremony took place at a cake and wine banquet, in Marischal College. Dr. Webster, M.P., presided, and the company numbered about a hundred, including some ladies.

LEWES.—The Liberals of Lewes have selected Mr. R. Crosskey as their candidate to contest the borough at the next election. The Sussex Advertiser says that in the town the choice is considered a good one, the candidate being personally popular. He is a native of Lewes, a gentleman of local position and influence, and an active magistrate for the eastern division of the county. Mr. Crosskey is elder brother of the Rev. Dr. Crosskey of Birmingham.

MEMORIAL TO THE LATE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.—A preliminary meeting of a private character was held in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, yesterday week, under the presidency of the Dean of Westminster, to consider the best steps to be taken for giving effect to the strongly-expressed desire that a memorial be raised to the late Archbishop of Canterbury. Resolutions to the following effect were agreed to:—"That a recumbent figure of the late Archbishop be placed in Canterbury Cathedral; that in the opinion of this meeting it is desirable to establish as a memorial of the late Archbishop some institution of permanent Christian usefulness, designed especially to carry out his last exhortation to united action in the great struggle against sin and unbelief." It was agreed that the Prince of Wales should be invited to become chairman of the executive committee, and that the Duke of Albany should be invited to act as vice-chairman.

The Inquirer,

A Religious, Political, and Literary
Newspaper, and Record of Reverent
Free Thought.

ESTABLISHED 1842.

NOTICE.

On and after the 6th of January, 1883, the price
of the INQUIRER will be

2D. WEEKLY.

The INQUIRER will be supplied upon the following
terms, post free :—

Yearly (52 weeks) ...	10s. 10d.
" (prepaid) ...	10s. 0d.
Half-Yearly (26 weeks) ...	5s. 5d.
" (prepaid) ...	5s. 0d.
Quarterly (13 weeks) ...	2s. 9d.
" (prepaid) ...	2s. 6d.

ADVERTISEMENT SCALE.

Up to and inclusive of first five lines.	2s. 6d.
Each line afterwards	0s. 4d.
For Six consecutive insertions, 25 per cent. less.
For Thirteen	50 "

All Letters and items of Intelligence intended for publication should be addressed "To the Editor of the INQUIRER," 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

All orders and payments should be sent to Mr.
WALTER MAWER, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

The INQUIRER can also be obtained on order at any of the Bookstalls of MESSRS. W. H. SMITH
AND SON.

The Inquirer.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1882.

WE need hardly remind our readers that this is the last number of the old high-priced Inquirer. It has now entered upon its fifth decade, and during exactly twenty-seven years of its existence has been under the management of the present Editor, aided by friendly contributors, whose names stand among the foremost in our Churches, and who year after year have given voluntary services to this paper with ungrudging liberality. At the beginning of the year the Inquirer takes a new departure, and with the single aim of gaining wider influence for the Liberal cause in religion it reduces its price and appeals with undoubting confidence to the popular element in our Churches.
We reserve until our next number a fuller statement of our aims for the future, but our old friends and supporters, every one of whom we hope to retain, will be gratified to learn that we have already received such cordial assurances of support from all parts of the country that we enter upon our future career with hope and confidence. We have every reason to expect that the Inquirer will not only maintain the high position it has so long occupied, but will gain constantly increasing power and efficiency as the advocate of reasonable theology, reverent free thought, and practical Christianity in its application to the complicated conditions of our modern, social, and political life.

LAST Sunday that section of the "Positivists" with which Professor Beesley is identified held a musical commemoration of Mozart in Newton-hall, Fetter-lane. The hall, which will hold about 250 persons, was crowded. On the walls are thirteen busts of literary, musical and scientific celebrities, representing the thirteen months of the Positivist Calendar. In the course of the evening Mr. Vernon Lushington, Q.C., delivered a lecture on the service rendered to Humanity by Music and the Drama. Both before and after the discourse a selection of illustrative music from Mozart's works was performed in excellent style by a string band, under the efficient leadership of Mr. Henry Holmes. We confess that we should like to see such special musical services and commemorations introduced into our own churches, where we have suitable choirs. Nor should we object to a band performing an oratorio. Why should we not avail ourselves of all the agencies of art in connection with public worship?

MR. G. W. SMALLEY, the London correspondent of the New York Tribune, says:—"The immense popularity of Dr. Jowett has come to him in spite of some defects of manner which are obvious, and which leave at times an odd impression on the casual acquaintance. People who insist on animal resemblances in the human countenance would liken the Master of Balliol to some bird, especially to one which does not exist. He has the beak of a young eagle and the eyes of a owl not young. An acute benignancy is the predominant expression on his face.
If you did not look close enough, you might describe him as childlike and bland. A second glance will reveal the shrewdness and penetration of the features and the amplitude of the head, of which the lines are scarcely at all hid by a little snowy hair that sets off a softly rubicund complexion. His ways with his pupils are the subject of many a story, some hardly compatible with the dignity of his favourite historian.
But he is none the less honoured in his own country, his own town, his own University, his own college, and his own circle of friends."

It is wonderful to notice how complete a change of opinion there has been respecting Mohammed in his religion since the days when he was almost universally regarded as a vulgar impostor, and his religion as a cunninglydevised system of craft. At a recent meeting of the Royal Society of Literature, for instance, General Sir C. Dickson in the chair—Sir P. de Colquhoun read a paper "On Mohammedanism," in which he sketched, briefly but effectively, the prophet's life. At first Mohammed, he said, aimed merely at the bettering of the moral condition of the Arab tribes. The development of his doctrine of the unity of God "without equal or companion" came afterwards. Sir P.
Colquhoun pointed out many existing vulgar errors respecting the Mohammedan faith, which,
in his view, differed in no respect, save in name and outward form, from that of Buddha and Christ. In advocating this view he maintained that Mohammed enfranchised the female sex, introduced the doctrine of a future state, abolished the immolation of human beings and of the lower animals as sacrificial atonements, promulgated the maxim "Let there be no violence in religions," and ignored any priestly caste. There is something in all this of the extravagance of reaction. The world owes a great deal to Mohammed, but we can hardly compare his religion—the religion of the sword —with that of Christ. The whole conception of the character of God and the future life is radically different, and the state of the Mohammedan world this day as contrasted with that of Christendom is one striking argument for the inherent superiority of Christianity.

In an article on Anthony Trollope in this month's Macmillan Dr. Freeman, who became acquainted with the deceased novelist at Rome in the spring of 1881, gives some interesting particulars of a visit paid him by the latter the week before his fatal seizure. "It was, perhaps, fitting," he says, "that, in the short time that Mr. Trollope was with me, the only people we had a chance of introducing him to were two bishops of different branches of the vineyard.
In company with one of them, Bishop Clifford, of Clifton, I took him over part of the range of hills between Wells and Wedmore, that he might look out on the land of Barset. . . He allowed Barset to be Somerset, though certainly Gatherum Castle had been brought to us from some other land. But he denied that Barchester was Wells. Barchester was Winchester, where he was at school, and the notion of Hiram's Hospital was taken from Saint Cross. . . Mr.
Trollope left me on October 27th. On November 2nd he dined at Mr. Macmillan's, at Tooting, where I was staying. He talked as well and heartily as usual. We all knew, as I had known the week before, that he was not in strong health, and that he needed to take some care of himself. But there was nothing to put it into any one's head that the end was so near.

The next day came his seizure, and from that day onwards the newspapers told his tale."

THERE is a popular belief, says the Echo, that the Jewish Sabbath is kept in an ascetic manner.
It may interest English and Scotch Sabbatharians to know that, in a discussion in the Canterbury Town Council last week, on the Sunday opening of the local museum, a Jewish member asserted that "the Hebrews did not consider it any dereliction of duty to go to a museum or reading-room on their Sabbath day." This statement is heartily endorsed by the Jewish Press. So, then, we are more strictly Sabbatical in our ideas than the people to whom the Ten Commandments were given.

THE "Church of the People" in Berlin, of which we gave a full account a few weeks ago, has resolved to raise a fund called the Luther-Fund on the anniversary of Luther's four hundredth birthday. The income of the fund is designed partly to support young theologians to continue their studies, and partly give prizes for Essays in scientific theology. It is in fact very much of the nature of the Hibbert Trust, but with more definite aims and principles.

MR. JOHN FRETWELL, as we learn from the Pesther Lloyd, is now at Buda-pest, and was lately present at a meeting of the English Conversation Club. He was received with much applause, especially when his entrance into the club as a regular member was announced. We expect next to hear of our friend at Chicago or Calcutta.

ON another page we print two letters in reference to the little controversy which has lately been going on in our columns respecting the appointment of a minister at Blackley, near Manchester. One letter sufficiently answers the other, and shows the ground we had for our indirect remonstrance. We have no controversy with the Rev. J. Maclaren Cobban, who, for all we know, may, and we hope will, prove well qualified for his new position. Nor do we for a moment take exception to the undoubted right of a congregation to elect as their minister whomsoever they please, even if, as in one case we know, the miserable remnant of a well-nigh extinct congregation elected their chapel-keeper, in order to enable him to live on a small endowment. At the same time, in the interests of our Liberal cause, we claim the right of free criticism on the public action of our churches, and we strongly protest against the introduction into our ministry of untried and unknown men, who have not approved their claims by any previous service in connection with our own or other Churches. We have suffered greatly in the past from the introduction into our pulpits of unqualified and unknown men, and the Home Missionary Board was established some thirty years ago expressly in order to prevent this lax mode of entrance into our ministry. We beg leave to inform Mr. Maclaren Cobban that we did exactly what he recommended, and made previous inquiries, but could only ascertain that the subject of our inquiries, although announced somewhat vaguely as "Mr. Cobban of London," was utterly unknown in our own religious community, and was equally unknown to the Unitarians of Manchester, with the exception of the Quixotic gentleman who took upon himself the great responsibility of introducing his friend into our ministry. Here this controversy, which was not of our own seeking, must close.

THE Rev. Valentine D. Davis, late of Nottingham, will enter upon his ministry at the Ancient Chapel of Toxteth Park, Liverpool, on Sunday, the 7th January.

CAMBRIDGE.—Our article last week in reference to the recent lectures and religious services in this town should have been headed "Unitarian Services in Cambridge," not "Free Religious," the object of the society being "the cultivation of progressive Unitarian Christianity."

Reviews.

History of the Egyptian Religion. By Dr. C. P. Tiele. Translated from the Dutch, with the co-operation of the Author, by James Ballingal. London: Trübner. 1882.

This volume is the first instalment of the translation of the author's well-known Comparative History of the Egyptian and Mesopotamian Religions. Ten years have passed since the publication of the Dutch original; and the progress of inquiry both in the Nile valley and in the department of cuneiform studies has enabled the learned writer to make valuable additions to different parts of his treatise, of which the French translation by M. Collins appeared about a year ago. The Egyptologists were nearly a generation ahead of their brethren of Mesopotamia; and the Egyptian section of the book has not, therefore, needed so much revision as the portions relating to Babylonia and Assyria: but it has been enriched with fresh extracts from the texts, and with many important observations bearing on the connection of Egyptian religion with the moral and social life of the people. The translation, in spite of an occasional awkward sentence, is clear and flowing; and its accuracy is guaranteed by the revision of Dr. Tiele himself, whose English scholarship has secured for this version a complete fidelity to the original work.

Dr. Tiele has not hesitated to tread with firm step along that way of comparative mythology which Mr. Renouf also indicated in his Hibbert Lectures (apparently unconscious of any predecessor) as the real key to the interpretation of the Egyptian religion. The relative simplicity of nature as known to the Egyptians concentrated attention on a few elements. Shut up in their long ribbon-like valley, bounded on either side by the desert, they looked on the contrast of fertility and desolation, on the successions of day and night, and they saw the world as the scene of constant struggles between light and darkness, between life and death. In these conflicts the innumerable powers of nature, the núteru, were engaged. They were necessarily described in the mythological language universal at a comparatively early stage of intellectual development. The sun, now beneficent and life-giving, now scorching and life-destroying, the divine sky, the kindly river, and the great demon of darkness, these are the themes round which Egyptian thought played with ever fresh combinations. The operations of nature were delineated under the only forms possible, those of human consciousness and purpose, and out of the mythology thus generated, in which, of course, the principal personality was that of the sun, grew the peculiar symbolism specially characteristic of the Nile valley. Dr. Tiele ingeniously accounts for the prominence of the symbolic element in Egyptian religion by the suggestion that the transition from the mythological and unsettled period to the condition of stability and established order was brief and rapid. Under these circumstances mythology has no time or opportunity to transform itself into poetry or primitive history (as for instance in Iran or in Greece). As soon as its conceptions cease to be the natural expression of the popular thought, there are no traditions for them to lay hold of and assimilate, they cannot blend with the national legends, for such legends have not had scope to grow, and the inevitable result is that mythology stiffens into symbolism. Ancient Egyptian thought seems to have lost all memory that it had ever flourished on any other soil. Its first dynasty was supposed to have been preceded by a reign of gods on earth; but it retained no reminiscence of any immigration from a distant land, though the evidences of ethnology and of language connect the people with the Asiatic rather than the African continent. The age of wandering, therefore, cannot have lasted long, since no memory of it was preserved in the national consciousness; the mythological period was relatively short, and the change to the symbolic was speedy and complete.

It was from this cause, as Dr. Tiele points out, that the religion of Egypt exhibited so strong a contrast between the sensuous and the spiritual conceptions of deity. The ignorant and uncultivated rested in the symbols; the loftier minds passed through the symbol to a purser thought behind. There is in reality nothing coarser in the Egyptian symbolism of beast and bird than in the Christian representation of the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove; and that such emblems did not check or even seriously distort true religious feeling is abundantly shown by the noble hymns of the New Empire. The same explanation is applied to the parallel phenomenon of Egyptian religion, viz., the simultaneous presence of the most extravagant polytheism by the side of a clearly-expressed monotheism. The "powers," in fact, were everywhere; yet they might be conceived as manifold, or as one. How the different worship which sprang up in various local centres ultimately coalesced and admitted of harmonious blending through the gradual growth of this thought is traced with great skill by Dr. Tiele. One after another of the greater gods, the Memphian Ptah, Ra of Heliopolis, the Theban Amun, even a foreign deity like Sutech, could be represented as the most high, or the only God. Hymns composed for one deity could be sung in honour of another. Their names were united in all kinds of triple and quadruple combinations, yet attempts to reduce the immense pantheon failed. No one single revelation of God could be substituted for the Most High over all and through all.

The chapter which will be read perhaps with the greatest interest is that delineating the state of religion under the New Empire. Dr. Tiele does not consider that a history of Egyptian religion consists in a mere catalogue of its deities. He exhibits its periods of growth and decline, he connects them with political vicissitudes, and brings them into relation with the national life. So the era of the Theban monarchy, after the expulsion of the Hyksos, assumes a special significance, and the reign of Rameses the Great offers many instructive points of contrast, for instance, with the condition of religion among the Hebrew shepherds east of the Nile, just before their deliverance. The remarks on the theocratic character of the Egyptian system are especially worthy of note. The monarchy was rooted at once in might and in law. The king was among all human beings the fountain of power. As such he was united with the "Powers," and even in the case of Rameses II. was set at the very head of the gods and called their ruler.

"It would, however, be a mistake to regard this apotheosis as the literal deification of a man, and simply to class it with, for example, the worship offered to the Roman emperors. It was, in fact, a religious-political fiction of the same kind as the Legitimist's 'king by the grace of God,' and the 'king inviolable' of the Constitutionalist. It was not the man Rameses or the man Thutmes himself personally; it was his essence (ka), his heavenly type, to which the highest worship was paid, because that was identified with the being of the highest deity. In the case of the Egyptians the fiction was this: Horos or Ra, the chief sun-god, is, in short, properly the king of Egypt (just as at a later time Yahweh was of Israel), the living king is his manifestation upon earth, into whom the fulness of the God has passed. Hence no one saw any sacrilege in thus worshipping the king in his spiritual being as actually God, and it was a totally different thing from vulgar idolatry. It was a deification of the king's office rather than of the king, one of the boldest ways of expressing theocracy. Because of this, and it must on no account be lost sight of in judging a phenomenon which to us is of so unusual a character—because of this the king himself regularly stands on the monuments as worshipper before his own image, and he himself offers incense and other gifts to his own divine being. The living person, the worshipping king, was thus kept quite distinct from the being worshipped."

We could have wished that Dr. Tiele had devoted more space, both in this chapter and in the work at large, to the analysis of the doctrine of the future life. The great development which it underwent in the period of the New Empire is sufficiently indicated by comparison, for instance, of the tombs of the twelfth dynasty with those of the nineteenth, and the solemn representations of trial and judgment, which abound at this period, have exercised so great an influence on much later thought as to deserve, we think, a fuller treatment. The mediæval sculptures of the soul weighed in the balance, as it may be seen, for example, over one of the doors of Notre Dame in Paris, correspond in the most singular manner to the pictures in the tombs in the Valley of the Kings at Thebes, and in the numerous and splendid copies of the "Book of the Dead." And Egyptian eschatology has so many analogies with Christian that a fuller account of its leading ideas and its peculiar symbolism would have been especially interesting. Altogether, however, we gladly welcome this book as the most valuable introduction to the study of Egyptian thought which any scholar has yet produced. We see with pleasure that the title page announces it as the first volume of the more comprehensive history, and we hope that no long time will elapse before the accomplished translator carries on the story through the more difficult mazes of Mesopotamian faith. It would be a great gain to students if a proper index could be added to each section of the work.

Clare Stellar. A Novel in Two Volumes. By Mrs. J. Calbraith Lunn. Remington. 1883.

This soi-disant novel is in reality a sketch of, or a series of passages from, the life of a charming girl from her fifth birthday to her marriage. Plot there is none. The first volume pleases us most. Mrs. Lunn shows a warm appreciation of child nature, and enters sympathetically into the difficulties of the young mind, just opening out to a perception of the strange things of this world. Her heroine, little Clare, is a thoughtful child, never tired of questioning, not taking things as they come, as stupid children do. At the risk of being thought didactic we must venture to tell the elders who glance at this book that they may learn a useful lesson from it. Let them follow the example of the good Farmer Stellar, and when the innocent little ones come to them with their earnest questions, instead of answering, as alas they too often do, even in the latter part of the nineteenth century, "little children must not ask questions," or worse still, putting them off with absolute fabrications, try to lead them gently to a knowledge of the truth and help them to solve their problems themselves:—

O little souls! As pure and white,
And crytalline as rays of light.

In the first volume there is a delightful feeling of happiness and fresh healthy country life. Clare and her little brother Essie have all sorts of adventures and hairbreath escapes together. We must quote one of Essie's "mots." A new baby has arrived, and Estlin asks his sister:—"Have you seen it? What's it like, Clare?" "I don't know. Papa says it is a little sister. I was like it five years ago. So I suppose we come from babies." "Girls!" exclaimed Essie, with his head on one side, and looking curiously critical, "I come from myself." And now we must, in justice to Clare, give an anecdote about her. She had been told the story of Pluto, and how he had carried away Proserpine when she was gathering purple flowers, and she had decided that Pluto or Dis lived in a dark wood near her father's farm. So one day she set off to find him. Her path seemed to have come to an end, when she faced a tall, dark personage, who looked at her rich, large black eyes. "Dis!" Clara exclaimed, "you will not take me away, Mr. Dis! I would rather not, please;" and she goes on to say, "I have not seen the purple flower anywhere; I have not gathered it, indeed, Sir." But after a while she becomes friendly and confidential. "You are not so very black," said she, glancing at his swarthy face; "you are not carrying me away to the 'fernal regions.'" And then, after his reply, she continues, "I should hardly know you from a common man," said Clare, glancing up at the strange face, and then all round him. "I knew Bessie was wrong about horns and tails," she added, feeling comfortable enough to be polite. But we must not linger too long over this earlier portion of her life. The time arrives when Clare has to go out into the great world, and then come the difficulties and troubles. But when Clare goes to school we find her less interesting, and the account of her travels when a grown-up young lady partakes too much of the flavour of the guide book. We cannot give unqualified praise to this book as a whole; it would have had more literary merit if it had not been so overcrowded with characters, people who are not needed, and who appear only to disappear. Also there is a want of smoothness and harmoniousness.

We can recommend "Clare Stellar" as a good Christmas or New Year book for girls. The strong points are its excellent moral tone, and the pretty melodious verses with which it is interspersed.

Short Notices.

Abide with Me. Anthem, for Evensong, composed by Alfred Allen. Price 2d. (London: Novello, Ever and Co.)—Although no musical setting of the well-known hymn, "Abide with Me" seems to us so completely to express the meaning of the words as the original one by William Herz Monk, we think this anthem would be very effective for a large choir, or for school children. There is a simple melody and a good organ accompaniment. The first and third verses are sung by trebles and altos in unison, the second and fourth by tenors and basses, the fifth and last by all voices in unison.

A Wonderful Ghost Story, by Thomas Heapley. (Griffith and Farran.)—In two hitherto unpublished letters prefixed to this story, which originally appeared in All the Year Round, Mr. Charles Dickens speaks of this as "a most remarkable story," which he had read "with great interest." But then the late Charles Dickens had a hankering after ghost stories, and told them in admirable style. We confess that we have no love whatever for the supernatural in any form, and this story, although told with some ingenuity, seems to us, notwithstanding the high authority above quoted, more deficient than many of its class in interest and imagination.

Young Days for 1882 (Sunday School Association), one of the best of monthly illustrated magazines for the young, has reached its seventh annual volume, and under the editorship of "Aunt Amy" is better than ever. Not only our Sunday-schools, but our families of all classes ought to prize the privilege of having such a magazine as this, quite free from theological doctrine, and full of the spirit of true religion. Among the principal features of the year are a series of papers on "Bible Lands and Bible Peoples," and the "Parable Story Series."

Sixes and Sevens, by F. E. Weatherly, illustrated by James M. Dealy. (Hilderheimer and Faulkner.)—The most attractive children's book we have seen this season. The pictures are charming in subject and colour, if not always quite artistic in drawing, and the letter-press, all in merry verse, is worthy of the beautiful style in which the book is presented by printer and binder.

The Prince of the Hundred Soups. A Puppet Show in Narrative. Edited, and with Introduction, by Vernon Lee. (T. Fisher Unwin.)—Children are now so practical and realistic we almost doubt if they will take as much interest in this puppet show as we imaginative elders. To us, wearied with the endless Christmas books concerning good or bad little boys and girls, more or less commonplace, the history of the woes and ultimate triumph of the magnificent Pantalone Budrago, the Prince of the Hundred Soups, is most refreshing. The editor, the well-known writer, Vernon Lee, explains that this story is a slightly modified translation of an unpublished German MS., and was intended by its author not in the least as a Christmas book, but the practical demonstration of a theory based upon an enormous amount of research. "It was an experiment to show how much more interest could be got out of the harlequins, pantaloons, columbines, and so forth of pantomimes and puppet shows than out of the distressed men and women—who know [that they ought not to do it, but] insist upon doing it nevertheless—of modern fiction." We must give a friendly warning to our readers, on no account to yield to the bad habit of skipping the preface, for while it helps much to the true understanding of the story, it contains a humorous and life-like sketch of the author, Theodor Wesendonk, almost as grotesque and whimsical a figure as his own puppets. He had, in his disgust with the modern stage, become, like Carlo Gozzi, madly enthusiastic for the extinct Italian comedy of masks, and for its sole modern representative, the puppet show. We cannot go as far as he does in hatred of realism, but it is a relief to overwrought feelings to turn to the puppet show, which, though not the highest species of literature, is highly comic. The troubles the poor Doge got into during the eating of his hundred soups, the machinations of the villain Sceppino and his servant Arlecchino, with many other interesting matters, we must leave our readers to discover for themselves. The satire is quite applicable to the people of to-day. The book is well printed and attractively got up; the illustrations, by Sarah Birch, deserve a word of commendation, as they correspond very well in feeling to the tone of the book.

Ephemerides; or, the Days of the Year 1883. (T. Fisher Unwin.)—This is a "pleasant conceit"—an almanack for 1883, printed in the old style, with the old spelling, and illuminated borders and headpieces, an exact imitation, in fact, of "An Auntiente Annuelle: containing many Curious, Profitable, and Entertaining Matters, together with Certain Proverbs, Poems or Posies, Epigrams, Merry Sayings, Rhythmes, and Epitaphes of the English Nation in Former Times, and some of the Present Age." It is quite an archaeological curiosity, and is creditable to the skill of the printers, Messrs. Unwin Brothers, the enterprise of the publisher, and the ingenuity of the learned compiler, Mr. Edward Walford, M.A., the editor of the Antiquarian Magazine and Bibliographer.

Egypt, Palestine, and Phœnicia; a Visit to Sacred Lands. By Felix Bouvet. Translated by W. H. Lyttelton, M.A. (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1882.)—This book of travels by a well known professor of Hebrew at Neuchatel has gone through eight American editions, and is translated into English on the recommendation of Professor Godet, of the same place, whose theological works are familiar to the readers of moderate evangelical divinity. It was originally published as far back as 1858, and a great many things have happened since then, even in the East. The style is pleasant, and the author has the faculty of observation and bright lively description. But there is little new to be said about Egypt and Palestine, and we confess that we should have greatly preferred a translation of one of the more recent French and German works of Eastern travel. Of Phœnicia we find scarcely a word, the two or three pages given under that heading simply recording in enthusiastic style the author's reception by some friends at Beyrout. The book is readable enough, and of course the observations of a scholarly man travelling in the East are always more or less valuable; but it will give little or no new information to those of our readers who are already acquainted with the far more valuable "Eastern Life" of Harriet Martineau, to say nothing of more recent works of travel, not forgetting Dean Stanley's delightful book on "Palestine and Sinai." We are bound to add that the chapters on Egypt are of the thinnest kind, and that the author throughout writes simply like an accomplished man travelling for health and pleasure without any object of serious research. We almost wonder that Canon Lyttelton thought the book worth translating.

The Life of Our Lord. By Francis Sangster. (Elliot Stock: 1882.)—Mr. Sangster was well known many years ago as a devoted Sunday-school teacher in connection with one of our suburban churches, and although he has now left the denomination his book shows traces of his early liberal training. It is based on two well-known works, "The Life of Our Saviour," by the Rev. Henry Ware, D.D., and Mimpres's "Treasury Harmony," and is a concise, clear, and valuable synopsis of the Gospel story. It is, of course, based upon the Authorised Version, and the compiler does not profess to deal with questions of Biblical criticism, but aims to produce a work which shall be useful to Sunday-school teachers and devout readers of the Bible. Each page is divided into three columns. The right hand column gives the synopsis, the middle part is left blank for notes, and the left hand column gives references to the pages of Ware and Mimpres. We are not strong advocates either for epitomes of Scripture or Lives of Christ, which generally succeed only in divesting the evangelical narrative of much of its life and real charm. The New Testament itself, especially in the Revised Version, is the best possible handbook for an intelligent teacher; but not all Sunday-school teachers are intelligent and judicious. For many of them a practical work like Mr. Sangster's, which raises none of the critical questions generally suggested by attempts to harmonise the four Gospels, will be found useful and edifying.

THE Right Hon. J. Chamberlain, M.P., was last week elected a Fellow of the Royal Society.

Literary Notes.

MR. BERNARD SAMUELSON, M.P., recently offered £2,000 towards the establishment of a school of science at Middlesbrough, and a subscription of £150 per annum over a series of years towards maintaining it. A meeting was held at Middlesbrough on the 4th inst., and arrangements made to carry out the school. A sub-committee was appointed to visit existing technical schools and ascertain all details of the work carried on in them.

M. ALBERT REVILLE will publish immediately (Paris: Fishbacher) the first fruits of his appointment to a chair in the Collège de France, under the title of "Religions des Peuples non Civilisés."

THE Academy states that M. Renan will shortly collect in a volume of "Souvenirs" the autobiographical sketches he has been contributing to the Revue des Deux Mondes.

MR. FREDERIC W. H. MYERS will contribute to the January number of the Century Magazine an article containing his personal recollections of the late Dean Stanley.

THE Royal Academy at Rome has elected Professor Max Müller one of its ten foreign members.

A new edition, the seventh, of Liddell and Scott's "Greek Lexicon" will be issued almost immediately by the Clarendon Press. It has been carefully revised throughout, with the co-operation of many distinguished scholars, including Professor Goodwin, of Cambridge, U.S.

THE life of Newton's favourite niece, Mrs. Conduit, which [the late Professor De Morgan wrote many years ago, and spent a long time on enlarging, is at last to appear. It may be as well to say that De Morgan was one of those who believed "sweet Mrs. Conduit" was privately married to Lord Halifax.

THE first instalment of the English Dictionary, edited by Dr. Murray, will be published early in February. It has been found necessary, owing to the accumulation of material, to enlarge the size of the dictionary beyond the limits that we mentioned some time ago.

Correspondence.

THE REV. J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—It cannot but be painful to Mr. Cobban to have his recent settlement publicly discussed, but I often think that the Unitarian denomination very greatly resembles the House of Commons in the particular that a man of genuine earnestness and real ability never fails to win the respect and attention he really deserves; and so Mr. Cobban, if he be of the right stamp, will soon get over any little unpleasantness which may be the result of your very proper inquiry as to who he was.

Apart from Mr. Cobban himself, a point of the most vital importance, in my judgment, is raised in the case. We cannot, of course, question the right of congregations to appoint as ministers whomsoever they please. But there is no question of right involved. It is purely one of expediency; and it is quite within your province, as it is, I submit, within mine, to question whether it is expedient for congregations generally to appoint young, inexperienced, and untried men, respecting whom there is a general ignorance on the part of the well recognised leaders of the denomination. We have several colleges, one in Manchester, another in Carmarthen, another in Belfast, and one in London, whose principal business it is to prepare young men for and introduce them to our ministry; and I venture to think that if those members of our denomination who subscribe for the support of these institutions, and who are to be found in connection with most, if not with all, our independent congregations, were to insist that in the absence of exceptional circumstances the gentlemen who aspire to the position of minister in our body should pass through at least some portion of the curriculum of one or other of our colleges a good deal of difficulty would be avoided. It is inevitable that those who have gone through our colleges and who might be admirably qualified to minister to any given congregation should feel some chagrin at the importation of strangers, however honourable their seclusion may have been. I remember a few years ago there was a strong feeling of this nature in reference to one or two gentlemen who were invited to prominent positions in our body. But in these cases the several gentlemen had approved themselves to a considerable extent already, and they have since won their spurs, and are deservedly esteemed amongst us.

But, Sir, if it is generally inexpedient for congregations to appoint as their ministers gentlemen who are comparative strangers, it seems to me a thousand times more inexpedient for individual ministers to assume such a serious responsibility as Mr. Agate has done. I do not question Mr. Agate's judgment in this particular case. He is a gentleman for whom I entertain a very high esteem, and I candidly confess that were I a member of a congregation seeking a minister, and a gentleman came to us strongly recommended by Mr. Agate, I should be inclined to attach very great weight to that circumstance. But, really, is it wise for any man, and particularly for a young man, to take upon himself the responsibility of recommending another young man—and one who has hitherto had no status of any kind amongst us—to the important office of minister of a congregation? The generally speaking free-and-easy manner in which some appointments are made in connection with the Unitarian body renders it absolutely necessary that some notice should be taken of the subject to which you have, in my opinion, so very properly called attention.

The success of Mr. Cobban's ministry may justify the manner of his appointment, and I earnestly trust it will, and I am sure the ministers of Lancashire and Cheshire, as well as the laity, will extend a very warm sympathy to Mr. Cobban, and help him practically in every possible way. But, at the same time, exceptional ability and exceptional earnestness leading to success in a particular instance will not justify a general resort to exceptional ways of entering the Unitarian ministry.

Dec. 19. A MANCHESTER UNITARIAN.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Since I am the corpus vile of the controversy between you and Mr. Agate (of which I have learnt only during the last week) I think you cannot refuse to let me have my little say. After having got over the brusqueness of your strictly "original" and awkwardly-worded demand, I have considered your Note of Dec. 9, commenting on Mr. Agate's first letter, and the editorial parenthesis in which last Saturday you dismissed him, and vaguely I have gathered this:—that you object to—grumble at—my appointment as minister at Blackley because I am "unknown," "untried." Now these can only be relative terms. "Unknown"—to whom? "Untried"—as what? Unknown, you seem to mean, to certain prominent Unitarians and to Unitarian agencies of instruction. I confess I am comparatively unknown to Unitarians as Unitarians, big and little, clerical and lay; but that is a fault I am (thanks, partly, to you, Sir) in process of remedying, and it cannot, surely, be much ground of objection, since I am only one of thirteen outsiders who have entered the Unitarian ministry during the year, and I have not heard that the editor of the Inquirer thought it necessary in the twelve other cases to make the same loud, public demand for credentials as he made in mine. But there is other ground: I am "untried." As what? As a minister? Every theological student who undertakes his first "charge" is untried as a minister. Yet firmer and more precise ground of objection may be found in the closing phrases of your Note of December 9—ground on which it is possible to come to some issue with you. I am (so far as the evidence set before you showed) without "adequate qualifications for entrance upon the Unitarian ministry in these times of active intellectual inquiry."

Now, Sir, I must complain that, in your treatment of such evidence as Mr. Agate tendered you of my poor "qualifications" you were not only superciliously disparaging, but also somewhat disingenuous. Mr. Agate said, I am "not unknown at the offices of some of your chief contemporaries," by ignoring this statement and saying that (a fact which you discovered, I suppose, by inquiry) I am "unknown to the editors of any of our denominational journals" you make it appear to the curious reader that Mr. Agate's representation of my journalistic experience is a figment. No, Sir; I am not known to the editors of any denominational organs, nor have I ever been familiar with scissors and paste, yet I am not unknown as a contributor to "some of your chief contemporaries." Then you contemptuously wave aside Mr. Agate's mention of my short novel, "the very title of which we have never heard before." Tant pis. If you, Sir, and many others who make a parrot-cry of "intellectual inquiry," had read "The Cure of Souls," you might have been so impressed with the fact that there are many thousands of our fellow-countrymen still ignorant of the very elements of religion and theology as to feel that a minister may intellectually inquire among books till his brain is as big as a pumpkin and be not a whit nearer the true method of dealing with such people. I may be pardoned for saying that the book was not altogether so neglected as might be supposed from your disparaging fling at it; what your "chief contemporaries," daily, weekly, and quarterly, thought of it you may discover by spending an hour in the Reading Room of the British Museum over their files for the autumn of '79; and it is still being sold in a cheap form by its publishers, Messrs. Chatto and Windus.

If I thus seem to magnify my small literary performances my excuse must be that you have tried to minimise them to vanishing point. Such work may, or may not, be "qualification" in the conventional sense for a Unitarian minister, but I submit, "with all possible respect," that, even "in these times of active intellectual inquiry," to read many kinds of books, to produce "copy" on a few subjects, and to become intimately acquainted by personal converse with the lives, the modes of thought, and the needs of diverse grades of society—to do these things for twelve years is a more valuable preparation for the duties of a liberal ministry than merely to intellectually inquire for half that time on the hard college bench or in the study easy-chair. My congregation evidently have thought so, too; and I hold that your indirect protest against their election of me (for they and not Mr. Agate, as you obstinately maintain, "introduced" me "into the pulpit") is about as justifiable as was the indirect protest of certain Members of Parliament against the return of Mr. Bradlaugh by the electors of Northampton—not so justifiable, indeed; for the chances are that it will not for a long time be my duty to sit and talk with you. It is, of course, too much to expect that the editor of the Inquirer will admit he was wrong (for editors, we all know, must not be supposed to err), but if he could take a third personal view of the matter, he would now, I do not doubt, be of opinion that it would have been more becoming his dignity to have made such inquiry concerning my antecedents as might have seemed necessary in a private, gentlemanly way, than to have bounced at once into a parenthetic corner of his paper and challenged the Unitarian world for information. It was unkindly done, Sir,—especially at this juncture in the history of one of the oldest, smallest, and poorest Unitarian congregations in this district, when it is making strenuous efforts to recover its energies, for sometime rather numbed, and to build a bright, commodious chapel in place of the little barn, 200 years old, with walls one brick thick, and with roof threatening to collapse.

J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

The Parsonage, Chapel-lane, Blackley,
Dec. 19.

[We have no controversy whatever with Mr. Cobban, but only object to the mode of his entrance into our ministry.—Ed. of Inq.]

THROAT IRRITATION.—Soreness and dryness, tickling and irritation, inducing cough and affecting the voice. For these symptoms use Epps's Glycerine Jujubes. In contact with the glands at the moment they are excited by the act of sucking, the Glycerine in these agreeable confections becomes actively healing. Sold only in boxes, 7½d., tins 1s. 1½d., labelled, "JAMES EPPS AND CO., HOMOEOPATHIC CHEMISTS, LONDON." A letter received:—"Gentlemen,—It may, perhaps, interest you to know that, after an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit (with or without medical treatment) in almost all forms of throat disease. They soften and clear the voice.—Yours faithfully, GORDON HOLMES M.D., Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary."

Our Contemporaries.

A PERSONAL DEVIL.

The Jewish Chronicle, in answer to some inquiries respecting Jewish views of "a personal devil," writes emphatically:—

The belief in such a being is diametrically opposed to the plain teachings of pure Judaism. The Pentateuch, which is the authoritative code of Israel's religion, repeatedly denounces in unequivocal language all ideas and practices which would imply a limitation of the Sovereign Might of the Supreme. "They shall no more offer sacrifice unto the demons." "See now that I, even I, am He, and there is no God with Me. I kill and I make alive; I wound and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of My Hand." These are some of the expressions which, in common with the numerous warnings which the Pentateuch contains against idolatry, exclude from Judaism a belief in the Evil One. The religion of the modern Jew is the religion of the Pentateuch. The doctrine of the existence of a personal devil is utterly antagonistic to it.

A distinction, however, must be drawn between the simple and exalted system of belief formulated by the Mosaic Law and the superstitions drawn from foreign sources which were subsequently engrafted upon it. The idea of an evil spirit working in more or less antagonism to a beneficent Deity and to the good impulses of human beings was prevalent among the Egyptians and the Persians. The Israelites, ever readily impressed by alien modes of thought, appropriated this idea in spite of its being hostile to the spirit of their own faith. Isaiah evidently condemns the impure belief when he declares the Almighty to be the "Former of Light and the Founder of Darkness, fashioning both Peace and Evil." But even when there was no positive belief in the existence of a malignant spirit the idea of such existence was so familiar that language literally implying it was frequently used in nothing more than a figurative sense. Hence, such passages as those cited by our correspondent, which represent the Supreme as sending "a lying spirit" from Heaven in order to compass the downfall of Ahab, or which speak of Satan tempting David to number the people, or inciting the Almighty to plague Job. These are mere figures of speech borrowed from the prevailing notions and expressions of the time, and are by no means to be taken as giving Biblical countenance to the belief in any divine power save God Himself. One of the passages in question is itself a proof of the truth of this statement. It is only in the Book of Chronicles that Satan is described as tempting David. In the Second Book of Samuel the inciting cause is said to be the Supreme. The same incident is chronicled in opposite ways by different writers, who used the modes of expression which came most readily to them by reason of their various surroundings.

The notion of a devil, and indeed of a whole army of malignant spirits, was for centuries floating about in the Jewish mind. Already present in the Biblical period, it undoubtedly gained strength in the Babylonian Captivity, during which the Jews were brought into direct contact with Persian ideas. Hence the frequent allusions to devils in the New Testament. The Talmud has also its full share of such allusions—not a surprising matter when it is remembered that a great part of it was compiled in Babylonia. But whatever beliefs in the reality of the Evil One and his myriads prevailed among Jews either "in the early days of the Christian Era," or at any other period, it cannot be too distinctly affirmed that they are foreign to Judaism, and that no enlightened, nay, no true Jew, entertains them at the present day.

THE LATE DEAN CLOSE AND THE "EVANGELICALS." The Spectator, speaking of Dr. Close as "the Pope of Cheltenham," writes:—

He was made Dean of Carlisle by Lord Palmerston, and his death reminds us forcibly how completely extinct is the old Exeter Hall party, of which he was one of the great mouthpieces. No modern Premier, not even Lord Beaconsfield, in riding the "Protestant horse" as Bishop Wilberforce has portrayed him, would ever think of making a Dean of such a preacher as Dr. Close. Indeed, the type has almost ceased to exist. Modern Evangelicalism still prefers "entertainments" to theatres, and still regards smoking as vicious, though snuff-taking is only unwise. But modern Evangelicalism would hardly find Dr. Close acceptable, or, at all events, so acceptable that even Lord Shaftesbury would intercede with a modern Prime Minister for his promotion. We suppose the truth to be that a brisk intellectual air is so thoroughly impregnated in all forms of modern Christianity, that what Dean Close found popular in Cheltenham thirty years ago is now hardly tolerated, even by the audiences of street preachers. It is not necessary even now for popular preachers to be reasoners, but it is necessary that they should not parade their contempt for reason.

UPPERTHORPE CHAPEL AND ITS MINISTERS.

The Look-Out, a critical and satirical journal of Sheffield, records a visit to Mr. Osler's chapel, Uppertorpe, and thus describes the chapel and preacher:—

Uppertorpe Chapel is, both outside and in, the very type of unpretentious architecture. From the street it has little to show save a dingy gable, with Gothic doors and windows, pointing itself modestly to the heavens under a decorative crosslet. Interiorly it is rather suggestive of a music hall that has altered its mind, imported a sort of an auctioneer's pulpit and an organ, and solicited the favour of being thenceforth regarded as a place of worship. But there is an abundant supply of light and ventilation, and, if the seats into which strangers are invited were supplied with cushions like the others, the place would be attractive. "I was a stranger and ye took me in, but ye put me on a cold, hard seat, which stole my caloric and gave me the pins and needles," is an impeachment that it is sorrowful to have to utter concerning the pastoral headquarters of so good and clever a man as Mr. Osler. . . . Mr. Osler preaches in a clear, pleasant voice, and a style that commands interest and attention; his language is elegant and scholarly without being pedantic [and obscure; and we look upon his services as the most restful, judicious, and interesting that we have been present at in Sheffield. If he were stationed in an accessible part of a large town, a town devoted less exclusively than Sheffield is to political clap-trap and horse-racing, Mr. Osler would have tremendous congregations.

THE OATH QUESTION.

The Times of Thursday says:—

It is very significant that simultaneously in so many countries the subject of oaths as tests for admission to the Legislature, or as a condition of the exercise of civil functions, is under discussion. All over the world this question is being raised in one form or another. The divided state of men's opinions as to fundamental matters renders this inevitable. It is not improbable that all civilised nations will in the end adopt a compromise which cannot fairly offend the adherents of any or no creed, and the principle of which will be liberty of conscience. Most of us have long lost the belief that an oath, even of the most solemn kind, is an all but infallible mode of eliciting the truth; in face of the daily experience of our courts such a fond conviction could not be retained. But there is no need to deny that it serves to awaken many minds as nothing else can to a sense of duty, and that it is to them the natural preface to testimony affecting the lives and gravest interests of their fellow-men.

The Liberal Pulpit.

JOB AND HIS COMFORTERS.

DEAN BRADLEY'S CONCLUDING LECTURE.

The fifth, and last, of the series of lectures on the Book of Job was delivered by the Dean of Westminster on Saturday afternoon.

They were reaching, he said, the closing scene; they were in sight of the catastrophe of the Book of Job. The three friends were silent, the words of Job were ended. But before the close, a fresh character, Elihu, appeared on the scene. Without entering into the question whether the chapters from the 32nd to the 37th were added, as some had supposed, after the rest of the book was written, the Dean pointed out that Elihu represented a younger generation, less resolutely set against new ideas. His wrath was kindled against Job because he justified himself rather than God, and he was angry with his three friends because they had found no answer, and yet had condemned Job. The carefully constructed argument of a Platonic dialogue was not to be looked for in Elihu's speech. The argument was, indeed, confused and complicated. Job was censured for treating God as an enemy, for Elihu was shocked at the sentiment that it profiteth a man nothing to delight in God. In the main the contention of Elihu was that the greatness of God gave him the right to do as he pleased with Job, and that the righteousness of the latter could not be taken into account.

When human censors and advisers had done their best, God answered Job out of the whirlwind. But it was not to say, Let there be light, where all was darkness, that God spake. The question of questions received no full or adequate solution. But it was something to Job that his appeal was answered at all. He was no longer forsaken of his ancient friend. The substance of the answer given by God, when stripped of its splendid illustrations, was that Job had not penetrated into the secret of the world, and had not seated himself at the centre of the great forces of the Universe. He was told, in short, that he was of few days and ignorant, and could not understand the mystery of the Divine dealings. He was invited to look upon the overwhelming phenomena of life and nature. The morning stars, he was told, proclaimed the joy of God in a new-born world. The control exercised over the wild and capricious sea, the mystery of light, the phenomena of clouds, and snow, and rain, the majesty of the heaven, and the laws that rule the stars, are pointed out to him. Then he is called to look upon the wild raven, the wild ass, rejoicing in a noble liberty, the mighty buffalo, rendered meaningless by the translation "unicorn," the horse with its neck clothed with thunder, the snorting war horse of the Arab races, the king of beasts, and the queen of birds.

After a few humble words from Job, God bids him consider behemoth and leviathan, the hippopotamus and the crocodile. But in all this there is no direct answer. God only hints, as it were, that the forces of the universe are on the side of righteousness. There is no dogmatic assertion that sorrow does its best work in purifying and elevating the soul. Neither is light thrown on that future in which Job shall be reunited to his lost sons. The world, he is told, is full of mystery, and he must rest in the power and wisdom of God. He is still left to bear the discipline of questions too difficult to solve. The answer, inadequate as it was, seems to have been satisfactory to Job. He repents his rash words, and prays that they may be forgiven. And Job's wild words were forgiven, because he had never lost the conviction that righteousness must be near God. All that Job's friends had said failed to receive the Divine approval, true as much of it was, because it had no rightful application to Job. God is God in virtue of His goodness, continued the Dean. Power and wisdom could not alone make Him God. The unfeeling love of God for His afflicted servant was shown by the renewal of prosperity. God blessed the latter end of Job more than the beginning. But the lost children did not come back. The vanished hand touched him no more. We close the book, said the preacher, with a deepening sense of its truth, but with disappointment because it contains no complete and cheering answer to the questions it suggests. It stirs doubts which it does not answer. Job is led to the shore of a limitless ocean, and sees only a little way beyond. But he is told that God loves him and cares for him, and that he need not shrink from God as an enemy, but may draw near to Him, and trust Him. The impatience of Job is answered by the patience of Job's God. The book marks a stage in the education of God's people. Sin and suffering, we are taught, are not necessarily connected. Darkness still surrounds the problems of life, but light is given to us that was denied to Job. The Cross has leavened race after race with the idea that the Divine life is compatible with suffering. Yet the life of Christ would have been meaningless had that Holy One been suffered to see corruption. There are truths still dim, the Dean remarked in closing, much as prophets desired to see that which has been revealed to us, and it remains for us to repose in the sense of God's love and faithfulness.—Christian World.

The first instalment of the English Dictionary, edited by Dr. Murray, will be published early in February. It has been found necessary to enlarge the size of the Dictionary.

Among the many literary projects of the time which bear a cyclopaedic character, one of the most promising is that of a "Dictionary of Political Economy," to be prepared by specialists.

Religious Intelligence.

EAST ANGLIAN ASSOCIATION OF UNITARIAN AND FREE CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

ANNUAL MEETINGS.

The meetings connected with this Association were held at Kings Lynn, Norfolk, on Sunday, 17th, and Monday, 18th inst. The special sermons were preached by the Rev. Rowland Hill, of Bedford, to good congregations. In the evening his discourse bore hopeful reference to the work of the Unitarian churches in the eastern counties. Both sermons were very helpful and impressive.

The business meeting was held in the church at three o'clock on Monday, Sir R. K. Wilson, Bart., of Cambridge, Vice-President, in the chair. The minutes of the quarterly meetings were confirmed, and A. P. Allen, Hon. Sec., read the annual report. Grants of £5 in each case were made towards the payment of debts in connection with the churches at Chelmsford and Lynn. On the representation of the Rev. W. Fielding, of Framlingham, a small grant was voted in aid of the support of a man now employed as colporteur in the eastern counties.

The following changes took place in the officers of the Association. F. Taylor, president, resigned. James Freeman, Esq., vice-president, resigned; A. P. Allen, Esq., hon. sec., resigned. For the following year—Vice-Presidents:—Sir R. K. Wilson, Messrs. A. P. Allen, James Youngman, and J. Leach; treasurer, A. Pearce, Ipswich; hon. sec., the Rev. G. B. Broadrick, Ipswich.

The public meeting took place in the church at seven o'clock, when the chair was occupied Sir R. K. Wilson, supported by Mr. A. P. Allen and the Revs. T. B. Broadrick, W. Fielding, and W. R. Shanks. Letters of apology for absence were received from Messrs. Youngman and Pearce, and the Revs. R. Shaen, M.A., J. Ferrar, B.A., C. F. Biss, J. Howard, and others.

Sir R. K. Wilson, after calling upon the secretary to read the report, said he ought to say a few words in explanation of why he was present at that meeting. He was asked to preside, and knowing nothing of the Association or of the Lynn congregation, except that they were Unitarian, he consented, because he made it a principle to assist everything Unitarian, provided always that it did not interfere with his business engagements. That was an important proviso, because he did not believe in any religious movement which took a man away from his business for any fancied work for humanity at large. He thought such work should be done if a man had a little spare time, and as he had a few spare days, he consented to come to Lynn, and he was not at all sorry that he did so. The reason why it appeared to him Unitarianism was a thing to be supported, he thought perhaps he could not so fully explain—he had arrived somewhat slowly at the conclusion he held, that Unitarianism was the best name to work under, and, having arrived at that decision very slowly, he did not think he was very likely to change. He liked the name Unitarian firstly and particularly because it asserted the absolute unity of the laws under which we lived. It asserted that whatever power might be above us, and man knew they were under a power of some kind—no man could move a step in the world without finding out that there was something we had to obey—and in calling themselves Unitarians they asserted that that power was one; and that the law men had to obey, the law which told us that if we put our finger into the fire we should be burnt, and that if we did not do well to our neighbours we should ourselves suffer, was one. This was all one power, although they did not properly understand it. He liked the name Unitarian because by implication it denied the infallibility of Churches, of Bibles and of Christ. He knew that some of these were conclusions the first Unitarians did not draw. They had always seen in the history of a great movement that its authors had seen a little way, and their successors, thanks to them, had seen further, and they were doing honour to their predecessors by not adhering exactly to the little bit of truth they saw but moving on further in the same direction. Therefore he valued the name Unitarian not as denying teachings in an unreal sense, but as Unitarians having learned as much as they could by looking at the world as they saw it, and not looking into the Bible translated in the reign of Henry VIII., nor the church catechism, nor—much as they might admire or value the words of any one teacher, be he Jesus or any one—upon the teachings of any man. He valued it because—he knew it was not the meaning of the word, but it indirectly suggested—because it suggested the importance of unity and of suppressing minor differences so long as that could be done without sacrificing principle. He also valued the name Christian, because, having once been a Christian in one sense, and having come round to call himself a Christian in another sense, he valued the name as qualified by saying he was a Unitarian Christian, for when criticism had done its utmost, after they had denied the divine authority of Christ, or the assertion as a positive certainty that he had miraculous powers or was infallible, they could not help recognising that he was one man in a thousand, and they could not help recognising that he started a movement which they were still carrying on, and that his teachings would require to be repeated, though they were often ignored by those who had his name most often on their lips, and they found it certainly impossible to sink his name among the crowd of preachers of the word—(applause). That was why he liked the principle of calling himself a Unitarian, and why he had no hesitation in saying that he was a Unitarian Christian. Even apart from the relation in which they viewed Christianity a man might call himself a Christian as seeking to carry out the lines of Christian teaching and developing his life so, as far as possible, to carry out the ideas of the great men who had derived inspiration from the same source. He had perhaps been rather too long in explaining why he was present. He had asked their excellent secretary whether there was anything special to speak about, and he told him there was the question whether the Association should go on. With that question he confessed himself incompetent to deal, owing to his very limited knowledge of the Association, and so he could contribute nothing to the discussion beyond the ordinary platitudes, "Unity is strength," and "Perseverance is a virtue," but as to the application of these excellent maxims to this particular case he was not competent to speak from his imperfect acquaintance with the Association. He was told the objection to the continuance of the Association on its present footing was that the congregations were so small and scattered. That suggested the preliminary question—Why are they so small and scattered? Why did they so often hear in connection with this and other societies the question, "Had we not better give it up?" He did not think it would do to say with Carlyle that mankind were mostly fools, and that that was the reason why they did not join such a body as their own. There might be a certain amount of truth in the assertion, but it was, he thought, more profitable, more Christian, to inquire whether the fault did not lie on their own side. He had had some experience in Cambridge, where they were certainly small. All he could say was, they had been smaller. A year and a half ago he thought seven was about the greatest number they could count upon as undoubted Unitarians, men prepared to co-operate with them in work, but by the timely assistance of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association, and the excellent minister they sent them, they had lately had congregations averaging from forty to fifty, and there were seventeen members. He was thankful for small mercies, but their number was not exactly improving out of a population of thirty thousand. But the case of Cambridge was somewhat exceptional, and a great deal must be allowed for the vested interest and the immense power of the clergy; but a more serious matter still was the fact that the really earnest, intelligent students did not at present see their way clear to join them. There were a number of independent minded men who might be classified in this way. First, there were the Atheists and Agnostics, many of them most excellent people, people full of public spirit. These men said when they were studying natural science they knew where they were, but when they came to listen to religious subjects they did not know where they were. He did not believe the people who called themselves Atheists were really so. They knew they were under a power which favoured righteousness, and the matter only required to be put before them in a manner which they would accept. Then there was the other class, not Atheists, who disliked dissent, and who, rightly or wrongly, would support the Church as the representative of morality and religion in the country, and as such they held it must be supported. With that view he had no sympathy at all. He held that a man's first business was to his conscience, and if he could not conscientiously join the Church he must leave it. This kind of feeling resulted from people attaching too much importance to their own influence in the world, and too little importance to principles. He merely threw this out to show the difficulties their ministers in a place like Cambridge had to contend with. There was a class of persons who were not convinced of the utility of public worship, and who relied upon their own influence for good upon their fellows, regarding ministers as a superfluity. They should endeavour to attract these classes and the people generally, either by making their services more attractive or some other means. The secret of success was in getting good ministers and heartily supporting them.

The Rev. W. R. SHANKS spoke on the great need for such an organisation as this Association in the district, but said he believed it never would succeed until the members and subscribers were roused to take an active, earnest interest in its work. They had heard much of failures in the past, but there was nothing to be surprised at in that, for the evidence was clear that only one or two had attempted to make the Association a success. He would suggest, too, that the work could best be done by each one exercising the most liberal sympathy with each other. There was no room for jealousy or fault-finding; with the Christian spirit but with no other could the work be done. He believed the Association as constituted was capable of doing much good among the churches, and thought it would not be impossible to develop a place of special mission meetings in connection with their respective places of worship, on week evenings, if any extra expense thereby involved could be met by the Association. He thought it would be a step in the right direction also if the annual meeting were made to take the form of a midsummer gathering of their friends and adherents in some central place between the two counties of Norfolk and Suffolk. They might combine pleasure and business, and so make both more attractive. He concluded by moving a special vote of thanks to the preacher, the Rev. Rowland Hill, for his able services on the previous day, and to the British and Foreign Unitarian Association for its generous financial help to the churches in the district during the past year.

Mr. A. P. ALLEN moved a resolution of sympathy and condolence with the widow of the late Rev. W. A. Pope, who for some time filled the office of Missionary to the Association. In the course of his remarks he called upon the members of the Association to show a more zealous enthusiasm in furtherance of its objects.

Votes of thanks were moved by the Rev. W. FIELDING to Mr. A. P. Allen for his energetic services as Secretary to the Association, and by the Rev. J. B. BROADBICK to Sir R. K. Wilson for so kindly and ably presiding over the meetings.

The remaining part of the evening was spent in the school-room, where the people were entertained with music, songs, &c., and served with refreshments.

NEWCASTLE - ON - TYNE.—On Tuesday evening, December 19, a very pleasant meeting was held in the school-room of the Church of the Divine Unity, to do honour to Mr. Charles Hobkirk, who is about to attain to his seventy-ninth birthday, after having held office in the schools for more than a quarter of a century. A life-sized oil portrait of Mr. Hobkirk, by a well-known Newcastle artist, having been subscribed for by the teachers and scholars, it has been framed very handsomely at the expense of one of the former—Mr. John Grey Moore—and, on the occasion referred to, was handed over to the school authorities to be hung in the boys' room as a perpetual memento of Mr. Hobkirk's services. About fifty teachers and friends having been hospitably entertained at tea by that gentleman, the chair was taken by the pastor, Rev. Alfred Payne, who, in introducing the proceedings, spoke of the beautiful example of a Christian life which their friend had so long held before them. Mr. Fred. C. Slater, the superintendent of the boys' school, then made the presentation, and declared the portrait to be the property of the school. "Auld Lang Syne" having been sung by all present, Mr. Hobkirk responded in very feeling terms. Further addresses, including a vote of thanks to Mr. Moore, were given by Councillors Barker Ellis and Joseph Ellis, Messrs. G. G. Laidler, V. Errington, C. Carter, and C. M. Slater.

MONTON.—At the last meeting of the Monton Social Union, on the 20th inst., a debate was introduced by Mr. Harry Rawson, on the question, "What forms of public worship are best adapted to the cultivation of religious emotions?" The chair was occupied by the President, the Rev. James Harwood, B.A. Mr. Rawson, after referring to the marked indifference of large classes of persons to public worship altogether, pleaded the necessity of elasticity of forms of worship in order to meet varying needs, and especially urged that the elders should show in this matter a generous consideration for the wishes of younger people. He indicated a personal preference for a liturgical form of service, and desired hearty congregational singing; thought that the choice of "Lessons" should not be confined to the Bible; recommended frequent special services for young people, and also that occasionally, as a relief to himself, the minister should preach published sermons. The paper, which was characterised by the writer's well-known suggestiveness and felicity of illustration, was followed by an interesting discussion, in which Messrs. A. Winterbottom, Thos. Diggle, J. H. Brooks, B.A., Geo. Bullock, Smith Golland, Henry Leigh, and the Chairman took part. While there was considerable difference of opinion on the question of a liturgy, Mr. Rawson's suggestions generally were very favourably received. We shall print Mr. Rawson's paper in full in an early number.

CHELTEMHAM.—A social meeting of the Bayshill Unitarian Church was held on Friday, December 15, to take leave of their minister, the Rev. J. C. Hirst, before his departure to Dewsbury. After tea the Rev. J. Robbards took the chair, and addresses prompted by the occasion were delivered by himself, Mr. Furber, and Mr. Osborne. The Chairman then, in the name of the congregation, presented to Mr. Hirst an album with an address in ornamental type, followed by the names of the subscribers, together with a purse of £50, in token of the esteem and affection in which he was held, of their regret at parting with him, and of their best wishes for his future success and welfare. The address was as follows:—"To the Rev. Joseph Crowther Hirst. Dear Sir,—As members of the Unitarian Christian Church, Bayshill, Cheltenham, we beg your acceptance of the accompanying purse, and desire to convey to you our grateful sense of the spiritual benefit we have received from you during the too brief period of your ministry among us. It has been our privilege to recognise in your religious services the possibility of uniting perfect freedom of intellectual inquiry with an earnest and devout spirit; a lesson especially needed at the present day, between the dissolving creeds of orthodoxy on the one hand, and the growth of irreverent materialism on the other. While rejecting the accretions which superstitious fancy and scholastic theology gathered round the simple gospel of Jesus Christ, you have set forth the spiritual beauty and significance of his character and mission as suggestive of instructive truths for the support and guidance of the human soul during its passage through this life to the higher life beyond. We trust that the spirit of your teaching may remain and bear fruit with us; and that your removal to another sphere of duty may be attended with the anticipated improvement in the health of Mrs. Hirst, and with increased encouragement and success in your ministerial labours." Mr. Hirst responded at some length with much feeling and impressiveness, repeating that he had felt compelled to take the step by the hope, confirmed by the best medical advice he could procure, that a bracing climate would restore the health of his wife, for whom the more relaxing air of Cheltenham had proved unsuitable, and that he should never forget the kindness he had received during his four years' ministry there. Addresses were then given by the Rev. George Knight, of Gloucester, and by the Rev. Mr. Carlyle, minister of the Baptist Free Church, Cheltenham, who, though not a Unitarian, thus manifested his friendly sympathy. The proceedings were interspersed with pieces of vocal music, performed by the choir of the church and other friends. —Thanks having been voted by acclamation to them and to the ladies who had presided at the tea tables, the meeting was brought to a close after "Good night" by the choir, with a benediction from Mr. Hirst. On Sunday week, December 17, Mr. Hirst delivered two appropriate and impressive discourses; that in the morning from Acts xx., on the proper aim and work of a Christian church; and in the evening from Acts xx., being a brief statement of the main truths and lessons which he had endeavoured to enforce during his ministry in Cheltenham.

Obituary.

THE REV. JAMES TAPLIN.

We announced with deep regret last week the death of this excellent and venerable man. James Taplin was born at Portsmouth in the first year of this century. His father was an active and much revered member of the Congregational Church at Portsea. But in those early days the Congregational churches were of the most rigid orthodox type, and the tender mind of the boy soon rebelled from the teaching of the Assembly's Catechism, and found help and encouragement amongst friends attending the St. Thomas-street (Unitarian Baptist) congregation. They invited him to their weekly conferences, and when by-and-by he yielded to their request, and read before them a paper on the subject of "Free Inquiry," they were so delighted with it that they used their endeavours to turn his serious attention to the ministry. A circumstance which happened to him at this time served to dissipate all doubts as to his course, for riding over the country in the service of his employers a terrific thunderstorm broke over him, and a stroke of lightning threw both the horse and its rider to the ground. A long and serious illness followed the accident, and during the leisure it afforded him he made up his mind to enter the ministry. If anything was wanting to induce him to throw in his lot with the party of progress he found it in the public avowal which the late W. J. Fox, afterwards M.P. for Oldham, made of a change in his religious opinions. Mr. Fox was minister of an Independent chapel at Farnham, and was not unknown at that time at Gosport and Portsmouth; and it being reported that he was intending to make a recantation of his Calvinistic views, James Taplin—then in the ardour of early youth, and himself much troubled with Calvinistic opinions—made a point of being one amongst his audience on that memorable occasion. The address which Mr. Fox delivered on that occasion made a great impression on his mind, and he often, in after life, referred to it and the circumstances under which it was made. The room which had been hired for the occasion was locked against the lecturer; and finding a sugar barrel opposite a grocer's shop, near the room which was thus withheld from him, Fox mounted it. He took for his text the words of Proverbs xxiii., "Buy the truth and sell it not," and gave an address in the open street to several hundreds of people, who listened to it with intense interest.

A few months later we find Mr. Taplin was a student at the General Baptist Academy at Newington-green, under Mr. Gilchrist. Here he occasionally had the advantage of personal intercourse with Mrs. Barbauld, who attended the Newington-green Chapel, and took great interest in the young students of the academy.

His first settlement was at Lewes—if settlement it can be called—for Mr. Taplin speedily removed to Battle, where he spent a few years of unremitting labours, endeavouring most especially to benefit the position of the agricultural labourers and believing that nothing effectually could be done for their benefit without education, he laboured indefatigably to give it. To this end he devoted several evenings of the week, instructing young men in reading, writing, and keeping accounts, so as to fit them for doing their work in the world. Amongst those young men was James Gutsell, who afterwards became known as William Cobbett's secretary, and of whom Cobbett always spoke in the highest terms; he remained with Cobbett until Cobbett's death, and during the latter years of its course became practically the editor of his "Register."

Mr. Taplin's efforts to improve the condition of the working people naturally excited in those days (they were the days that preceded the Reform Bill) no small opposition, and especially from those who were well-to-do. And this opposition showed itself in ways not always pleasant. One November his house was attacked with squibs and rockets, his windows were smashed, and the curtains of the windows, &c., were set on fire; but, thanks to his friends, he was not taken unprepared, and no very serious damage was done. On another occasion, after going to some expense in repainting and decorating his house, he found it one morning daubed with dirty paint from the eaves to the basement. But, of course, the damage was repaired at the public charge, and the real perpetrators of the mischief had time to repent them of their folly.

It seems almost beyond belief in these days, when the law of the land compels every child to be educated, that, fifty or sixty years ago, a man, who, out of his large charity and by his own unassisted efforts, should teach the people knowledge—could be regarded as a revolutionist and be treated as such. But though Mr. Taplin's labours at educating the people raised up against him powerful enemies it had the advantage of making him many, and some not less powerful, friends.

However, his labours proved beyond his strength; and his health breaking down, his medical advisers counselled him to seek a milder climate, and a position whose duties would be less onerous and exacting. Under these circumstances, a hearty invitation coming to him from Honiton—(a flourishing market town on the great high road from London to Exeter, and not far from Exeter)—he accepted it, and at the close of 1829 removed thither. On leaving Battle he received a testimonial from his little congregation, in which they express their "deep gratitude" to him, for "the long, able, and gratuitous services" which he had rendered them.

According to a custom, not infrequent in those times amongst Presbyterian ministers, Mr. Taplin supported his household by his educational labours, having a large and flourishing school, or private academy. His evening classes for the poor and his ministerial labours were alike gratuitous. But they imposed too heavy a burden upon him, and his health broke down under the weight of it. Under these circumstances he removed, as we have seen, to Honiton.

Honiton was relatively a far more important town in those days than it is now. Forty coaches, mostly four-horsed, passed through it daily. The towns that merely maintain their ground have at least doubled and quadrupled their population, but the population of Honiton is less than it was then. Moreover, in those days it had the advantage of returning two members to Parliament.

In short, Honiton, fifty years ago, was one of the bright, stirring, busy towns of the West of England. It was not possible that a minister of so ardent a temperament as Mr. Taplin should remain long inactive there. Neither did he. But with a vigour and enterprise which was known and felt in Devon, he laboured to promote that cause of Civil and Religious Liberty which was as the very apple of his eye. Not, indeed, that he looked to politics alone as to the source and well-spring whence must come the regeneration of the people. But he believed in the Reform Bill and the Poor Law, and in all those great measures of Legislation which followed upon them, and which, during the last fifty years, have helped to diffuse knowledge and make bread cheap, and the people happy. Above all, he has not forgot his old faith in education. And in Devon, as in Sussex, his word was still "Educate—educate." To this end he founded a mechanics' institution at Honiton, as he had at Battle, and established in connection with it a public library, and courses of public lectures. When Charles Knight brought out his "Shilling Volumes"—they being the first specimens of a really cheap literature which the world had seen—the writer of this notice remembers seeing the subject of it walking about the streets of that then lively little town of the West of England with one or two volumes of them stuffed into each pocket, and calls to mind the unspeakable delight with which he showed them to all who came his way.

A few months after his settlement at Honiton he was invited to become co-pastor with a minister who was destined to become one of his warmest and most devoted friends, viz., the Rev. Henry Acton, of the George's Meeting, Exeter; but attractive as the offer in many respects was, Mr. Taplin did not consider it would be right, just as he had settled amongst them, to leave those friends at Honiton from whom he had been receiving so much kindness and consideration.

A few months later the trustees of the chapel at Colyton, which had been for some time closed, offered him the endowment if, once a quarter, he would hold a service in it. Mr. Taplin accepted, but only on the condition that he should take a service in it not once a quarter but every Sunday afternoon. This was agreed to, and for nine years the reverend gentleman conducted the service there without fail. On his first visit he had only one man to form the congregation. The next visit brought him two or three more, and so on; the numbers gradually and steadily increasing, until the little chapel used to be crowded throughout at every service. Colyton lies between Honiton and the sea, and is about seven miles from Honiton, with an elevated open down between them; over which in wild wintry weather the storms sometimes sweep furiously. This journey of fourteen miles Mr. Taplin made every Sunday, and he has often been known to return home now white with snow, and now drenched with rain; but he never missed one of his three services.

Ultimately he changed his residence to Colyton, the chapel was repaired and improved, and a Sunday-schoolroom was added. The few years he remained here he gave his attention mainly to his ministerial duties, and to the conducting of his private school, which at this time was large and prosperous. His days at Colyton were spent in so much peace and comfort that they are still remembered with pleasure in his own family, and most gratefully by the inhabitants of the little town.

From Colyton Mr. Taplin removed to Jersey for a few years, where, through the strong support he received from Admiral Giffard, he was able to promote in various ways the cause of free inquiry and social and educational reforms. We next find him minister of the Abbey Chapel at Tavistock, and there and at Crediton many years were happily passed. Crediton is but a short distance from Exeter, and during his residence there his days were often made bright and pleasant by visits to his old friends at Exeter. Amongst them at that time was the late Sir John Bowring, with whom he held constant intercourse. But during the last twelve years of his life his days were passed at Kingswood Parsonage, within a few miles of Birmingham, where even to the end he kept up much friendly intercourse. Latterly he was not very well able to get from home; but on the Monday preceding his decease he had fully intended being present at the usual meeting of the Pargeter Fund in Birmingham, and the cab had been ordered. However, the services of the preceding day, which he had conducted with more than his usual vigour, and which gave no hint to the stranger of their being a final effort, proved too much for him, and he gradually sunk until he breathed his last, on Tuesday week.

The remains of our late venerable friend were interred in the Kingswood Chapel burial ground on Saturday last, the Rev. R. L. Lloyd, of Belper, son of a former minister of the chapel, officiating on the occasion, and delivering a suitable address. Several friends were present, including the Rev. D. Maginnis, of Stourbridge. On the following Sunday appropriate services were conducted in Kingswood Chapel, the Rev. Herbert Clarke, of Birmingham, preaching in the morning, and the Rev. Lindsey Taplin, M.A. in the evening.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are compelled to postpone to next week report of re-opening of Wakefield Chapel, our notices of the January Magazines, and other articles.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Catarrhs, Coughs, and Quinsies.—Diseases of the throat and chest are the bane of our lives in this treacherous and variable climate; neglected or injudiciously treated at their onset, serious consequences often ensue. Now nothing relieves them so quickly, or so certainly cures them as these most potent remedies. Whatever the condition of the patient, Holloway's remedies will restore if recovery be possible; they will retard the alarming symptoms till the blood is purified and nature consummates the cure, gradually restoring strength and vital nervous power. By persevering in the use of Holloway's preparations, tone is conferred on the stomach and frame generally. Thousands of persons have testified that by the use of these remedies ALONE they have been restored to health after every other means had failed.

Our Calendar.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 31.

LONDON.

Rev. P. H. Wickstead, at Little Portland-street Chapel, at 11.15 A.M. and 7 P.M.
 Rev. Chas. Vovsky, at Langham-hall, 43, Great Portland-street, 11.15 A.M.

Lecture at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, at 4 P.M., Dr. Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E., F.L.S., on "The Brain and its Work." (With Illustrations.)

BOURNEMOUTH.

Rev. Alfred Hoob, at the Town Hall Buildings, at 11 A.M. and 7 P.M.

* Notices of Sunday Services are inserted in this Calendar at 6d. a line, and of other Meetings and Services gratis, provided a detailed Advertisement appears.

SELECTED BOOKS.

Dictionary of Christian Biography, edited by W. Smith and H. Wace, Vol. 3, 31/6
 Grisar (H.): Galileistudien, 7m.
 Hunter's (E.) A Lady's Drive from Florence to Cherbourg, 5/
 Hall's (R. T.) The Pedigree of the Devil, 7/6
 Paterson's (H. S.) In Defence, the Earlier Scriptures, 5/
 Parke's (W.) Lays of the Saintly, or the new Golden Legend, 5/
 Richter's (J. B.) Italian Art in the National Gallery, 42/
 Wake's (C. S.) Origin and Significance of the Great Pyramid, 2/6
 Wilberforce (Rt. Rev. Samuel), Life of, by his Son, R. G. Wilberforce, Vol. 3, 15/

MR. WALTER MAWER, Sunday School Association Office, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C., will supply any of the above-named new books and new editions, at the prices named, carriage free, on receipt of Post-office Order, payable at the East Strand Post-office.

BIRTH.

BARTRAM—On the 27th inst., at 5, The Terrace, Green Lanes, Highbury, N., the wife of Richard Bartram, of a daughter.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

A MINISTER, living within two minutes' walk of Hampstead Heath, desires to take into his house three or four BOYS as Boarders. There are several very good schools in the neighbourhood, and University College School is within easy distance. The district is one of the prettiest and healthiest suburbs of London. Personal attention will be given to the home lessons, and care taken to provide all the comforts of a good home.—For list of schools, terms, references, &c., address H., INQUIRER Office.

A MINISTER, living in a pleasant town in the Midland Counties, would be glad to receive a Lady into his family as a Boarder, where she would have a quiet cultured home. Terms moderate.—Address, "Suchende," INQUIRER Office.

AN experienced TEACHER, holding the St. Andrew's LL.A. Degree for Women, wishes to meet with a morning engagement. Subjects:—English, Music, French, German, and Elementary Latin.—Address, E. N., INQUIRER Office.

A CERTIFICATED TEACHER of MUSIC (Harrow System) is seeking a Re-engagement for next Term.—Apply, for further particulars, to Mrs. TUTIN, Sherwood-street, Nottingham.

WANTED, a MASTER for the Day School connected with Stephen's Green Unitarian Church, Dublin; also a SEXTON for the Church. A competent person, who would undertake both duties, would be preferred. Salary, £90 per annum, with house and coals.—Apply, with references, to Mr. GEORGE H. MARTIN, 112, Stephen's Green, West.

A YOUNG LADY desires an engagement as Resident GOVERNESS. Acquirements:—English, French, German, Music, and Drawing.—Address, E. P., Rev. J. M. Dixon, 8, Dover-street, Hull.

WANTED, a respectable middle-aged woman as Working Housekeeper to a widow lady with children. Must be a strict teetotaler, and capable at times of undertaking entire management of household.—Apply to M. X., F. Hewitt, Caxton House, Leicester.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

COUGHS,
COLDs, ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—This wonderful remedy was discovered by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE, and the word CHLORODYNE coined by him expressly to designate it. There never has been a remedy so vastly beneficial to suffering humanity, and it is a subject of deep concern to the public that they should not be imposed upon by having imitations pressed upon them on account of cheapness, and as being the same thing. Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a totally distinct thing from the spurious compounds called Chlorodyne, the use of which only ends in disappointment and failure.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD, STATED PUBLICLY in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a LIQUID MEDICINE which ASSUAGES PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the NERVOUS SYSTEM when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHŒA.

The GENERAL BOARD of HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "TWO DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

COUGHS, COLDS, &c.

From W. VESALIUS PETTIGREW, M.D., formerly Lecturer at St. George's Hospital, LONDON.

"I have no hesitation in stating that I have never met with any medicine so efficacious as an Anti-Spasmotic and Sedative. I have used it in Consumption, Asthma, Diarrhœa, and other diseases, and am perfectly satisfied with the results."

From W. C. WILKINSON, Esq. F.R.C.S., Spalding.

"I consider it invaluable in Phthisis and Spasmodic Cough; the benefit is very marked indeed."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

From Dr. B. J. BOULTON and Co., Horncastle.

"We have made pretty extensive use of Chlorodyne in our practice lately, and look upon it as an excellent direct Sedative and Anti-Spasmotic. It seems to allay pain and irritation in whatever organ, and from whatever cause. It induces a feeling of comfort and quietude not obtainable by any other remedy, and it seems to possess this great advantage over all other Sedatives, that it leaves no unpleasant after-effects."

IMPORTANT CAUTION. THE IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS.

N.B.—EVERY BOTTLE OF GENUINE CHLORODYNE BEARS on the GOVERNMENT STAMP the NAME of the INVENTOR.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

SOLD IN BOTTLES, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., by all Chemists.

SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.C.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

ASSURANCE AGAINST RAILWAY ACCIDENTS ALONE.

ASSURANCE AGAINST FATAL ACCIDENTS AT SEA.

ASSURANCE OF EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Railway Passengers' Assurance Company,

THE OLDEST AND LARGEST COMPANY, INSURING

AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

The Right Hon. LORD KINNAIRD, Chairman.

Subscribed Capital, £1,000,000.

PAID-UP CAPITAL AND RESERVE, £240,000.

MODERATE PREMIUMS

Bonus allowed to Insurers after five years,

£1,700,000

HAS BEEN PAID AS COMPENSATION.

Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or

64, CORNHILL,

or 8, GRAND HOTEL BUILDINGS, CHANCERY-LANE, LONDON.

WILLIAM J. VIAN, Secretary.

"THE FORT, MARGATE."—APARTMENTS in a well-furnished house, facing the sea, on moderate terms.
 Address, Mrs. Stabbeek, Lansdowne Lodge, the Fort Margate.

TO BE LET, furnished, from March next, for twelve or six months, by a lady going abroad, a Small HOUSE, with good fruit and vegetable garden, and flower garden in front. Drawing and dining rooms and well-stocked library; five or six bedrooms and dressing room, also attics; good piano; small conservatory opening from drawing room. The house is well situated on gravel soil, and supplied with good water, and in a pretty village six miles from sea and one from station (Darsham) on main line. From a careful tenant or small family a low rent would be taken.—Terms, &c., on application to Mrs. Barby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk.

MISS BOWRING, holding an Honour Certificate from Dublin University, and having passed Groups A and B in the Cambridge (Higher) Examinations, wishes to instruct Pupils, either personally or by correspondence, in English, French, German, and Latin. Seven years' experience in teaching. Good testimonials.—Address, 160, Bower-street, Maidstone.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK.—Current Accounts opened according to the usual practice of other Bankers, and Interest allowed on the minimum monthly balances when not drawn below £25. No commission charged for keeping Accounts.

The Bank also receives money on Deposit at Three per cent. Interest, repayable on demand.

The Bank undertakes, for its Customers, free of charge the custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuables; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Shares.

Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THE BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY'S ANNUAL
RECEIPTS EXCEED FOUR MILLIONS.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, and no Rent to pay. Apply at the Office the BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH, with Immediate Possession, either for Building or Gardening purposes. Apply at the Office of the BIRKBECK FREE HOLD LAND SOCIETY.

A Pamphlet, with full particulars, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

Possessing all the Properties of the Finest Arrowroot,

BROWN AND POLSON'S
CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY

FOR

THE NURSERY, THE SICK ROOM, AND THE FAMILY TABLE.

NOTE.—Purchasers of Corn Flour should insist on being supplied with Brown and Polson's.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY:

FOR JANUARY, 1883, Price 2s. 6d.

Our Position as a Naval Power. By H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER.
Scotland's Version of Home Rule. By W. SCOTT DALGLEISH.
Russian Prisons. By Prince KRAPOTKINE.
On Taste in Dress. By G. F. WATTS, R.A.
Cardinal Manning's Demand on the Rates. By R. W. DALE.
Girl-Children of the State. By MARIA TRENCH.
Puss in Boots. By W. R. S. RALSTON.
The Procedure of the High Court of Justice. By ALFRED HILL.
Origin of the National Party in Egypt. By JOHN NINET.
Modern Miracles: a Rejoinder. By E. S. SHUCKBURGH.
The Functions of an Opposition. By the Right Hon. HENRY CECIL RAIKES, M.P.
The Functions of Conservative Opposition. By the Hon. W. ST. JOHN BRODRICK, M.P.
A Sweet-Water Ship-Canal through Egypt. By JOHN FOWLER and BENJAMIN BAKER (with a Map).

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND CO., LONDON.

Quarterly, Price 2s. 6d.

THE MODERN REVIEW.

EDITED BY R. CROMPTON JONES, B.A.

CONTENTS OF NO. XIII., JANUARY.

The Literature of Israel. By P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A.
Natural Religion. By the Editor.
Progress and Poverty. By G. SARSON, M.A.
Pfeiderer's View of St. Paul's Doctrine. By P. T. FORSYTH, M.A.
The Abolition of Judicial Oaths. By C. C. COE, F.R.G.S.
Augustus de Morgan. By EDWARD S. HOWSE, M.A.
Dr. Martineau's and Mr. Pollock's Spinoza.—II. By Prof. C. B. UPRON, B.A., B.Sc.
Notes and Discussions. The Origin of the Name "Jehovah." By T. TYLER, M.A.
Notices of Books.

London: Published for the Proprietors by

JAMES CLARKE AND CO., 13 AND 14, FLEET-STREET, E.C.

Now Ready, price 4d.,

TEACHERS' NOTES for Moral and Religious Lessons.

Contents for January:—Thoughts on the Darwinian Theory, by C. A. Martineau; Material for Talks with a Class on Colour and Form, by Mrs. Norway; Heroes and Heroism, by Mrs. E. R. Sunderland; Miracles of To-day, by W. C. Gannett.

London: SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Just published, Second Edition, 8vo. cloth, bevelled edges, gilt extra, 5s., post free.

THE TALISMAN: A Drama.

A Tale of the Eleventh Century.
By CATHERINE SWANWICK, Author of "Poems by L—", "three Series," and "St. Bernardine."

"To all who are in search of the marvellous in incident, or are attracted by the romantic in sentiment, we commend this drama."—LONDON REVIEW.

"This drama illustrates in thought and lines of great tenderness and pathos, the influence of purity and devotion, and the redeeming power of self-sacrifice. The authoress, of course, writes with no sectarian purpose, but we can trace in every page the mild and benignant influence of that pure theology which reveals to us the blessed truths that there is a soul of good, even in those who appear to be utterly lost in sinfulness and crime, and that there is hope for all in the infinite mercies of the Blessed Father, who requires no sacrifice of blood, but deigns to accept the higher sacrifice of penitence and self-devotion."—INQUIRER.

London: H. K. LEWIS, 136, Gower-street,

WORKS BY JOHN STUART MILL.

The Tenth Edition, in 2 vols. 8vo. price 25s.

A SYSTEM of LOGIC, Ratiocinative and Inductive. By JOHN STUART MILL. By the same:—
PRINCIPLES of POLITICAL ECONOMY, with some of their Applications to Social Philosophy. People's Edition, crown 8vo. 5s. Library Edition, 2 vols. 8vo. 30s.

London, LONGMANS AND CO.

Now Ready, in 1 vol. 8vo. price 9s. cloth.

ESSAYS in PHILOSOPHICAL CRITICISM. Edited by A. SETH and R. B. HALDANE, M.A. Preface by Prof. E. CAIRD, LL.D., dedicated to the memory of T. H. GREEN, late Prof. of Moral Philos. in the Univ. of Oxford.

London, LONGMANS AND CO.

Now Ready, Price One Penny.

MODERN SERMONS.

No. 1.—Eternal Punishment. By the Rev. STOPFORD A. BROOKS, M.A.

Will shortly be published:—

No. 2.—The Doctrine of the Cross. By the Rev. FRANK WALTERS.

No. 3.—Darwin. By the Rev. R. A. ARMSTRONG, B.A.

No. 4.—The Investigation of Religious Truth. By the Rev. WM. GASKELL.

Manchester: JOHNSON & RAWSON. Glasgow: WM. LOVE.

Six copies sent post free.

EDWARD T. WHITFIELD'S CHEAP STATIONERY WAREHOUSE, 178, STRAND, W.C.

E. T. WHITFIELD begs to inform his Friends and Customers that he now keeps a very large stock of GENERAL and FANCY STATIONERY, and that he executes orders for every kind of Die-Sinking, Stamping, and Engraving. Parcels amounting to £1 sent Carriage Free.

Card Plate Engraved, and Fifty Cards with name only, Gentlemen's or Ladies' size, 2s. 6d.; Addresses, 9d. per line extra.

Five Quires of Note Paper and 100 Envelopes, stamped with Monogram or Lady's Name, 4s.

Rubber Stamps, both for marking Linen and for Business Purposes, at very low prices.

Christmas, New Year, and Birthday Cards, in great variety.

E. T. W. continues to supply UNITARIAN and all other Books, post-free, at the Publishers' Prices, from One Shilling upwards.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON (for Ladies), 8 and 9, YORK-PLACE, BAKER-STREET.

LENT TERM will begin on THURSDAY, January 18, 1883.

A Professor's Scholarship, value 20 Guineas, and a Courtald Scholarship, value 10 Guineas each, tenable for two terms, will be awarded to Candidates not already in the College who shall pass a satisfactory examination in Latin, English, General English History, and French. The examinations will be held at the College on January 16 and 17.

Names to be sent to the Secretary before January 13.

B. SHADWELL, Hon. Sec.

NEW MISSION EFFORT, BETHNAL GREEN, LONDON.

The LONDON DISTRICT UNITARIAN SOCIETY will open a new Mission Effort on SUNDAY, January 7, in a Small Hall (neatly fitted up for the purpose), at 365, Cambridge-road, nearly opposite the Bethnal Green Museum.

Service at 7. Sunday School at 3.

PRIZE ESSAY, AWARDED FIFTY GUINEAS.

"THE HISTORY OF THE ORIGIN OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH."

Bound in cloth, post free for 2s. 6d., or 30 penny stamps. Five Copies, carriage free, for 10s.

Address, JOHN TORR, Christian Life Office, 281, Strand, London, W.C.

The following are the words of a Barrister (and Unitary Lecturer) on the above work:—

"For more than twenty years past I have been an assiduous reader of both sides of the Trinitarian controversy. That controversy involves so many difficult inquiries, and suggests so many collateral questions, that it is impossible to obtain a comprehensive view of it without reading many different books. But the real pith of the matter may be summed up in a simple issue. . . . This little book Mr. Spears now offers omits all minor points in the controversy, and wisely limits itself to the discussion of the fundamental question. It discusses it so clearly, so concisely, and yet so exhaustively, as to form an invaluable manual for all busy readers; whilst its courteous tone and reverent spirit will render it acceptable even to those whose views it controverts. 'I know no other book, large or small, which deals so effectively with this most important subject.'"—A BARRISTER.

Now Ready.

SERMONS by the REV. GOODWYN BARMBY, being the fifth and last vol. of the Band of Faith Series.

Neatly bound in cloth, and lettered. Price 1s., or post free, 1s. 3d. May be had of Mrs. Barmby, The Vines, Yoxford, Suffolk; also at the same price, Vols. 2, 3, and 4 of the same series.

BRENTWOOD, WORSLEY, Near MANCHESTER.

BOARDING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.

Principal ... MRS. F. SHAWCROSS, late of Brook House, Knutsford.—For prospectus, apply to the Principal, or to Messrs. J. GALT and Co., Manchester.

CASTLE HOWELL SCHOOL, LANCASTER.

THE FIRST TERM of the New Year will begin on FRIDAY, January 19. Vacancies.

Present Address, Rev. D. DAVIS, care of Miss Davis, Almswood, Evesham.

SOUTHPORT.—MISS LEWIN and MISS HARRIET LEWIN (late Miss Lawford and Miss Lewin) will RE-OPEN their SCHOOL for BOYS on THURSDAY, January 18.

BINGFIELD, WATERLOO-ROAD, BIRKDALE.

They wish to call attention to the change of address.

BRIGHTON.—Miss HODGES (late Miss JANE SMITH and Miss HODGES) will re open her School for Little BOYS, on WEDNESDAY, Jan. 24. 102, Lansdowne-place.

HIGH SCHOOL, STOKE GREEN, NEAR COVENTRY, established (1865) by the Rev. G. HEAVISIDE, B.A., of University and Manchester New Colleges, London, promotes a Liberal Education at a moderate cost.

CLIFTON.—The Rev. W. HARGRAVE, M.A. Lond., receives a limited number of BOYS to board and educate. Long experience in teaching; special attention to delicate or backward boys.—Address, 8, Oakland-road, Redland, Bristol.

Printed by WOODFALL and KINDER, of Milford-lane, Strand W.C.; and Published for the Proprietors by WALTER MAWER, at the Offices of the SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.—Saturday December 30, 1882

